Secretary Humphrey yesterday called the tax cut plan "strictly phoney." Humphrey testified it would be inflationary and hurt "the little folks."

Congress today completed action on a 50 per cent pay increase for all members of Congress..and increases for federal judges and prosecutors. The bill, which now goes to the President, calls for an increase of 75-hundred dollars a year for all members of Congress..bringing their annual salary to $22,500. Congress last voted its members a raise in 1946..when the rate was ten thousand dollars a year.

The State Department announced today that we have presented a new demand to Communist China for the release of 41 American civilians now held by the Communists. This is IN ADDITION TO the 15 airmen whose release we have sought in the past. The demand for the release of the civilians was made to the Communists at a series of meetings in Geneva, Switzerland. The Communists told us "no Americans are being unjustly detained." The State Department points out that since we started talks with the Communists in Geneva last June, 18 Americans had been released from China. We hope more will be released.

The State Department said today there has been some misunderstanding about a reported Burmese suggestion that the Chinese Reds are willing to consider "tensions" with an unefficial American mission. Burma's Premier U Nu said in Rangoon yesterday that he had [redacted] relayed such a message to Secretary of State Dulles. But the State Department says it has no knowledge that such a suggesstion actually was made to the Secretary.

Today, Mr. Dulles conferred with the premier of free South Viet Nam . He assured him that if his country is attacked by the Communists we will give Viet Nam massive support..from the Manila pact powers and from the United States.

In Jerusalem today, the United Nations Mixed Armistice Commission accused Isreal of a [redacted] violent attack on an Egyptian military post in the Gaza border area. Thirty-eight Egyptians were killed..31 wounded..IN a three-hour battle. Egypt says it has ordered large armed forces to the area to reinforce its frontier with Isreal.. AND the strongest possible protest will be made to the United Nations Security Council. Isreal says the Egyptians fired the first shot...in Isrealit territory. Western diplomats call the incident the gravest since the end of the Isreali Arab war.

In Washington, Harvey Matusow told a Senate committee that his former wife [redacted] told him she gave 70-thousand dollars to Senator Mc Carthy in 1950. A Senate investigation of McCarthy's affairs in 1952 indicated that the [redacted] woman had contibuted [redacted] 7-thousand dollars. Today Matusow said his former wife didn't want to face the Senate investigators so he took her to the Bahamas. He acknowledged that he had probably obstructed justice. Senator McCarthy refuses to "dignify anything that Matusow says by answering it." Matusow's former wife, whom he twice married and twice divorced... Mrs. Arvilla P. Bentley.. could not be reached for comment. Matusow today used the Fifth Amendment to decline to answer questions about testimony he gave in a Texas investigation of alleged Communism in 1935.

Edward R. Murrow: March 1, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The House of Commons experienced today what by common consent could be called an historic occasion. Sir Winston Churchill announced that Great Britain already is producing the hydrogen bomb, in a speech that found him at the peak of his rhetorical power and that held a crowded hall spellbound. # Members on both sides called it one of his best speeches since the war. It was noteworthy not only for the promise it conveyed of adding to the destructive power of the West, and its analysis of the nuclear situation today. It ended with an expression of the Prime Minister's faith in the ultimate future of disarmament. Britain's contribution to nuclear power, he predicted, might become so great in the next ten years that it will reach its final reward. "The day may come" he said, in a truly Churchillian peroration, "when fair play and love for one's fellow men, and respect for justice and freedom, will enable tormented generations to march forth, serene and triumphant, from the hideous epoch in which we dwell. Meanwhile, however, never flinch, never weary, never despair."

When Sir Winston took his place behind the dispatch box, the House saw him in good health for all his eighty years. His voice was clear and his presence commanding. He spoke throughout with a restraint that by its very quiet, achieved drama, and at one moment, startling drama. That was when he tapped so forcibly on the sides of the dispatch box that it echoed in the gallery. "It is now a fact" he said, "that a quantity of plutonium - probably less than would fill this box - (it is about the size of a large picnic basket), would suffice to produce weapons that would give indisputable world domination to any great power which was the only one to have it."

The question uppermost in British minds undoubtedly is why Britain wants the hydrogen bomb when the United States has it. Sir Winston was at pains to give the answer. It is because Britain must be in a position, if war breaks out, to hit the targets that call for top priority to meet Britain's defense needs. He explained the necessities of deterrent power. "There are" he said, "scores of airfields from which the Soviets could launch attacks with H-bombs as soon as they have the bombers to carry them. It is essential to our deterrent policy - and our survival - to have American allies and strength to be able to paralyze these potential communist assaults in the first few hours of the war." There are major administrative and industrial targets behind the Iron Curtain, along with Soviet submarine bases and other naval targets, which would need early attention. "But unless Britain can make her own contribution" he declared, "she could not be sure that in an emergency the resources of other powers would be planned exactly as Britain would want." This statement echoes past disagreements between London and Washington over target priorities during World War Two.

As to the danger of war, Sir Winston made two important predictions. One was that if the Soviet Union gets a supply of H-bombs and the means to deliver them, the next war, if it comes, would see the H-bomb used by both sides. "It would be folly" he said, "not to assume it."

The other prediction is that three or four years, though perhaps only two, will be needed for the Soviet Union to be in a position to deliver H-bombs in quantity on foreign targets. He was quite confident that the West has the superiority now and that the Soviet leaders know it. So he said, as one of his major themes, "there is time and there is hope, if we combine patience and courage." The United States, he said unequivocally, has many times the H-bomb strength of the Soviet Union. This is a flat contradiction of Mr. Molotov's recent statement that the United States is a laggard in this field.

As to Britain's contribution, he hinted at important British discoveries and suggested that British science will put the country in the lead. The Soviet stockpile of atomic weapons may be larger, he admitted, but the quality of British weapons already is higher.

But if both sides draw even in three or four years, what then? "Perhaps" said Sir Winston, "it will be a stand-off resulting in peace. It might well be that we shall, by a process of sublime irony, reach a stage in this story where safety will be the sterile child of terror, and survival a twin brother of annihilation. "Which way may we turn to save our lives?" he asked. And he gave a bonafide system of general disarmament as the answer. But he pointed to the difficulties. History and tradition make it repugnant to the Soviet government, he said, to accept a practical system of international inspection. And while the United States now has the overwhelming mastery of nuclear weapons, the Soviet Union and its satellites, he said, have an immense superiority of conventional weapons. The problem is to devise a balanced system of disarmament, one that at no time allows any participant an advantage endangering the security of others. That is now being studied on British and French initiative in the U.N. Disarmament talks in London. "But until a really trustworthy and universal agreement is arrived at" he said, "the only sane policy for the free world is defense through deterrents." And this thought led him to his final exhortation: "Never flinch, never weary, never despair."

WORD FOR THE DAY March 1, 1955.

Sir Winston Churchill is a man who handles the English language with extraordinary tenderness and discernment. He has a fondness for old-fashioned words that have not lost their cutting edge. He once said to this reporter: "The composition of a speech is indeed difficult; and the art of speaking in public is one that I have never completely mastered." If this be true, let all who attempt to practise the art desist in despair.

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today that the United States "has many times the nuclear power of Soviet Russia." Sir Winston says we have overwhelming superiority in hydrogen weapons, The Russians may be able to reduce this in four years but they cannot nullify it. I'd like to review Sir Winston's speech in a few minutes.

It came as our Atomic Energy Commission exploded another "baby" Atomic bomb in Nevada..the third in the current series of tests.

In Washington the Senate Finance Committee has rejected a House-approved plan to cut income taxes by 20-dollars a person next January. Two Democrats.. Byrd of Virginia and George of Georgia..voted with seven Republicans. Six other Democrats favored the bill. Democratic Senator Clements of Kentucky, the acting floor leader, says his party's effort to obtain some relief for the low-income taxpayers will be carried to the Senate floor. Today's vote came after Leon Keyserling, once head of former President Truman's economic advisers, told the Senate committee that the proposed tax cut is exactly what is needed to help reduce unemployment and improve business. On the other hand, Treasury Secretary Humphrey yesterday called the tax cut plan "strictly phoney." Humphrey testified it would be inflationary and hurt "the little folks."

Congress today completed action on a 50 per cent pay increase for all members of Congress. and increases for federal judges and prosecutors. The bill, which now goes to the President, calls for an increase of 75-hundred dollars a year for all members of Congress..bringing their annual salary to $22,500. Congress last voted its members a paise in 1946..when the rate was ten thousand dollars a year.

The State Department announced today that we have presented a new demand to Communist China for the release of 41 American civilians now held by the Communists. This is in addition to the 15 airmen whose release we have sought in the past. The demand for the release of the civilians was made to the Communists at a series of meetings in Geneva, Switzerland. The Communists told us "no Americans are being unjustly detained." The State Department points out that since we started talks with the Communists in Geneva last June, 18 Americans had been released from China. We hope more will be released.

The State Department said today there ahs been some misunderstanding about a reported Burmese suggestion that the Chinese Reds are willing to consider "tensions" with an unofficial American mission. Burma's Premier U Nu said in Rangoon yesterday that he had relayed such a message to Secretary of State Dulles. But the State Department says it has no knowledge that such a suggestion actually was made to the Secretary.

Today, Mr. Dulles conferred with the premier of free South Vietnam. He assured him that if his country is attacked by the Communists we will give Viet Nam massive support..from the Manila pact powers and from the United States.

In Jerusalem today, the United Nations mixed Armistice Commission accused Israel of a violent attack on an Egyptian military post in the Gaza border area. Thirty-eight Egyptians were killed...31 wounded..in a three-hour battle. Egypt says it has ordered large armed forces to the area to reinforce its frontier with Israel...and the strongest possible protest will be made to the United Nations Security Council. Israel says the Egyptians fired the first shot..in Israeli territory. Western diplomats call the incident the gravest since the end of the Israeli - Arab War.

In Washington, Harvey Matusow told a Senate committee that his former wife told him she gave 70-thousand dollars to Senator McCarthy in 1950. A Senate intestigation of McCarthy's affairs in 1952 indicated that the woman had contributed 7-thousand dollars. Today, Matusow said his former wife didn't want to face the Senate investigators so he took her to the Bahamas. He acknowledged that he had probably obstructed justice. Senator McCarthy refuses to "dignify anything that Matusow ways by answering it. "Matusow's former wife, whom he twice married and twice divorced...(Mrs. Arvilla P. Bentley)..could not be reached for comment. Matusow today used the Fifth Amendment to decline to answer questions about testimony he gave in a Texas investigation of alleged Communism in 1935.

The House of Commons experienced today what by common consent could be called an historic occasion. Sir Winston Churchill announced that Great Britain already is producing the hydrogen bomb, in a speech that found him at the peak of his rhetorical power and that held a crouded hall spellbound.

Members on both sides called it one of his best speeches since the war. It was noteworthy not only for the promise it conveyed of adding to the destructive power of the West, and its analysis of the nuclear situation today. It ended with an expression of the Prime Minister's faith in the ultimate future if disarmament. Britain's contribution to nuclear power, he predicted, might become so great in the next ten years that it will reach its final reward. "The day may come" he said, in a truly Chruchillian peroration, "when fair play and love for one's fellow men, and respect for justice and freedom, will enable tormented generations to march forth, serene and triumphant, from the hideous epoch in which we dwell, Meanwhile, however,

When Sir Winston took his place behind the dispatch box, the House saw him in good health for all his eighty years. His voice was clear and his presence commanding. He spoke throughout with a restraint that by its very quiet, achieved drama, and at one moment, startling drama. That was when he tapped so forcibly on the sides of the dispatch box that it echoed in the gallery. "It is now a fact" he said, "that a quantity of plutonium - probably less than would fill this box - (it was about the size of a large picnic basket), would suffice to produce weapons that would give indisputable world domination to any great power which was the only one to have it."

The question uppermost in British minds undoubtedly is why Britain wants the hydrogen bomb when the Unites States has it. Sir Winston was at pains to give the answer. It is because Britain must be in a position, if war breaks out, to hit the targets that call for top priority to meet Britain's defense needs. He explained the necessities of deterrent power. "There are" he said, "scores of airfields from which the Soviets could launch attacks with H-bombs as soon as they have the bombers to carry them. It is essential to our deterrent policy - and our survival - to have American allies and strength to be able to paralyze these porential communist assaults in the first few hours of the war." There are major administrative and industrial targets behind the Iron Curtain. along with Soviet submarine bases and other naval targets, which would need early attention. "But unless Britain can make her own contribution" he declared, "she could not be sure that in an emergency the resources of other powers would be planned exactly as Britain would want." This statement echoes past disagreements between London and Washington over target priorities during World War Two.

As to the danger of war, Sir Winston made two important predictions. One was that if the Soviet Union gets a supply of H-bombs and the means to deliver them, the next war, if it comes, would see the H-bomb used by both sides. "It would be folly" he said, "not to assume it."

The other prediction is that three or four years, though perhaps only two, will be needed for the Soviet Union to be in a position to deliver H-bombs in quantity on foreign targets. He was quite confident that the West has the superiority now and that the Soviet leaders know it. So he said, as one of his major themes, "there is time and there is hope, if we combine patience and courage." The United States, he said unequivocally, has many times the H-bomb strength of the Soviet Union. This is a flat contradiction to Mr. Molotov's recent statement that the United States is a laggard in this field.

As to Britain's contribution, he hinted at important British discoveries and suggested that British science will put the country in the lead. The Soviet stockpile of atomic weapons may be larger, he admitted, but the quality of British weapons already is higher.

But if both sides draw even in three or four years, what then? "Perhaps" said Sir Winston, "it will be a stand-off resulting in peace. It might well be that we shall, by a process of sublime irony, reach a stage in this story where safety will be the sterile child of terror, and survival a twin brother of annihilation. "Which way may we turn to save our lives?" he asked. And he gave a bonafide system of general disarmament as the answer. But he pointed to the difficulties. History and tradition make it repugnant to the Soviet government, he said, to accept a practical system of international inspection. And while the United States now has the overwhelming master of nuclear weapons, the Soviet Union and its satellites, he said, have an immense superiority of conventional weapons. The problem is, to devise a balanced system of disarmament, one that at no time allows any participant an advantage endangering the security of others. That is now being studied on British and French initiative in the U.N. Disarmament talks in London. "But until a really trustworthy and universal agreement is arrived at" he said, "the only sane policy for the free world is defense through deterrents." And this thought led him to his final exhortation: "Never flinch, never weary, never despair."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Sir Winston Churchill is a man who handles the English language with extraordinary tenderness and discernment. He has a fondness for old fashioned words that have not lost their cutting edge. He once said to this reporter: "The composition of a speech is indeed difficult; and the art of speaking in public is one that I have never completely mastered." If this be true, let all who attempt to practice the art desist in despair.

Good Night and Good Luck.

Wednesday, March 2, 1955

This is the news:

The President said today that the Western World, all along, has enjoyed a great lead over Soviet development of atomic weapons and the Hydrogen bomb. He was asked at a news conference about Prime Minister Churchill's statement yesterday that the Russians might catch up to us in two to four years. The President refused to speculate..said it was pointless.

At his news conference: the President said he was highly gratified and delighted with the Senate Finance Committee's decision against the plan to reduce everyone's taxes by 20-dollars. And Mr. Eisenhower is delighted that the Committee has voted to continue corporation and excise taxes.

The President signed a bill today raising the pay of all Congressmen and federal judges. He's happy Congress voted for the increase. It means $22,500 for members of Congress instead of 15-thousand a year. And for some 400 judges there will be increases of from 75-hundred to ten thousand dollars a year. United States attorneys and their assistants also will get a raise. Mr. Eisenhower suggested casually that maybe Representatives should be elected for four year terms instead of two years..as at present.

The President also told reporters that by no means does he consider himself the inddispensable man, politically. This was in comment on Republican Senator Goldwater's recent report that the Republicans probably cannot win in 1956 unless the President is a candidate again. On other political matters, Mr. Eisenhower said: he'd be glad to make a date with the reporters to tell them his political plans..a year from now. He favored San Fransisco over Chicago for the Republican convention because of the better [redacted] weather on the west coast...And he does not believe that the proposed AF of L-C.I.O. merger will develop on a politically monopolistic basis. Mr. Eisenhower said he thinks people on the whole are very independent. He doubts that any organization can develop bosses over any group's political, economic and cultural thinking. (A.F. of L. President Meany agrees.. he says no one can boss 15 million Americans. And Meany says "it is not the idea of the trade union movement to boss anyone.")

The President opened his news conference by wishing Pope Pius a happy 79th birthday.

And in Vatican City, the Pope stepped to his apartment window to bless a throng in St. Peter's Square. Reporters there said he appeared to be in better condition than at any time since he first became ill last December.

Prime Minister Churchill revealed in the House of Commons today that he was paralyzed for a time in 1953. Sir Winston, who is 80, said it was this illness and the fact that the President held aloof from a proposed Big Three meeting after Stalin's death, that caused the Churchill meeting plan to fade away.

In Moscow today, Premier Bulganin fired two Soviet ministers and demoted a third. The minister of the coal industry was fired because of unsatisfactory work... the minister of State Farms because he "failed to cope with the work". The minister of agriculture has been released from his duties. All of which underscores Russia's difficulties with its internal economy.

Moscow announced today that Father George Bissonnette, an American Roman Catholic priest, has been ordered to leave Russia. No reason was given. THE STATE DEPARTMENT IS PROTESTING. Western observers say this could be in retaliation for the recent refusal by the State Department to extend the temporary visa of a Russian Orthodox Church official who was visiting in this country.

The United Nations Security Council has called an urgent meeting Friday afternoon to consider Egypt's charge against Isreal..aggression near Gaza in the frontier zone. The Egyptians call it "violent and premeditated aggression." ~~Today an estimated ten thousand Arabs rioted in the Gaza area.~~

In Washington, Chairman Fulbright of the Senate ~~Finance~~ Banking Committee cautioned stock market traders not to make "economic decisions on the basis of bits of testimony" his committee will start hearing tomorrow. The Fulbright committee will start a three-weeks investigation of Stock Market activities. Fulbright says: the committee's aim is to determine "whether the public interest is being safely and wisely served by the" market exchanges.

The Air Force says that its new B-52 "Stratoforts" will go into combat units in late spring. These are the planes that can carry Hydrogen bombs for 6-thousand miles without refueling. ~~And the Air Force plans to spend nearly a half billion dollars for flying tankers to refuel B-52's in flight.~~

~~The Army says it has developed a device that can give instant warning of any germ warfare attack.~~

Harvey Matusow told a Senate committee that some aspects of the testimony he gave on 245 persons..linking them to the Communist party.. is false. And Roy M. COHN testified under oath in a federal court in New York that he did not tell Matusow what to say when Matusow testified against 13 second-string Communists. Cohn says he believes Matusow's testimony THEN was the truth.

Edward R. Murrow; March 2, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The disarmament talks now being held in London by a United Nations sub-committee are supposed to be secret. Some of the participants are going to considerable lengths to keep them secret. They had Soviet Delegate Gromyko on the carpet yesterday for leaking to the London Daily Worker a new three-point Soviet proposal. Mr. Gromyko denied being responsible for the leak, and the editor of the Daily Worker dutifully contended, or pretended, that his report had just been "intelligent anticipation". But he didn't try to explain how he came to write it in the past tense as something Mr. Gromyko had done on Friday.

One cannot quarrel with the effort to conduct negotiations on an intricate and momentous subject like disarmament in private. Unless main points have been thrashed out in private, open negotiations turn into propaganda or, at best, a debating ~~bee~~ contest. But much is lost by keeping disarmament discussions under wraps. The public not only doesn't hear enough about the various disarmament proposals, it ceases to have much interest in them.

I am not suggesting that the public doesn't care about disarmament. It does know the broad truth that the only sure way to avoid atomic destruction is disarmament. But it also realizes that disarmament is not just around the corner, and it can't get excited about proposals that can't go into effect for years. Even so, a blackout on news about disarmament is itself one of the hazards of the atomic era. For there can't be disarmament - even when the time for it is more propitious - if the public isn't ready to accept basic adjustments to make it possible.

Sir Winston Churchill put his finger on one of such difficulties in his House of Commons speech yesterday. History and tradition, he said, have made it repugnant to the Soviet Union to accept an adequate system of inspection. The "public" in the Soviet Union that isn't ready to adjust, of course is the Soviet leadership. ~~But Soviet leadership isn't hostile to foolproof inspection and controls because it is communist; it is against them because it has been conditioned by centuries of anti-foreign prejudices. That and not dogma accounts for the uncompromising insistence of the Kremlin on completely unlimited sovereignty in any system of arms control.~~

As Sir Winston pointed out yesterday, the arms race finds the United States with nuclear superiority, and the Soviet bloc with superiority in conventional weapons. "It is easy" he went on, "for the Communists to say: 'Let us ban all nuclear weapons'. Communist ascendancy in conventional weapons would then become overwhelming. That might bring peace, but only peace in the form of subjugation of the free world to the Communist system."

The British and French, Sir Winston reported, tried to devise a plan that balanced and timed arms reduction, so as not to give anyone undue advantage. Mr. Vishinsky accepted this plan as a basis for discussion, in the London talks now being held. Had he accepted it outright, it would have been a minor milestone, for the plan found a way to overcome the Soviet insistence on abolishing nuclear weapons before going ahead with a reduction of conventional arms. It proposed that nuclear weapons could be retained, and then limited for use against an aggression. To be sure, that left the pitfall of defining what would be "an aggression." But it cleared the way to go ahead with the problem of conventional weapons.

However, the Soviet proposal at London - the one the Daily Worker claims it so "intelligently anticipated" - went back to the demand, that all nuclear weapons be destroyed, though it accepted what it called "appropriate" international controls.

The United States, in what is called its "working paper" on disarmament, made a big concession in the U.N. last year, to get Soviet acceptance of controls. It proposed a control board, without a veto, to inspect nuclear installations, and would authorize this board to close down plants found to be breaking the rules. But while the board could order a plant to shut down, it didn't have any enforcing power; it could only report to the Security Council where, of course, the veto was intact.

The United States had always insisted on the fool-proof control formula. In this proposal it may have weakened on it for tactical reasons. It may have been so sure the Soviets would sweep aside all the Western proposals that it made a basic concession expecting to put the Soviet government in a bad light for rejecting it. But the Kremlin unexpectedly turned around and accepted the Franco-British proposal as a basis for discussion and actually sponsored the resolution calling for the present London talks, and the reconciliation of remaining differences. Consequently the gap between the Soviet and Western positions on the details of an agreement is not so wide as is generally supposed.

However, the West still insists on a reduction of conventional arms by stages, which the Soviets reject, and the Soviets insist on freezing all military strength on both sides at the level of January 1st, which would prevent the re-armament of Germany and Japan, and which the West rejects.

If the United States goes on being willing to compromise on the enforcement issue, some kind of agreement may be possible. But if it is not enforceable it is not likely to lead to much disarmament. And it is certainly not. ~~not even~~ likely to pass the United States Senate.

Many people are searching for solutions and serenity, and not finding either one. Perhaps these words by Winston Churchill may contain a note of comfort. He said: "How little can we foresee the consequences, either of wise or unwise action; of virtue or of malice. Without this measureless and perpetual uncertainty, the drama of human life would be destroyed."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

Swing March 2

The disarmament talks now being held in London by a UN subcommittee are supposed to be secret. Some of the participants are going to considerable lengths to keep them secret. They had Soviet Delegate Grokyko on the carpet yesterday for leaking to the London Daily Worker a now three-point Soviet proposal. Mr.Gromyko denied being responsible for the leak, and the editor of the Daily Worker dutifully contended, or pretended, that his report (just) had been "intelligent anticipation". But he didn't try to explain how he came to write it in the past tense as something Mr.Gromyko had done on Friday.

¶ One cannot quarrel with the effort to conduct negotiations on an intricate and momentous subject like disarmament in private, Unless main points have been thrashed out, in private open negotiations turn into propaganda, or, at best, a debating bee. But much is lost by keeping disarmament discussions under wraps. The public not only doesn't hear enough about the various disarmament proposals, it ceases to have much interest in them.

~~That holds true for all countries.~~

¶ I am not suggesting the the public doesn't care about disarmament. It does know the broad truth that the only sure way to avoid atomic destruction is disarmament. But it also realizes that disarmament is ~~just~~ not just around the corner, and it can't get excited about proposals that can't go into effect for years. Even so, a blackout on news about disarmament is itself one of the hazards of the atomic era. For there can't be disarmament--even when the time for it ~~comes,~~ is more propitious — if the public isn't ready to accept basic adjustments to make it possible.

¶ Sir Winston Churchill put his finger on one of ~~the~~ such difficulties ~~of getting disarmament~~ in his House of Commons speech yesterday. History and tradition, he said, have made it repugnant to the Soviet Union to accept an adequate system of inspection. The "public" in the Soviet Union ~~of course~~ that isn't ready to adjust is the Soviet leadership. But Soviet leadership isn't hostile to foolproof inspection and controls because it is communist, it is against ~~it~~ them because it has been conditioned by centuries of anti-foreign prejudices. That, and not dogma, accounts for the uncompromising insistence of the Kremlin on completely unlimited sovereignty in any system of arms control.

¶ As Sir Winston pointed out yesterday, the arms race finds the United States with nuclear superiority and the Soviet bloc with superiority in conventional weapons. "It is easy" he want on,"for the Communists to say:'Let us ban all nuclear weapons'. Communist ascendancy in conventional weapons would then become overwhelming.That might bring peace, but only peace in the form of subjugation of the free world to the Communist system."

¶ The British and French, Sir Winston reported, tried to devise a plan that balanced and timed arms reduction so as not to give anyone undue advantage. Mr.Vishinsky accepted this plan as a basis for discussion in the London talks now being held. Had he accepted it outright, it would have been a minor mile-stone, for the plan found a way to overcome the Soviet insistence on abolishing nuclear weapons before going ahead with a reduction of conventional arms. It proposed that nuclear weapons could be retained, and then limited for use against an aggression. To be sure,that left the pitfall of defining what would be an aggression. But it clearedthe way to go ahead with the problem of conventional weapons.

¶ However, the Soviet proposal at London--the one the Daily Worker so intelligently anticipated--went back to the demand that all nuclear weapons be destroyed, though it accepted what it called"appropriate" international controls.

The United States, in what is called its "working paper" on disarmament, made a big concession in the UN last year to get Soviet acceptance of controls. It set up a control board, without a veto, to inspect nuclear installations, and ~~authorized~~ moved this board to close down plants found to be ~~violating~~ breaking the rules. But while the board could order a plant to shut down it ~~had no power of its own~~ didn't have any enforcing powers; it could only report to the Security Council, where, of course, the veto ~~remained~~ was intact.

The United States had always insisted on the fool-proof control formula. This ~~time~~ proposal it may have weakened on it for tactical reasons. It may have been being so sure the Soviets would sweep aside all the Western proposals that it made ~~its own~~ a basic concession expecting to put the Soviet government in a bad light for rejecting it. But the Kremlin unexpectedly turned around and accepted the Franco-British proposal as a basis for discussion and actually sponsored the resolution calling for the present London talks, and the reconciliation of remaining differences. Consequently the gap between the Soviet and Western positions on the details of an agreement is not so wide as is generally supposed.

However, the West still insists on a reduction of conventional arms by stages, which the Soviets reject, and the Soviets insist on freezing all military strength on both sides at the level of Jan. 1, which would prevent the rearmament of Germany and Japan, and which the West rejects.

¶ ~~But~~ If the United States goes on being willing to compromise on the enforcement issue ~~of arms control~~, some kind of agreement may ~~might~~ be possible. But if it is not enforceable it is not likely to lead to much disarmament. And it is not even likely to pass the United States Senate.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 2, 1955
7:47--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The President said today that the Western World, all along, has enjoyed a great lead over Soviet development of atomic weapons and the Hydrogen bomb. He was asked at a news conference about Prime Minister Churchill's statement yesterday that the Russians might catch up to us in two to four years. The President refused to speculate...said it was pointless.

At his news conference: The President said he was highly gratified and delighted with the Senate Finance Committee's decision against the plan to reduce everyone's taxes by 20-dollars. And Mr. Eisenhower is delighted that the Committee has voted to continue corporation and excise taxes.

The President signed a bill today raising the pay of all Congressmen and federal judges. He's happy Congress voted the increase. It means $22,500 for members of Congress instead of 15-thousand a year. And for some 400 judges there will be increases of from 75-hundred to ten thousand dollars a year. United States attorneys and their assistants also will get a raise. Mr. Eisenhower suggested casually that maybe Representatives should be elected for four year terms instead of two years...as at present.

The President also told reporters that by no means does he consider himself the indispensable man, politically. This was in comment on Republican Senator Goldwater's recent report that the Republicans probably cannot win in 1956 unless the President is a candidate again. On other political matters, Mr. Eisenhower said: he'd be glad to make a date with the reporters to tell them his political plans..a year from now. He favored San Francisco over Chicago for the Republican concention because of the better weather on the west coast...and he does not believe that the proposed AF of L-C.I.O.

merger will develop on a politically monopolistic basis. Mr. Eisehhower said he thinks people on the whole are very independent. He doubts that any organization can develop bosses over any group's political, economic and cultural thinking. (A.F.of L. President Meany agrees...he says no one can boss 15 million Americans. And Meany says "it is not the idea of the trade union movement to to boss anyone."

The President opened his news conference by wishing Pope Pius a happy 79th birthday.

And in Vatican City, the Pope stepped to his apartment window to bless a throng in St. Peter's Square. Reporters there say he appeared to be in better condition than at any time since he first became ill last December.

Prime Minister Churchill revealed in the House of Commons today that he was paralysed for a time in 1953. Sir Winston, who is 80, said it was this illness and the fact that the President held aloof from a proposed Big Three meeting after Stalin's death, that caused the Churchill "meeting plan" to fade away.

In Moscow today, Premier Bulganin fired two Soviet ministers and demoted a third. The minister of the coal industry was fired because of unsatisfactory work...the minister of State Farm because he "failed to cope with the work". The minister of agriculture has been released from his duties. All of which underscores Russia's difficulties with its internal economy.

Moscow announced today that Father George Bissonnette, an American Roman Catholic priest, has been ordered to leave Russia. No reason was given. The state department is protesting. Western observers say this could be in retaliation for the recent refusal by the State Department to extend the temporary visa of a Russian Orthodox Church official who was visiting in this country.

The United Nations Security Council has called an urgent meeting Friday afternoon to consider Egypt's charge against Israel..aggression near Gaza in the frontier zone. The Egyptians call it "violent and premeditated aggression."

In Washington, Chairman Fulbright of the Senate Banking Committee cautioned stock market traders not to make "economic decisions on the basis of bits of testimony" his committee will start hearing tomorrow. The Fulbright committee will start a three-weeks investigation of Stock Market activities. Fulbright says: the committee's aim is to determine "whether the public interest is being safely and wisely served by the "market exchanges."

The Air Force says that its new B-52 "Stratoforts" will go into combat units in late spring. These are the planes that can carry Hydrogen bombs for 6-thousand miles without refueling.

Harvey Matusow told a Senate committee that some aspects of the testimony he gave on 245 persons ..linking them to the Communist party...is false. And Roy M. Cohn testified under oath in a federal court in New York that he did not tell Matusow what to say then Matusow testified against 13 second-string Communists. Chhn says he believes Matusow's testimony then was the truth.

The disarmement talks now being held in London by a United Nations sub committee are supposed to be secret. Some of the participants are going to considerable lengths to keep them secret. They had Soviet Delegate Gromyko on the carpet yesterday for leaking to the London Daily Worker a new three-point Soviet proposal. Mr. Gromyko denied being responsible for the leak, and the editor of the Daily Worker dutifully contended, or pretended, that his report had just been "intelligent anticipation". But he didn't try to explain how he came to write it in the past tense as something Mr. Gromyko had done on Friday.

One cannot quarrel with the effort to contuct negotiations on an intricate and momentous subject like disarmament in private. Unless main points have been thrashed out in private, open negotiations torn into propaganda or, at best, a debating contest. But such is lost be keeping disarmament discussions under wraps. The public not only doesn't hear enough about the various disarmement proposals, it ceases to have much interest in them.

I am not suggesting that the public doesn't care about diaarmament. It does know tha broad truth that the only sure way to avoid atomic destruction is disarmement. But it also realizes that disarmement is not just around the corner, and it can't get excited about proposals that can't go into effect for years. Even so, a blackout on news about disarmament is itself one of the hazards of the atomic era. For there can't be disarmament - even when the time for it is more propitious - if the public isn't ready to accept basic adjustments to make it possible.

Sir Winston Churchill put his finger on one of such difficulties in his House of Commons speech yesterday. History and tradition, he said, have made it repugnant to the Soviet Union to accept an adequate system of inspection. The "public" in the Soviet Union that isn't ready to adjust, of course is the Soviet leadership.

As Sir Winston pointed out yesterday, the arms race finds the United States with nuclear superiority, and the Soviet bloc with the superiority in conventional weapons. "It is easy" he went on, "for the Communists to say 'Let us ban all nuclear weapons'." Communist ascendancy in conventional weapons would then become overwhelming. That might bring peace, but only peace in the form of subjugation of the free world to the Communist system.

The British and French, Sir Winston reported, tried to devise a plan that balanced and timed arms reduction so as not to give anyone undue advantage. Mr. Vishinsky accepted this plan as a basis for discussion in the London talks now being held. If he accepted it outright, it would have been a minor milestone, for the plan found a way to overcome the Soviet insistence on abolishing nuclear weapon before going ahead with a reduction of conventional arms. It proposed that nuclear weapons could be retained, and then limited for use against aggression. To be sure, that left the pitfall of defining that would be "an aggression." But it cleared the way to go ahead with the problem of conventional weapons.

However, the Soviet proposals at London - the one the Daily Worker claims it so "intelligently anticipated" - went back to the demand that all nuclear weapons be destroyed, though it accepted what it called "appropriate" international controls.

The United States, in what is called its "working paper" on disarmament made a big concession in the U.N. last year. to get Soviet acceptance of controls. It proposed a control board, without a veto, to inspect nuclear installations, and would authorize this board to close down plants found to be breaking the rules. But while the board could order a plant to shut down it didn't ave any enforcing power; tt could only report to the Security Council where, of course, the veto was intact.

The United States had always insisted on the fool-proof control formula. In this proposal it may have weakehed on it for tactical reasons. It May have been so sure the Soviets would sweep aside all the Western proposals that it made a basic concession expecting to put the Soviet government in a bad light for rejecting it. But the Kremlin unexpectedly turned around and accepted the Franco-British proposal as a basis for discussion and actually spossored the resolution calling for the present London talks, and the reconciliation of remaining differences. Consequently the gap between the Soviet and Western positions on the details of an agreement is not so wide as is generally supposed.

However, the West still insists on a reduction of conventional arms by stages, which the Soviets reject, and the Soviets insist on freeing all military strength on both sides at the level of January 1st, which would prevent the re-armament of Germany and Japan, and which the West rejects.

If the United States goes on being willing to compromise on the enforcement issue, some kind of agreement may be possible. But if it is not enforceable it is not likely to lead to much disarmament. And it is certainly not likely to pass the United States Senate.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Many people are searching for solutions and serenity, and not finding either one. Perhaps these words by Winston Churchill may contain a note of comfort. He said:"How little can we foresee the consequences either of wise or unwise action; of virtue or of malice. Without this measureless and perpetual uncertainty, the drama of human life would be destroyed."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday, March 3, 1955

This is the news:

The Administration today told the Supreme Court that the security of the country might be imperiled if government employes, charged with disloyalty, were to be given a chance to confront their accusers. The Justice Department filed a brief urging the court to uphold the dismissal in 1951 of Dr. John P. Peters from the Public Health Service. Peters, now at Yale, contends he had no chance to defend himself against what he described as "unsworn, second-hand statements to the F.B.I." A loyalty board found that there was "reasonable doubt" of his loyalty. The Justice Department said today: vital sources of information might dry up if employes were allowed to cross-examine secret informants in security cases. The Department says the government, in such cases, depends to a great extent "on undercover agents, paid informers and casual informers." The government maintains that its employes are not entitled to a judicial review of the merits of their dismissals. In 1953, the President said that the right to meet one's accusers face to face was a basic American privilege that could not be taken away.

The State Department today informed Sweden and Switzerland that we favor the abolition of the commission set-up to supervise the Korean armistice. The Swedish and Swiss members of the commission..which includes representatives of Communist Poland and Czechoslvakia..have urged that it be abolished because the Communist members have blocked any effective investigations in North Korea. We agree that the Communists have used "obstructionist tactics." In the past we have repeatedly charged the Communists (CHINESE & NORTH KOREAN) with violating the 20-month-old truce..particularly by the illegal movement of jet planes and other modern weapons into North Korea.

Secretary of State Dulles is now on his way home from Formosa after reportedly assuring Chiang Kai Shek that we would not use Quemoy and the Matsu islands in any cease-fire negotiations without Nationalist consent. (I'd like to discuss the Dulles trip in a few minutes.)

Prime Minister Churchill today told the House of Commons that he "supposes" that if the Russians launched a surprise hydrogen bomb attack upon Great Britain, American planes "might" counter-attack without any prior consultation with London.

In West Germany today, the western high commissioners gave the Germans permission to start flying commercial planes..after being grounded for ten years. The West Germans may start plane service to other European capitals on May 15th.. and transatlantic flights to New York on June first.

Egypt today threatened to strike back with force against Isreal if border clashes between the two countries continue. And Egyptian and Syrian officials today signed a new Arab defense pact aimed at Isreal. They hope Joran will join as a third partner.

Moscow announced tonight that Arkady Sobolev will be Russia's new permanent representative to the United Nations, replacing the late Vishinsky. Sobolev is a former assistant secretary general of the U.N.

Vice President Nixon, winding up his Caribbean TOUR in Hiati, said today that too much government capital invested in economic development works for state socialism.

~~In Washington tonight, Republican Senator Knowland said that if the Chinese Communists~~

In Washington, Treasury Secretary Humphrey told the Senate Finance committee that the President's foreign trade program is a moderate program..it does not contemplate any drastic changes that would adversely affect sizeable groups of our citizens."

And the Banking Committee, opening its "friendly study" of the stock market, heard first from G. Keith Funston, president of the New York Stock Exchange. Funston said: he has confidence in the market's health.. will continue to invest his savings in stocks...feels that the 18-month boom in stock prices reflects the public's faith in the future. Funston holds that present market conditions cannot be compared to the conditions that brought on the 1929 crash. He said that while he thinks present prices rest on a firm foundation and do not reflect undue borrowing or manipulation, he does not mean to leave the impression that a market break is impossible. He said that kind of talk can only hurt the market.

The C.I.O. transport workers union today scheduled a strike for Sunday afternoon of 20-thousand maintenance men and shop employes of the Pennsylvania railroad. The strike was called in 13 states and the District of Columbia. Union President Quill claims the railroad has failed to live up to its collective bargaining agreement with the union.

And the President today motored to his new home in Gettysburgh, with blankets, pillows and sheets, to make his first overnight stay. He is anxious to go over some construction details with the contractor who made the trip with him.

Edward R. Murrow: March 3, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Secretary Dulles is on his way home after his Far Eastern trip. He took part in the first meeting of the SEATO council, which started planning the power to meet Communist expansion in South East Asia; he visited Burma and the Associated States. He talked to assembled United States ambassadors of the region, and he ended in Formosa, exchanging instruments of ratification of the mutual defense treaty with Nationalist China, and conferring with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

Mr. Dulles has the faculty of coining new phrases for his foreign policy, and on this trip he produced one for Asia. It is the thesis of "the three fronts." He has been explaining that the United States must consider the three fronts as part of a single problem. The three are Southeast Asia, Formosa and Korea. Being a world power in a central position, the United States takes into account the problems of each country, he said, but does not try to solve the problems of each country. And since military strategy has to consider the whole area, the key to defense is in mobility and striking power, rather than ground troops in any one spot. The phrase is new, but it recalls an earlier phrase - "massive retaliation."

The three-front thesis also is economic. Mr. Dulles explained that the health of the region rests on interdependence of its parts, not on conditions of any single country. This wasn't welcome doctrine in individual capitals, but each was given to understand that the pattern of American economic aid is to be on a regional rather than national basis, which is what Mr. Stassen recently disclosed.

Mr. Dulles's speeches have resulted in some resounding headlines. He told the ambassadors in their Philippines meeting that there must be no further retreat in Asia. And on leaving Formosa he issued what big type called a warning to the Chinese Reds that if war came they would not enjoy what in Korea used to be called the right of sanctuary. But there was nothing new in either statement. And a close reading of what he actually said shows that he can be a careful user of words.

The sanctuary warning was quite cautiously put. "The United States" he said, "continues to evaluate the words and deeds of the Chinese Communists to ascertain whether their military actions and preparations in the Formosa area constitute, in fact, the first phase of an attack directed against Formosa, and the United States must proceed on this assumption. If so" he went on, "it cannot be assumed that the defense would be static and confined to Formosa itself, or that the aggressor - (and these are the key words) - would enjoy immunity with respect to the areas from which he stages his offensive." This statement was made after Mr. Dulles' session with Chiang, who certainly had hoped for an outright pledge to defend Quemoy and Matsu Islands.

But if the Generalissimo did not get the pledge he wanted, in public anyway, he got something else of value, an assurance by Mr. Dulles that the United States will not negotiate about territories and rights of the Republic of China without co-operation of its government. As a member of Mr. Dulles's staff put it, the islands are not on the bargain table. But this spokesman added that they might be part of a bargain for peace in Asia, though not without Chiang's agreement. Since Chiang had been fearful that Mr. Dulles, under British pressure, might ask him to evacuate the islands as part of a cease-fire, he had reason to be gratified. The Dulles statement rules out any negotiations that affect Nationalist rights without their presence. But this also is not new policy, and the British, too, take this line.

Washington was asking today whether President Eisenhower was making new policy yesterday in answering a question about Chiang expecting American moral and material help in a return to the mainland. Chiang told Senator Margaret Chase Smith that he expected such help, and the President was asked whether the Administration had given the Nationalists any reason to. "The United States" he declared, "is not going to be party to an aggressive war"

That is the best answer I can make."

That led Senator Sparkman today to comment: "We can now write off any possibility of Chinese Nationalist return to the mainland." Senator Humphrey thought the President had tacitly admitted the existence of two Chinas. Senator H. Alexander Smith thought the President was telling the world that the Nationalist army is held ready to strike if the Communists break the truce in either Korea or Indochina." Senator Knowland, who would be disturbed if a new policy were to restrict the Nationalists more than they already are, told newsmen after breakfasting with the President this morning, that the President did not enunciate new policy. "I have myself never suggested that an aggressive war be waged" he said. "Our position there has been thoroughly understood; it's a defensive posture. We look on the China mainland" he said, "as we look on Poland, Czechoslovakia and other satellites. We hope they will be free. I don't think we have abandoned the hope that some day China may be free."

Justice is not easily defined. Alexander Hamilton put it this way: "Justice is the end of government. It is the end of civil society. It ever has been and ever will be pursued until it be obtained, or until liberty be lost in the pursuit." And Walt Whitman said: "Judging from the main portions of the history of the world so far, justice is always in jeopardy."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

Swing

March 3

¶ Secretary Dulles is on his way home after his Far Eastern trip. He took part in the first meeting of the SEATO council, which started planning the power to meet Communist expansion in South East Asia; he visited Burma and the Associated States. He talked to assembled United States amabassadors of the region, and he ended in Formosa, exchanging instruments of ratification of the mutual defense treaty with Nationalist China, and conferring with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

¶ Mr.Dulles has the faculty of coining new phrases for his foreign policy, and on this trip he produced one for Asia. It is the thesis of the three fronts. He has been explaining that the United States, must consider the three fronts as part of a single problem. The three are Southeast Asia, Formosa and Korea. Being a world power in a central position, the US takes into account the problems of each country, he said, but does not try to solve the problem of each country. And since military strategy has to consider the whole area, the key to defense is in mobility and striking power, rather than ground troops in any one spot. The phrase is new, but it recalls an earlier phrase, massive retaliation.

¶ The three-front thesis

also is economic. Mr. Dulles explained that the health of the region rests on interdependence of its parts, not on conditions of any single country. This wasn't welcome a doctrine in individual capitals, but each was given to understand that the pattern of American economic aid is to be on a regional rather than national basis, which is what Mr. Stassen recently disclosed.

Mr.Dulles's speeches have resulted in some resounding headlines. He told the ambassadors in their Philippines meeting that there must be no further retreat in Asia. And in leaving Formosa he issued what was called a warning to the Chinese Reds that if war came they would not enjoy what in Korea used to be called the right of sanctuary. But there was nothing new in either statement. And a close reading of what he actually said shows that he is a careful user of words.

The sanctuary warning was quite cautiously put."The United States" he said, continues to evaluate the words and deeds of the Chinese Communists to ascertain whether their military actions and preparations in the Formosa area constitute in fact, the first phase of an attack directed against Formosa, and the United States must proceed on this assumption. If so" he went on, "it cannot be assumed that the defense would be static and confined to Formosa itself, or that the aggressor --(and these are the key words)--would enjoy immunity with respect to the areas from which he stages his offensive." This statement was made after Mr, Dulles session with Chiang, who certainly had hoped for an outright pledge to defend Quemoy and Matsu Islands.

But, if the Generalissimo did not get the pledge he wanted, in public anyway, he got something else of value, an assurance by Mr.Dulles that the United States will not negotiate about territories and rights of the Republic of China without cooperation of its government. As a member of Mr. Dulles's staff put it, the islands are not on the bargain table. But this spokesman added that they might be part of a bargain for peace in Asia, though not without Chiang's agreement. Since Chiang had been fearful that Mr. Dulles, under British pressure, might ask him to evacuate the islands as part of a cease fire, he had reason to be gratified. The Dulles statement rules out any negotiations that affect Nationalist rights without their presence. But also this is not new policy, and the British too take the same line.

¶ Washington was asking today whether President Eisenhower was making new policy yesterday in answering a question about Chiang expecting American moral and material help in a return to the mainland, Chiang told Senator Margaret Chase Smith that he expected such help, and the President was asked whether the Administration had given the Nationalists any reason to. "The United States" he declared, "is not going to be party to an aggressive war" he declared. "That is the best answer I can make."

¶ That led Senator Sparkman today to comment: "We can now write off any possibility of Chinese Nationalist return to the mainland." Senator Humphrey thought the President had tacitly admitted the existence of two Chinas. Senator H. Alexander Smith thought the President was telling the world "that the Nationalist army is held ready to strike if the Communists break the truce in either Korea or Indochina." Senator Knowland, who would be disturbed if a new policy were to restrict the Nationalists more than they already are, told newsmen after breakfasting with the President this morning that the President did not enunciate new policy. "I have myself never suggested that an aggressive war be waged" he said."Our psosition there has been thoroughly understood; it's a defensive posture."We look on the China mainland, he said, as we look on Poland, Czechoslovakia and other satellites.We hope they will be free. "I don't think we have abandoned the hope that some day China may be free."

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 3, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Tha Administration today told the Supreme Court that the security of the country might be imperiled if government employees, charged with disloyalty, were to be given a chance to confront their accusers. The Justice Department filed a brief urging the court to uphold the dismissal in 1951 of Dr. John P. Peters from the Public Health Service. Peters, now at Yale, contends he had no chance to defend himself against what he described as " unsworn, second-hand statements to the F.B.I." A loyalty board found that there was "reasonable doubt" of his loyalty. The Justice Department said today: vital sources of information might dry up if employees were allowed to cross- examine secret informants in security cases. The Department says the government, in such cases, depends to a great extent "on undercover agents, paid informers and casual informers." The government maintains that its employees are not entitled to a judicial review of the merits of their dismissals. In 1953, the President said that the right to meet one's accusers face to face was a basic American privilege that could not be taken away.

The State Department today informed Sweden and Switzerland that we favor the abolition of the commission set-up to supervise the Korean armistice. The Swedish and Swiss members of the commission..which includes representatives of Communist Poland and Czechoslovakia..have urged that it be abolished because the Communist members have blocked any effective investigations in North Korea. We agree that the Communists have used "obstructionist tactics." In the past we have repeatedly charged the Chinese & North Korean

And the Banking Committee, opening its "friendly study" of the stock market, heard first from G. Keith Funston, president of the New York Stock Exchange. Funston said: He has confidence in the market's health..will continue to invest his savings in stocks..feels that the 18-month boom in stock prices reflects the public's faith in the future. Funston holds that present market conditions cannot be compared to the conditions that brought on the 1929 crash. He said that while he thinks present prices rest on a firm foundation and do not reflect undue borrowing or manipulation, he does not mean to leave the impression that a market break is impossible. He said that kind of tlak can only hurt the market.

The C.I.O. transport workers union today scheduled a strike for Sunday afternoon of 20-thousand maintenance men and shop employees of the Pennsylvania railroad. The strike was called in 13 states and the District of Columbia. Union President Quill claims the railroad has failed to live up to its collectibe bargaining agreement with the union.

And the President today motored to his new home in Gettysburgh, with with blankets, pillows, and sheets, to make his first overnight stay. He is ansious,to go over some construction deatils with the contractor who made the trip with him, Secretary Dulles is on his way home after his Far Esatern trip. He took part in the first meeting of the SEATO council, which started planning the power to meet Communist expansion in South East Asia; he visited Burma and the Associated States. He talked to assembled United States ambassadors of the region, and he ended in Formosa, exchanging instruments of ratification of mhe mutual defenst treaty with Nationalist China, and converring with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek.

Mr. Dulles has the faculty of coining new phrases for his foreign policy, and on this trip he produced one for Asia. It is the thesis of "the three fronts." He has been explaining that the United States must consider the three fronts as part of a single problem. The three fronts are Southeast Asia, Formosa and Korea. Being a world power in a central position, the United States takes into account the problems of each country, he said, but does not try to solve the problem of each country. And since military strategy has to consider the whole area, the key to defense is in military and striking power, rather than ground troops in any one spot. The phrase is new, but it recalls an earlier phrase - "massive retaliation."

The three-front thesis is also economic. Mr. Dulles explained that the health of the region rests on interdependence of its parts, not on conditions of any single country. This wasn't welcome doctrine in individual capitals, but each was given to understand that the pattern of American economic aid is to be on a regional rather than national basis, which is what Mr. Stassen recently disclosed.

Mr. Dulles's speeches have resulted in some resounding headlines. He told the ambassadors in their Philippines meeting that there must be no further retreat in Asia. And on leaving Formosa he issued what big type called a warning to the Chinese Reds that if war came they would not enjoy what in Korea used to be called the right of sanctuary. But there was nothing new in either statement. And a close reading of what he actually said shows that he can be a careful user of words.

The sanctuary warning was quite cautiously put. "The United States" he said, "continues to evaluate the words and deeds of the Chinese Communists to ascertain whether their military actions and preparations in the Formosa area constitute, in fact, the first phase of an attack directed against Formosa, and the United States must proceed on this assumption. If so," he went on, "it cannot be assumed that the defense would be static and confined to Formosa itself, or that the aggressor - (and these are the key words) - would enjoy immunity with respect to the areas from which he stages his offensive." This statement was made after Mr. Dulles' session with Chiang, who certainly had hoped for an outright pledge to defend Quemoy and Matsu Islands.

But if the Generalissimo did not get the pledge he wanted, in public anyway, he got something else of value, and assurance by Mr. Dulles that the United States will not negotiate about territories and rights of the Republic of China without co-operation of its government. As a member of Mr. Dulles's staff put it, the islands are not on the bargain table. But this spokesman added that they might be part of a bargain for peace in Asia, though not without Chiang's agreement. Since Chiang had been fearful that Mr. Dulles, under British pressure, might ask him to evacuate the islands as part of a cease-fire, he had reason to ge gratified. The Dulles statement rules out any negotiations that affect Nationalist rights without their presence. But this also is not new polciy, and the British, too, take this line.

Washington was asking today whether President Eisenhower was making new policy yesterday in answering a question about Chiang expecting American moral and material help in a return to the mainland. Chiang told Senator Margaret Chase Smith that he expected such help, and the President was asked whether the Administration had given the Nationalists any reason to. "The United States" he declared, "is not going to be party to an aggressive war." That is the best answer I can make.

That led Senator Sparkman today to comment: "We can now write off any possibliity of Chinese Nationalist return to the mainland." Senator Humphrey thought the President had tacitly admitted the existence of two Chinas. Senator H. Alexander Smith thought the President was telling the world that the Nationalist army is held ready to strike if the Communists break the truce in either Korea or Indochina." Senator Knowland, who would be disturbed if a new policy were to restrict the Nationalists more than they already are, told newsmen after breakfasting with the President this morning that the President did not enunciate new policy. "I have myself never suggested that an aggressive war be waged" he said. "Our position there has been thoroughly understood: it's a defensive posture. We look on the China mainland" he said, "as we look on Poland, Czechoslovakia and other satellites. We hope they will be free. I don't think we have abandoned the hope that some day China may be free."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Justice is not ealily defined. Alexander Hamilton put it this way: "Justice is the end of government. It is the end of civil society. It ever has been and ever will be pursued until it be obtained, or until liberty be lost in the pursuit." And Walt Whitman said: "Judging from the main portions of the history of the world so far, justice is always in jeopardy."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Friday March 4, 1955

This is the news:

Ten of the eleven members of the United Nations Security Council today denounced Isreal for the Gaza raids in which 42 Egyptians were killed. #

Every member of the Council, except Russia, joined in the sharp criticism of Isreal. There was no formal vote. And the Council decided to recall Major General Burns, its Palestine truce chief, for a personal report. American Ambassador Wadsworth told the Council that if the reports blaming Isreal for the violent attack prove true, the incident "would be indefensible from any standpoint."

Moscow announced tonight that American writer Anna Louise Strong, who was deported from Russia as a spy in 1949, was actually framed by the late Soviet Police Chief Beria. Miss Strong was called "a notorious intelligence agent" when she was expelled from Russia. Today the Russians say an investigation shows it was all a frame-up by Beria.. there were no grounds for the charge.

And the Russians today trotted out Professor Bruno Pontecorvo to tell reporters that he is now a devoted Soviet citizen and has nothing to do, now, with atomic energy for "military purposes." Pontecorvo is the Italian-born scientist who was made a citizen of Great Britain for his efforts during World War Two. He and his family vanished in September of 1950. Today, at a rare news conference, he told reporters: he became a Soviet citizen in 1952... he has worked only on peaceful atomic projects.. he is convinced Soviet science and physics "hold the first place in the world"..he cannot believe that Russia threatens the United States. Pontecorvo also said he feels great friendship and respect for English physicists with whom he once shared top secrets.

Secretary of State Dulles stopped off in Honolulu today on his way back from Far Eastern conferences. He told reporters he is "still concerned about hostile intentions of the Chinese Communists."

From Formosa today American reporters relayed what they described as "unofficial speculation in press circles" that the Nationalists may be abandoning some or all of the Matsu islands. These "speculations" are said to be based on Nationalist reports of a Communist gunboat attack on one of the Matsus. The Nationalists say they repelled the attack.

State Department officials today expressed "grave concern" because a Finnish tanker is carrying kerosene suitable for jet engine fuel to Red China. The ship is chartered to a Chinese Communist shipping agency. The Finnish government says it has "no legal authority" to prevent the trip.

In Korea, the United Nations command charges, that the Communists had more than 150 Russian-built Migs, on six North Korean airfields recently. They were all pulled out the day before a neutral nations team started north, to check on whether the Communists are violating the Korean truce. Our check was made by radar.

And in Washington, Narcotics Commissioner Anslinger told a House committee, that he has documented proof that the Chinese Reds are trying to weaken the free world with a flood of narcotics. THEY ARE ALSO TRYING TO obtain money for war materials.

A House committee today approved pay increases for career servicemen, ranging from 6 to 25 per cent above present salaries. The House is expected to approve the bill, which would cost the government an extra 735-million dollars a year.

And the House post office committee has approved an average seven and a half per cent increase, for a half million postal workers. This would cost 150-million dollars a year.

At the Senate hearing on the Stock Market, Edward T. McCormick, president of the American Stock Exchange, testified that one TELEVISION-RADIO tip by Walter Winchell cost buyers more than two million dollars in about an hour. McCormick said that on another occassion a television tip by [redacted] WITHOUT Winchell threw the market into turmoil. He said that [redacted] special measures taken by the Exchange, buyers who reacted to the Winchell tip.. and bought the recommended stock.. would now be in the hole by eight dollars a share. McCormick said he doesn't know of any instance where Winchell has mis-stated facts. And Winchell issued a statement saying the veracity of his reports has not been questioned..he has no apology to offer... has no interest in any stock..and buys United States government bonds exclusively.

The C.I.O. and [redacted] the nation's three biggest farm organizations..the Farm Bureau, National Grange and Farmers Union..today approved of the President's liberalized world trade program.

Here in New York, Irving Potash, one of the nation's top eleven convicted Communist leaders, SAILED for Communist Poland today..rather than risk another prison sentence here. Potash, who recently served almost three and a half years in prison for conspiring to teach the violent overthrow of the government, claimed he was being exiled. Actually, he left voluntarily with government consent.

Edward R. Murrow: March 4, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

There have been hints that China played a part in the recent political upheaval in the Soviet Union, but not much has been learned about it. Now more is leaking out about the crisis, and the role of China is seen to have been quite important. It comes to light that the recent decision of the Chinese Communist regime to introduce conscription, originated in Moscow. Khruschev and Bulganin, the top men in the Kremlin, are the ones who went to the historic conference in Peiping last October. They went to sell the conscription idea to Mao Tse-tung, and they sold it. (It couldn't have been very difficult.)

There is nothing implausible in this version. Peiping could not embark on conscription if it relied on its own industry. It had to have the fullest support of the Soviet industrial apparatus. But this China could not well ask for; it had to be offered. And to offer it, the Soviet leaders had to be ready to modify their own domestic program drastically. Whatever they supplied China, would be that much less for themselves. If Soviet citizens were to enjoy an era of butter instead of guns, China couldn't be aided much. And that is what the Malenkov policy had aimed at.

Malenkov's insistence on a greater share of state investment going to light industry for making consumer goods was strongly opposed, particularly by the Red Army leadership. At first Bulganin and Kaganovich were the outstanding opponents. Khruschev only joined them later. So writes Isaac Deutcher in The Reporter.

It is interesting to learn, that when the French Assembly shelved German re-armament and the E.D.C. last summer, the Malenkov group was strengthened. But when it became evident that German re-armament was going to win out in Bonn and Paris, Khruschev, who had wavered, sided with the heavy industry advocates. And when the French Assembly ratified the Paris accords, Malenkov was doomed.

Now comes the striking realization that conscription in China, is one of the big Kremlin answers to the re-arming of Germany. It appears to have been what Molotov referred to at the Supreme Soviet, when he predicted that the Western Imperialists - as he called them - would adopt a different language to the Soviet Union, when they saw what the Soviet counter-measures would be.

Mr. Deutscher calls the implications of Chinese conscription staggering. One class alone would yield about four million recruits. If five classes are trained, the Soviet bloc will be stronger by twenty million men. But to bring this to pass the Soviet Union must build up China's heavy industry, as well as to dole out some equipment for the launching of the program. Surely Mao Tse-tung saw to that last October, otherwise the proposed Chinese army would never be independent of the Kremlin.

But for their part, the Soviet leaders may well have wondered just how much independence they could grant their allies. For once China is fully industrialized, it will be one of the strongest powers on earth (if atomic weapons can be left out of account), certainly stronger than the Soviet Union. And that would be the end of Soviet dreams of domination.

Even so, the "build-up-China-school", took control in Moscow. And today the citizens of the Soviet Union are going through a course of instruction about the importance of the big industry program now in effect. The people aren't being told they have to give up butter for guns, or better clothing for Chinese factories, for they haven't had the butter or the better clothing. The Malenkov program was only a blueprint, though a well-advertised one. But they are being told, in effect, that they aren't going to get the butter and the better clothing.

The message isn't put in this kind of language, to be sure, but that is what it means. "Industrialization of the Soviet Union" writes the party organ, "plays an invaluable role of strengthening the economy, and defensive capacity, of the whole camp of peace, democracy and socialism. By its productional and scientific assistance, the Soviet Union accelerates the economic development of other countries. In the socialist camp" it is explained, "there can be no question, as sometimes occurs under capitalism, of some countries being agrarian and raw material producing appendages of others, and not developing their own heavy industry. / The Soviet Union cannot help rendering friendly aid to the countries of peoples' democracy, in setting up their heavy industry. That is our international duty. It strengthens the position of communism."

Communist China isn't specifically mentioned in this lecture, nor its population of nearly six hundred million, nor its conscription program, nor a single class of four million recruits, nearly as large as the standing Red army, nor the fateful decision of the Kremlin, to sponsor this immeasurable development. But perhaps Soviet subscribers learn to read between the lines, and will understand why they aren't to get the consumer goods they heard so much about a year ago.

It hardly needs to be added that if the future strength of an industrialized China, has ominous importance to the Soviet Union, it has even more to the United States and its allies.

We seem to live in a time of anger and harsh language. Aristotle once said: "Anybody can become angry; that is easy. But to be angry with the right person, and to the right degree, and at the right time, and for the right purpose, and in the right way - that is not within everybody's power, and is not easy.

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 4, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Ten of the eleven members of the United Nations Security Council today denounced Israel for the Gaza raids in which 42 Egyptians were killed.

Every member of the Council, except Russia, joined in the sharp criticism of Israel. There was no formal vote. And the Council decided to recall Major General Burns, its Palestine truce chief, for a personal report. American Ambassador Wadsworth told the Council that if the reports blaming Israel for the violent attack prove true, the incident "would be indefensible from any standpoint."

Moscow announced tonight that American writer Anna Louise Strong, who was deported from Russia as a spy in 1948, was actually framed by the late Soviet Police Chief Beria. Miss Strong was called "a notorious intelligence agent" when she was expelled from Russia. Today the Russians say an investigation shows it was all a frame-up by Beria...there were no grounds for the charge.

And the Russians today trotted out Professor Bruna Pontecorvo to tell reporters what he is now a devoted Soviet citizen and has nothing to do, now, with atomic energy for "military purposes." Pontecorvo is the Italian-born scientist who was made a citizen of Great Britain for his efforts during World War Two. He and his family vanished in September of 1950. Today, at a rare news conference, te told reporters: he became a Soviet citizen in 1952..he has worked only on peaceful atomic projects..he is convincec Soviet science and physics "hold the first place in the world"..he cannot believe that Russia threatens the United States. Pontecervo also said he feels great freindship and respect for English physicists with whom he once shared top secrets.

Secretary of State Dulles stopped off in Honolulu today on his way back from Far Eastern conferences. He told reporters he is "still concerned about hostile intentions of the Chinese Communists."

From Formosa today American reporters relayed what they described as "unofficial speculation in press circles " that the Nationalists may be abandoning some or all of the Matsu islands. These "speculations" are said to be based on Nationalist reports of a Communist gunboat attack on one of the Matsus. The Nationalists say they repelled the attack.

State Department officials today expressed "grave concern" because a Finnish tanker is carrying kerosene suitable for jet engine fuel to Red China. The ship is chartered to a Chinese Communist shipping agency. The Finnish government says it has "no legal authority" to prevent the trip.

In Korea, the United Nations command charges that the Communists had more than 150 Russian-built Migs on six North Korean airfields recently. They were all pulled out the day before a neautral nations team started north to check on whether the Communists are violating the Korean truce. Our check was made by radar.

And in Washington, Narcotic Commissioner Anslinger told a House committee that he has documented proof that the Chinese Reds are trying to weaken the free world with a flood of narcotics..They are also trying to obtain money for war materials.

A House committee today approved pay increases for career servicemen ranging from 6 to 25 percent above present salaries. The House is expected to approve the bill which would cost the government an extra 735-million dollars a year.

And the House post office committee has approved an average seven and a half percent increase for a half million postal workers. This would cost 150 million dollars a year.

At the Senate hearing on the Stock Market, Edward T. McCormick, president of the American Stock Exchange, testified that one television-radio tip by Walter Winchell cost buyers more than two million dollars in about an hour. McCormick said that on another occasion a teleivsion tip by Winchell threw the market into turmoil. He said that without special measures taken by the Exchange, buyers who reacted to the Winchell tip..and bought the recommended stock would now be in the hole by eight dollars a share. McCormick said he doesn't know of any instance where Winchell has mis-stated the facts. And Winchell issued a statement saying the veracity of his reports has not been questioned...he has no apology to offer...and no interest in any stock.. He buy United States government bonds exclusively.

The C.I.O. and the nation's biggest farm organizations..the Farm Bureau, National Grange and Farmers Union...today approved of the President's liberalized world trade program.

Here in New York, Irving Potash, one of the nation's top eleven convicted Communist leaders, sailed for Communist Poland today..rather than risk another prison sentence here. Potash, who recently served almost three and a half years in prison for conspiring to teach the violent overhtrow of the government, claimed he was being exiled. Actually, he left voluntarily with government consent.

There have been hints that China played a part in the recent political upheaval in the Soviet Union, but not much has been learned about it. Now more is leaking out about the crisis, and the role of China is seen to have been quite important. It comes to light that the recent decision of the Chinese Communist regime to introduce conscription originated in Moscow. Krruschev and Bulganin, the top men in the Kremlin, are the ones who went to the historic conference in Peiping last October. They went to sell the conscription idea to Mao-tse-tung, and they sold it. It couldn't have been very difficult.

There is nothing implausible in this version. Peiping could not embark on conscription if it relied on its own industry. It had to have the fullest support of the Soviet industrial apparatus. But this China could not well ask for; it had to be offered. And to offer it, the Soviet leaders had to be ready to modify their own demostic program drastically. Whatever they supplied China, would be that much less for themselves. If Soviet citizens were to enjoy an era of butter instead of guns, China couldn't be aided much. And that is what the Malenkov policy had aimed at.

Malenkov's insistence on a greater share of the state investment going to light industry for making consumer goods was strongly opposed, particularly by the Red Army leadership. At first Bulganin and Kaganovich were the outstanding opponents. Khruschev only joined them later. So writes Isaac Deutcher in The Reporter.

It is interesting to learn, that when the French Assembly shelved German re-armament and the E.D.C. last summer, the Malenkov group was strengthened. But when it became evident that German re-armament was going to win out in Bonn and Paris, Khruschev, who has wavered, sided with the heavy industry advocates. And when the French Assembly ratified the Paris accords, Malenkov was doomed.

Now comes the striking realization that conscription in China, is one of the big Kremlin answers to the re-arming of Germany. It appears to have been what Molotov referred to at the Supreme Soviet, when he predicted that the Western Imperialists - as he called them - would adopt a different language to the Soviet Union, when thew saw that the Soviet counter-measures would be.

Mr. Deutscher calls the implications of Chinese conscription staggering One class alone would yield about four million recruits. If five classes are trained, the Soviet bloc will be stronger by twenty million men. But to bring this to pass, the Soviet Union must build up China's heavy industry, as well as to dole out some equipment for the launching of the program. Surely Mao- Tse-tung saw to that last October, otherwise the proposed Chinese army would never be independent of the Kremlin.

But for their part, the Soviet leaders way well have wondered just how much indpendence they could grant their allies. For once China is fully industraalized, it will be one of the strongest powers on earth (if atomic weapons can be left out of account), certainly stronger than the Soviet Union. And that would be the end of Soviet dreams of comination.

Even so, the "build-up-China-school", took control in Moscow. And today the citizens of the Soviet Union are going through a course of instruction about the importance of the big industry program now in effect. The people aren't being told they have to give up butter for guns, or better clothing for Chinese factories, for they haven't had the butter or the better clothing. The Malenkov program was only a blueprint, though a well-advertised one. But they tre being told, in effect, that they aren't boing to get the butter and the better clothing.

The message isn't put in this kind on language, to be sure, but that is what it means. "Industrialization of the Soviet Union" writes the party organ, "plays an invaluable role of strengthening the economy, and defensive capacity, of the whole camp of peace, democracy and socialism. By its productional and scientific assistance, the Soviet Union accelerates the economic developement of other countries. In the socialist camp" it is explained, "there can be no question, as sometimes occures under capitalism, of some countries being agrarian and raw material producing appendages of others, and not developing their own heavy industry. The Soviet Union cannot help rendering friendly aid to the countries of the peoples' democracy in setting up their heavy industry. That is our international duty. It strengthens the position of Communism."

Communist China isn't specifically mentioned in this lecture, nor its population of nearly six hundred million, not its conscription program, nor a single class of four million recruits, nearly as large as the standing Red army, nor the fateful decision of the Kremlin to sponsor this immeasurable development. But perhaps Soviet subscribers learn to read between the lines, and will understand why they aren't to get the consumer goods heyy heard so much about a year ago.

It hardly needs to be added that if the future strength of an industrialized China has ominous importance to the Soviet Union, it has even more to the United States and its allies.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We learn to live in a time of anger and harsh language. Asistotle once said: "Anybody can become angry; that is easy. But to be angry with the right person, and to the right degree, and at the ritht time, and for the right purpose, and in the right way - that is not within everybody's power, and is not easy.

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday March 7, 1955

This is the news:

The American Red Cross says the flood along the Ohio River has assumed "disaster" proportions. Some 16-hundred families in West Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio have suffered damage to their homes and property. And the river is expected to crest in Indiana over the week-end. The Red Cross is now providing food and clothing for an estimated one thousand persons.

Out in Nevada today, the Atomic Energy Commission set off the fourth and most powerful blast in its current tests. The atomic device, dropped from a tower, shook houses 370 airline miles away.. and lit the skies in seven western states.

Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia today called for the destruction of all nuclear weapons. He told his parliament the discoveries of nuclear science present a tremendous opportunity to help humanity if used only for peaceful purposes. Tito also revealed for the first time that his country "possesses precious nuclear raw materials", and will soon begin to use them "in the service of our people's well-being."

Neighborhing Albania today rejected with "contempt and aversion"

President Eisenhower's offer of free food to relieve winter shortages. Last week the President offered an unspecified amount of food for free distribution in the Communist country. He said it was "well known" that Albania did not produce enough food to feed itself. Today, the Albania radio said its "hypocritical..diabolical..and a devilish calumny" to say that Albania does not have enough food. (Our offer to help was described as "foreign interference.")

On Formosa today, Admiral Stump, commander of the Pacific fleet, told reporters:"If the United States is willing we can defend anything against the Communists" He was asked whether this includes the Matsu islands..20 miles off the mainland. The Admiral replied:"Anything."

And Junior Nationalist officers on Formosa again told reporters the Matsus will be defended..and are steadily being reinforced.

Secretary of State Dulles reported to the President again today on his recent 26-thousand-mile trip through southeast Asia. Tomorrow he will report to the Senate foreign relations committee. And he'll be heard over many of these stations at 10 p.m. eastern time.

The Defense Department announced today that General Maxwell D. Taylor, now 8th army commander, has been appointed United States and United Nations commander-in-chief in the far east. He succeeds General Hull, who will retire from the army on April 30th.

The President today marked the tenth anniversary of the dramatic American capture and crossing of the Remagen bridge in Germany during World War Two. He presented certificates to the 11 living men of the 13 awarded the distinguished service cross for that operation. He said their action "represents the dash, ingenuity, and readiness to seize opportunity that characterizes the American soldier."

Navy Secretary Thomas today told Congress that big super-aircraft carriers are "indispensable" to modern fleets in this era of nuclear warfare. Secretary Thomas said the recent evacuation of the Chinese Nationalists's stronghold in the Tachen islands proved the value of "a potent offensive Navy, built around our carrier forces."

James E. Day, the president of the Midwest Stock Exchange, told a Senate committee today: he believes in the future progress of business. But he wants to make it clear that "the Stock Market can go down..and substantially."

Another Senate committee questioned Albert E. Kahn, one of the publishers of Harvey Matusow's new book "False Witness." Kahn refused to to say whether he is a communist. And he testified that he hired a bodyguard for Matusow because he feared Matusow would be "kidnapped or killed" by agents of the Department of Justice or Senator McCarthy.

A Federal grand jury in Washington today indicted Mrs. Marie Natvig on nine charges of lying under oath. She originally testified that she knew Edward Lamb, as a Communist. Lamb is applying for renewal of a radio and television license from the Federal Communications Commission. More recently Mrs. Natvig repudiated her testimony..saying she was "coerced" into giving it."

At Fort Sill, Oklahoma, a nine-colonel court martial board today acquitted Colonel Ambrose H. Nugent on all charges accusing him of collaborating with the enemy while a prisoner in the Korean war. The trial, now in its seventh week, has been the longest military trial in history. Colonel Nugent, from Merrill, Wisconsin, has insisted he was innocent.

9

Edward R. Murrow: March 7, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

When a government department announces a change in the rules, it is fair to assume that something unfair or unworkable has been discovered about the old rules. Attorney General Brownell has laid down a new set of conditions for the Federal government's employee security program. They deal with the delicate and difficult question of the conditions - the procedures to be followed when a man or woman who works for the government is accused, or suspected of being a loyalty risk. They are based on the assumption, with which few people disagree, that working for the government is a privilege and not a right.

Hereafter Department security officers are to draft a statement of charges, and present those charges to the employee at the time of suspension. A Department legal counsel must approve the draft. The Department security officer is to have a personal interview with the accused employee before he is suspended. When a Security Board holds a hearing, a legal officer of the Department must be present - not only to advise the Board, but to explain to the employee what his rights are, if he is not represented by his own counsel.

Dismissals are to be ordered by no one below the rank of Assistant Secretary.

A government department that wants to hire someone who has been dismissed by another department, must consult the Justice Department which is to resolve the differences between the two departments. This presumably is to prevent another Wolfe Ladejinski case, where he was cleared by one department, fired by a second department, and then hired by a third.

Finally, efforts are to be made to produce government witnesses to testify against the accused, these witnesses to submit to cross-examination and direct confrontation. However, this promise is qualified by the reservation that this will be done "so long as the production of such witnesses would not jeopardize the national security". This does not make it clear who is to determine when the production of witnesses will in fact jeopardize the national security.

This issue of confrontation and cross-examination is very near to the heart of the matter. Mr. Brownell's language on this subject must be considered vague and uncertain. This is particularly true in view of the fact that only last week the Justice Department filed a brief with the Supreme Court in the case of Dr. Peters. This brief argued vigorously against giving Dr. Peters the right of confrontation and cross-examination. Dr. Peters is a Professor of Medicine at Yale University. He was dismissed as a Public Health Consultant about two years ago, when a Loyalty Board - after he had twice been cleared - found what it called "a reasonable doubt" of his loyalty. Dr. Peters lawyers challenged the constitutionality of his removal, and the stigma placed upon his name, because he was not permitted to confront his accusers - his attorneys were not permitted to cross-examine them, whoever they were. The Justice Department argued in its brief to the High Court that national security might be imperilled if government employees should be given the right to face their accusers, since the government, it said, "depends to a great extent on undercover agents, paid informers and casual informers who must be guaranteed anonymity.

This reporter knows nothing of the Peters case, beyond the published documents. But his loyalty has been called into question; he has been fired as a Public Health Consultant; and apparently he does not yet know who accused him of what; he has not had an opportunity to confront his accusers; and his attorneys have not had a chance to cross-examine those who have made accusations against him. The question here falls into two parts: were those who made the charges against him undercover agents, paid informers, or casual informers?; and would revealing their charges and subjecting them to cross-examination - remembering always that he was a Public Health Consultant - actually imperil the national security of this country?

It is reliably reported that there is a division of opinion inside the Justice Department as to whether or no Dr. Peters' constitutional rights have been infringed. This reporter does not pretend to know the answer to that question. In due course, presumably, the Supreme Court will decide it.

The letter recommending changes in the security program, as outlined a moment ago, was signed by Attorney General Brownell. The Justice Department's brief in the Peters case was also signed by Mr. Brownell. The letter promises confrontation, face-to-face-, between the accused and his accusers, and the right of cross-examination. The brief filed with the Supreme Court denies that right in the case of Dr. Peters, apparently on the grounds that the exercise of it would imperil the national security because it would reveal the identity of undercover agents, paid informers and casual informers.

The basic question remains: who shall decide when the production of witnesses in cases of this nature will in fact imperil the national security. This is not a partisan political question; and not basically a question of Dr. Peters' loyalty, or Mr. Brownell's competence. It is a question of law. What the Supreme Court decides will be the precedent and the law.

The problem of maintaining peacetime security and at the same time avoiding the curtailment of individual freedom is at best not an easy one to resolve. This becomes apparent by the Attorney General's letter. And perhaps it is as the Roman Horace once remarked:"The illustration, he said, which solves one difficulty by raising another, settles nothing."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 7, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The American Red Cross says the flood along the Ohio River has assumed "disaster" proportions. Some 16-hundred families in West Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio have suffered damage to their homes and property. And the river is expected to crest in Indiana over the week-end. The Red Cross is now providing food and clothing for an estimated one thousand persons.

Out in Nevada today, the Atomic Energy Commission set off the fourth and most powerful blast in its current tests. The atomic device, dropped from a tower, shook houses 370 airline miles away..and lit the skies in seven western states.

Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia today called for the destruction of all nuclear weapons. He told his parliament the discoveries of nuclear science present a tremendous opportuiity to help humanity is used only for peaceful purposes. Tito also revealed for the first time that his country "possesses precious nuclear raw materials" and will soon begin to use them "in the service of the people's well-being."

Neighboring Albania today rejected with "contempt and aversion", President Eisenhower's offer of free food to relieve winter shortages. Last week the President offered an unspecified amount of food for free distribution in the Communist country. He said it was "well known" that Albania did not produce enough food to feed itself. Today, the Albania radio said its "hypocritical ...diabolical...and a devilish calumny" to say that Albania does not have enough food. Our offer to help was described as foreign interference."

On Formosa today, Admiral Stump, commander of the Pacific fleet, told reporters: "If the United States is willing we can defend anything against the Communists". He was asked whether this includes the Matsu islands...20 miles off the mainland. The Admiral replied :"Anything."

And Junior Nationalist officers on Formosa again told reporters that Matsus will be defended...and are steadily being reinforced.

Secretary of State Dulles reported to the President again today on his recent 26-thousand mile trip through southeast Asia. Tomorrow he will report to the Senate Foreign relations committee. And he'll be heard over many of these stations at 10 p.m. eastern time.

The Defense Department announced today that General Maxwell D. Taylor now 8th army commander, has been appointed United States and United Nations commander-in-chief in the far east. He succeeds General Hull who will retire from the army on April 30th.

The President today marked the tenth anniversary of the dramatic American capture and crossing of the Remagen bridge in Germany during World War Two. He presented certificates to the 11 living men of the 13 awarded the distinguished service cross for that operation. He said their action "represents the dash, ingenuity, and readiness to sieze opportunity that characterizes the the American soldier."

Navy Secretary Thomas today told Congress that big super aircraft carriers are "indespensable" to modern flects in this era of nuclear warfare. Secretray Thomas said the recent evacuation of the Chinese Nationalists's stronghold in the Tachen islands proved the value of "a potent offensive Navy, built around our carrier forces.

James E. Day, the president of the Midwest Stock Exchange, told a Senate committee today; he believes in the future progress of business. But he wants to make it clear that "the stock Market can go down..and substantially."

Another Senate committee questioned Alvert E. Kahn, one of the publishers of Harvey Matusow's new book "False Witness." Kahn refused to say whether he is a communist. And he testified that he hired a bodyguard for Matusow because he feared Matusow would be "kidnapped or killed" by agents of the Department of Justice or Senator McCarthy.

A Federal grand jury in Washington today indicted Mrs. Marie Natvig on nine charges of lying under oath. He originally testified that she knew Edward Lamb, as a Communist. Lamb is applying for renewal of a radio and television license from the Federal Communications Commission. More recently Mrs. Natvig repudiated her testimony...saying she was "coerced" into giving it.'

At Fort Sill, Oklahoma, a nine-colonel court martial board today acquitted Colonel Amborse Nugent on all charges accusing him of collaborating with the enemy while a prisoner in the Korean war. The trial, now in its seventh week, has been the longest military trial in history. Colonel Nugent, from Merrill, Wisconsin, has insisted he was innocent.

When a government department announces a change in the rules, it is fair to assume that something unfair or unworkable has been discovered about the old rules. Attorney General Brownell has laid down a new set of conditions for the Federal government's employee security program. They deal with the delicate and difficult question of the contitions - and procedures to be followed when a man or woman who works for the government is accused, or suspected of being a loyalty risk. They are based on the assumption, with which few people disagree, that working for the government is a privilege and not a right.

Hereafter, Department security officers are to draft a statement of charges, and present those charges to the employee at the time of suspension. A Department legal counsel must approve the draft. The Department secruity officer is to have a personal interview with the accused employee before he is suspended. When a Security Board holds a hearing, a legal officer of the Department must be present - not only to advise the Board, but to explain to the employee what his rights are, if he is not represented by his own counsel.

Dismissals are to be ordered by no one below the rank of Assistant Secretary.

A government department that wants to hire someone who has been dismissed by another department, must consult the Justice Department which is to resolve the differences between the two departments. This presumably is to prevent another Wolfe Ladejinski case where he was cleared by one department, fired by a second department, and then hired by a third.

Finally, efforts are to be made to produce government witnesses to testify against the accused, this witnesses to submit to cross - examination and direct confrontation. However, this promise is qulaified by ahe reservation that this will be done "so long as the production of such witnesses would not deopardize the national security." This does not make it clear who is to determine when the production of witnesses will in fact jeopardize the national security.

This issue of confrontation and cross-examination is very near to the heart of the matter. Mr. Brownell's language on this subject must be cosidered vague and uncertain. This is particularly this in view of the fact that only last week the Justice Department filed a brief with the Surpreme Court in the case of Dr. Peters. This brief argued vigorously against giving Dr. Peters the right of confrontation and cross-examination. Dr. Peters is a Professor of Medicine at Yale University. He was dismissed as a Public Health Consultant about two years ago, when a Loyalty Board - after he had twice been cleared - found what it called "a reasonable doubt" of his loyalty.

Dr. Peters lawyers challenged the constitutionality of his removal, and the stigma placed upon his name, because he was not permitted to confront his accusers - his attorneys were not permitted to corss-examine them, whoever they were. The Justice Department argued in its brief to the High Court that national security might be imperilled if government employees should be given the right to face their accusers, since the government, it said, "depends to a great extent on undercover agents, paid informers, and casual informers who must be guaranteed anonymity.

This reporter knows nothing of the Peters case, beyond the published documents. But his loyalty has been called into question; he has been fired as a Public Health Consultant; and apparently he does not yet know who accused his of what; he has not had an opportunity to confront his accusers; and his attorneys have not had a chance to cross-examine those who have made accusations against him. The question here falls into two parts; were those who made the charges against him undercover agents, paid informers, or casual informers?; and would revealing their charges and subjecting them to cross-examination - remembering always that he was a Public Health consultant - actually imperil the national security of this country?

It is reliably reported that there is a division of opinion inside the Justice Department as to whether or not Dr. Peters' constitutional rights have been infringed. This reporter does not pretend to know the answer to that question. In due course, presumably, the Supreme Court will decide it.

The letter recommending changes in the security program, as outlined a moment ago, was signed by Attorney General Brownell. The Justice Department's brief in the Peters case was also signed by Mr. Brownell. The letter promises confrontation, face-to-face, between the accused and his accusers. and the right of cross-examination. The brief filed with the Supreme Court denies that right in the case of Dr. Peters, apparently on the grounds that the exercise of it would imperil the national security because it would reveal the identitiy of undercover agents, paid informers and casual informers.

The basic question remains: who shall decide when the production of witnesses in cases of this nature will in fact imperil the national security. This is not a partisan political question; and not basically a question of Dr. Peters loyalty, or Mr. Brownell's competence. It is a question of law. What the Supreme Court decided will be the precedent and the law.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The problem of maintaining peacetime security and at the same time avoiding the curtailment of individual freedom is at best not an easy one to resolve. This becomes apparent by the Attorney General's letter. And perhaps it is as the Roman Horace once remarked;"The illustration", he said, "which solves one difficulty by raising another, settles nothing."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday March 8, 1955

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles told congress today that the free countries of southeast Asia will be in danger unless we "make our influence felt in a positive way." In talks to two Congressional committes, the Secretary is reported to have said: he does not believe the Chinese Communists are bluffing..he thinks they'll soon make some military move against Nationalist-held islands opposite Formosa.. he feels Communist subversion is a greater menace [redacted], than a threat of direct military action in Southeast Asia at this time. Mr. Dulles' will follow his busy day before two committees with an address over many of these stations tonight at 10 p.m. eastern time, [redacted]

British Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons today that Britain's secret negotiations for a cease-fire off Formosa have bogged down. He said "the necessary conditions for progress" toward ending the Chinese war "do not yet exist." And Mr. Eden called on the Chinese Nationalists to do two things: to withdraw their armed forces from Quemoy and Matsu.. and "to let it be known" that while maintaining their claims they will not use force..will not engage in any offensive military actions. Eden called on the Chinese Communists to refrain from attacking Quemoy and the Matsus and to make it apparent that they do not intend to take Formosa by force. And the House of Commons cheered as Eden said a peaceful Formosan settlement would result in the West giving new consideration to Red China's claim to a seat in the United Nations.

In Tokyo, a top military leader told reporters today that the Communists are in position to attack Quemoy and Matsu at any time.

Here in New York today, ~~the~~ prices on the Stock Exchange broke sharply in the last thirty minutes of trading. Today's drop, the sharpest since the middle of January, caused a decline of almost 3-billion dollars in shares. The experts say this was due to a number of things: fears of a Communist attack on Formosa..fear that Senate investigators would insist on stiffer security Exchange laws..and a statement made today before the Senate committee studying the stock market. John K. Galbreath, Harvard professor of economics, urged "the strongest precautionary measures" to prevent a repetition of the big crash of 1929. He suggested that trading gradually be placed on a cash basis because "there is too much speculation in the market now." Chairman Fulbright of the Senate committee, says he can see no connection whatsoever between Galbreath's statement and the market drop. He said: "It wasn't a gloomy statement..he only told us to be cautious."

The President today accepted the resignation of Robert Cutler, as his special assistant for nationalsecurity affairs. He had high praise for Cutler, who will return to his former position as president of the Old Colony Trust Company of Boston. CUTLER will be succeeded by Dillan Anderson of Houston..an attorney listed by the White House as a Democrat-for-Eisenhower.

Mr. Eisenhower spent only a short time at his desk today. He's suffering from a cold.."not feeling too good." And Mrs. Eisenhower is in bed with the flu.

The House Armed Services committee today voted 30 to nothing to give career men in the armed services pay raises running from six to 25 per cent.

And the House agriculture committee voted to restore major price supports at 90 per cent of parity. This vote was 23 to 11.. CROSSING party lines. Chairman Cooley predicts that the House will pass the bill.

Assistant Attorney General William F. Tompkins told a Senate committee today that "the current attack against government witnesses and informants of the F.B.I. has its roots in a Communist effort." The Justice Department has been under criticism on the ground that some of its witnesses..like Harvey Matusow..have been unrealiable. Tompkins did not mention Matusow's name. The top internal security aide in the department, said that the governmet's program to weed out security risks "is keeping Communists out of government and will keep them out."

Another Senate committee heard Albert E. Kahn, a New York publisher, testify that the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers union advanced a thousand dollars in the hope of getting Matusow to write a book denying his previous testimony. Kahn's firm is publishing the Matusow book. Kahn said he wanted the union to place orders for ten thousand advance copies of the book. The union agreed to buy only 2-thousand copies.

The flooding Ohio River is moving slowly downstream forcing hundreds of families out of their homes. An estimated 26-hundred families are affected in Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky and Indiana.

And Moscow today informed Washington that it ousted an American priest from Moscow, because the United States refused to let a Soviet clergyman remain in the United States.

Edward R. Murrow: March 8, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The American public worries almost exclusively about personal rather than political problems. This conclusion is based on a study published in the current issue of Look Magazine, and made for the Fund for the Republic. Before giving some of the results, I should say that 5,000 persons were interviewed at the time of the Army-McCarthy hearings, in what is called one of the most searching public opinion surveys ever made. Both the Gallup Poll organization and the National Opinion Research Center were used, operating independently. And since the study was sponsored by the Fund for the Republic, note was being taken of the number of persons worried by the internal communist threat and about civil liberties.

The worries of Americans are mostly about personal economic problems, health and family relationships. Forty-three percent of those questioned said they were worried about money matters, such as family finances, wages and expenses. Thirty percent were worried about personal problems, such as marriage difficulties and children's welfare. Twenty-four percent were worried about health, their own, or that of someone in the family. Only eight percent were worried about world problems, including the shadow of war. And of these, many were concerned for personal reasons, such as the possibility of being drafted, or a son being drafted.

Those who ~~are~~ were worried about the internal threat of communism, (at that time so frequently mentioned in the news) were fewer than one percent. / But another figure must be set alongside of that one, the number who worried about civil liberties - (also much mentioned in the news at that time) - was even less. Only twenty persons, out of the 5,000 questioned, volunteered any mention of such matters as the treatment of witnesses before Washington committees, and challenges to the loyalty of teachers and scientists.

The survey divided persons questioned into two groups, the public, and its leaders; that is, the leaders in the community, like the mayor, the President of the Chamber of Commerce, chairman of the community chest, chairmen of the ~~two party~~ political county committees, commander of the local Legion post, president of the local Federation of Women's clubs, and so on. / It was found that leaders had a different scale of worries. / Only about half as many worried about money, (probably because more of them had it;) fewer worried about health; but considerably more worried about their family relationships. And instead of eight percent worrying about world problems and war, twenty-two percent of the leaders did so. But those who worried about the internal threat of communism and about civil liberties, put together, were only five percent.

These are the figures based on the answers volunteered by questioners. But when interrogaters "nudged" them, the responders gave somewhat more socially-minded replies. They were asked: "Are there other problems you worry or are concerned about, especially world or political problems?" This drew a common reply: "Oh yes, I'd say that I am concerned about what's going on in the world." Actually more than half of the persons so "nudged" had nothing to add. But the number of persons who said they were concerned about world affairs rose to 30 percent; those concerned about the internal communist threat to 6 percent: and those mentioning civil liberties to 2 percent. There is quite a difference between worry and concern. Even so, if only three persons in ten are concerned about world problems, war included, and only one in sixteen about the internal communist threat, and one in fifty about civil liberties, it is not wrong to say that the American public is absorbed by immediate personal problems.

The leaders were somewhat less preoccupied with themselves. Fifty instead of thirty percent expressed concern over world affairs; fourteen instead of one percent expressed it over the internal communist threat; and the civil liberties were mentioned by three percent.

Professor Samuel Stouffer of Harvard, chairman of the committee that planned the study, writes in Look Magazine that these results don't mean that persons don't have opinions about world and domestic affairs. It means that the opinions aren't grounded in deep personal anxiety. "The American public" he writes, "is not quivering with fear, and shows no visible symptoms of the jitters." And he sees the analogy between what Americans think about politics and sport, which is closer than some politicians think. "Baseball fans" he says, "can be well informed about the New York Yankees or the Cleveland Indians without lying awake nights worrying about their pennant chances."

He then goes on to classify the opinions expressed, and his results do not differ widely from previous poll results. But one key question should be mentioned. It was asked: "Do you, or don't you, feel as free to speak your own mind as you used to?" It is not a surprise that 87 percent said they feel as free as ever. But it may be a surprise that thirteen percent don't. For the question was not limited to teachers, scientists, and other opinion-makers; it was asked of the whole cross-section of the public. A decline of 13 percent in the general sense of freedom is not disastrous, but it might be worth more than a passing thought.

~~There would seem to be little doubt that~~ Most, if not in fact all of us, are subject to both anxiety and worry. It's just a matter of how much we worry and what we're inclined to worry about. Robert Frost once remarked: "The reason why worry kills more people than work, is that more people worry than work." Even if this is not precisely so, Mark Twain still concluded: "As soon as one is at rest in this world, off he goes on something else to worry about."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Wednesday March 9 1955

This is the news:

Senate Democrats today came up with a new tax cutting plan. It would give smaller taxpayers a break at the expense of business and stockholders. The plan calls for a 20-dollar cut for each taxpayer.. with an additional 10-dollars off for each dependent..but no deduction for wives. So, a married man with two children would get a 40-dollar deduction. To make up for this loss of income to the government, the Democrats would repeal the tax break given stockholders last year and extend corporate and excise tax rates for two years, instead of one. This proposal, generally, would benefit those who earn less than 5thousand dollars a year. And the Democrats figure that the extended excise and corporate taxes, plus the repeal of the provion favoring stockholders, would offset the loss from the 20 and ten deductions for smaller wage earners. But Chairman George of the Finance Committee sees no reason to change his stand against any tax reduction..and Senator Byrd says he doesn't think this will "change things on the Senate floor."

Republican Senator Knowland told reporters today he's (CONFIDENT) that Nationalist China's Quemoy and Matsu islands "are not going to be placed on any bargain counter" for a deal with the Communists.

The United Press reports from Tokyo that American military leaders in the Far East have warned Washington that a general war in Asia may be "only weeks away." The State Department calls this "speculation".. says it cannot comment on "speculation." A spokesman referred reporters to Secretary of State Dulles' speech of last night..which I'd like to review in a few minutes.

The House armed services committee today unanimously approved a new billion-dollar ship-building program.. It calls for a fifth super-carrier and three more atom-powered submarines, among other ships.

The Defense Department today asked Congress to bar subversives from working in plants that are not now engaged in defense work..but which would be needed for such work in time of war. The present law only bars subversives from access to secret defense contracts. Wilbur Brucker, general counsel for the defense department, says the demands of security and the rights of individuals calls for "the wisdom of Solomon and the patience of Job." He says sincere and successful efforts are being made in this matter.

The government reports that factory employment rose in February. This is described as a significant change in the nation's job picture. Since autumn, the increase in joblessness has been a good deal smaller than usual for this period of the year.

The United Auto Workers announce that they will start negotiating with the Ford Motor Company nn next Wednesday..for new contracts to replace the (EXPIRING) five-year agreements in the auto industry. The union will present a demand for a guaranteed annual wage.

The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved THE nomination of Circuit Judge John Marshal Harlan for a seat on the supreme court. The vote was 10 to 4..with Republican Senators Langer and Welker, and Democrats Eastland and Olin Johnston of South Carolina voting in the negative.

Senators studying the Stock market were told today that it would be discriminatory to put stock buying on an all-cash basis. Winthrop H. Smith, of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Beane, said this would also dry up the market and block the issuance of new securities. Smith told the Senators he doesn't know whether stock prices in general have gonne too high..doesn't believe anybody knows. And he said he doesn't know what made the market go down yesterday. Prices dropped again today, but a broad recovery before the market closed repaired some of the damage.

The President has almost completely recovered from yesterday's slight cold. (He went golfing this afternoon.) But the White House says Mrs. Eisenhower is still in bed with the flu..although she's feeling better.

Three air force jet planes today broke the Los Angeles to New York speed record. The fastest plane, flown by Lieut. Col. Robert Scott of Des Moines, did it in three hours, 46 minutes and 33 seconds..Los Angeles to New York.

The State Department today again expressed its "great concern" over the shipment of 13-thousand tons of jet-quality kerosene to Communist China in a Finnish tanker.

~~In Paris, a foreign ministry spokesman says the Big Three foreign ministers will meet to discuss the future of western policy after German re-armament is approved.~~

Communist Hungary today attacked Premier Nagy for what it called "hollow, demagogic" promises..which caused production to drop in agriculture and heavy industry. Nagy's downfall has been predicted since Russian Premier Malenkov lost his job for the same announced reason.

Edward R. Murrow: March 9, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The world's two foremost democracies presented their Foreign Secretaries yesterday to discuss the crisis in the Far East. Mr. Dulles and Sir Anthony Eden had come back from Southeast Asia and the Manila pact conference. They were reporting on their missions. They had covered much the same ground and seen many of the same men. But their reports were not the same.

It is well to look at the differences. Had they been basic, the Asian crisis would be perilous in a way that opinion here and in England is not prepared for. But they differed because they covered different facets of the crisis, not because their objectives are not the same. Mr. Dulles talked particularly about immediate dangers, Sir Anthony about possible solutions later, after admitting that an international conference on Asian peace is now out of the question.

Mr. Dulles's broadcast seems to have been designed to be at the same time firm and unprovocative. He was saying to the Chinese Communists: "Don't attack, for if you do, the greater might of the United States will be used against you and it can hit you on three fronts. And it will include the use of tactical nuclear weapons that can utterly destroy a military target without endangering unrelated civilian centers." But he did not, as had been predicted, announce that the United States would help defend Quemoy and the Matsus. This omission helped give the broadcast an air of restraint. Actually the only new feature in it was the reference to tactical nuclear weapons.

Sensational use was being made today of the reference to these weapons and the three fronts. It was stated that U.S. military authorities in Japan hold the view that general war in Asia may be only a few weeks away, and that that is why Mr. Dulles spoke about a three-front war and nuclear weapons in his broadcast. But the three-front thesis was used by Mr. Dulles in his last full-dress statement in the Far East. And it should be noted that he did not link it in his broadcast with the Formosa crisis. He was speaking about Communist Chinese aggressions that would concern the Manila pact powers. He was not saying a three-front war would result if the Communists attacked Quemoy and the Matsus. What the United States would do in that event would be for President Eisenhower to decide.

It should be recalled that on January 27th the President said that he alone would have the authority to order United States forces used for other than immediate self-defense, or in direct defense of Formosa, and he promised not to delegate such authority.

Sir Anthony Eden, in his speech, did not criticize United States policy.

On the contrary, he vouched for its peaceful purpose. "I am convinced," he declared, "and I say this with all the conviction in my power, that they (that is, the United States), wish to see conditions created which would put an end to active military hostilities in the area, and reduce the danger of wider conflict." He called attention to the treaty in which the United States limited its formal commitments to the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores. And he said that the United States "had effectively restrained the Chinese Nationalists in recent weeks from initiating attacks against the mainland, and had persuaded the Nationalists to evacuate the Tachen and Nanchi Islands."

He addressed himself to the two Chinese parties to the conflict, with the exhortation not to resort to the use of force. He noted that the Communists had refrained from attacking Quemoy and the Matsus, and urged them to continue to refrain, while maintaining intact in all respects their position in regard to Formosa and the Pescadores. He advised the Nationalists to withdraw their armed forces from the coastal islands, and while maintaining their claims to Formosa, to announce they will abstain from all offensive military action. If his advice should be followed, he said, then at an appropriate moment, consideration could be given internationally to Chinese representation in the United Nations and to the future status of Formosa.

Sir Anthony also issued a warning. If no attempt was made to progress along these lines in the matter of Formosa and the coastal islands, "the consequences" he said, "will be very grave indeed."

What neither Mr. Dulles nor Sir Anthony explained, or could explain diplomatically, is that perhaps the biggest factor in the crisis is morale. If at this time the Nationalists give up Quemoy and the Matsus, by consent or otherwise, they give up their crusade to regain the mainland. If they give that up they cease to be impervious to Communist blandishments. It is conceiveable that the Chiang regime would be overthrown and replaced by Communist rebels, and that to prevent this the United States might have to intervene with its own forces.

That is a local possibility. On a broader front, a major retreat by the United States would at once weaken all the free nations in Asia, and put them pretty much at the mercy of communist subversion. The biggest end-result would be in Japan, which would lose faith in American power and determination.

To support the morale of the free countries needs firmness, and that was Mr. Dulles's message. If peace is to be made, there must in time be concessions by both sides, and that was Sir Anthony's thesis. The two speeches, at any rate, deserve to be read together.

The long [redacted] search for peace requires of us calmness, patience and perserverence. For the problem is not a new one. And perhaps Stuart Chase put it as well as anyone when he remarked:"The two great tasks of mankind down the Ages are also tasks for the individual down the years of his allotted span -- to come to terms with nature and with one's fellows."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Swing March 9

The world's two foremost democracies presented their foreign secretaries yesterday to discuss the crisis in the Far East. Mr.Dulles and Sir Anthony Eden had come back from Southeast Asia and the Manila pact conference. They were reporting on their missions. They had covered much the same ~~region~~ ground and seen many of the same men. But their reports were not the same.

It is well to look at the differences. Had they been basic, the Asian crisis would be perilous in a way that opinion here and in England is not prepared for. But they differed because they covered ~~[illegible]~~ different facets of the crisis, not because their objectives are ~~dissimilar~~ not the same. Mr.Dulles talked particularly about immediate dangers, Sir Anthony about possible solutions later, after admitting that an international conference on Asian peace is now out of the question.

¶ Mr.Dulles's broadcast seems to have been designed to be at the same time firm and unprovocative.He was saying to the Chinese Communists:"Don's attack, for if you do, the greater might of the United States will be used against you and it can hit you on three fronts.And it will include the use of tactical nuclear weapons that can utterly destroy a military target without endagering unrelated civilian senters." But he did not, as had been predicted, announce that the United States would help defend Quemoy and the Matsus. This omissions helped give the broadcast an air of restraint. Actually the only new feature in it was the reference to tactcial nuclear weapons.

¶ Sensational use was being made today of the reference to these weapons and the three fronts. It was stated that U.S. military authorities in Japan hold the view that general war in Asia may be only a few weeks away. and that that is why Mr. Dulles spoke about a three front war and nuclear weapons in his broadcast. But the three-front thesis was used by Mr. Dulles in his last full-dress statement in the Far East. And it should be noted that he did not link it in his broadcast with the Formosa crisis. He was speaking about Communist Chinese aggressions that would concern the Manila pact powers. He was not saying a three front war would result if the Communists attacked Quemoy and the Matsus. What the United States would do in that event would be for President Eisenhower to decide. ¶ It should be recalled that on January 27th the President said that he alone would have the authority to order United States forces used for other than immediate self-defense or in direct defense of Formosa and he promised not to delegate such authority.

¶ Sir Anthony Eden, in his speech, did not criticize United States policy. On the contrary he vouched for its peaceful purpose. "I am convinced" he declared, "and I say this with all the conviction in my power that they (that is, the United States) wish to see conditions created which would put an end to active military hostilities in the area and reduce the dnger of wider conflict." He called attention to the treaty in which the United States limkted its formal commitments to the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores. And he said that the United States "had effectively restrained the Chinese Nationalists in recent weeks from initiating attacks against the mainland, and had persuaded the Nationalists to evacuate the Tachen and Nanchi Islands.

¶ He addressed himself to the two Chinese parties to the conflict, with the exhortation not to resort to the use of force. He noted that the Communists had refrained from attacking Quemoy and the Matsus, and urged them to continue to refrain, while maintaining intact in all respects, their positions in regard to Formosa and the Pescadores. He advised the Nationalists to withdraw their armed forces from the coastal islands, and while maintaining their claims to Formosa, to announce they will abstain from all offensive military action. If his advice should be followed, he said, then at an appropriate moment, consideration could be giv n internationally to Chinese representation in the United Nations and to the future status of Formosa. Sir Anthony also issued a warning. If no attempt was made to progress along these lines in the matter of Formosa and the coastal islands, "the consequences" he said "will be very grave indeed."

What neither Mr. Dulles or Sir Anthony explained, or could explain diplomatically, is that perhaps the biggest factor in the crisis is morale. If at this time the Nationalists give up Quemoy and the Matsus, by consent or otherwise, they give up their crusade to regain the mainland. If they give that up they cease to be impervious to Communist blandishments. It is conceiveable that the Chiang regime would be overthrown and replaced by Communist rebels, and that to prevent this the United States might have to intervene with its own forces.

That is a local possibility. On a broader front, a major retreat by the United States would at once weaken all the free nations in Asia, and put them pretty much at the mercy of communist subversion. The biggest end-result would be in Japan, which would lose faith in American power and determination.

To support the morale of the free countries needs firmness, and that was Mr.Dulles's message. If peace is to be made, there must in time be concessions by both sides, and that was Sir Anthony's thesis.The two speeches, at any rate, deserve to be read together.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 9, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Senate Democrats today came up with a new tax cutting plan. It would give smaller taxpayers a break at the expense of business and stockholders. The plan calls for a 20-dollar cut for each tax payer...with an additional 10-dollars off for each dependent...but no deduction for wives. So, a married man with two children would get a 40-dollar deduction. To make up for this loss of income to the government, the Democrats would repeal the tax break given stockholders last year and extend corporate and excise tax rates for two years, instead of one. This proposal, generally, would benefit those who earn less than 5 thousand dollars a year.

And the Democrats figure that the extended excise and corporate taxes plus the repeal of the provision favoring stockholders, would offset the loss from the 20 and ten deductions for smaller wage earners. But the Chairman George of the Finance Committee sees no reason to change his stand against any tax reductions.....and Senator Byrd says he doesn't think this will "change things on the Senate floor."

Republican Senator Knowland told reporters today he's confident that Nationalist China's Quemoy and Matsu Islands "are not going to be placed on any bargain counter" for a deal with the Communists.

The United Press reports from Tokyo that American military leaders in the Far East have warned Washington that a general war in Asia may be "only weeks away." The State Department calls this "speculation"...says it cannot comment on "speculation". A spokesman referred reporters to Secretary of State Dulles' speech of last night...which I'd like to review in a few minutes.

The House armed services committee today unanimously approved a new billion dollar ship-building program...It calls for a fifth super-carrier and three more atom-powered submarines, among other ships.

The Defense Department today asked Congress to bar subversives from working in plants that are not now engaged in defense work..but which would be needed for such work in time of war. The present law only bars subversives from access to secret defense contracts. Wilbur Brucker, general counsel for the defense deparmtnet, says the demands of security and the rights of individuals calls for "the wisdom of Solomon and the patience of Job." He says sincere and successful efforts are being made in this matter.

The government reports that factory employment rose in February. This is described as a significant change in the nation's job picture. Since autumn, the increase in joblessness has been a good deal smaller than usual for this period of the year.

The United Auto Workers announce that they will start negotiating with the Ford Motor Company on next Wednesday...for new contracts to replace the expiring five-year agreements in the auto industry. The Union will presentt a demand for a guaranteed annual wage.

The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved the nomination of Circuit Judge John Marshal Harlan for a seat on the Supreme court. The vote was 10 to 4..with Republican Senators Langer and Welker, and Democrats Eastland and Olin Johnston of South Carolina voting in the negative.

Senators studying the Stock Market were told today that it would be discriminatory to put stock buying on an all-cash basis. Winthrop H. Smith, of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Beane, said this would also dry up the market and block the issuance of new securities. Smith told the Senators he doesn't know whether stock prices in general have gone too high and he doesn't believe anybody knows. And he said he doesn't know what made the market go down yesterday. Prices dropped again today but a broad recovery before the market closed repaired some of the damage.

The President has almost completely recovered from yesterday's slight cold. He went golfing this afternoon. But the White House says Mrs. Eisenhower is still in bed with the flue...although she's feeling better.

Three air force jet planes today broke the Los Angeles to New York speed record. The fastert plane, flown by Lietuenant Colonel Robert Scott of Des Moines, did it in three houss, 46 minutes and 33 seconds...Los Angeles to New York.

The State Department today again expressed its "great concern" over the shipment of 13-thousand tons of jet-quality kerosene to Communist China in a Finnish tanker.

Communist Hungary today attacked Premier Nagy for what it called "hollow, demogogic" promises...which caused production to drop in agriculture and heavy industry. Nagy's downfall has been predicted since Russian Premier Malenkov lost his job for the same announced reason.

The world's two foremost democarcies presented their Foreign Secretaries yesterday to discuss the crisis in the Far East. Mr. Dulles and Sir Anthony Eden had come back from Southeast Asia and the Manilla pact conference. They were reporting on their missions. They had covered much the same ground and seen many of the same men. But their reports were not the same.

It is well to look at the differences. Had they been basic, the Asian crisis would be perilous in a way that opinion here and in England is not prepared for. But they differed because they covered different facets of the crisis, not because their objectives are not the same. Mr. Dulles talked particularly about immediate dangers, Sir Anthony about possible solutions later, after admitting that an international conference on Asian peace is now out of the question.

Mr. Dulles's broadcast seems to have been disigned to be at the same time firm and unprovocative. He was saying to the Chinese Communists:"Don't attack, for if you do, the greatest might of the United States will be used against you and it can hit you on three fronts. And it will include the use of tactical nuclear weapons that can utterly destroy a military target without endangering unrelated civilian centers." But he did not, as had been predicted, announce that the United States would help defend Quemoy and the Matsus. This omission helped give the broadcast an air of restraint. Actaully the only new featrue in it was the reference to tactical nuclear weapons.

Sensational use was being made today of the reference to these weapons and the three fronts. It was stated that U.S. military authorities in Japan hold the view that general war in Asia may be only a few weeks away, and that that is why Mr. Dulles spoke about a three-front war and nuclear weapons in his broadcast. But the three-front thesis was used by Mr. Dulles in his last full dress statement in the Far East. And it should be noted that he did not link it in his broadcast with the Formosa crisis. He was speaking about Communist Chinese aggressions that would concern the Manila pact powers. He was not saying a three-front war would result if the Communists attacked Quemoy and the Matsus. What the United States would do in that event would be for President Eisenhower to decide.

It should be recalled that on January 27 the President said that he alone would have the authority to order United States forces used for other than immediate self-defense, or in direct defense of Formosa, and he promised not to delegate sucy authoiity.

Sir Anthony Eden, in his speech, did not criticize United States policy.

On the contrary, he vouched for its peaceful purpose. "I am convinced," he declared, "and I say this with all the conviction in my power, that they, (that is, the United States), wish to see conditions created which would put an end to active military hostilities in the area, and reduce the danger of wilder conflict." He called attention to the treaty in which the United States limited its formal commitments to the defense of Formosa and the Pescadores. And he said that the United States "had effectively restrained the Chinese Nationalists in recent weeks from initiating attacks against the Mianland, and had persuaded the Nationalists to evacuate the Tachen and Nanchi Islands."

He addressed himself to the two Chinese parties to the conflict, with the exhortation not to resort to the use of force. He noted that the Communists had refrained from attacking Quemoy and the Matusa, and urged them to continue to refrain, while maintaining intact in all respects their position in regard to Formosa and the Pescadores. He advised the Nationalists to withdraw their armed forces from the coastal islands, and while maintaining their claims to Formosa, to announce they will abstain from all offensive military action. If his advice should be followed, he said, then at an appropriate moment consideration could be given internationally to Chinese representation in the United Nations and to the future status of Formosa.

Sir Anthony also issues a warning. If no attempt was made to progress along these lines in the matter of Formosa and the coastal islands, "the consequences" he said, "will be very grave indeed."

What neither Mr. Dulles not Sir Anthony explained, or could explain diplomatically, is that perhaps the biggest factor in the crisis is morale. If at this time the Nationalists give up Quemoy and the Matsus, by consent or otherwise, they give up their crusade to regain the mainland. If they give up they cease to be impervious to Communist blandishments. It is conceivable that the Chiang regime would be overthorwn and replaced by Communist rebels, and that to prevent this the United States might have to intervene with its own forces.

That is a local possibility. On a broader front, a major retreat by the United States would at once weaken all the free nations in Asia, and put them pretty much at the mercy of communist subversion. The biggest end-result would be in Japan, which would lose faith in American power and determination.

To support the morale of the free countries needs firmness, and that was Mr. Dulles's measage. If peace is to be made, there must in time be concessions by both sides, and that was Sir Anthony's thesis. The two speeches, at any rate, deserve to be read together.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The long search for peace requires of us calmness patience and perseverence. For the problem is not a new one. And perhaps Suuart Chase put it as well as anyone when he remarked:"The two great tasks of mankind down the ages are also tasks for the individual down the years of his allotted span.--to come to terms with nature and with one's fellows."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday March 10, 1955

This is the news:

A Senate committee on juvenile delinquency tonight urged an immediate federal school building program to help stop "a disgraceful spiraling increase in juvenile delinquency." The committee also urged increased public housing..more federal aid to dependent children AND more help in curing mental health problems as part of an attack on juvenile delinquency. As the result of a two year study of the problem, the committee chided the Department of Health, Education and Wekfare for "slowness" in getting its juvenile delinquency section in action. And it warned: "Unless we pay out money for better school facilities today, we shall have to pay out the money for years to come for more police and more prisons."

The Senate committee studying the Stock Market today heard Marriner S. Eccles call for tighter credit curbs on stock buying and home building. Eccles, former chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, said this is necessary to combat what he called "elements of real danger to the economy." He also suggested that the present margin requirement for buying stocks..60 per cent..should be increased promptly to at least 75 per cent. And Eccles feels that if stock values continue to go up the margin reuirement should "ultimately" be increased to 100 per cent. ~~Another witness, John J. McCloy, chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank, said the steepness of the rise in stock values over relatively short periods warranted concern.~~

Chairman Byrd of the Senate Finance Committee opened debate on tax policy today by warning his colleagues that the "government is mortgaged to the hilt" and cannot afford any tax cuts unless spending is reduced. Byrd said: the national debt should not be increased except for national emergency. But Democratic Senator Kerr of Oklahoma said tax relief for individuals is necessary now to bolster employment and industrial production. And Treasury Secretary Humphrey told a House committee that the compromise tax plan approved by Democrats is "irresponsible, silly and bad from every point of view."

In both houses today there was charge and counter-charge as a result of a statement by Paul Butler, Democratic National Chairman, saying that the President might not run for re-election because of Mrs. Eisenhower's health. Republican Senator Aiken of Vermont called Butler

"a scoundrel." A Senator who refused to permit his name to be used told reporters the President is "extremely angry." Goldwater of Arizona said Butler has resorted to "personal smear tactics." House Minority Leader Martin said Butler has spoken in "poor taste." And Butler, replying to these attacks, had this explanation: he had referred, in a speech, to "published reports" that Mrs. Eisenhower has not been well.. that her official duties have taxed her strength..that her mother doesn't want her to live in the White House for another four years. He said the Republicans were making a mountain out of a molehill. After more Republicans in the Congress made it clear that they wanted to hammer away at what they considered a major political mistake by Butler, Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said it all sounded strange to him.. he recalls that during Democratic administrations the Republicans talked of the President's wife..his daughter..his piano and "everything else they could think of, which concerned the president."

Mr. Eisenhower went to Walter Reed Army Hospital today for the SECOND in a new series of treatments for bursitis in his right shoulder.

AND THE PRESIDENT sent a personal message to the premiers of seven European allies pledging that we will continue to maintain "a fair share" our our armed forces in Europe to guard against a Communist attack. His pledge was aimed at prodding the Europeans to speed up their official approval of arrangements for re-arming West Germany.

~~Mr. Eisenhower today greeted 91 foreign students who are in this country to study atomic energy technology. He said he is glad their project is called "Operation Friendship" because "that's exactly what we mean."~~

The State Department today granted permission for 11 Russian student-editors to visit our colleges for one month. ~~The Russian students arrived yesterday.~~ And the Russians notified us they would like to exchange a visiting delegation of farmers with us.

The House today approved a bill giving two million career servicemen pay increases ranging from six to 25 per cent. Only Republican Representative Taber of New York voted against it.

In London, Prime Minister Churchill today criticized what he called the confusion in the ranks of the opposition Labor Party. In a letter to a conservative candidate in a parliamentary by-election, he said the Socialists are "now split not only into two halves but into many factions." This was a reference to a move by the Laborite high command to expel left-winger Aneurin Bevan because he's rebelled against the party line on British defense matters.

Edward R. Murrow: March 10, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

One of the pitfalls of the atomic age is the use of words that becloud important meaning, rather than clarify it. Take the words "tactical" and "strategic", in defining two kinds of bombing. We and the Russians are making nuclear weapons for tactical use. We also are making them for strategic use. There is a difference - of purpose, at any rate - but it is not a difference that the standard meaning of the words makes clear.

During the last war the difference became quite clear. Tactical bombing was against troops, strategic bombing was against places. The places were chosen because of factories, communication centers, military headquarters, and the like, and were filled with civilians. At last, so far as people were concerned, the difference between tactical and strategic bombing came largely to be the difference between bombing troops and bombing civilians.

At the start of the last war there was some squeamishness about bombing civilians. Before the war was over it was done systematically and without qualms. The strategic bombing of Japan leveled every one of Japan's cities, one after the other, and burned many of them, at an incredible cost of life. The two or three cities left untouched were saved for the test of the awaited new atomic bomb. A city has military assets of a physical kind that strategic bombing destroys. It also has assets of morale that the bombing destroys. Tactics are used to win an engagement, strategy to win a campaign or a war. Destroying cities and killing civilians quite clearly can be part of strategy.

But in the atomic era the distinction between tactical and strategic bombing is not what it used to be. And it can be highly misleading to apply the old terminology to nuclear weapons. A recent example of such language was in Secretary Dulles's last broadcast. We now have, he said, "new and powerful weapons of precision which can utterly destroy military targets without endangering unrelated civilian centers."

Let us look at these words closely. A weapon of precision is one that can be delivered precisely where it is wanted. It destroys utterly a military target; that is, it kills all the troops in the area, or wipes an air base or other installation off the face of the earth.

But what is meant by saying it does not endanger unrelated civilian centers? Perhaps all that Mr. Dulles had in mind was that nuclear weapons could destroy something like the staging center of an invasion of Quemoy and the Matsus without at the same time nuclear bombs being dropped on Shanghai and Peiping. But if nuclear weapons are used to stop an invasion of Quemoy and the Matsus, the cities of Amoy and Foochow would be hit, and its civilians would be endangered pretty much as were those in Hiroshima and Nagasaki. There would be a wholesale slaughter of civilians, no matter what Mr. Dulles seemed to promise.

Another danger to civilians from tactical nuclear weapons can be mentioned. In Nevada in recent days a test of a nuclear weapon, involving an experiment in the defense of troops, had to be postponed day after day because of unfavorable winds. It was going to be unsafe to set off an atomic cloud that would imperil civilians by a radio-active fall-out. Certainly nobody thinks tactical nuclear weapons in a war are only to be used when the wind is right and enemy civilians are not to be endangered.

This is not a quibble. Suppose that tactical weapons are set off that destroy much of Amoy or Foochow, or whose fall-out injures hordes of civilians far from the battlefield, the enemy, if he has atomic weapons will retaliate, and probably retaliate against civilians outright. If he retaliated by hitting our "unrelated civilian centers" that could be expected to set off full-scale atomic war, not ending before the H-bomb is used.

I have read an assurance that Mr. Dulles believes it will be possible to limit the use of atomic weapons to tactical purposes. General Thomas R.

Phillips so wrote in The Reporter recently, and went on to define tactical purposes. They include destruction of airfields, supply installations, ports and lines of communication. But he added: "Such operations would inevitably include destruction of cities."

It long has counted as a truism that the United States could not use atomic bombs against Chinese cities without forfeiting any hope of gaining the friendship of Asian peoples. That may be why such care is taken to imply that the tactical use of nuclear weapons would not be like the strategic bombing of Japan in the last war.

However, there now is a new factor in the equation. The Chinese may not be without means of retaliation. Their leaders have said that if we use atomic weapons they will have them to use too. And this could only have been proclaimed on the basis of a pledge from the Kremlin.

This reporter does not believe that in another major war there will be many of the "unrelated civilian centers" Mr. Dulles was talking about. It appears almost inevitable to me that the use of nuclear weapons, even if begun for so-called tactical purposes, will bring on all-out strategic use. And ~~I go all the way with~~ it is necessary to remember the remark of President Eisenhower, who said recently that there really is no definite dividing line between the two uses.

It seems somewhat ironic that a problem that has been with us throughout so much of history, still remains unsolved. But apparently, that's how it is with war. For as far back as 65 A.D. Seneca concluded: "We are mad, not only individually, but nationally. We check manslaughter and isolated murders; but what of war and the much vaunted crime of manslaughtering whole peoples."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 10, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

A Senate committee on juvenile delinquency tonight urged an immediate federal school building program to help stop " a disgraceful spiraling increase in juvenile delinquency." The committee also urged increased public housing ..more federal aid to dependent children and more help in curing mental health problems as part of an attack on juvenile delinquency. As the result of a two year study of the problem, the committee chided the Department of Health, Education and Welfare for "slowness" in getting its juvenile delinquency section in action. And it warned:"Unless we pay out money for better school facilities today, we shall have to pay out the money for years to come for more police and more prisons."

The Senate committee studying the Stock Market today heard Marriner S. Eccles call for tighter credit curbs on stock buying and home building. Eccles, former chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, said this is necessary to combat that he called "elements of real danger to the economy." He also suggested that the present margin requirements for buying stocks....60 per cent ..should beincreased promptly to at least 75 per cent. And Eccles feels that if stock values continue to go up the margin requirements should "ultimately" be increased to 100 per cent.

Chairman Byrd of the Senate Finance Committee opened debate on tax policy today by warning his colleagues that the "government is mortgaged up to the hilt" and cannot offord any tax cuts unless spending is reduced. Byrd said: the national debt should not be increased except for national emergency. But Democratic Senator Kerr of Oklahoma said tax relief for individuals is necessary now to bolster employment and industrial production. And Treasury

Secretary Humphrey told a House committee that the compromise tax plan approved by Democratic "is irresponsible, silly and bad from every point of view."

In both houses today there was charge and counter-charge as a result of a statement by Paul Butler, Democratic National Chairman, saying that the President might not run for re-election because of Mrs. Eisenhower's health. Republican Senator Aiken of Vermont called Butler "a scoundrel". A Senator who refused to permit his name to be used told reporters tha President is "extremely angry." Goldwater of Arizona said Butler has resorted to "personal smear tactics." House Minority Leader Martin said Butler has spoken in "poor taste." And Butler, replying to those attacts, had this explanation: he had referred, in a speech, to "published reports" that Mrs. Eisenhower has not been well...that her official duties have taxed her strenght...that her mother doesn't want her to live in the White House for another four years. He said the Republicans in the Congress made it clear that they wanted to hammer away at what they considered a major political mistake by Butler, Senate Democtatic Leader Johnson said it all sounded strange to him...he recalls that during Democratic administrations the Republicans talked of the President's wife ...his daughter...his piano and "everything else they could think of which concerned the president."

Mr. Eisenhower went to Walter Reed Army Hospital today for the second in a few series of treatments for bursitis in his right shoulder.

And the President sent a prrsonal message to the premiers of seven European allies pledging that we will continue to maintain "a fair share" of our armed forces in Europe to guard against a Communist attack. His pledge was aimed at prodding the Europeans to speed up their official approval of arrangements for re-arming Germany.

The State Department today granted permission for 11 Russian student-editors to visit our colleges for one month. And the Russians notified us they would like to exchange a visiting delegation of farmers with us.

The House today approved a bill giving two million career servicemen pay increases ranging from six to 25 percent. Only Republican Representative Taber of New York voted against it.

In London, Prime Minister Churchill today criticized what he called the confusion in the ranks of the opposition Labor Party. In a letter to a conservative candidate in a parliamentary by-election, he said the Socialists are "now split not only into two halves but into many factions." This was a reference to a move by the Laborite high command to expel left-winger Aneurin Bevan because he's rebelled against the party line on British defense matters.

One of the pitfalls of the atomic age is the use of words that becloud important meaning, rather than clarify it. Take the words "tactical" and "strategic", in defining two kinds of bombing. We and the Russians are making nuclear weapons for tactical use. We also are making them for strategic use. There is a difference - of purpose, at any rate - but it is not a difference that the standard meaning of the words makes clear.

During the last war the difference became quite clear. Tactical bombingwas against troops, strategic bombing was against places. The places were chosen becasue of factories, communication centers, military headquarters, and the like, and were filled with civilians. At least so far as people were concerned, the difference between tactical and strategic bombing came largely to be the difference between bombing troops and bombing civilians.

At the start of the last war there was some squeamishness about bombing civilians. Before the war was over it was done systematically and without qualms. The strategic bombing of Japan leveled everyone of Japan's cities, one after the other, and burned many of them, at an incredible cost of life. The two or three cities left untouched were saved for the test of the awaited new atomic bomb. A city has military assets of a physical kind that strategic bombing destroys. It also has assets of morale that the bombing destroys or damages. Tactics are used to win an engagement, strategy to win a campaign or a war. Destroying cities and killing civilians quite clearly can be part of strategy.

But in the atomic ara the distinction between tactical and strategic bombing is not what it used to be. And it can be highly misleading to apply the old terminology to nuclear weapons. A recent example of such language was in Secretary Dulles's last broadcast We now have, he said, "new and powerful weapons of precision which can utterly destroy military targets without endangering unrelated civilian centers."

Let us look at these words closely. A weapon of precision is one that can be delivered precisely where it is wanted. It destroys utterly a military target; that is, it kills all the troops in the area, or wipes an air base or other installation off the face of the earth.

But what is meant by saying it does not endanger unrelated civilian centers? Perhaps all that Mr. Dulles had in mind was that nuclear weapons could destroy something like the staging center of an invasion of Quemoy and the Matsus without at the same time nuclear bombs being dropped on Shanghai and Peiping. But if nuclear weapons are used to stop an invasion of Quemoy and the Matsus, the cities of Amoy and Foochow would be hit, and its civilians would be endangered pretty much as were those in Hiroshima and Nagisaki. There would be a wholesale slaughter of civilians, no matter what Mr. Dulles seemed to promise.

Another danger to civilians from tactical nuclear weapons can be mentioned. In Nevada in recent days a test of a nuclear weapon, involving an experiment in the defense of troops, had to be postponed day after day recause of unfavorable winds. It was going to be unsafe to set off an atomic cloud that would imperil civilians by a radio-active fall-out. Certainly nobody thinks tactical nuclear weapons in a war are only to be used when the wind is right and enemy civilians are not to be endangered.

This is not a quibble. Suppose that tactical weapons wre set off that destroy mucv of Amoy or Foochow, or whose fall-out injures hordes of civilians far from the battlefield, the enemy, if he has atomic weapons will retaliate, and probably retaliate against civilians outright. If he retaliated by hitting our "unrelated civilian centers" that could be expected to set off full-scale atomic war, not ending before the H-bomb is used.

I have read an assurance that Mr. Dulles believes it will be possible to limit the use of atomic weapons to tactical purposes. General Thomas R. Phillips so wrote in the Reporter recently, and went on to define tactical purposes. They include destruction of airfields, supply installations, ports and lines of communication. But he added: "Such operations would inevitably include destruction of cities."

It long has counted as a truism that the United States could not use atomic bombs against Chinese cities without forfetitng any hope of gaining the friendship of Asian peoples. That may be why such care is taken to imply that the tactical use of nuclear weapons would not be like the strategic bombing of Japan in the last war.

However, there now is a new factor in the equation. The Chinese may not be without means of retaliation. Their leaders have said that if we use atomic weapons whey will have them to use too. And this could only have been proclaimed on the basis of a pledge from the Kremlin.

This reporter does not believe that in another major war there will be many of the "unrelated civilian centers" Mr. Dulles was talking about. It appears almost inevitable to me that the use of nuclear weapons, even if begun for so-called tactical purposes, will bring on all-out strategic use. And it is necessary to remember the remark of President Eisenhower, who said recently that there really is not definite dividing line between the two uses.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON:COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It seems somewhat ironic that a problem that has been with us throughout so much history, still remains unsolved. But apparently, that' how it is with war. For as far back as 65 A.D. Seneca concluded:"We are man, not only individually, but nationally. We check manslaughter and isoloated murders; but what of war and the much vaunted crime of manslaughtering whole peoples."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Friday March 11, 1955

This is the news:

Two Democratic Representatives said today that the President is restraining Secretary of State Dulles from announcing that we will defend Nationalist China's Quemoy and Matsu islands. The two congressmen are: Representative Richards, South Carolina, chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee..and Representative Zablocki, Wisconsin, chairman of the Far Eastern sub-committee. Both men told [redacted] reporters they believe Mr. Dulles favors defending the islands. And both said "somebody above"..which could only be the President..is curbing him. The White House says it knows of no dispute between the President and Secretary on any foreign policy. Secretary Dulles told reporters: "I wouldn't think there is any basis" for what the two Representatives reported. Zablocki says he's convinced, on the basis of secret testimony his committee heard, that the government had once decided to defend the two islands. [redacted]

The Chinese Communists today fired 52 shells at Quemoy. The Nationalists do not say whether they returned the fire.

And the Communist radio is doing a crude job of misrepresentation on a recent speech by Secretary Dulles. Mr. Dulles had said that the Communists "seem determined" to challenge our "deterrent power" in Korea, Indo-China and Formosa Strait. He warned that if necessary we would meet hostile force "with the greater force we possess." The Communists are using this to put word's in the Secretary's mouth. Radio Peiping accusses Mr. Dulles of "preparing to attack China on three fronts." Peiping says:"Dulles revealed the United States was clearly preparing to invade China from the south, center and north and that these 'three fronts' should be regarded as an entirety."

Moscow today announced the promotion of ten Russian generals to the rank of Marshal. Among the ten are: Chuikov, hero of Stalingrad who later commanded Soviet occupation troops in Germany...Bagramian... who commanded the Batlic front in World War Two.. and Yeremenko..who is reported to be in command in western Siberia.

In Rome today the Italian Senate voted to approve the re-armament of West Germany. This completes Italy's parliamentary action..and makes her the eighth of the 15 nations involved to do so.

In London today, Sir Alexander Fleming, who discovered penicillin, died unexpectedly of heart disease. He was 73.

Here in New York, the Stock Market had another sharp drop.. with losses of from one to five dollars a share. It was a very unsettled week for the market. Some Wall Street experts blame this on the Senate study, now in progress in Washington. To this Chairman Fulbright says: The market is "mighty weak" if the investigation is causing it to drop.

Today the Senators heard General Wood, chairman of the pension fund trustees of Sears, Roebuck, say that this fund now has 90-million dollars in cash. But Wood said, it will not invest this money right now. He said stock prices may not be too high, "but on the other hand" he doesn't want to risk the money. Another witness, Benjamin Graham, New York financier, said he's inclined to favor a fairly rapid increase from 60 to 100 per cent, in margin requirements.

Major General Howard M. Snyder said today that Mrs. Eisenhower "has a slight heart condition, but despite that her health is, and always has been, basically good." General Snyder said Mrs. Eisenhower's heart condition has never "handicapped her in any way, in the discharge of her official duties." IN A FEW MINUTES, I would like to discuss the wide attention given Mrs. Eisenhower this week-[redacted]

Scott McLeod, the state department's security chief, told Senators today that "if you sometimes have to hire a security risk to get a job done, I'm going to hire him." Mc Cleoud said he couldn't recall any such case in the two years he's been with the State Department.

Justice Department sources say Harvey Matusow was a confidential informer in some cases involving federal employe security. Attorney General Brownell has suggested a review of these cases to the agencies involved.

General Clay, author of the Administration's program for super-highways, told a Senate committee today that [redacted] among the benefits from a 40-thousand mile interstate network would be their use for evacuation of cities..in case of attack. But Democratic Senator McNamara of Michigan said the highways wouldn't be "worth a darn" for evacuation...one accident on a superhighway would choke traffic.

A spokesman for the auto industry today predicted that the C. I.O. auto workers will strike this year to get a guaranteed annual wage. Frank Rising, general manager of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association, says he thinks we face "the most turbulent, roughest, labor trouble that we have seen in a long time."

Former Republican Senator Ferguson of Michigan today was nominated by the President to be ambassador to the Philippines. Ferguson was defeated for re-election last November.

~~Winds up to 92 miles an hour hit five states today..in the worst storm of the year. Two people were killed and millions of dollars in property damage was reported from Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Maryland and parts of West Virginia. The storm blew itself out over eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey.~~

And in Alabama, a jury today found Albert Fuller, former chief deputy sheriff at Phenix City, guilty of the murder of a crusading political leader who had promised to wipe out a crime syndicate in the town. The jury recommended mercy and Fuller was sentenced to life in prison.

Edward R. Murrow: March 11, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

It was unseasonably warm in Washington yesterday, and these premature summer spells have a way of affecting the delicate adjustments that keep politicians balanced and rational. The thermometer and barometer have shown before that odd departures from the normal are to be expected. They did it again yesterday. A politician mentioned the health of Mrs. Eisenhower as being perhaps a factor in the President deciding not to accept nomination for a second term. That brought down such abuse on the politician as is rarely heard over issues of acknowledged gravity. The assaults were positively electric.

Of course the electricity wasn't due only to the weather. The politician who made the comment about Mrs. Eisenhower was Democratic National Committee Chairman Paul Butler. And anyone can see without squinting an eye that the health of Mrs. Eisenhower and its consequences do not lie in Mr. Butler's department. It is legitimate for him to talk about a second term for the President, but Mr. Butler is no authority on the influence of Mrs. Eisenhower on Mr. Eisenhower. Any suggestion by him that she is exerting influence on him, or could do so, is at least gratuitous. It may be even a little worse.

But listen how the usually soft-spoken Senator Aiken of Vermont reacted: "Mr. Butler" he said, "sounds like he would be very happy if Mrs. Eisenhower was in poor health, but we know she is not. Why does he try to upset these good Christian people in the White House? He does not want the President to run for re-election, but does he think he can make Mrs. Eisenhower sick? Can he make the President think he is doing a terrible wrong? I don't know what goes on in the mind of a man who uses tactics like that. Just how low can an animal in human form get? No decent Democrat would stand for the tactics this scoundrel has used. I think he has answered the question of just how low a man can get."

Six Republican women members of the House banded together to issue a joint statement "deploring" Mr. Butler's "attack", and voicing their affection for the First Lady. Others challenged the good taste of Mr. Butler's comment.

Mr. Butler issued a fresh statement saying a mountain was being made of a molehill. "If the purpose of the Republicans is to persuade Mr. Eisenhower to be a candidate in 1956" he said tartly, "they would be better advised to spend their time supporting the President's program instead of wasting it berating me."

Senator Lyndon Johnson, Democratic floor leader, sought to turn the tide by being affably historical. "It seems passing strange to me" the Texan said, "that my delightful friends on the other side of the aisle should be so disturbed in this year 1955. They talked about the President's health, the President's wife, the President's daughter, and the President's piano, and everything else they could think of which concerned the President, for more than twenty years."

The historical reference is accurate, but Senator Johnson might have gone even further back. While it is true that most Presidents' wives have managed ~~to avoid being dragged~~ into the political arena, that has been due to their own circumspection and not to the gallantry of politicians. The rule has been that the quieter a President's wife, the less she was talked about. Mrs. Eisenhower is an exception to the rule, for she has been as inconspicuous as a hard-working First Lady in good conscience could be. Certainly nothing she has said or done or left undone - beyond coming down at this time with the ~~XXXXX~~ flu - has justified any partisan comment whatever. But she has had predecessors in the White House who have fared much worse. One need only think of Mrs. Andrew Jackson ~~and~~ Mrs. Abraham Lincoln + Mrs Franklin Roosevelt to realize that consideration for a President's wife is no unbroken practise in our capital.

I have mentioned the weather as being partly to blame for the strong language over Mr. Butler's indiscretion. But any amateur psychologist knows there is more to it than that. Republicans and Democrats are not in what can be described as a state of healthy rivalry. If they were they would be expressing it in a routine way in routine language. The fact is that so little separates many Republicans and most Democrats these days that they are frustrated as rivals. And rivalry is indispensable with an election coming up. The only major issue dividing them seems to be taxes. They fight over taxes, but they can't do it all the time and exclusively. So they fight over the propriety of mentioning Mrs. Eisenhower. And obviously that comes easy on an unseasonably warm day.

The rise and fall of the temperature can provoke all sorts of emotions in the human animal. In Spring, they say, a young man's fancy turns to love. In a pre-mature Spring, perhaps for some it turns to politics...especially if you live in Washington. Pascal had all of this reasoned well:"The weather and my mood have little connection. I have my foggy and my fine days within me."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 11, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Two Democratic Representatives said today that the President is restraining Secretary of State Dulles from announcing that we will defend Nationalist China's Quemoy and Matsu Islands. The two congressman are:Representative Richards, South Carolina, Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee...and Representative Zablocki, Wisconsin, Chairman of the Far Eastern sub-committee. Both men told reporters they believe Mr. Dulles favors defending the islands. And both said "somebody above" ..which could only be the President..is curbing him. The White House says it knows of no dispute between the President and Secretary on any foreign policy. Secretary Dulles told reporters; "I wouldn't think there is any basis" for what the two representatives reported. Zablocki says he's convinced, on the basis of secret testimony his committee heard, that the government had once decided to defend the two islands.

The Chinese Communists today fired 52 shells at Quemoy. The Nationalists do not say whether they returned the fire.

And the Communist radio is doing a crude job of misrepresentation on a recent speech by Secretary Dulles. Mr. Dulles had said that the Communists "seem determined" to challenge our "deterrent power" in Korea, Indo-China and Formosa Strait. He warned that if necessary we would meet mostile force "with the greater force we possess." The Communists are using this to put words in the Secretary's mouth. Radio Peiping accuses Mr. Dulles of "preparing to attack China on three fronts." Peiping says: "Dulles revealed the United States was clearly preparing to invade China from the South, center and North and that these 'three fronts' should be regarded as an entirety."

Moscow today announced the promotion of ten Russian generals to the rank of Marshal. Among the ten are: Chuikov, hero of Stalingrad who later commanded Soviet occupation troops in Germany...Bagramian...who commanded the Baltic front in World War Two...and Yeremenko...who is reported to be in command in western Siberia.

In Rome today, the Italian Senate voted to approve the re-armament of West Germany. This completes Italy's parliamantary action...and makes her the eighth of the 15 nations involved to do so.

In London today, Sir Alexander Fleming, who discovered penicilin, died unexpectedly of heart disease. He was 73.

Here in New York, the Stock Market had another sharp drop...with losses of from one to five dollars a share. It was a very unsettled week for the market. Some Wall Street experts blame this on the Senate study now in progress in Washington. To this Chairman Fulbright says: the market is "mighty weak" if the investigation is causing it to drop.

Today the Senators heard General Wood, chairman of the pension fund trustess of Sears & Roebuck say that this fund now has 90-million dollars in cash. But Wood said it will not invest this money right now. He said stock prices may not be too high "but on the other hand" he doesn't want to risk the money. Another witness, Benjamin Graham, New York financier, said he's inclined to favor a fairly rapid increase from 60 to 100 per cent in margin requirements.

Major General Howard M. Snyder said today that Mrs. Eisenhower "has a slight heart condition; but despite that her health is, and always has been basically good." General Snyder said Mrs. Eisenhower's heard condition has never"handicapped her inanyway in the discharge of her official duties." In a few minutes, I would like to discuss the wide attention given Mrs. Eisenhower this week.

Scott McLeod, the State Department's Security Chief, told Senators today that "if you sometimes have to hire a security risk to get a job done, I'm going to hire him." McLeod said he couldn't recall any such case in the two years he's been with the State Department.

Justice Department sources say Harvey Matusow was a condidential informer in some cases involving federal employee security. Attorney General Brownell has suggested a review of these cases to the agencies involved.

General Clay, author of the Administration's program for super-highways, told a Senate committee today that among the benefits from a 40-thousand mile interstate network would be their use for evacuation of cities...in case of attack. But Democratic Senator McNamara of Michigan said the highways wouldn't be "worth a darn" for evacuation...one accident on a superhighway would choke traffic.

A spokesman for the auto industry today predicted that the C.I.O. auto workers will strike this year to get a guaranteed annual wage. Frank Rising, general manager of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association, says he thinks we face "the most turbulent, roughest, labor trouble that we have seen in a long time."

Former Republican Senator Ferguson of Michigan today was nominated by the President to be ambassador to the Philippines. Ferguson was defeated for re-election last November.

And in Alabama, a jury today found Albert Fuller, former chief deputy sheriff of Phoenix City, guilty of the murder of a crusading political leader who had promised to wipe out a crime syndicate in the town. The jury recommended mercy and Fuller was sentenced to life in prison.

It was unseasonably warm in Washington yesterday, and these premature summer spells have a way of affecting the delicate adjustments that keep politicians balanced and rational. The thermometer and barometer have shown before that odd departures from the normal are to be expected. They did it yesterday. A politician mentioned the health of Mrs. Eisenhower as being perhaps a factor in the President deciding not to accept nomination for a second term. That brought down such abuse on the politician as is rarely heard over issues of acknowledged gravity. The assaults were positively electric.

Of course the electricity wasn't due only to the weather. The politician who made the comment about Mrs. Eisenhower was Democratic National Committee Chairman Paul Butler. And anyone can see without squinting an eye that the health of Mrs. Eisenhower and its consequences do not lie in Mr. Butler's department. It is legitimate for him to talk about a second term for the President, but Mr. Butler is no authority on the influence of Mrs. Eisenhower on Mr. Eisenhower. Any suggestion by him that she is exerting influence on him, or could do so, is at least gratuitous. It may be even a little worse.

But listen how the usually soft-spoken Senator Aiken of Vermont reacted: "Mr Butler" he said, "sounds like he would be very happy if Mrs. Eisenhower was in poor helath, byt we know she is not. Why does he try to upset these good Christian people in the White House? He does not want the President to run for re-election, but does he think he can make Mrs. Eisenhower sick? Can he make the President think he is doing a terrible wrong? I don't know what goes on in the mind of a man who uses tactics like that. Just how low can an animal in human form get? No decent Democrat would stand for the tactics this scoundrel has used. I think he has answered the question of just how low a man can get."

Six Republican women members of the House banded together to issue a joint statement "deploring" Mr. Butler's "attack", and voicing their affection for the First Lady. Others challenged the good taste of Mr. Butler's comment.

Mr. Butler issued a fresh statement saying a mountain was being made of a molehill. "If the prupose of the Republicans is to persuade Mr. Eisenhower to be a candidate in 1956" he said tartly, "they would be better advised to spend their time supporting the President's program instead of wasting it berating me."

Senator Lyndon Johnson, Democratic floor leader, sought to turn the tide by being affably historical. "It seems passing strange to me" the Texas said, "that my delightful friends on the other side of the aisle should be so disturbed in this year 1955. They talked about the President's health, the President's wife, the President's daughter, tnd the President's piano, and everything else they could think of which concerned the President, for more than twenty years."

The historical reference is accurate, but Senator Johnson might have gone even further back. While it is true that most President's wives have managed to avoid being dragged into the political arena, that has been due to their own circumspection and not to the gallantry of politicanas. The rule has been that the quieter a President's wife, the less she was talked about. Mrs. Eisenhower is an exception to the rule, for she has been as inconspicuous as a hard-working First Lady in good conscience could be. Certainly nothing she has said or done or left undone - behond coming down at this time with the flu - has justified any partisan comment whatever. But shw has had predecessors in the White House who have fared much worse. One need only think of Mrs. Andrew Jackson, Mrs. Abraham Lincoln and Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt to realize taat consideration for a President's wife is no unbroken practice in our capital.

I have mentioned the weather as being partly to blame for the strong language over Mr. Butler's indiscretion. But any amateur psychologist knows there is more to it than that. Republicans and Democrats are not in what can be described as a state of healthy rivalry. If they were they would be expressing it in a routine way in routine language. The fact is that so little separates many Republicans and most Democrats these days that they are frustrated as rivals. And rivalry is indispensable with an election coming up. The only major issue dividing them seems to be taxes. They might over taxes, but they can't do it all the time and ecclusively. So they fight over the propriety of mentioning Mrs. Eisenhower. And obviously that comes easy on an unseasonably warm day.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The rise and fall of the temperature can provoke all sorts of emotions in the human animal. In Spring, they say, a young man's fancy turns to love. In a pre-mature spring, perhaps for some it turns to politics...especially if you live in Washington. Pascal had all of this reasoned well:"The weather and my mood have little connection. I have my foggy and my fine days within me."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday, March 14, 1955

This is the news:

The Stock Market today had its heaviest loss in almost five years. (The biggest drop since two days after the Communists invaded South Korea.) Key (issues) dropped from one to six dollars a share. The Associated Press estimates an approximate loss of four billion dollars in the quoted value of all securities. Brokers regard all this as a hang-over from last week which produced the worst weekly decline in 15 years.

In Washington, a former president of the New York Stock Exchange, William McChesney Martin, Junior, told Senate investigators he sees signs of "unhealthy tendency when businessmen or the public generally become unduly preoccupied with the Stock Market and Stock prices. He said this could develop into an "unsound speculative psychology which could have adverse effects throughout the economy. [Martin is now chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.] And he told the committee that if credit buying of stocks is ended..if margin requirements are raised to 100 per cent... this would "promote a lower standard of living." Martin said if the Market were put on an all-cash basis there would be just as much speculation overall. He feels this would merely divert money from the Stock Market into other speculative fields. And among the committee members, Chairman Fulbright said again the committee was making a "friendly study" of the market while Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana said the testimony "has had a tendency to bring stock prices down."

Republican Senators Watkins of Utah and Goldwater of Arizona said today that the nation's eceonomy is showing "a healthy vitality." This was a minority report to a Senate-House economic committee majority conclusion that recovery from last year's business recession has been slow.. that while business has been improving "certain regions and industries continue to be in very serious economic straits."

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said today: the Senate will decide what to do about a proposed tax cut..without help from Treasury Secretary Humphrey. Over the week-end Humphrey issued a statement saying the Democrat's tax cut plan was a "political quickie gimmick." Johnson said today:"It looks like Mr. Humphrey is trying to be the best big business Secretary to the Treasury since Andrew Mellon." Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota says the Senate must choose between "the American people or big business corporations." And Republican Leader Knowland says the Senate will defeat any proposal to cut individual income taxes.

An estimated 25-thousand non-operating workers on the Lousiville and Nashville Railroad--and two subsidiaries--went on strike today over health and welfare benefits . Fourteen trains were cancelled.

And Southern Bell Telephone workers and other workers in nine states struck today in a contract dispute.

The state of Tennessee has asked the United States Court of Appeals for an order (blocking) the financing of the controversial Dixon-Yates power contract.

Secretary of State Dulles told a Senate committee today that the reciprocal trade agreements are a symbol of our willingness to show "a decent regard" for nations whose destinies are "interlocked with our own." He said its of the utmost importance that Congress extend the agreements.

The State Department says it has been decided not to publish the record of the Yalta Big Three conference..at this time. Instead, Secretary Dulles is willing to send "confidential copies" of the record to key members of Congress who request it.

Federal Judge Thomsen ruled in Baltimore today that John David Provoo should be freed of wartime treason charges on the grounds that he has been denied the right of a speedy trial. That's covered by the Sixth amendment to the CONSTITUTION. Provoo was sentenced to life imprisonment in 1953 for treasonous acts committed while a prisoner of the Japanese after the fall of Corregidor. A court of appeals upset the conviction last August..on the grounds that the trial should have been held in Baltimore instead of New York.

Bernard Fitzsimons, security director for Douglas Aircraft, told a Senate committee today that a man who invented "a vital" jet plane starting device was later barred by the Navy and Air Force from working on his own invention. He was held to be a security risk... until finally cleared.

The Associated Press reports that in the six months since Congress "outlawed" the Communist party the government has not cracked down on the party in any way.

Foreign Aid [redacted] Director Stassen says the Administration will request three and a half [redacted] billion dollars for all foreign aid spending in the year beginning July first. This year the Administration has [redacted] five billion 300-million available.

The Baltimore Sun reports, without confirmation, that a quiet evacuation of civilians from Quemoy and the Matsu islands has started.

On Formosa, reliable sources say preparations have been made to start talking about a joint American-Chinese Nationalist command in the event of war with Red China.

And the Nationalist says their planes scattered a Communist flotilla today..sinking three gunboats and seven armed junks.

Sweden today accused four members of the Communist Cezch and Romanian delegations of espionage. They were kicked out of the country.

In Great Britain today, there was talk of spring and love and politics. I've asked my colleague Alex Kendrick to record this summary for you:

(runs 4;55 ending: Now back to ERM in New York)

And a few minutes after we received Kendrick's report the House and a few minutes later we received Hendrick's report the House of Commons voted down Labor's motion of censure...298 to 268. The Laborites backed former Prime Minister Atlee against the Aneurin Bevan view. — Big 4 — Italian Vacation —

This is erm... I'll be back in a moment. etc.

Bob Dixon —

Much of what my colleague, Alex Kendrick, had to report from London, might be called ~~classed in the category of~~ incidental information -- ~~but the~~ sort of news we're accustomed to reading in this country. In this connection Mark Twain once said of the British: "With a common origin, a common language, a common literature,, a common religion and - common drinks - what is longer needful ~~in~~ to the cementing of the two nations?"

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, March 14, 1955
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... In Great Britain today, there was talk of Spring and love and politics. I've asked my colleague, Alex. Kendrick, to record this summary for you.

KENDRICK: The temperature in London reads 49-degrees today. The sun shone from a blue sky. People began digging in their gardens and Spring was definitely on the way after the coldest, snowiest, most persistent winter in many years. A horde of bullfinches was discovered eating up all the gooseberries in Kent and Sussex, and tomorrow morning a letter to the Times will undoubtedly report the first robin of the season.

To keep pace with this unusual weather, other matters in Britain seemed slightly mixed up today, also. In the House of Commons this afternoon, a spokesman for the Labor Party made an impassioned demand for immediate high level talks by the United States, Britain and the Soviet Union. He rebuked the Churchill government for insisting that ratification of the agreements on Germany should come first, and he made a fervent plea for co-existence and for a British policy of trying to bring together the United States and Russia. The speaker also warned of the growing danger of hydrogen bomb experiments and said the bomb made it more than ever mandatory to get an agreement with the Russians.

Now a casual visitor to the public gallery of the House, not equipped with a score card to tell the players, would have bet that these words were uttered by the Labor Party's perennial "aginner", Aneurin Bevan. This is almost word for word, the line he has been following for months, if not for years. But no one could convince Mr. Bevan that Spring is here. He was not in the House today, but laid up on his farm in Buckinghamshire, convalescing from a bad attack of influenza, and the words he would have said had he been present werein fact said by the leader of the opposition, Clement Attlee.

Since Mr. Attlee is at the moment engaged in trying to get

Mr. Bevan expelled from the Labor Party, for holding the views that Mr. Attlee today held, the situation is an unusual one. Mr. Bevan says he has nothing personal against Mr. Attlee and differs with him only on policy. But those who would try to push Mr. Bevan out say it has nothing to do with policy but is a matter of personal conduct and party loyalty. At any rate, Mr. Bevan expects to be well enough Wednesday to appear at a meeting of all the Labor MPs, at which his case will be decided. The odds, at present, seem to be against him, since he's obviously held guilty by Mr. Attlee of being a premature Attleeite.

And just to make things more confusing, the British-Soviet Friendship Society today invited both Attlee and Bevan to appear jointly and address it on British-Soviet friendship, just as they jointly visited the Soviet Union last year.

The other principal in today's debate, Sir Winston Churchill, meanwhile defended himself against Mr. Attlee's (sic) that is, Mr. Bevan's charges, of not trying to get a conference with the Russians. He revealed a whole series of personal messages to Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov last year, seeking a meeting at Vienna, Stockholm or Bern, only to be put off first by the Geneva Conference and then by the Soviet proposal for an all-European conference on collective security. Presumably, the British-Soviet Friendship Society will send Sir Winston an invitation also.

About all these goings-on, one London newspaper today carried the headline: "Confusion dispelled."

Another bit of mixedup news in Britain today, concerns the romance - if any - of Princess Margaret. Probably because it is Spring, rumors have been recently revived that the Queen's younger sister is going to marry Air Captain Peter Townsend. Now there's no way of confirming a story like this from Buckingham Palace, until Buckingham Palace gets good and ready to say something. And you just don't call up Clarence House, where the princess lives, and ask her. So Britain's tabloid press has been camping on the doorstep of Captain Townsend, and his British Embassy post in Brussels, supposedly an exile in the name of love. And Captain Townsend has been making a series of ambiguous remarks, which the tabloid press, at any rate, has been interpreting as confirmation of its original conjecture.

Well, today in Brussels, Captain Townsend turned on the tabloid press, man bites dog, and said that he has no reason whatever to believe the Princess has decided to marry him, that she certainly hasn't told him anything about it. It was unambiguous and unequivocal, and the tabloid press tomorrow will no doubt take it as further confirmation of its conjectures.

The rest of England will resume digging its gardens, watching for that first robin and trying to rescue a few gooseberries from those bullfinches.

This is Alexander Kendrick in London. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

(30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 14, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Stock Market today had its heaviest loss in almost five years...The biggest drop since two days after the Communists invaded South Korea. Key issues dropped from one to six dollars a share. The Associated Press estimates an approximate loss of four billion dollars in the quoted value of all securities. Brokers regard all this as a hang-over from last week which produced the worst weekly decline in 15 years.

In Washington, a former president of the New York Stock Exchange, William McChesney Martin, Junior, told Senate investigators he sees signs of "unhealthy tendency when businessmen or the public generally become unduly preoccupies with the Stock Market and Stock prices. He said this could develop into an "unsound speculative psychology which could have adverse effects throughout the economy. Martin is now chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. And he told the committee that if credit buying of stocks is ended...if margin requirements are raised to 100 per cent...this would " promote a lower standard of living." Martin said if the Market were put on an all-cash basis there would be just as much speculation overall. He feels this would merely divert money from the Stock Market into other speculative fields. And among the committee members, Chairman Fulbright said again the committee was making a "friendly study" of the market while Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana said to the testimony "has had a tendency to bring stock prices down."

Republican Senators Watkins of Utah and Goldwater of Arizona said today that the nation's economy is showing "a healthy vitality." This was a minority report to a Senate-House economic committee majority conclusion that revovery from last year's business recession has been slow...that while business has been improving "certain regions and industires continue to be in very serious economic straits."

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said today : the Senate will decide what to do about a proposed tax cut...without the help from Treasury Secretary Humphrey. Over the week-end Humphrey issues a statement saying the Democrats taxcut plan was a "political quickie gimmick." Johnson said today: "It looks like Mr. Humphrey is trying to be the best big business Secretary to the Treasury since Andrew Mellon." Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota says the Senate must choose between "the American people or big business corporations." And Republican Leader Knowland says the Senate will defeat any proposal to cut individual income taxes.

An estimated 25-thousand non-operating workers on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad -- and two subsidiaries -- went on strike today over health and welfare benefits. Fourteen trains were cancelled.

And Southern Bell Telephone workers and other workers in nine states struck today in a contract dispute.

The state of Tennessee has asked the United States Court of Appeals for an order blocking the financing of the controversial Dixon-Yates power contract.

Secretary of State Dulles told a Senate committee today that the reciprocal trade agreements are a symbol of our willingness to show "a decent regard" for nations whose destinies are "interlocked with our own." He said its of the utmost importance that Congress extend the agreements.

The State Department says it has been decided not to publish the record of the Yalta Big Three conference...at this time. Instead, Secretary Dulles is willing to send "confidential copies" of the record to key members of the Congress who request it.

Federal Judge Thomsen ruled in Baltimore today that John David Provoo should be freed of wartime treason charges on the grounds that he has been denied the right of a speedy trial. That's covered by the Sixth amendment to the Constitution. Provoo was sentenced to life imprisonment in 1953 for treasonous acts committed while a prisoner of the Japanese after the fall of Corredigor. A court of appeals upset the conviction last August..on the grounds that the trial should have been held in Baltimore instead of New York.

Bernard Fitzsimmons, security director for Douglas Aircraft, told a Senate committee today that a man ho invented "a vital" jet plane starting device was later barred by the Navy and Air Force from working on his own invention. He was held to be a security risk...until finally cleared.

The Associated Press reports that in the six months since Congress "outlawed" the Communist party the government has not cracked down on the party in any way.

Foreign Aid Director Stassen says the Administration will request three and a half billion dollars for all foreign aid spending in the year beginning July first This year the Administration has five billion 300 million a available.

The Baltimore Sun reports, without confirmation, that a quiet evacuation of civilians from Quemoy and the Matsu islands has started.

On Formosa, reliable sources say preparations have been made to start talking about a joint American-Chinese Nationalist command in the event of war with Red China.

And the Nationalist say their planes scattered a Communist flotilla today...sinking three gunboats and seven armed junks.

Sweden today accused four members of the Communist Czech and Romanian delegations of espionage. They were kicked out of the country.

In great Britain today, there was talk of spring and love and politics. [illegible] I've asked my colleague Ales Kendrick to record this summary for you.

KENDRICK: The temperature in London reads 49-degrees today. The sun shone from a blue sky. People began digging in their gardens and Spring was definitely on the way after the coldest, snowiest, most persistent winter in many years. A horde of bullfinches was discovered eating up all the gooseberries in Kent and Sussex, and tomorrow morning a letter to the Times will undoubtedly report the first robin of the season.

To keep peace with this unusial weather, other matters in Britain seemed slightly mixed up today, also. In the House of Commons this afternoon, a spokesman for the Labor Party made an impassioned demand for immediate high level talks by the United States, Britain and the Soviet Union. He rebuked the Churchill government for insisting that ratification of the agreements on Germany should come first, and he made a fervent plea for co-existence and for a British policy of trying to bring together the United States and Russia. The speaker also warned of the growing danger of hydrogen bomb experiments and said the bomb made it more than ever mandatory to get an agreement with the Russians.

Now a casual visitor to the public gallery of the House, not equipped with a score card to tell the players, would have bet that these words were uttered by the Labor Party's perennial "aginner", Aneruin Bevan. This is almost word for word the line he has been following for months, if not for years. But no one could convince Mr. Bevan that Spring is here. He was not in the House today, but laid up on his farm in Buckhamshire, convalescing from a bad attack of influenza, and the words he would have said had he been present were in fact said by the leader of the opposition, Clement Attlee.

Since Mr. Attlee is at the moment engaged in trying to get Mr. Bevan expelled from the Labor Party, for holding the views that Mr. Attlee today held, the situation is an unusual one. Mr. Bevan says he has nothing personal against Mr. Attlee and differs with him only on policy. But those who would try to push Mr. Bevan out say is has nothing to do with policy but is a matter of personal conduct and party loyalty. At any rate, Mr. Bevan expects to be well enough Wednesday to appear at a meeting of all the labor MP's at which his case will be decided. The odds, at present, seem to be against him, since he's obviously held guilty by Mr. Attlee of being a premature Attleeite.

And just to make things more confusing, the British-Soviet Friendship Society today invited both Attlee and Bevan to appear jointly and address it on British-Soviet friendship, just as they jointly visited the Soviet Union last year.

The other principal in today's debate, Sir Winston Chruchill, meanwhile defended himself against Mr. Attlee's (sic) that is, Mr. Bevan's charges, of not trying to get a conference with the Russians. He revealed a whole series of personal messages to Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov last year, seeking a meeting at Vienna, Stockholm, or Bern, only to be put off first by the Geneva Conference and then by the Soviet proposal for an all-European conference on collective security. Presmuably, the Brisish Soviet Friendship Society will send Sir Winston an invitation also.

About all these goings-on, one London newspaper today carried the headline: "Confusion dispelled."

Another bit of mixedup news in Britain today, concerns the romance - if any - of Princess Margaret. Probably because it is Spring, rumors have been recently revived that the Queen's younger sister is going to marry Captain Peter Townsend. Now there's no way of confirming a story like this from Buckingham Palace, until Buckingham Palace gets good and ready to say something. And you just don't call up Clacence House, where the princess lives, and ask her. So Britain's tabloid press has been camping of the doorstep of Captain Townsend, and his British Embassy post in Brussels, supposedly an exile in the name of love. And Captain Townsend has been making a series of ambiguous remarks, which the tabloid press, at any rate, had been interpreting as confirmation of its original conjecture.

Well, today in Brussels, Captain Townsend turned on the tabloid press, man bites dog, and said that he has no reason whatever to believe that the Princess has decided to marry him, that she certainly hasn't told him anything about it. It was unambiguous and unequivocal, and the tabloid press tomorrow will not doubt take it as further confirmation of its conjectures.

The rest of England will resume digging its gardens, watching for that first robin and trying to rescue a few gooseberries from those bullfinches.

This is Alexander Kendrick in London. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

And a few minutes after we received Kendrick's report, the House of Commons voted down Labor's motion of censure 298 to 268. The Laborites backed former Prime Minister Atlee against the Aneurin Bevan view.

This is Edward R. Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Much of what my colleague, Alex Kendrick, had to report from London, might be called incidental information---the sort of news we're accustomed to reading in this country. In this connection Mark Twain once said of the British: "With a common origin, a common language, a common literature, a common religion and - common drinks - what is longer needful to the cementing of the two nations."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday March 15, 1955

This is the news:

The Senate has voted against a ~~[illegible]~~ twenty dollar a person tax cut next year. The vote was 61 to 32 and reflected the wishes of the President who said the reduction, previously approved by the House, was the "height of fiscal irresponsibility." The bill must now go into conference. But House Republican leader Martin told newsmen tonite that he's confident the Administration's tax fight has been won. He thinks the issue could be resolved by the end of the week.

The real Senate test came on the Democrats proposal to cut taxes. But 5 Democrats joined 45 Republicans in defeating this, ~~idea~~. And from that point on, the issue was not in doubt.

Earlier in the day, Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey told the Senate Banking Committee that its current investigation of the Stock Market could be harmful to the country's confidence in its own economy. Mr. Humphrey particularly objected to speculation arising out of the hearings with regard to possible further restrictions on the use of credit in stock market dealings. The Secretary said there's no question that "we're on sound economic ground." But the Committee Chairman, Senator Fulbright, said he would "not be dissuaded from continuing the ~~[illegible]~~ investigation."

The Market, after a severe drop yesterday, came back strong today... with average gains the highest since the first week of World War Two.
(I'll have more to say about our economy in a few minutes.)

Secretary of State Dulles said at his news conference that should this nation become engaged in any major military clash anywhere in the world, he believes we would use tactical atomic weapons. He implied that this would be the case if the President should decide to defend the Nationalist islands of Quemoy and Matsu against Communist attack. Whether we take up such defense, he said, depends on whether such attacks are clearly aimed at conquest of Formosa and the Pescadores. [redacted]

The Air Force had some reassuring word TODAY on the progress of our guided-missile program. Assistant Secretary Trevor Gardner disclosed THAT [redacted] our newest missile---the Falcon, [redacted] could knock down enemy bombers carrying the hydrogen bomb, long before they reach their targets. And, he added, "virtually every hit is a sure kill". The Falcon is described as "the only air-to-air missile with a brain of its own". Another missile, the "Rascal", is also in an advanced state of development. It would be launched by strategic bombers several hundred miles from the intended target. It has an atomic warhead and a built-in guidance system to direct it to specific targets. Gardner also gave more information on the previously reported "Atlas", which he called the most important of the long-range strategic weapons. It will travel at speeds of several thousands of miles per hour, from one continent to another, and will present the enemy with an incredibly---almost hopelessly difficult defensive job.

Other military news comes from General Alfred Gruenther, the top Allied commander in Europe. Gruenther told a news conference in Paris that he believes the West has a great advantage over Russia in the event of a war because it has a greater capacity for delivering atom bombs. But he said having the weapons is only part of the problem---that there is also the problem of delivery. On this score Gruenther says our B-47s and B-52s give us the big advantage.

In Washington, Senator Knowland demanded that Congress be given the facts of the wartime Yalta conference. He said it doesn't make sense for Congress to get its information from published memoirs. Secretary Dulles said today that it has always been the intention of the State Department to publish the papers---that its just a question of when. And he repeated his offer to let high-ranking members of Congress read them now on a confidential basis if they ask for them. [redacted]

The new Senate investigation of the Peress case opened with testimony by Major Floyd Van Sickle that he simply "overlooked" a small notation in an official form card which could have led him to information that Peress was under investigation by the Army for refusing to say whether he was a Communist. Senator McClellan, Chairman of the investigating committee, had opened the hearing with the statement that the committee is "entitled" to the Army report on Peress. Senator McCarthy joined in to [redacted] demand that the investigation be broadened to explore what he termed a big "conspiracy" aimed partly at him. He referred to a White House meeting held last January---said that President Eisenhower issued what he called "a blackout order" which kept those who took part in the meeting from testifying as to what went on.

The House passed a bill today which will allow a Congressional investigating committee, by majority vote, to seek a court order to require a balky witness to appear and produce evidence.

Edward R. Murrow: March 15, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

One of the standard procedures of government in this country is for the President each year to make a report to Congress on economic conditions. Then subsequently a Joint Congressional Committee makes a report on this report. The unanimous report of such a joint committee of fourteen was published yesterday. Because it was about economics, and not particularly dramatic reading, it did not attract a lot of attention, but it deserves more than it got.

For one thing, it included a bi-partisan diagnosis of the nation's economic health, which in days when stock market prices have been taking a beating, is timely. All fourteen congressmen agreed that we had a recession last year. They called it that, but they agreed that conditions have improved since late 1954. They found that employment and production has regained about half the ground lost, and unemployment had gone down about one-third. The present recovery, they stated, is sparked by automobile and steel production, home building and inventory reversal. But they called the advance uneven and stated that certain regions continue to be "in very serious economic straits". That is frank language. So is the description of farm income. The fourteen agree that the decline in it is expected to continue, though more slowly.

Whether this situation justified the boom in the stock market late last year, or justifies the recent slump in prices, is not for this reporter to say. But the joint committee, after noting that we have not recovered all the lost ground, agreed that more must be done than recover lost ground. "Because of our growing population and technological development, it is not enough" the report said, "just to maintain present levels of employment and production." The seven Democrats on the committee issued a separate statement in which they criticized the President's report for creating a more highly favorable impression of conditions than facts justify. They also cautioned that the major fields - automobile and home construction - on which the President based confident expectations, may not be sustained during the year. But they emphasized that they were not forecasting a depression or recession.

This separate Democratic comment also played up differences over tax and farm policies with the Republicans. And that seems to give the report a normal partisan look. At first glance, this is politics as usual. But it is not. In foreign policy we have something like bi-partisanship, and its achievement has been one of the milestones in the history of Congress.

Here is something that goes far toward being bi-partisanship in economic principles. There are disagreements, but they are chiefly over details, like methods and timing. Anyone with a recollection of the bitter cleavage between New Dealers and anti-New Dealers in the early Roosevelt days, or remembering the story of the McKinley and Wilson eras, will know that basic economic differences provided the driving power of Party rivalry, as, indeed, they have throughout much of our history.

But now the two Parties agree that the nation is growing, and that if it is to be healthy has to go on expanding, and they agree on what in the past has divided them most bitterly, on the desirability of a public works program, not one to stave off disaster, but to assure expansion. They want a public works program already in existence, that can be accelerated when private employment is falling off, and one with projects "on the shelf," that can be activated when falling employment requires. They say that the needs of the nation have not been met because of war restrictions, and there should be construction now of schools, highways, hospitals and other community facilities, including slum clearance and public housing. And these, the report says, should go forward more rapidly during the years ahead. In addition, the committee notes that distressed conditions persist in certain industries and regions, even while the economy is expanding, and that much can be done to assist these communities through public works, and that this action is required now.

The report does express the failure to agree about tax adjustments at this time. But it is unanimous on basic tax policy. The object, it says, should be to balance at least the cash budget at maximum employment and production levels. It recommends postponement in the reduction of corporate and excise tax rates. And as to the distribution of the tax burden, it says that "we should continuously strive to improve the distribution of the tax burden in the interest of economic stability and rising living standards." In other words, the differences over the present tax adjustments are only as to when and how.

Of course it is no discovery of today that very many Republicans and Democrats think alike on basic economic questions. This is so, despite the vocal high-tariff enthusiasts, the advocates of balancing the budget at any cost, and those for whom all public spending is anathema. But I suggest that there are about as many such individualists in the realm of foreign policy too. Bi-partisanship does not mean unanimity. But with bi-partisanship in both foreign and economic policy, the biggest guns of Party rivalry are silenced. No doubt it is a good thing, but it will make a big difference to Party politics.

We have been talking of the American economy. And two things would seem apparent: our wealth is considerable and the temptation to get some of it in a quick and easy way has not lessened. For the unsuccessful in this regard, J.B. Priestly once counseled: "It's not really worth much being rich. Too much money seems to take the taste and color out of things. It oughtn't to, but it does."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 15, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Senate has voted against a twenty dollar a person tax cut next year. The vote was 61 to 32 and reflected the wishes of the President who said the reduction, previously approved by the House, was the "height of fiscal irresponsibility." The bill must now go into conference. But House Republican leader Martin told newsmen tonite that he's confident the Administration's tax right has been won. He thinks the issue could be resolved by the end of the week. The real Senate test came on the Democrats proposal to cut taxes. But 5 Democrats joined 45 Republicans in defeating this. And from that point on, the issue was not in doubt. Earlier in the day, Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey told the Senate Banking Committee that its current investigation of the Stock Market could be harmful to the country's confidence in its own economy. Mr. Humphrey particularly objected to the speculation arising out of the hearings with regard to possible further restrictions on the use of credit in stock market dealings. The Secretary said there's no question that "we're on sound economic ground." But the Committee Chairman, Senator Fulbright, said he would "not be disuaded from continuing the investigation.

The Market, after a severe drop yesterday, came back strong today..with average gains the highest since the first week of World War Two. I'll have more to say about our economy in a few minutes.

Secretary of State Dulles said at his news conference that should this nation become engaged in any major military clash anywhere in the world, he believes we would use tactical atomic weapons. He implied that this would be the case if the President should decide to defend the Nationalist islands of Wuemoy and Matsu against Communist attack. Whether we take up such defense, he said, depends on whether such attacks are clearly aimed at conquest of Formosa and the Pescadores.

The Air Force had some reassuring word today on the progress of our guided-missile program. Assistant Secretary Trevor Gardner disclosed that our newest missile ---the Falcon, could knock down enemy bombers carrying the hydrogen bomb, long before they reach their targets. And, he added, "virtually every hit is a sure kill." The Falcon is described as "the only air-to-air missile with a brain of its own." Another missile, the "Rascal", is also in an advanced state of development. It would be launched by strategic bombers several hundred miles from the intended target. It has an atomic warhead and a built-in guidance system to direct it to specific targets. Gardner also gave more information on the previously reported "Atlas", which he called the most important of the long-range strategic weapons. It will travel at speeds of several thousands of miles per hour, from one continent to another, and will present the enemy with an incredibly--almost hopelessly difficult devensive job.

Other military news comes from General Alfred Gruenther, the top Allied commander in Europe. Gruenther told a news conference in Paris that he believes the West has a great advantage over Russia in the event of a war because it has a greater capacity for delivering atom bombs. But he said having the weapons is only part of the problem --- that there is also the problem of delivery. On this score Gruenther says our B-47's and B-52's give us the big advantage.

In Washington, Senator Knowland demanded that Congress be given the facts of the wartime Yalta conference. He said it doesn't make sense for Congress to get its information from published memoirs. Secretary Dulles said today that is has always been the intention of the State Department to publish the papers ---that its just a question of when. And he repeated his offer to let high-ranking members of Congress read them now on a confidential basis if they ask for them.

The new Senate investigation of the Peress case opened with testimony by Major Floyd Van Sickle that he simply "overlooked" a small notation in an official form card which could have led him to information that Presss was under investigation by the Army for refusing to say whether he was a Communist. Senator McClellan, Chairman of the investigating committee, had opened the hearing with the statement that the committee is "entitled" to the Army report on Peress. Senator McCarthy joined in to demand that the investigation be broadened to explore what he termed a big "conspiracy" aimed partly at him. He referred to a White House meeting held last January --said that President Eisenhower issued what he called "a blackout order" which kept those who took part in the meeting from testifying as to what went on.

The House passed a bill today which will allow a Congressional investigating committee, by majority vote, to seek a court order to require a balky witness to appear and produce evidence.

One of the standard procudures of government in this country is for the President each year to make a report to Congress on economic conditions. Then subsequestly a Joint Congressional Committee makes a report on this report. The unanimous report of such a joint committee of fourteen was published yesterday. Because it was about economics, and not particularly dramatic reading, it did not attract a lot of attention, but it deserves more than it got.

For one thing, it incluced a bi-partisan diagnosis of the nation's economic health, which in days when stock market prices have been taking a beating, is timely. All fourteen congressmen agreed that we had a recession last year. They called it that, but they agreed that conditions have improved since late 1954. They found that employment and production has regained about half the ground lost, and unemployment had gone down about one third. The present recovery, they stated, is sparked by automobile and steel production, home building and inventory reversal. But they called the advance uneven and stated that certain regions continue to be "in very serious economic strains." That is frank language. So is the discription of farm income. The fourteen agree that the decline in it is expected to continue, though more slowly.

Whether this situation justified the boom in the stock market late last year, or justifies the recent slump in prices, is not for this reporter to say. But the joint committee, after noting that we have not recovered all the lost ground, agreed that more must be done than recover lost ground. "Because" of our growing population and technological development, it is not enough" the report said, "just to maintain present levels of employment and production." The seven Democrats on the committee issued a separate statement in which they criticized the President's report for creating a more highly favorable impression of conditions that facts justify. They also cautioned that the major fields - automobile and home construction - on which the President based confident expectations, may not be sustained during the year. But they emphasized that they were not forecasting a depression or recession.

This separate Democratic comment also played up differences over tax and farm policies with the Republicans. And that seems to give the report a formal partisan look. At first glance, this is politics as usual. But it is not. Inforeign policy we have something like bi-partisanship, and its achievment has been one of the milestones in the history of Congress.

Here is something that goes far toward being bi-partisanship in economic principles. There are disagreements, but they are chiefly over details, like methods and timing. Anyone with a recollection of the bitter cleavage between New Dealers and anti-new Dealers in the early Roosevelt days, or remembering the story of the McKinley and Wilson eras, will know that basis economic differences provided the driving power of Party rivalry, as, indeed, they have throughout much of our history.

But now the two Parties agree that the nation is growing, and that if it is to be healthy has to go on expanding, and they agree on what in the past had divided them most bitterly, on the desirability of a public works program, not one to stave off disaster, but to assure expansion. They want a public works program already in existence, that can be accelerated when private employment requires. They say that the needs of the nation have not been met because of war restrictions, and there should be construction now of schools, highways, hospitals and other community facilities, including slum clearance and public housing. And these, the report says, should go forward more rapidly during the years ahead In addidion, the committee notes that distressed conditions persist in certain industries and regions, even while the economy is expanding, and that much can be done to assist these communities through public works, and that this action is required now.

The report does express the failure to agree about tax adjustments at this time. But it is unanimous on basic tax policy. The object, it says, should be to balance at least the cash budget at maximum employment and production levels. It recommends postponement in the reduction of corporate and excise tax rates. And as to the distribution of the tax burden, it says that "we should continuously strive to improve the distribution of the tax burden in in interest of economic stability and rising living standards." In other words, the differences over the present tax adjustments are only as to when and how.

Of course it is no discovery of today that many Republicans and Democrats think alike on basic economic questions. This is so, despite the vocal high-tariff enthusiasts, the advocates of balancing the budget at any cost, and those for whom all public spending is anathema. But I suggest that there are about as many such individualists in the realm of foreign policy too. Bi-partisanship does not mean unanimity. But with bi-partisanship in both foreign and economic policy, the biggest guns of Party rivalry are silenced. No doubt it is a good thing, but will amke a big difference to Party politics.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We have been talking of the American economy. And two things would seem apparent: our wealth is considerable and the temptation to get some of it in a quick and easy way has not lessened. For the unsuccessful in this regard, J.B. Priestly once counseled:"It's not really worth much being rich. Too many money seems to take the taste and color out of things. It oughtn't to, but it does."

Good Night and Good Luck!

Wednesday March 16, 1955 (1)

This is the news:

The State Department, which earlier this week opposed a general release of the Yalta Papers of 1945, has changed its mind. And at nine o'clock tonight, Washington time, two volumes consisting of a half million words, will be made public. The State Department made known its decision after it learned that a copy of the documents was already in the hands of a newspaper. (At ten fifteen tonite, ~~minutes~~ eastern time, CBS Radio's Washington staff will discuss some of the significant details of the record of the meetings of the late President Roosevelt, Sir Winston Churchill and Josef Stalin at Yalta.) #

Senator Mc Carthy immediately told newsmen that the full story of Yalta will not be given because, says McCarthy, he's been advised the papers have already been censored.

Earlier in the day, McCarthy again called on the President to repudiate the Yalta agreements. He said the President's brother, Dr. Milton Eisenhower, has strongly influenced White House policy in this connection.

The President, for his part, said at a news conference today that he agrees with Secretary of State Dulles' statement yesterday to the effect that small atomic weapons will be used in the next major wartime operation we undertake. Mr. Eisenhower said that when such weapons are used against strictly military targets, they fall in the same category as ordinary bullets. The real problem, the President said, is drawing the line between strictly military and non-military areas.

On another issue - American politics - the President predicted that if the Republican Party can carry out the right programs, it will be strong enough to win next year's election with any worthy candidate.

[redacted]

J. A. Livingston, a Philadelphia financial writer, told the Senate Banking committee that he thinks its investigation is doing a lot of good. But he said he does see a danger of a "boom to doom" cycle in the surge of Wall Street optimism.

The Senate has finally confirmed New York Judge John Marshall Harlan to be a Justice of the Supreme Court. Harlan was nominated last November to fill the chair left vacant by the death of Justice Robert Jackson.

The President sent another nomination to Congress---that of Allen Whitfield, an Iowa attorney---to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission. Whitifield would fill out the term of Joseph Campbell who resigned.

In London today, Laborite members of Parliament, by a vote of 141-112 expelled Aneurin Bevan from the Party because he challenged its leadership. I'll have more to ~~say~~ report about this later.

~~Br[redacted]~~

~~Le[redacted]~~

There was further testimony in the new Senate hearing on the case of former Army Major Irving Peress. Another ex-Major, Curtis Kirkland of Jacksonville, Florida, told the investigating committee that he once recommended to First Army Intelligence that commissions be denied to would-be officers who refused to answer loyalty questions. He said he was told that if a man hadn't been declared a "cut and dried Communist" it might be wiser to take him into the service "and know where he was".

As for Peress, Kirkland said he would take part of the blame for the "administrative error" which allowed Peress' request for promotion go through. But he said that he initiated action which resulted in the discharge of five other medical officers who took refuge in the fifth amendment in their loyalty oath forms.

The Defense Department revealed that there are now about 200-men on active military duty who have refused to answer loyalty questions. It pointed out that persons taking refuge under the fifth amendment are not automatically barred from service. Only Communists are turned down cold.

A federal judge in El Paso, Texas sentenced turnabout witness Harvey Matusow to three years in federal prison for criminal contempt of court. The action grew out [redacted] Matusow's effort to [redacted] gain a new trial for New Mexico labor leader Clinton Jencks---convicted last year of lying in a non-Communist affadavit filed under the Taft-Hartley [redacted] labor law.

There were two new turns in the case of the Aruba---that Finnish tanker which was bound for Communist China with 13-thousand tons of jet fuel. First, the crew of the Aruba rebelled and said they would strike rather than risk involvement in any war action. This because the Chinese Nationalists had sworn to intercept the ship rather than let it get through. The fuel would have been enough to supply Communist jets for five thousand missions against the Nationalists. After the announcement by the crew, the Finnish owners of the Aruba announced that the tanker would not be sent into "dangerous waters", and that they were negotiating "in various directions" about the fate of the oil cargo. Th[redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: March 16, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Relations between the United States and Great Britain are so intertwined that the expulsion of a Labor M.P. can mean something measurable to this country. It certainly does if the M.P. is Aneurin Bevan. The point is not that Mr. Bevan, as the most articulate anti-American in the Labor Party, now will be less effective as a critic. In fact, the vote against him was so small that his prestige in the Party has never been higher. And now he is out of party harness he is free to sharpen his tones even more stridently.

What makes Mr. Bevan's expulsion important to the United States is that it seems destined to split the Labor Party. If that happens, the Conservatives will have another five years of power after the next election. (And they may choose to hold that election this year rather than next.) To the Conservatives, the American alliance is the first and over-riding consideration of British policy. Right Wing Labor also puts it first, but because of Left Wing pressure Labour cannot be insistent about it. If Sir Anthony Eden is the next Prime Minister, Anglo-American co-operation will be closer - and happier - than with any Labor Party man.

My London colleague, Howard K. Smith, reports the London concensus to be that Bevan was never stronger in his Party than after today's expulsion vote. Clement Attlee threatened to resign unless the motion was carried to exclude Bevan from the Parliamentary Party. But he failed to enlist the support of an absolute majority. The Parliamentary group numbers 293, and a majority is 147. The vote against Bevan was only 141. So the Labor Party is more divided than ever before.

The vote was so small that it will be difficult for Mr. Attlee to press the Labor Party Executive next Wednesday to oust Bevan from the party itself. For then it would appear that Mr. Attlee was the one trying to make the split irreparable. But if he doesn't carry through on the discipline, it will count as weakness, and Mr. Bevan will gain accordingly.

The basis for Mr. Bevan's expulsion was his conduct during the debate on the government's White Paper on Defense, which included the announcement that Britain was making the hydrogen bomb. The Labor party drafted a motion of censure that implied approval of the H-bomb, but Mr. Bevan refused to support it, and sixty-one Labor members went along with him in abstaining, (most of them pacifists.) During the debate Mr. Bevan taunted his party's leaders to explain what their motion really meant. This defiance of party discipline came a short time after Mr. Bevan's revolt against his party's stand for German re-armament.

One can never tell what will happen to expelled Labor M.P.'s, for the party exit and entry are a kind of revolving door, and in the past many of those who went out came back in. Bevan himself has done it. He was with Cripps, Trevelyan and Strauss in breaking from the party over the United Front issue. They were expelled from the party as well as the parliamentary group. All but Trevelyan were back within a year. Last year seven members were expelled for breaking discipline over German re-armament. All seven have been reinstated.

But the break with Bevan appears to be beyond repair. He himself has proclaimed that he will not seek reinstatement. And feelings are so high it is difficult to foresee a reconciliation. In previous rifts, the rebels had not so openly followed a strategy that most likely would end in party defeat at the polls. Bevan knows as well as Churchill that a divided Labor Party cannot win the next election. He knew this might be the result when he held to his course. He was not daring the party leadership to try to expel him. He expected it. But if Mr. Attlee's support was less than a majority, Bevan would not be in a bad position even if the election should be lost. He could blame Attlee for being timid, orthodox, a lackey of the United States, a man incapable of introducing socialism in Britain, and a leader frightened of holding peace talks with Soviet leaders. Last week Mr. Attlee introduced a surprise resolution putting the party on record for top level talks with the Kremlin before ratification of the Paris accords. He seemed to be already trying to cut the ground from under Bevan's future grass-roots campaign. Bevan is sure to argue that the resolution came too late. All of the Bevan contentions are good rabble-rousing material, but they are more, they will appeal to many British intellectuals.

Bevan is not young - he is 57 - but still he can afford to wait. After the next election comes another election. No doubt he feels he has been snubbed and even persecuted. He has repeatedly curbed his tongue and his impatience for the sake of the party, but he did not win advancement for it. His greatest bitterness was on being passed over for both the Foreign Office and the Exchequer after the death of Ernest Bevin and the retirement of Cripps. He could defer to Morrison, at the Foreign Office, but not to the little-known Gaitskell at the Treasury. Now he is going after the Number One position in the only way he sees open.

His future in the years ahead depends on the trade ~~MMX~~ unions. They are the power that rules the Labor Party. Bevan has made marked gains in some of the lesser unions. So far the big ones do not trust him. Now he is gambling everything on winning them over.

Aneurin Bevan has always regarded himself and his actions as those of a true independent. In politics, this is a considerable achievment. Perhaps he was ~~only~~ trying to follow~~ing out~~ advice once given by Andre Gide (2nd) when he wrote:"What another would have done as well as you, do not do it. What another would have said as well as you, do not say it. Be faithful to that which exists nowhere but in yourself."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 16, 1955
7:45--9:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The State Depatement, which earlier this week opposed a general release of the Yalta Papers of 1945, has chanced its mind. And at nine o'clock tonight, Washington time, two volumes, consisting of a half million words, will be made public. The State Department made known its decision after it learned that a copy of the cocuments was already in the hands of a newspaper. (At ten fifteen tonight, eastern time, CBS Radio's Washington staff will discuss some of the significant details of the record of the meetings of the late President Roosevelt, Sir Winston Churchill and Josepf Stalin at Yalta.)

Senator McCarthy immediately told newsmen that the full story of Yalta will not be given because, says McCarthy, he's been advised the papers have already been censored.

Earlier in the day, McCarthy again called on the President to repudiate the Yalta agreements. He said the President's brother, Dr. Milton Eisenhower, has strongly influenced White House policy in this connection.

The President, for his part, said at a news conference today that he agrees with Secretary of State Dulles's statement yeaterday to the effect that small atomic weapons will be used in the next major wartime operation we undertake. Mr. Eisenhower said that when such weapons are used against strictly military targets, they fall in the same category as ordinary bullets. The real problem, the President said, is drawing the line between strictly military and non-military areas.

An another issue - American politics - the President predicted that if the Republican Party can carry out the right programs, it will be strong enough to win next year's election with any worthy candidate.

J.A. Livingston, a Philadelphia writer, told the Senate Banking Committee that he thinks its investigation is doing a lot of good. But he said he does see a danger of a "boom to doom" cycle in the surge of Wall Street optimism.

The Senate has finally confirmed New York Judge John Marahall Harlan to be a justice of the Supreme Court. Harlan was nominated last November to fill the chair left vacant by the death of Justice Robert Jackson.

The President sent another nomination to Congress -- that Allen Whitfield, an Iowa attorney -- to be another nomination to Congress ---that of Allen Whitfield, an Iowa attorney -- to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission. Whitfield would fill out the term of Joseph Campbell who resigned.

In London today, Laborite members of Parliament, by a vote of 141-112 expelled Aneurin Bevan from the Party because he challenged its leadership. I'll have more to report about this later.

There was further testimony in the new Senate hearing on the case of former Major Irving Peress. Another ex-Major, Curtis Kirkland of Jacksonville, Florida, told the investigating committee that he once recommended to First Army Intelligence that commissions be denied to would-be officers who refused to answer loyalty questions. He said he was told that if a man hadn't been declared a "cut and dried Communist" it might be wiser to take him into the service " and know where he was."

As for Peress, Kirkland said he would take part of the blame for the "administrative error" which allowed Preess' request for promotion to go through. But he said that he initiated action which resulted in the discharge of five other medical officers who took refuge in the fifth amendemnt in their loyalty oath forms.

The Defense Department revealed that there are no about 200-men on active military duty who have refused to answer loyalty questions. It pointed out that persons taking refuge inder the fifth amendment are not automatically barred from service. Only Communists are turned down cold.

A federal judge in El Paso, Texas sentenced turnabout witness Harvey Matusow to three years in federal prison for criminal contempt of court. The action grew out Matusow's effort to gain a new trial for New Mexico labor leader Cointon Jencks ---convicted last year of lying in a non-Communist affadavit filed unter the Taft -Hartley labor law.

There were two new turns in the case of the Aruba --that Finnish tanker which was bound for Communist China with 13-thousand tons of jet fuel. First, the crew of the Aruba rebelled and said they would strike rather than risk involvement in any war action. This because of the Chinese Nationalists.had sworn to intercept the ship rather than let it get through. The fuel would have been enough to supply Communist jets for five thousand missions against the Nationalists. After the announcement by the crew, the Finnish owners of the Aruba announced that the tanker would not be sent into "dangerous waters" and that they were negotiating "in various directions" about the fate of the oil cargo.

Relations between the United States and Great Britain are so intertwined that the expulsion of a Labor M.P. can mean something measurable to this country. It certainly does if the M.P. is Aneurin Bevan. The point is not that Mr. Bevan, as the most articulate anti-American in the Labor Party, now will be less effective as a critic. In fact, the vote against him was so small that his prestige in the Party has never been higher. And now he is out of the party harness he is free to sharpen his tones even more stridently.

What makes Mr. Bevan's expulsion important to the United States is that it seems destined to split the Labor Party. If that happens, the Conservetives will have another five years of power after the next election. And they may choose to hold that election this year rather than next. To the Conservatives, the American alliance is the first and over-riding consider - .. ation of British policy. Right Wing Labor also puts it first, but because Left Wing pressure labour cannot be insistent about it. If Sir Anthony Eden is the next Prime Minister, Anglo-American co-operation will be closer - and happier - than with any Labor Party man.

My London colleague, Howard K. Smith, reports the London consensus to be that Bevan was never stronger in his Party than after today's expulsion vote. Clement Attlee threatened to resign unless the motion was carried to exclude Bevan from the Parliamentary Party. But he failed to enlist the support of an absolute majority. The Parliamentary group numbers 293, and a majority is 147. The vote against Bevan was only 141. So the Labor Party is more divided than ever before.

The vote was so small that it will be difficult for Mr. Attlee to press the Labor Party Executive next Wednesday to oust Bevan from the party itself. For then it would appear that Mr. Attlee was the one trying to make the split irreporable, but if he doesn't carry through on the discipline, it will count as weakness, and Mr. Bevan will gain accordingly.

The basis for Mr. Bevan's expulsion was his conduct during the debate on the government's White Paper on Defense, which included the announcement that Britain was mining the hydrogen bomb. The Labor Party drafted a motion of censure that implied approval of the H-bomb, bur Mr. Bevan refused to support it, and sixty-one Labor members went along with him in abstaining, most of them pacifists. During the debate Mr. Bevan taunted his party's leaders to explain that their motion really meant. This defiance of party discipline came a short time after Mr. Bevan's revolt against his party's stand for German re-armament.

One can never tell what will happen to expelled Labor M.P.'s, for the party exit and entry are a kind of revolving door, and in the past many of those who went out came back in. Bevan himself has done it. He was with Cripps, Trevelyan and Strauss in breaking from the party over the United Front issue. They were expelled from the party as well as the parliamentary group. All but Trevelyan were back within a year. Last year seven members were expelled for breaking discipline over German re-armament. All seven have been reinstated.

But the break with Bevan appears to be beyond repair. He himself has proclaimed that he will not seek reinstatement. And feelings are so high it it is difficult to forsee a reconsiliation. In previous rifts, the rebels had not so openly followed a strategy that most likely would end in party defeat at the polls. Bevan knows as well as Churchill that a divided Labor Party cannot win the next election. He knew this might be the result when he held to his course. He was not daring the party leadership to try to expell him. He expected it. But if Mr. Attlee's support was less than a majority. Bevan would not be in a bad position even if the election should be lost. He could blame Attlee for being timid, orthodox, a lackey of the United States, a man incapable of introducing socialim in Britain, and a leader frightened of holding peace talks with Soviet leaders. Last week Mr.Attlee introduced a surprise resolution putting the party on record for top level talks with the Kremlin before ratification of the Paris accords. He seemed to be already trying to cut the ground from under Bevan's future grass-roots campaign. Bevan is sure to argue that the resolution came too late. All of the Bevan contentions are good rablle-rousing material, but they are more, they will appeal to many British intellectuals.

Bevan is not young - he is 57 - but still he can affort to wait. After the next election comes another election. No doubt he feels he has been snubbed and even persecuted. He was repeatedly curbed his tongue and his impatience for the sake of the party, but he did not win advancement for it.

His greatest bitterness was on being passed over for both the Foreign office and the Exchequer after the death of Ernest Bevin and rhe retirement of Cripps. He would defer to Morrison, at the Foreign Office, but not to the little-known Gaitskell at the Treasury. Now he is going after the Number one position in the only way he sees open.

His future in the years ahead depends on the trade unions. They are the power that rules the Labor Party. Bevan has made marked gains in some in the lesser unions. So far the big ones do not trust him. Now he is gambling everything on winning them over.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Aneurin Bevan has always regarded himself and his actions as those of a true independent. In politics, this is a considerable achievement. Perhaps he was trying to follow advice once given by Andre Gide when he wrote: "What another would have done as well as you, do not do it. What another would have said as well as you, do not say it. Be faithful to that which exists nowhere but in yourself."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday, March 17, 1955

This is the news:

It is now almost twenty-four hours since the release of the Yalta papers. Almost everyone has had some sort of comment, except the Russians. They have yet to be heard from. But Prime Minister Churchill showed no hesitency in expressing his dissatisfaction with our decision to make the Yalta report public at this time.

In Chicago, Vice President Nixon said it would take weeks and months of study before anyone could comment intelligibly on the papers. But this much cam be said now, he added: "Without a doubt, the concessions made at Yalta were deterimental to us and the free world. But, he said, this was a fault, not of the heart, but of the head." Mr. Nixon said he was convinced that there was no deliberate attempt at Yalta to "sell out" to the Communists.

VICE PRESIDENT NIXON, while in Chicago, SAID TODAY THAT

N[redacted] our forces in the Pacific are now equipped with atomic explosives which they can and will use, with precision and effectiveness in case of war. He said the conventional Korean and World War-2 types of explosives are obsolete and that our forces could not fight an effective war with them if they wanted to. The Vice President said too, that this country has made it "crystal clear" to the Communists that the responsibility for war rests squarely with them. He said he cannot give assurances that there will be no war because you can't count on what "dictatorial leaders of revolutionary movements" will do.

Foreign Aid Administrator Stassen has disclosed that the President will ask Congress for more than 2-billion dollars in new military and economic aid for Asia in the next fiscal year. This sum, he said, is two-thirds of all new foreign aid requests. And its aim is to atleast match the pace of industrialization in Communist China and other Communist-ruled areas. He said that, barring war, this aid program should be the first step in lifting the economy of free Asia by 30-percent in the next 8-years.

The Senate Banking Committee, investigating stock market conditions heard the views of New York investment banker Ferdinand Eberstadt, and CIO labor official James Carey. Eberstadt said he sees no need for drastic new legislation to deal with what he called "undesirable practices and tendencies" in the securities markets. For the most part, he said, they can be dealt with by vigorous enforcement of anti-fraud regulations.

Carey called for curbs on the market to prevent dangerous speculation. And he attacked what he called the "trickle down" policies of the administration. He said these contributed to the sharp rise in the market since the middle of 1953.

The United States Chamber of Commerce and the President's Council of Economic Advisers both had optimistic words on the economy. The Chamber said business is expanding healthily and is in no peril of a stock market crash despite some "loose talk" growing out of the Senate investigation. The Economic Adviser's report pointed to rising factory employment last month, record-breaking weekly earnings and a longer work-week for factory employes, and continuance of an unbroken six-month rise in industrial production.

The new Peress investigation went through its third day with the Senate Investigating committee still trying to get [redacted] (MORE INFORMATION) on that controversial White House meeting last January. [redacted] Defense Dept. Counsel Wilber Brucker said a Presidential directive still forbids participants to say what

In Bonn, West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer has again urged ratification of the Paris treaties on German rearmament by the Upper House. He said the "fate of Germany and of Europe" hinges on these treaties. Adenauer called on the legislators "not to create difficulties toward the goal of a German contribution to the joint defense of the free world."

what went on. But, at Senator McClellan's request, he agreed to ask again about it. At any rate, he said, it had nothing to do with the Peress case.

An intelligence officer from Camp Kilmer, where Peress was stationed, testified that he had recommended against the promotion of Peress, but that the Pentagon ordered him promoted anyway. He said he had Peress carefully watched, and put in "non-sensitive" work.

At the United Nations, Russia's delegate Arkady Sobolev, put the blame on Israel, for the recent Gaza incident in which 39-Egyptians and 8-Israelis were killed. The UN Palestine truce chief, General Burns, also blamed Israel for the trouble, but said that Egyptian infiltration across the border is undoubtedly one of the main causes of tensions in the area.

Edward R. Murrow: March 17, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

It would be impossible to sum up the Yalta documents in the few minutes of a radio broadcast. They amount to nearly half-a-million words, and the version used in the New York Times covers more than thirty pages. What stands out most convincingly from the disclosures is that they disclose nothing that changes in a major way, the Yalta story as already known. It is there in greater detail. Conversations are reproduced that were both highly personal and highly undiplomatic. But little of great importance can be called new.

Reading some of the indiscreet talk, one can see why the record had not been released before. But there is no explanation why it was released now. It will not silence those who have made it a kind of profession to denounce the Yalta agreements. There is enough in these almost endless pages to permit almost endless altercation. There is plenty of ammunition for both sides.

Even now the documents are hard to appraise, because one needs both memory and imagination to get back into the state of mind of 1944, and so evaluate either the statesmanship of that year, or the lack of it. The decisions of Yalta have been long known, as have the consequences. The new documentation will not modify verdicts already reached. The only beneficiaries, so far as this reporter can see, are the historians. This is their dish.

One remark can be made: The publication of the documents has not helped the United States in any way, to judge from the world comment. / Not even in Washington, where the word Yalta has come to have for some a sinister meaning, was anyone pointing to concrete good, to be expected from the publication. The first response abroad, has been to find fault with the State Department's disregard for Sir Winston Churchill's objections to it; also, for publishing it just now, when Western unity needs strength, rather than more strain and agitation; also, for doing it when another high-level conference must be held before long. / But even these criticisms are in a minor key. / So while it may prove true, that the publication has not done the United States any good, it is not bound to have done us any great or lasting harm.

The worst that has come over the cables, is the angry reaction of rank and file Britons. And they are worked up, not so much over the discourtesy to Sir Winston, as over the discovery that President Roosevelt wanted Hong Kong to be internationalized, or given to China, and wanted the British kept out of a trusteeship he proposed for Korea.

Judging from the first reactions from West Germany, the Germans are less incensed than the British, though they now learn that Roosevelt wanted Germany cut into seven states and spoke glibly to Stalin, about the execution of fifty thousand German officers. The first comment from Germany was that this had been wartime, when hatred for the enemy could be expected. And Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn, that not even the socialists are going to exploit the discovery that De-Gaulle wanted the French frontier to be on the Rhine. Spokesmen for other German parties are being just as philosophical.

Sir Winston Churchill spoke for himself in question time in the House of Commons this afternoon. He did not hide his dislike of the publication, but he did say, that the Foreign Office, after having opposed the release, did give its consent, when pressed by the State Department. "This does not imply" Sir Winston said, "that we accept XXX responsibility for the accuracy of the American version." He pointed out that the American texts are not in any way, an agreed official record of the Powers concerned. "I have not seen anything but the extracts, which now are appearing in the Press" he declared, "and even these disclose some serious mistakes." Not till the full American version is studied, he said, will it be decided whether any corrections will be issued.

He showed dismay over the action as a precedent. "If this became an established practise" he said, "it might hamper the free exchange of views at future conferences. In any case it would seem a good thing to consult together on the text of any publication, during the lifetime of the individuals concerned." In Washington it was said that Sir Winston's objections had led to two short deletions. They were in a context suggesting they had been remarks about France's post-war position. Other deletions were made as well. The Times says the State Department made them in the national interest, and to avoid offense to some groups and countries.

Though the French were not at Yalta, they frankly disapproved today of the publication of the documents. They believed it was done for motives of domestic politics, not for reasons of state. France has a law forbidding the publication of secret papers dealing with treaties, until twenty-five years have passed, with the exception of an emergency, when the high needs of the nation require the issue of a so-called white book. They see no such need for the Yalta revelations.

The Paris press, including papers normally pro-American and anti-Soviet, regards the publication as premature, and asks why it was done just now.

It is worried about the effect on Anglo-American intimacy, since this indirectly affects them. Only two days ago the French Premier promised the Senate, that a Big Four conference would be held, as soon as the Paris accords are ratified. "Why" some Frenchmen are asking, "endanger these future chances for peace by raking up all the muck of the past?"

Not having been either at Yalta or Potsdam, the French are sensitive about the past. They want the skeletons left in the closet. My colleague David Schoenbrun cables me that recently the French have been concerned to strengthen Western unity. They did not make an issue involving ratification out of Dr. Adenauer's challenge over the Saar. They played down the fact that both Churchill and Attlee last week said in Parliament, they did not consider France to be one of the Great Powers. "Now" he cables, "they sincerely regret that American statesmen chose this moment to rock the boat."

Whatever the reason for the publication, the White House today made it clear that President Eisenhower had no part in it. It was authoritatively stated, that he has never studied the Yalta papers (which in itself is a little surprising). And he had nothing whatever to do with the decision to publish them.

If [redacted] else, most of us must be in agreement that the Yalta papers offer a field day for historians. And if they follow Cicero's advice, all will be well. "The first law, said Cicero, is that the historian shall never dare to set down what is false; the second, that he shall never dare to conceal the truth; the third, that there shall be no suspicion in his work of either favoritism or prejudice."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 17, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

It is now almost twenty-four hours since the r lease of the Yalta papers. Almost everyone has had some sort of comment except the Russians. They have yet to be heard from. But Prime Minister Churchill showed no hesitancy in expressing his dissatisfaction with our decision to make the Yalta report public at this time.

In Chicago, Vice President Nixon said it would take weeks and months of study before anyone cauld comment intelligibly on the papers. But this much can be said now, he added: "without a doubt, the concessions made at Yalta were deterimental to us and the free world. But, he said "this was a fault, not of the heart, but of the head." Mr. Nixon said he was convinced that there was no deliberate attempt at Yalta to "sell out" to the Communists.

Vice President Nixon, while in Chicago, said today that our forces in the Pacific are now equipped with atomic explosives which they can and will use with precision and effectiveness in case of war. He said the conventional Korean and World War -2 types of explosives are obsolete and that our forces could not fight an effective war with them if theywanted to. The Vice President said too that this country has made it "crystal clear" to the Communists that the responsibility for war rests squarely with them. He said he cannot give assurances that there will be no warbecause you can't count on what "dictorial leaders of revolutionary movements" will do.

Foreign Aid Administrator Stassen has disclosed that the President will ask Congress for more than 2-billion dollars in new military and economic aid for Asia in the next fiscal year. This sum, he said, is two-thirds of all new foreign aid requests. And its aim is to at least match the pace of industrialization in Communist China and other Communist - ruled areas. He said that, barring war, this aid program should be the first step in lifting the economy of free Asia by 30-percent in the next 8-years.

The Senate Banking committee, investigatin stock market conditions heard the views of New York investment banker Ferdinand Eberstadt and CIO labor official James Carey. Eberstadt said he sees no need for drastic new legislation to deal with what he called "undesirable practices and tendencies" in the securities markets. For the most part, he said, they can be dealt with by vigorous enforcement of anti-fraud regulations.

Carey called for curbs on th market to prevent dangerous speculation. And he attacked what he called the "trickle down" policies of the administration. He said these contributed to the sharp rise in the market since the middle of 1953.

The United States Chamber of Commerce and the Presidnet's Council of Economic Advisers both had optimistic words on the economy. The Chamber said bsuiness is expanding healthily and is in no peril of a stock market crash. despite some "lose talk" growing out of the Senate investigation. The Economic Advisers report pointed to rising factory employment last month, record-breaking weekly earnings and a longer work-week for factory employees, and continuance of an unbroken six-month rise in industrial production.

The new Beress investigation went through its third day with the Senate Investigating committee still trying to get more information on that controversial White House meeting last January. Defense Department Counsel Wilber Brucker said a Presidential directive still forbids participants to say what went on. But, at Senator McClellan's request, he agreed to ask again about it. At any rate, he said, it had nothing to do with the Presss case.

An intelligence officer from Camp Kilmer, where Peress was stationed, testified that he had recommended against the promotion of Peress, but that the Pentagon ordered him promoted anyway. He said he had Peress carefully watched, and put in "non-sensitive" work.

At the United Nations, Russia's delegate Arkady Sovolev, put the blame on Israel, for the recent Gaza incident in which 39 Egyptians and 8 Israelis were killed. the UN Palestine truce chief, General Burns, also blamed Israel for the trouble, but said that Egyptian infiltration across the border is undoubtedly one of the main causes of tensions in the area.

In Bonn, West German Chancellor Konrad Adneauer has again urged ratification of the Paris treaties on German rearmament by the Upper House . He said the "fate of Germany and of Europe" hinges on these treaties. Adenauer called on the legislators "not to create difficulties toward the goal of a German contribution to the joint defense of the free world.

It would be impossible to sum up the Yalta documents in a few minutes of radio broadcast. They amount to nearly half-a-million words, and the version used in the New York Times covers more than thirty pages.

What stands out most convincingly from the disclosures is that they disclose nothing that changes in a major way, the Yalta story as already known It is there in greater detail. Conversations are reproduced that were both highly personal and highly undiplomatic. But little of great importance can be called new.

Reading some of the indiscreet talk, one can see why the record had not been released before. But there is no explanation why it was released now. It will not silence those who have made it a kind of profession to denounce the Yalta agreements. There is enough in these almost endless pages to permit almost endless altercation. There is plenty of ammunition for both sides.

Even now the documents are hard to appraise, because one needs both memory and imagination to go back into the state of mind of 1944, and so evaluate either the statesmanship of that year, or the lack of it. The decisions of Yalta have been known long, as have the consequences. The new documentation will not modify verdicts already reached. The only beneficiaries, so far as this reporter can see, are the historians. This is their dish.

One remark can be made: The publication of the documents has not helped the United States in any way, to judge from the world comment. Now even in Washington, where the word Yalta has come to have for some a sinister meaning, was anyone pointing to concrete good, to be expected from the publication. The first response abroad had been to find fault with the State Department's disregard for Sir Winston Churchill's objections to it; also, for publishing it just now, when Western unity needs strength, rahtherthan more strain and agitation; also, for doing it when another high-level conference must be held before long. But even these criticisms are in a minor key. So while it may prove true, that the publication has not done the United States any good, it is not bound to have done us any great ar lasting harm.

The worst that has come over the cables, is the angry reaction of rank and file Britons. And theyare worked up, not so much over the discourtesy to Sir Winston, as over the discovery that President Roosevelt wanted Hong Kong to be internationalized, or given to China, and wanted the British kept out of a trusteeship he proposed for Korea.

Judging from the first reactions from West Germany, the Germans are less incensed than the British though they now learn that Roosevelt wanted Germany cut into seven states and spoke glibly to Stalin, about the execution of fifty thousand German officers. The first comment from Germany was that this had been wartime, when hatred for the enemy could be expected. And Dick Mottlett cables me from Bonn, that not even the socialists are going to exploit the discovery that De-Gaulle wanted the French frontier to be on the Rhine. Spokesmen for the other German parties were just as philosophical.

Sir Winston Churchill spoke for himself in question time in the House of Commons this afternoon. He did not hide his dislike of the publication, but he did say, that the Foreign Office, after having opposed the release, did give its consent, when pressed by the State Department. "This does not imply" Sir Winston said, "that we accept responsibility for the accuracy of the American version." He pointed out that the American texts are not in any way, an agreed official record of the Powers concerned. "I have not seen anything but extracts, which now are appearing in the Press" he declared, and even these disclose some serious mistakes." Not till the full American version is studied, he said, will it be decided whether any corrections will be issued.

He showed dismay over the action as a precedent. "If this became an established practice" he said, "it might hamper the free exchange of views at future conferences. In any case it would seem a good thing to consult together on the text of any publication, during the lifetime of the individuals concerned." In Washington it was said that Sir Winston's objections had led to two short deletions. They were in a context suggesting thay had been remarks about France's post war position. Other deletions were made as well. The Times says the State Department made them in the national interest, and to avoid offence to some groups and countries.

Though the French were not at Yalta, they frankly disapproved today the publication of the documents. They believed it was done for motives of domestic politics, not for reasons of state. France has a law forbidding the publication of secret papers dealing with treaties, until twenty-five years have passed, with the exception of an emergency, when the high needs of the nation require the issue of a so-called white book. They see no such need for the Yalta revelations.

The Paris press, including papers normally pro-American and anti-Soviet, regards the publication as premature, and asks why it was done just now. It is worried about the effect on Anglo-American intimacy, since this indirectly affects them. Only two days ago the French Premier promised the Senate, that a Big Four conference would be held, as soon as the Paris accords are ratified. "Why" some Frenchmen are asking, "endanger these future chances for peace by raking up all the muck of the past?"

Not having been either at Yalta or Potsdam, the French are sensitive about the past. Theywant the skeletons left in the closet. My colleague, David Schoenbrun cables me that recently the French have been concerned to strengthen Western unity. They did not make an issue involving ratification out of Dr. Adenauer's challenge over the Saar. They layed down the fact that both Churchill and Attlee last weeksaid in Parliament, they did not consider France to be one of the Great Powers. "Now" he cables,"they sincerely regret that American statesmen chose this moment to rock the boat."

Whatever the reason for the publication, the White House today made it clear that President Eisenhower had no part in it. It was authoritatively stated, that he was never studied the yalta papers (which in itself is a little surprising). And he had nothing whatever to do with the decision to publish them.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Most of us must be in agreement that the Yalta papers offer a field day for historians. And if they follow Cicero's advice, all will be well. "The first law", said Cicero, "is that the historian shall never dare to set down what is false; the second, that he shall never dare to conceal the truth; the third, that there shall be no suspicion in his work of either favoritism or prejudice." .....Good Night and Good Luck.

Friday March 18, 1955

This is the news:

There is still a considerable difference of opinion tonight...(48 hours after the release of the Yalta papers)...as to what effect, if any, this decision will ultimately have on international affairs. Secretary of State Dulles, visiting in Ottawa, said he doesn't see how release of the papers can harm relations among the free nations because most of the facts were already known. But Senator Lyndon Johnson of Texas...the Majority Leader...disagrees. He says Mr. Dulles' action raises some "disturbing thoughts." He indicated he and others in the Democratic Party feel that domestic politics entered the decision to release the record of the Yalta talks. He said he doubted the report was issued for "the sake of disposing of surplus State Department papers."

Mr. Dulles, however, told Canadian newsmen that Sir Winston Churchill and two former American cabinet members - James Byrnes and Edward Stettinius - had published books which contained almost all of the essential facts made known officially and publically two nights ago. Mr. Dulles added each nation must feel free to publish diplomatic notes in the interests of public knowledge and historical accuracy. The Secretary said he knew of no intention by this country to denounce the Yalta treaty. As for West Germany's ratification of the Paris treaties, Mr. Dulles said this was a significant step in the direction of our most urgent objective: acheiving a climate of peace between France and Germany. (I'll have more to say about this in a few minutes.)

An editor and a former Senator [redacted] in two seperate speeches today called for changes in the government's security program. J. Russell Wiggins, Vice President of the Washington Post and Times Herald warned against the dangers of "too much" secrecy---said that while the need for secrecy is greater in today's world "the dangers of secrecy therefore are also greater than ever before." He said that, through excessive secrecy about government affirs, the country may lose the very liberties it is striving to defend against Communism.

Former Senator Harry Cain of Washington called for a non-partisan commission to work out uniform standards and procedures and to annul what he termed "the marriage between security and politics." And he criticized those who use the term "fifth amendment Communist" [redacted] to describe persons who invoke that privilege---said persons who use that term are "as guilty of disrespect for the Constitution as any Communist would be." "One who refuses to testify against himself may be a Communist", he said, "but there are solid and proper reasons why he may not be."

Senators investigating the case of former Army Major Irving Peress were told that if Peress' advancement to Major technically was a promotion, it was Congress who promoted him. Colonel [redacted] Ruluff Leverich, Chief Dental Surgeon at Camp Kilmer, said Peress had been called to service as a Captain. He became a Major under a law passed by Congress six months later. That law provides for advancement in such cases to a grade commensurate with experience and training.

The Stock Market investigation erupted into a partisan row between Democratic Senator Fulbright, Chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, and the ranking Republican on the committee, Senator Capehart. Capehart accused Fulbright of trying "to harass the administration and the nation's business" rather than to investigate the stock market. Fulbright told Capehart to save his criticism of him for executive sessions.

The trouble came up after Fulbright questioned General Motors' President Harlow Curtice about the prices GM fixes for its cars. Curtice insisted that GM's prices are competitive---told the committee, "you don't have to worry about monopoly as far as we are concerned." [redacted]

The House Appropriations committee called for an all-out attack on "the great and growing problem" of mentally retarded children. It recommended a 750-thousand dollar allotment to launch a research program in this field, and told the Office of Education to present "a real program" next year. The committee included the funds in an appropriation bill for the Labor Department, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and related agencies for the next fiscal year. On the bill as a whole, the Committee shaved off almost four-percent of the original request.

A Civil Defense official, Ralph Spear, told the Government Operations subcommittee that our doctors "are not prepared" to treat victims of atomic radiation. But he did say that the medical profession is in better shape to deal with Civil Defense problems it would encounter than are "many other services."

The Agriculture Department released an illustrated pamphlet showing that Americans are getting more and better foods today than they did 30-years ago for the same percentage of take-home pay. And it says that improvements now under way give promise of "more and better foods from tomorrow's pay check."

THERE'S BEEN Another change in plans for that Finnish tanker, carrying jet fuel to Communist China. Its owners now say that it will continue on [redacted] course unless the crew rebels. In that case, the ship would stop in international waters. And there are reports that she would transfer her cargo to another tanker

Edward R. Murrow: March 18, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The Upper House of the German Parliament today approved the Paris treaties. The vote was 29 to 9. This opens the way for the creation of a half-million man German army tied to the West - (at least for the time being.) The agreement with France to europeanize the Saar was also approved. So the fate of the re-armament treaties is now pretty much up to the French. The French Senate begins debate on Wednesday of next week, and is scheduled to vote on Friday.

There could still be some delay in connection with the German action, for the Socialists announced today that they are filing a suit in the constitutional court, claiming that the Saar agreement with France violates the constitution. This legal maneuver need not be taken too seriously, since even the Socialists say it's little more than a demonstration. Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn that the best opinion there is that the Court will hear the appeal and then dismiss it. Unless the Court decides otherwise, the treaties will go to West German President Heuss for his signature. He may well decide not to sign for a while, not to make the action official until the French Senate completes ratification of the treaties.

There appears to be an agreement between Paris and Bonn that both nations will deposit the instruments of ratification at the same time. The trust between the two nations is still so limited that they apparently want to put the papers in the same box at the same time.

This action by the German Parliament marks merely the beginning of a long, difficult and delicate process of translating the treaty into action. For once all the partners have ratified the treaties - and there are six nations who haven't done so - the Germans must then start drafting specific laws. Legislation covering the period of military service, pay, pensions, buildings - all the laws that are necessary to create and control a military establishment. This will be a lengthy business, although Chancellor Adenauer's government hopes to have the essential laws passed by mid-summer. If that happens, the first training courses can begin by October. The timetable then provides for gradual expansion until the full German force of half-a-million men is trained and armed by the late fall of 1958.

There are two major difficulties standing in the way of this timetable. The Social Democrats in Parliament must be persuaded to be more co-operative than they have been in the past; and considerably more money must be appropriated than has so far been earmarked for re-armament.

An addition of a half-million men by the autumn of 1958 would be a welcome addition to the strength of the West in the heart of Europe. But so far it exists only on paper. After today's vote, Chancellor Adenauer declared: "This does away with Yalta." It was Yalta where the decision was made to carve Germany up into separate zones, and to control its heavy industry. Now, ten years after that decision was taken, West Germany will become a sovereign state, with a modern defense force of a half-million men, and will join the North Atlantic Alliance. The Germans, never reluctant to use power, made it clear in a resolution today that they expect to be treated as equals. They demanded that they be allowed to sit in on any East-West conferences on the future of Germany. And they called on the United States, Britain and France to meet with the Russians to talk about free, nation-wide elections as the first step toward restoring a united Germany.

Another resolution urged the removal of "occupation discriminations." This means the Germans want to try to get back millions of dollars of German assets seized by the Allies during the late war.

Even if all the nations involved ratify the Paris treaties; even if the German army is created according to schedule, it will still be necessary to remember that one word "unification" in all dealings with Germany. No politician of any party can be elected without advocating the re-unification of Germany. History, sentiment, geography and economics combine to produce this urge to re-unite. The Russians, who did everything they could short of war to prevent West Germany joining the West, still hold the key to unification. They may never permit it. If they do, they will exact a high price. They can always hold out the prospect, however dim or dishonest, or re-uniting the German nation. And that will continue to have great appeal, not perhaps to this German government, but possibly to its successor.

This was a day of very considerable personal victory for the 79-year-old German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer. He has fought for this legislation tying the German Republic to the West, for almost five years. However, the Chancellor is mortal, and there is no successor in sight. To a large extent the problem of Europe for fifty years has been the problem of Germany. It looks as though it will continue to be one of the major problems for many years to come.

What Matthew Arnold had to say just about a hundred years ago, still applies today, particularly where France and Germany are concerned. Arnold said:"Peace...peace is what I seek and public calm; endless extinction of unhappy hates." Unfortunately, the problem is more easily stated than the solution, though perhaps Thomas Kempis came close when he wrote:"We should have much peace if we would not busy ourselves with sayings and doings of others."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 18, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

There is still a considerable difference of opinion tonight...48 hours after the release of the Yalta papers...as to what effect, if any, this decision will ultimately have on international affairs. Secretary of State Dulles, visiting Ottowa, said he doesn't see how release of the papers can harm relations among the free nations because most of the facts were already known. But Senator Lyndon Johnson of Texas,.the Majority Leader..disagrees. He sayd Mr. Dulles's action raises some "disturbing thoughts." He indicated he and others in the Democratic Party feel that domestic politics entered the decision to release the record of the Yalta talks. He said he doubted the report was issued for "the sake of disposing of surplus State Department papers."

Mr. Dulles, however, told Canadian newsmen that Sir Winston Churchill and two former American cabinet members - James Byrnes and Edward Stettinius had published books which contained almost all of the essential facts and made known officially and publically two nights ago. Mr. Dulles added each nation must feel free to publish diplomatic notes in the interests of public knowledge and historical accuracy. The Secretary said he knew of no intention by this country to denounce the Yalta treaty. As for West Germany's ratification of the Paris treaties, Mr. Dulles said this was a significant step in the direction of our most urgent objective: achieving a climate of peace between France and Germany. I'll have more to say about this in a few minutes.

An editor and a former Senator in two separate speeches today called for changes in the government's security program. J. Russell Wiggins, Vice President of the Washington Post and Times Herald warned against the dangers of "too much" secrecy -- said that while the need for secrecy is greater in today's world "the dangers of secrecy therefore are also greater than ever before." He said that, through excessive secrecy about government affairs, the country may lose the very liberties it is striving to defend against Communism.

Former Senator Harry Cain of Washington called for a non-aartisan commission to work out uniform standards and prodecures and to annul what he termed "the marraige between security and politics." And he criticized those who use the term "fifth amendment Communist" to describe persons who invoke that priviledge--said ersons who use that term are "as guilty of disrespect to the Constitition as any Communist would be." "One who refuses to testify against himself may be a Communist", he said, "but there are solid and proper reasons why he may not be."

Senators investigating the case of former Army Major Irving Peress were told that if Peress' advancement to Major technically was a promotion, it was Congress who promoted him. Colonel Ruluff Leverich, Chief Dental Surgeon at Camp Kilmer, said Preess had been called into service as a captain. He became a Major under a law passed by Congress six months later. That law provides for advancement in such cases to a grade commensurate with experience and training.

The Stock Market investigation erupted into a partisan row between Democratic Senator Fulbright, Chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, and the ranking Republican on the committee, Senator Capehart. Capehart accused Fulbright of trying "to harass the administration and the nation's business" rather than to investigate the stock market. Fulbright told Capehart to save his criticism of him for executive sessions.

The trouble came up after Fulbright questioned General Motor's President Horlow Curtice about the prices GM fixes for its cars. Curtice insisted that GM's prices are competitive --told the committee, "you don't have to worry about monopoly as far as we are concerned."

The House Appropriations committee called for an all-out attack on "the great and growing problem" of mentally retarded children. It recommended a 75--thousand dollar allotment to launch a research program in this field, and told the Office of Education to present " a real program" next year. The committee included the funds in an appropriation bill for the Labor Department, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and related agencies for the next fiscal year. On the bill as a whole, the Committee shaved off almost four-percent of the original request.

A Civil Defense official, Ralph Spear, told the Government Operations subcommittee that our doctors "are not prepared" to treat victims of atomic radiation. But he did say that the medical profession is in better shape to deal with Civil Defense problems it would encounter than are "many other services."

The Agriculture Department released an illustrated pamphlet showing that Americans are getting more and better foods today than they did 30-years ago for the same percentage of take-home pay. And it says that improvements now under way give the promise of "more and better foods from tomorrow's pay check."

There's been another change in plans for that Finnish tanker, carrying jet fuel to Communist China. Its owners now say that it will continue on course unless the crew rebels. In that case, the ship would stop in international waters. And there are reports that she woudd transfer her cargo to another tanker.

The Upper House of the German Parliament today approved the Paris treaties. The vote was 29 to 9. This opens the way for the creation of a half-million man German army tied to the west - at least for the time being. The agreement with France to Europeanize the Saar was also approved. So the fate of the re-armament treaties is now pretty much up to the French. The French Senate begins debate on Wednesday of next week, and is scheduled to vote on Friday.

There could still be some delay in connection with the German action, for the Socialists announced today that they are filing a suit in the constitutional court, claiming that the Saar agreement with France violates the constitutional court, claiming that the Saar agreement with France violates the constitution. This legal maneuver need not be taken too seriously, since even the Socialists say it's little more then a demonstration. Dick Hottelet cables me from Bonn that the best opinion there is that the Court will hear the appeal and then dismiss it. Unless the court decides otherwise, the treaties will go to West German President Heuss for his signature. He may well decide not to sign for a while, not to make the action official until the French Senate completes ratification of the treaties.

There appears to be an agreement between Paris and Bonn that both nations will deposit the instruments of ratification it the same time. The trust between the two nations is still so limited that they apparently want to put the papers in the same box at the same time.

This action by the German Parliament marks merely the beginning of a long, difficult and delicate process of translating the treaty into action. For once all the partners have ratified the treaties - and there are six nations who haven't done so - the Germans must then start drafting specific laws. Legislation covering the period of military serivce,pay, pensions, buildings -- all the laws that are necessary to create and control a military establishment. This will be a lengthy business, although ChancellorAdenauer government hopes to have the essential laws passed by mid-summer. If that happens, the first training courses can begin by October. The timetable then provides for gradual expansion until the full German force of half-a-million men is trained and armed by the late fall of 1958.

There are two major difficulties standing in the way of this timetable. The Social Democrats in Parliament must be persuaded to be more co-operative than they have been in the past; and considerably more money must be appropriated that has so far been earmakked for re-armament.

An addition of a half-million men by the autumn of 1958 would be a welcome addition to the strength of the West in the heart of Europe. But so far it exists only on paper. After today's vote, Chancellor Adenauer declared: "This does away with Yalta." It was Yalta where the decision was made to carve up Germany into separate zones, and to control its heavy industry. Now ten years after that decision was taken, West Germany will become a soverign state, with a modern defense force of a half-million men, and will join the North Atlantic Alliance. The Germans never reluctant to use power, made it clear in a resolution today that they expect to be treated as equals, They demanded that they be allowed to sit in on any East-West conferences on the future of Germany. And they called on the United States, Britain and France to meet with the Russians to talk about free, nation-wide elections as the first step toward restoring a united Germany.

Another resolution urged the removal of "occupational discriminations." This means that Germans want to try to get back millions of dollars of German assets seived by the Allies during the late war.

Even if all the nations involved ratify the Paris treaties;even if the German army is created according to schedule, it will still be necessary to remember that one word "unification" inaall dealings with Germany. No politician of any part can be elected without advocating the re-unification of Germany. History, sentiment, geography and economics combine to produce this urge to re-unite. The Russians, who did everything they could short of war to prevent West Germany joining the West, still hold the key to unification. They may never permit it. If they do, they will exact a high price. They can always hold out the prospect, however dim or dishonest, or re-uniting the German nation. And that will continue to have great appeal, not perhaps to this German government, but possible to its successor.

This was a day of very considerable personal victory for the 79-year-old German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer. He was fought for this legislation tying the German Republic to the West, for almost five year.. However, the Chancellor is mortal, and there is no successor in sight. To a large extent the problem of Europe for fifty years has been the problem of Germany. It looks as though it will continue to be one of the major problems for many years to come.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: What Matther Arnold had to say just about a hundred years ago, still applies today, particularly where France and Germany are concerned. Arnold said: "Peace...peace ws what I seek and public calm; endless extinction of unhappy hates." Unfortunately, the problem is more esaily stated than the solution, though perhaps Thomas a Kempis came close when he wrote: "We should have much peace if we would not busy ourselves with the sayings and doings of others."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday, March 21, 1955

This is the news:

Chairman George of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee wants a Big Power conference..without conditions. The Senator told reporters such a meeting should be initiated by the President who should personally participate in it. He doesn't know the President's views on this. But Senator George feels we should not "superimpose any conditions" or "Rake up any old matters." He wants us to go into such a conference with eyes wide open..expecting the Russians to bring up matters we don't want to discuss.

Secretary of State Dulles holds that before there is any such meeting the Paris agreements re-arming West Germany should be in force. And the State Department says Mr. Dulles wants evidence that "there will be a basis for agreement, especially on the German and Austrian questions." Senator George agrees that the meeting should be called after the Paris agreement is ratified.

Here in New York today, Mr. Dulles said that the tactics of Communist China's leaders "may prove more dangerous and provocative of war than those of the Russians Soviets." He told the Advertising Club that

Red China's leaders are "dizzy with success"..they entertain a very exaggerated sense of their own power and "gravely underestimate the power and resolution of the non-Communist world."

Russia announced today that she and her satellites have decided to set up a unified military command after the western powers ratify the Paris agreements. The Soviet Foreign Ministry says that Moscow and her European allies have agreed on a treaty of friendship, co-operation and mutual aid.

Premier Bulganin today fired the Soviet Minister of CULTURE. Georgi Alexandrov. This was the 12th major change in the Soviet government within a month. Alexandrov is accused of "failing to ensure the leadership" of his ministry..specifically by not publishing good books on corn planting and livestock breeding.

And Pravda has accused our State Department of trying to smear the Yalta conference by publishing what it calls "by no means authentic documents" of the meeting in the Crimea in 1945.

The British House of Commons was informed today that the Communists had built up military forces of about 95-thousand men in East Germany...before there was any talk of re-arming West Germany. Foreign office Undersecratry, Lord John Hope, says there has been no information since then on any great increase in the Communists's military forces... although their naval strength is believed to have been increased by 50 per cent.

A British government spokesman said today that it is possible to carry out nuclear experiments (WITH) "little or no" tell-tale radioactivity.

And after 13 members of Congress spent 20-hours cruising on our new atomic powered submarine the Nautilus, the Atomic Energy Committee of the Congress said this marks the beginning of a new approach to naval warfare. The Nautiuls is said to be capable of circling the globe at full speed, submerged. Democratic Senator Pastore of Rhode Island said the Congressmen who made the trip were impressed with the submarine's performance to the point of "excitement."

Senators studying the Stock Market today heard Benjamin Fairless, chairman of the board of United States Steel, say that he believes we are on the threshold of "one of the greatest periods of prosperity this country has ever seen." And Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana demanded that Harvard Professor John K. Galbraith be recalled for questioning.

[redacted]

Capeheart charged that Galbraith, who testified recently, was an economic adviser to Adlai Stevenson in the last campaign... and dislikes the Eisenhower administration and the American economic system. Capeahart says he's "shocked" at a 1949 pamphlet in which Galbreath said the achivements of Communism were considerable. Galbraith said Capeheart was quoting passages out of context. Capehart wants to know why the Harvard ECONOMIST was called as a witness.

The House today voted down an attempt to jam through a bill that would give postal workers a seven and a half per cent average pay increase. A majority of members objected to a motion that would have prohibited any amendments. Some Representatives think this leaves the way open for a more liberal raise later on. Others suggest this may mean no pay increase for postal workers this year.

The Defense department revealed today that the White House decision last year to raise tariffs on imported watches was taken after the Defense Department said the domestic watch industry needed no special treatment..from the standpoint of defense needs.

Spokesman for (INDEPENDENT) [redacted] oil producers told a Senate committee today that if "excessive" oil imports continue, consumers will become (INCREASINGLY) [redacted] dependent on a "handful of international companies." Russell B. Brown of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, says these large firms work hand in hand developing big foreign oil reserves.

Edward R. Murrow: March 21, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Since 1944 there have been rumors and assertions that Winston Churchill, full of years and honors, would lay down the heavy burdens of office. Up to now they have all proved wrong. IN 1945 He was turned out to pasture by the British electorate; made one attempt to come back and failed by a narrow margin; and then, about four years ago, returned as Prime Minister. He is now 80, and has been heard to say in the hearing of some impatient younger members of his Party, that Mr. Gladstone formed his last government at the "not inconsiderable age of 83." It is also said in London clubs that Sir Winston has been heard to remark that he is concerned about the future, because "Anthony cannot go on for ever." He was referring, of course, to Sir Anthony Eden, his heir-apparent, who is 58.

But it now appears clear that this mighty man who has made and written so much history, is in fact going to resign as Prime Minister - probably before Easter. Reports of his impending resignation have appeared in every British publication. There is reason to believe that he communicated his decision to the British Cabinet last Monday. The Yorkshire Post, owned by Sir Anthony Eden's family, broke the story last Thursday; and since then every newspaper in Britain has chimed in. Even if the Prime Minister should change his mind, the tide is running, and only the precise time can be in doubt. If he resigns as Prime Minister, Sir Winston will remain a member of the House of Commons. He regards himself as a child of that house; he will be listened to whenever his voice is raised in it. He has sat there as an exile, shunned by the members of his own Party; and he has also dominated it by the force of his brilliance, rhetoric and fortitude. XXX

It is said in London that one reason for Mr. Churchill's departure is his belief that high level talks with the Russians are not now in the cards. The Russians are hotting up the cold war. The disarmament talks in London are getting nowhere. The Russians are cancelling many millions of dollars' worth of contracts for consumer goods given to British industry during the last year.

If Sir Winston resigns, Sir Anthony Eden will become the next Prime Minister. He and his Cabinet will then decide when to hold a General Election. Under the British system the life of a government is five years, unless it loses a vote of confidence. However, the Prime Minister and his Cabinet can call for a national election whenever they want to. The five-year span will end for this government next year. The temptation to hold an early election, perhaps in May, will be very strong. The opposition Labor Party is split; Sir Anthony Eden is widely and favorably known; and he and his Party must reckon their chances good of securing a mandate for another five years. If the election is not called in the Spring, it will come in the Autumn - probably October - because the British have an old-fashioned habit of not permitting politics to interfere with vacations. In any event, the decision will be up to Sir Anthony Eden, if Sir Winston resigns.

There is in the news tonight, the release of another document which indicates that as of last January Churchill had lost none of his powers of exposition. It was a personal letter from the British Prime Minister to Mendes-France, who was then Premier of France. Mendes-France suggested immediate moves for a Big Four conference - that is the United States, Britain, France and Russia. Sir Winston refused this proposal in language that was clear and clean. He said he was: "firmly resolved that there be neither meeting nor an invitation under any foreseeable circumstances among the four powers, either at the Foreign Ministers' level, or at the level of the heads of government, until the London and Paris agreements have been ratified by all the signatories." (This was a reference to the agreements re-arming West Germany). And Churchill added that he had the full agreement of the United States on this point. His letter went on to say that if the French failed to approve the treaties, he would support what he called "an empty chair policy" towards France. He believed that American and British troops would not be withdrawn from the Continent, and that even if the French failed to agree to German re-armament, the United States - with its immense superiority in nuclear arms, and acting in association with Great Britain, the Commonwealth and the German Republic - would be strong enough to guarantee a certain and real security for Europe, founded on the physical and moral capacity of reprisals."

This personal letter from Churchill to Mendes-France was written on January 12th. It was released today, with Sir Winston's consent, in an obvious effort to influence the vote on the treaties which is due in the French Senate on Friday. In an earlier and gentler time this would have been called power politics. And Sir Winston Churchill, who can measure power in terms of divisions, hydrogen bombs and words, probably would not object to the old-fashioned phrase, "power politics," being applied to this particular letter.

Two hundred years ago, Samuel Johnson remarked:"Don't think of retiring from the world until the world will be sorry that you retire." I hate a fellow whom pride or cowardice,or laziness drive into a corner, and who does nothing when he is there but sit and growl. Let him come out as I do and bark." Surely, where Sir Winston is concerned who can deny that he can bark with the best and that his retirement will be felt.

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW & THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 21, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Chairman George of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee wants a Big Power conference...without conditions. The Senator told reporters such a meeting should be initiated by the President who should personally perticipate in it. He doesn't know the President's views on this. But Senator George feels we should not "superimpose any conditions" or "rake up any old matters." He wants us to go into such a conference with eyes wide open..expecting the Russians to bring up matters we don't want to discuss.

Secretary of State Dulles holds that before there is any such meeting, the Paris agreements re-arming West Germany should be in force. And the State Department says Mr. Dulles wants evidence that "there will be a basis for agreement, especially on the German and Austrian questions." Senator George agrees that the meeting should be called after the Paris agreement is ratified.

Here in New York today, Mr. Dulles said that the tactics of Communist China's leaders "may prove more dangerous and provocative of war than those of the Russian Soviets." He told the Advertising Club that Red China's leaders are "dizzy with success"...they entertain a very exaggerated sense of their won power and "gravely underestimate the power and resolution of the non-Communist world."

Russia announced today that she and her satellites have decided to set up a unified military command after the western powers ratify the Paris agreements. The Soviet Foreign Ministry says that Moscow and her European allies have agreed on a treaty of friendship, co-operation and mutual aid.

Premier Bulganin today fired the Soviet Minister of culture Georgi Alexandrov. This was the 12th major change in the Soviet government within a month. Alexandrov is accused of "failing to ensure the leadership" of his ministry...specifically by not publishing good books an corn planting and livestock breeding.

And Pravda has accused our State Department of trying to smear the Yalta conference by publishing what it calls "by no means authentic documents" of the meeting in the Crimea in 1945.

The British House of Commons was informed today that the Communists had built up military forces of about 95-thousand men in East Germany... before there was any talk of re-arming West Germany. Foreign Office Undersecretary, Lord John Hope, says there has been no information since then, on any great increase in the Communist's military forces...although their naval strength is believed to have been increased by 50 per cent.

A British government spokesman said today that it is possible to carry out nuclear experiments with "little or no" tell-tale radioactivity.

And 13 members of Congress spend 20-hours cruising on our new atomic powered submarine the Nautilus, the Atomic Energy Committee of the Congress said this marks the beginning of a new approach to naval warfare. The Nautilus is said to be capable of circling the globe at full speed, submerged. Democratic Senator Pastore of Rhode Island said the Congressmen who made the trip were impressed with the submarine's performance to the point of "excitement."

Senators studying the Stock Market today heard Benjamin Fairless, chairman of the board of United States Steel, say that he believes we are on the threshold of "one of the greatest periods of prosperity this country has ever seen." And Republican Senator Capehart of Indiana demanded that Harvard Professor John K Galbraith be recalled for questioning. Capehart charged that Galbraith, who testified recently, was an economic adviser to Adlai Stevenson in the last campaign..and dislikes the Eisenhower administration and the American economic system. Capehart says he's "shocked" at a 1949 pamphlte in which Galbreath said the achievements of Communism were considerable. Galbreath said Capeheart was quoting passages out of contest. Capehart wants to know why the Harvard economist was called as a witness.

The House today voted down an attempt to jam through a bill that could give postal workers a seven and a half per cent average pay increase. A majority of members objected to a motion that would have prohibited any amendments. Some Representatives think this leaves the way open for a more liberal raise later on. Others suggest this may mean no pay increase for postal workers this year.

The Defense department revealed today that the White House decision last year to raise tariffs on imported watches was taken after the Defense Department said the domestic watch industry needed no special treatment... from the standpoint of defense needs.

Spokesman for independent oil producers told a Senate committee today that if "excessive" oil imports continue, consumers will become increasingly dependent on a "handful of international companies." Russell B. Brown of the Independent Petroleum Association of America, says these large firm work hand in hand developing big foreign oil reserves.

Since 1944 there have been rumors and assertions that Winston Churchill full of years and honors, would lay down the heavy burdens of office. Up to now they have all proved wrong. In 1945 he was turned out to pasture by the British electorate; made one attempt to come back and failed by a narrow margin; and then,about four years ago, returned as Prime Minister. He is now 80, and has been heard to say in the hearing of some impatient younger members of his Party, that Mr. Gladstone formed his last government at the "not inconsiderable age of 83." It is also said in London clubs that Sir Winston has been heard to remark that he is concerned about the future, because "Anthony cannot go on for ever." He was referring, of course, to Sir Anthony Eden, his heir-apparent, who is 58.

But it now appears clear that his mighty man who has made and written so much history, is in fact going to resign as Prime Minister - probably before Easter. Reports of his impending resignation have appeared in every British publication. There is reason to believe that he communicated his decision to the British Cabinet last Monday. The Yorkshire Post, owned by Sir Anthony Eden's family, broke the story last Thursday; and since then every newspaper in Britain has chimed in. Even if the Prime Minister should change his mind, the tide is running, and only the precise time can be in doubt. If he resigns as Prime Minister, Sir Winston will remain a member of the House of Commons. He regards himself as a child of that house; he will be listened to whenever his voice is raised in it. He has sat there as an exile, shunned by the members of his own Party; and he has also dominated it by the force of his brilliance, rhetoric and fortitude.

It is said in London that one reason for Mr. Chruchill's departure is his belief that high level talks with the Russians are not now in the cards. The Russians are hotting up the cold war. The disarmement talks in London are getting nowhere. The Russians are handelling many millions of dollar's worth of contracts for consumer goods given to British industry during the last year.

If Sir Winston resigns, Sir Anthony Eden will become the next Prime Minister. He and his Cabinet will then decide when to hold a General Election. Under the British system the life of a government is five years, unless it loses a vote of confidence. However, the Prime Minister and his Cabinet can call for a national election whenever they want to. The five-year plan will end for this government next year. The temptation to hold an early election, perhaps in May, will be very strong. The opposition Labor Party is split; Sir Anthony Eden is widely and favorably known; and he and his Party must reckon their chances good of securing a mandate for another five years. If the election is not called in the Spring, it will come in the Autumn - probably October - because the British have an old-fashioned habit of not permitting politics to interfere with vacations. In any event, the decision will be up to Sir Anthony Eden, if Sir Winston resigns.

There is in the news tonight, the release of another document which indicates that as of last January, Churchill had most none of his powers of exposition. It was a personal letter from the British Prime Minister to Mendes-France, who was them Premier of France. Mendes-France suggested immediate moves for a Big Four conference - that is the United States, Britain France and Russia. Sir Winston refused this proposal in language that was clear and clean. He said he was:"firmly resolved that there be neither meeting nor an invitation under any foreseeable circumstances among the four powers, either at the Foreign Minister's level, or at the level of the heads of government, until the London and Paris agreements have been ratified by all the signatories." (This was a reference to the agreements re-arming West Germany. And Churchill added that he had the full agreement of the United States on this point. His letter went on to say that if the French failed to approve the treaties, he would support what he called "an empty chair policy" towards France. He believed that American and British troops would bot be withdrawn from the Continent, and that even if the French failed to agree to German re-armament, the United States - with its immense superiority in nuclear arms, and acting in association with Great Britain, the Commonwealth and the German Republic " would be strong enough to guarantee a certain and real security for Europe, founded on the physical and moral capacity of reprisals."

This personal letter from Chruchill to Mendes-France was written on January 12th. It was released today, with Sir Winston's consent, in an obvious effort to influence the vote on the treaties which is due in the French Senate on Friday. In an earlier and gentler time this would have been called power politics. And Sir Wisnton Churchill, who can measure power in terms of divisions, hydrogen bombs and words, porbably would not object to the old - fashioned phrase, "power politics," being applied to this particular letter.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here's a word from Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Two hundred years ago, Samuel Johnson remarked: "Don't think of retiring from the world until the world will be sorry that you retire. I hate a fellow whom pride or cowardice, or laziness drive into a corner and does nothing when he is there but sit and growl. Let him come out as I do and bark." Surely, where Sir Winston is concerned, who can deny that he can bark with the best and that his retirement will be felt.

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday March 22, 1955

This is the news:

Republican Senator Knowland said today the White House opposes a Big Power meeting..including the Russians. White House News Secretary Hagerty later told reporters that this was the President's position. [redacted] But the State Department says Secretary of State Dulles' views are in harmony with those of Democratic Senator George who proposed the Big Power meeting. (I'd like to examine this problem in a few minutes.)

Democratic Senator Johnson of Texas told his colleagues today that the publication of the Yalta papers seemed to have been officially engineered as a manuver against the Democrats. Johnson, the majority leader, told the Senate: a week ago Secretary Dulles said publication of the papers "would adversely affect our security and our relations with our allies." But two days later the papers were in the hands of one newspaper under [redacted] circumstances..said Johnson.."strongly (suggesting) [redacted] official collusion." Johnson said he believes the papers were culled for ammunition to be used against Democrats rather than the Communists. His speech came after Senator Knowland said [redacted] criticism of the publication of the papers as [redacted] hasty or ill-advised could not be substantiated by the facts.

And in London, Prime Minister Churchill said he doesn't remember making remarks attributed to him in the papers..specifically that; "I do not care much about the Poles myself." Sir Winston said if he did make any such remarks they must have been taken completely out of context.

And when some members of the House of Commons noted today that every major newspaper has predicted that Sir Winston is getting ready to retire, Churchill told them "not to be led away by all the chatter in the press."~~Britain's big National Union of Railwaymen, which has a strong voice in the Labor party, today came out against the expulsion of left-winger Aneurin Bevan. Right-wing Laborites are expected to press for Bevan's expulsion.~~

Secretary of State Dulles said toay that the Big Power disarmament talks in London will continue "as long as there is the slightest advantage to be gained" in the search for a workable plan.

And the President, in Washington, told the Advertising Council, that we will lose the ideological conflict against Communism "unless we make it possible through enlightened methods for the free world to trade more freely."

Treasury Secretary Humphrey told a Senate committee he would not object to raising the 2-cents a gallon federal gasoline tax to put the Administration's plan for a big highway program on a pay-as-you-gO basis.

And the House Ways and Means Committee today voted unanimously to plug a "loophole" in the 1954 tax law that Democrats estimate might cost the government up to 5-billion dollars.

The House has approved the Administration's plan to sell the government's synthetic rubber factories. Twenty-four of them will be sold for 285½-Million dollars to the nation's biggest oil, chemical and rubber concerns. Democrats charge this will lead to monopoly.

Two members of the Securities Exchange Commission..Chairman Demmler and Commissioner Rowen..testified today that they do not believe that the rigging of market prices or other illegal practises have been a factor in the Stock Market boom.

The Federal Power Commission has asked Congress to take away it power to set the price for natural gas sold by producers to interstate pipelines.

Chairman McClellan of the Senate (INVESTIGATING) committee says that someone on the Army Personnel Board that handled the Peress case was "derelict in his duty."

The Supreme Court says that on April 11 it will start hearing arguments in the school segregation cases. The arguments will be on how to put into effect the court's ruling that race segregation in public schools is (UNCONSTITUTIONAL.) A full court will hear the delayed arguments--now that Justice John Marshal Harlan has taken his seat on the bench.

The Atomic Energy Commission today set-off the sixth blast in its current atomic tests in Nevada. And an atomic cloud sprinkled light radioactive particles on Las Vegas. Authorities say there is no danger to civilians.

In Hawaii, a naval transport plane crashed into a mountain top and exploded. All 66 persons aboard were killed...one of the worst accidents in aviation records.

The Russians today selected Vassily Kuznetsov to replace the late Andrei Vishinsky as first deputy foreign minister. He was former (HEAD OF) the trade unions in the Soviet Union.

And in Greece, Athens newspapers say police have arrested a man described as a "Communist party committeeman" in the killing of CBS Correspondent George Polk almost seven years ago. The newspaper says this man was one of three in a rowboat from which George Polk's body was thrown into Salonika harbor.

Edward R. Murrow: March 22, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

When Senator George last Sunday proposed a top-level three-power conference, the State Department spoke up to say, there wasn't much difference between its views on the matter and the Senator's. Senator George was a friend of Secretary Dulles, as well as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, so it looked as though he might be acting as spokesman of a bi-partisan foreign policy to announce that a notable step was about to be taken.

But today President Eisenhower was put on record as being opposed to a top-level conference, without previous evidence of Soviet good faith. Senator George had said that he favored a conference without necessarily requiring such evidence. This put a fairly visible gap between the President and the Senator from Georgia.

The President's view was made known by Senator Knowland after the President's weekly conference with Republican congressional leaders. The State Department spoke up again, to say that it had always taken the line that proof of good faith by the Soviet government was necessary, before a top-level conference be held. And Senators Knowland, Bridges and Smith came out in opposition to the George proposal.

It has been suggested that the Administration at first welcomed the George proposal, because it came right after the State Department's release of the Yalta documents. This action had been represented abroad as showing that Washington was against any big power conference as such. Senator George helped turn the current of foreign thinking along this line.

Even so, it soon was plain that there had been a shift in Washington. Ever since President Eisenhower cracked down on proposals for a blockade of Communist China, he has stood at a considerable distance from those who were pressing for a more aggressive course in the Formosa crisis. The President loomed up before the public, in this country and abroad, as the man of peace and moderation. And nobody of stature stood to the left of him advocating anything still more moderate. Now Senator George has taken a more moderate position than the President is ready to adopt at this moment.

The fact that someone is willing to be even more moderate doesn't pin the President down to his present stand. It may make it easier for him to move in the same direction. For Senator George commands respect, and nobody would dream of calling him a radical, or someone given to impetuous outbursts. The President has said in the past that he would confer with anyone, wherever there was a chance of success. He may wish to say it again.

But it must count as a fact, that public opinion about a top-level conference in Britain, France and the German Republic, is much closer to the George proposal than to the view of President Eisenhower as expounded today by Senator Knowland. Americans may not realize the extent to which all three of the Allied governments are unconditionally committed to talks with the Kremlin soon after the Paris accords are ratified. Chancellor Adenauer might not have put the Paris Accords through Parliament so successfully if he had not pledged such a conference right after ratification. Premier Faure has had to stress the identical promise to the French Assembly to assure ratification. And talk about a top-level conference has been loudest of all in London. Sir Winston Churchill, who was ready to confer with the Kremlin long before ratification of the accords, would hardly agree to put off a conference till long after ratification. (Neither would Sir Anthony Eden, if Churchill resigns.) So all of our major allies are set for an early conference if they can get it. They are not demanding prior evidence of the Kremlin's good faith. On the contrary, the British today were expressing worry that the Soviet Union might not agree even to attend a conference till next year.

It can be pointed out that once the Paris accords are ratified, negotiations with the Kremlin can proceed from a position of greater strength, certainly greater than existed before ratification. The Kremlin has worked tooth and nail to keep the Paris accords from being ratified. It now knows it is beaten. And it can be expected to work tooth and nail to prevent the actual re-armament of Germany. And to do that, it must offer bigger concessions than any so far mentioned. Since London, Paris and Bonn are willing to hold a conference without advance concessions, Moscow cannot be expected to offer concessions before a conference is held.

That, presumably, makes Senator George's proposal appear realistic to the Europeans, even to the French, whom he suggested leaving out. When Sir Winston Churchill tried to get a meeting with the Russians last year he wanted, he told Parliament last week, "a friendly meeting with no agenda, no objective, but of living side by side in growing confidence, easement and prosperity." Now Senator George has made it seem more likely that the United States would go to an intimate, informal kind of meeting.

In Washington, the question to answer would seem to be, whether it is safer to hold no conference at all, by insisting on conditions that aren't going to be met; or to risk a conference that fails, and leaves dire disillusionment in its train; or to run the risk of that failure in the hope that a conference might actually accomplish something in the direction of peace. It is no easy choice.

Joseph Conrad once remarked: "What all men are really after is some form...or perhaps only some formula...for peace." That would most certainly seem to be be the case today. But even that goal is difficult to attain. For as my colleague, Elmer Davis has concluded: "We can go forward hopefully only if we build on the solid recognition that things are as they are and not as we should like to have them."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 22, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Republican Senator Knowland said today the White House opposes a Big Power, meeting...including the Russians. White House News Secretary Hagerty later told reporters that this was the President's position. But the State Department says Secretary of State Dulles's views are in harmony with those of Democratic Senator George who proposed the Big Power Meeting. I'd like to examine this problem in a few minutes.

Democratic Senator Johnson of Texas told his colleagues today that the publication of the Yalta papers seemed to have been officially engineered as a maneuver against the Democrats. Johnson, the majority leader, told the Senate: a week ago Secretary Dulles said publication of the papers "would adversely affect our security and our relations with our allies." But two days later the papers were in the hands of one newspaper under circumstances... said Johnson..."strongly suggesting official collusion." Johnson said he believes the papers were culled for ammunition to be used against Democrats rather than the Communists. His speech came after Senator Knowland said criticism of the publication of the papers as hasty or ill-advised could not be sustained by the facts.

And in London, Prime Minister Churchill said he doesn't remember making remarks attributed to him in the papers...specifically that:"I do not care much about the Poles myself." Sir Winston said if he did make any such remarks they must have been taken completely out of context.

And when some members of the House of Commons noted today that every major newspaper has predicted that Sir Winston is getting ready to retire, Churchill told them "not to be led away by all the chatter in the press."

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the Big Power disarmament talks in London will continue "as long as there is the slightest advantage to be gained" in the search for a workable plan.

And the President, in Washington, told the Advertising Council, that we will lose the ideological conflict against Communism "unless we make it possible through enlightened methods for the free world to trade more freely."

Treasury Secretary Humphrey told a Senate committee he would not object to raising the 2-cents a gallon federal gasoline tax to put the Administrations plan for the big highway program on a pay-as-you to basis.

And the House Ways and Means Committee today voted unanimously to plug a "loophole" in the 1954 tax law that Democrats estimate might cost the government up to 5 billion dollars.

The House has approved the Administration's plan to sell the government's synthetic rubber factories. Twenty-four of them will be sold for 285½ million dollars to the nation's biggest oil, chemical and rubber concerns. Democrats charge this will lead to monopoly.

Two members of the Securities Exchange Commission..Chairman Demmler and Commissioner Rowen...testified today that they do not believe that the rigging of market prices or other illegal practices have been a factor in the Stock Market boom.

The federal Power Commission has asked Congress to take away its power to set the price for natural gas sold by producers to interstate pipelines.

Chairman McClellan of the Senate investigating Committee says that someone on the Army personnel Board that handled the Peress case was "derelict in his duty."

The Supreme Court says that on April 11 it will start hearing arguments in the school segregation cases. The arguments will be on how to put into effect the court's ruling that race segregation in public schools is unconstitutional. A full court will hear the delayed arguments --now that Justice John Marshl Harland has taken his seat on the bench.

The Atomic Energy Commission today set-off the sixth blast in its current atomic tests in Nevada. And an atomic cloud sprinkled light radioactive particles on Las Vegas. Authorities say there is no danger to civilians.

In Hawaii, a naval transport plane crashed into a mountain top and exploded. All 66 persons aboard were killed...one of the worst accidents in aviation redords.

The Russians today selected Vassily Kuznetsov to replace the late Andrei Vishinsky as first deputy foreign minister. He was former head of the trade unions of the Soviet Union.

And in Greece, Athens newspapers say police have arrested a man described as a Communist committeeman" in the killing of CBS Correspondent George Polk almost seven years ago. The newspaper says this man was one of three in a rowboat from which George Polk's body was thrown into Salonika harbor.

When Senator George last Sunday proposed a top-level three-power conference, the State Department spoke up to say, there wasn't much difference between its views on the matter and the Senator's. Senator George was a friend of Secretary Dulles, as well as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, so it looks as though he might be acting as spokesman of a bipartisan foreign policy to announce that a notable step was about to be taken.

But today President Eisenhower was put on record as being opposed to a top-level conference, without previous evidence of Soviet good faith. Senator George had said that he favored a conference without necessarily requiring such evidence. This put a fairly visible gap between the President and the Senator from Georgia.

The President's view was made known by Senator Knowland after the President's weekly conference with Republican congressional leaders. The State Department spoke up again, to say that it had always taken the line that proof of good faith by the Soviet government was necessary, before a top-level conference was held. And Senators Knowland, Bridges and Smith came out in opposition to the George proposal.

It had been suggested that the Administration at first welcomed the George proposal, because it came right after the State Department's release of the Yalta documents. This action had been represented abroad as showing that Washington was against any big power conference as such. Senator George helped tourn the current of Foreign thinking along this line.

Even so, it soon was plain that there had been a shift in Washington. Ever since President Eisenhower cracked down on proposals for a blockade of Communist China, he has stood at a considerable distance from those who were pressing for a more aggressive course in the Formosa crisis. The President loomed up before the public in this country and abroad, as the man of peace and moderation. And nobody of stature stood to the left of him adovcating anything still more moderate. Now Senator George has taken a more moderate position than the President is ready to adopt at this moment.

The fact that someone is willing to be even more moderate doesn't pin the President down to his present stand. It may make it easier for him to move in the same direction. For Senator George commands respect, and nobody would dream of calling him a radical, or someone given to impetous outbursts. The President has said in the past that he would confer with anyone, wherever there was a chance for success. He may wish to say that again.

But it must count as a fact, that public opinion about a top-level conference in Britain, France and the German Republic, is much closer to the George proposal than to the view of President Eisnehower as expounded today by Senator Knowland. Americans may not realize the extent of which all three of the Allied governments are uncondiotonally committed to talks with the Kremlin soon after the Paris accords are ratified. Chancellor Adenauer might not have put the Paris Accords through Parliament so successfully if he had not have put the Paris Accords through Parliament to successfully if he had not pledged such a conference right after ratification. Premier Faure has had to stress the identical promise to the French Assembly to assure ratification. And talk about a top-level conference has been loudest of all in London. Sir Winston Churchill, who was ready to confer with the Kremlin long before ratification of the accords, would hardly agree to put off a conference if they can get it. They are not demanding prior evidence of the Kremlin's good faith. On the contrary, the British today were expressing worry that the Soviet Union might not agree even to attend a conference till next year.

It can be pointed out that once the Paris accords are ratified, negotiations with the Kremlin can proceed from a position of negotiations with the Kremlin can proceed from a position of greater strength, certainly greater than existed before ratification. The Kremlin has worked tooth and nail to keep the Paris accords from being ratified. It now knows it is beaten. And it can be expected to work tooth and nail to prevent the actual re-armament of Germany. And to do that it must offer bigger concessions than any so far mentioned. Sance London, Paris and Bonn are willing to hold a conference without advance concessions, Moscow carnot be expected to offer concessions before a conference is held.

That, presumably, makes Senator George's proposal appear realistic to the Europeans, even to the French whom he suggested leaving out. When Sir Wisston Churchill tried to get a meeting with the Russians last year he wanted, he told Parliament last week, "a friendly meeting with no agenda, no objective but of living side by side in growing confidence, easement and prosperity." Now Senator George has made it seem more likely that the United States would go to an inimmate, informal kind of meeting.

In Washington, the question to answer would seem to be whether it is safer to hold no conference at all, by insisting on conditions that aren't going to be met; or to risk a conference that fails, leaves dire disillusionment in its train; or to run the risk of that failure in the hope that a conference might actually accomplish something in the direction of peace. It is no easy choice.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Joseph Conrad once remarked:"What all men are really after is some form...or perhaps formula..for peace." That would meet certainly seem to be the case today. But even that goal is difficult to attain. For as my colleague, Elmer Davis has concluded:"We can go forward hopefully only if we build on the solid recognition that things are as they are and not as we should like to have them."

Good Night and Good Luck.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, March 23, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

ANNC'R: (C O M M E R C I A L)

And now, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: THIS IS THE NEWS:

President Eisenhower at his news conference today said he was hopeful that last week's release of the Yalta papers by the State Department would have no permanent adverse effects. Mr. Eisenhower said, too, that he could see no useful purpose in trying to pinpoint possible mistakes made ten years ago. Much of the President's talk with newsmen dealt with foreign affairs - and in a moment we'll hear some of his more pertinent comments.

Shortly after the news conference ended, General MacArthur issued a statement saying he had not been consulted about the Yalta conference, but if he had, the general said, he would have strongly recommended against bringing Russia into the war in the Pacific at such a late date. MacArthur said, in his opinion, it was fantastic to make such vital concessions to Russia for joining the war when she did. MacArthur added: "The collapse of Japan was clearly apparent several months before the Yalta meetings began."

But to get back to the President's news conference, portions of which we recorded.

(MORE)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, March 23, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... But to get back to the President's news conference, portions of which we recorded. One of the first questions Mr. Eisenhower was asked was how he felt about Senator George's proposal that after the Paris agreements are ratified we take the initiative in setting up a Big-Four conference at a chiefs-of-state level. The President said:

EISENHOWER: Of course, you open up a subject that is really involved. However, I have said time and again there's no place on this earth to which I would not travel, there is no chore I would not undertake if I had any faintest hope that, by so doing, I would promote the general cause of world peace.

Now, international meetings have a number of purposes, and one of them, let us not forget, is just sheer propaganda. Nevertheless, we must never abandon the hope that in some new conference some constructive step will be taken and start this weary world at last on a path that could lead hopefully and definitely toward a better agreement.

Now, I have, I believe, noted, and I think the State Department has, that at this time, while the Paris agreements are still unratified in certain countries, that it is best not to muddy the water, not to introduce any new subject. However, once that is done - and I'm not going to speak about the matter of initiative, I don't believe that that in itself is particularly important - but I do believe there's got to be new exploratory talks. I think they would be taken up at first on a different level from the chiefs of state. You must remember that in this country the Chief of State has a different constitutional and other types of duties than have chiefs of states in most other countries. The head of a government abroad is spared many of the duties and responsibilities that here fall upon the head of the state. So this meeting at the summit, which we so often hear about, is not so simple for us as it might be for some other countries.

So I believe that that out of the way, now from a position of strength, that is, moral and spiritual strength, very greatly enhanced thru this exhibition of unity, it is time to begin the kind of exploratory talks, probably would be, that might lead to something constructive.

Now, I have used as examples in the past the kind of thing I would regard as deeds that would show the good faith of Russia. I have never meant and never intimated that those deeds would be limited to the examples I gave. In a dozen different ways this might be done. And I repeat that this Government, as long as I'm the head of it, is never going to be backward in seizing upon any kind of opportunity that will apparently advance this cause.

BARKER: Clifton Barker (?) of the Washington Post.

Mr. President, to go back to the high-level conference, Senator George's position, as I understand it, is this - that he would not require the Russians to meet any particular conditions; that is, he would not require that they show their earnestness with deeds rather than words. Now, I don't understand that to be your position, Mr. President, and I'm trying to find whether there is a real difference.

EISENHOWER: Well, there may be. I don't deny that every individual that approaches these problems has his own detailed solution for them. I merely want to say that I am seeking an honorable peace and trying to create confidence among the peoples of the free world, and not just bouncing around to do nothing.

Now, there is this one thing, the argument on the other side: there have been at least two changes within the last couple of years in the personnel of the ruling group in the Kremlin. And, consequently, you have at least the element of, let's say, faint hope that new individuals may be different from the old ones, that may make some exploratory talks very valuable. And as long as we are differentiating between a final big so-called meeting at the summit and exploratory talks, well, exploratory talks, I could make a lot of concessions to have that carried out.

RIDDER: Mr. President, Walter Ridder of the Ridder Magazines.

Do you believe, sir, that the release of the Yalta documents might cramp styles in future conferences?

EISENHOWER: Well, I would hope not. Among allies, gentlemen -- I want to call your attention to this one fact -- good faith is involved. So that, while I earnestly believe that all documents should be published, and not attempting to pin or assess blame for success and failure, but I believe when the good faith with an ally is involved, we want to be exceedingly careful. And, moreover, I think such documents should be confined in general to those things that are of political and military significance. Casual conversation, I think, should not be included. I would hope that our country would never be legitimately charged with bad faith, and in that particular case I think it wasn't. They had been, I believe, in communication with our allies for a long time about it. However, there was some difference of opinion.

Now, in this matter -- let me repeat -- there's nothing, as I can see, to be gained by going back ten years and showing that, in the light of after-events, that someone may have been wrong or someone may have been right. People that are so sure that we could do this, forget one thing: You can never recapture the atmosphere of war. You have the great advantage of events. If we believe these people acted for what they thought was the best good of the cause for which they were fighting, of their country, well, then let us take and lay the thing out dispassionately, so that we, in our turn, may profit from their mistakes. But don't let's try to just damage reputations by such means.

MURROW: Turning to domestic matters, the President said that he regards his program to lower tariffs and encourage more foreign trade as one of the most critical issues before the American people today ...

(More)

~~-30-~~

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

... before the American people today. He added, he intends to do all he can to push it thru the Senate, despite some obvious opposition. The legislation has already passed the House.

As for reports that we or the British are attempting to negotiate a cease-fire on Formosa, the President said he knows nothing of this. But Roy Howard, President of the New York World Telegram, in an interview with Generalissimo Chiang says the leader of the Chinese Nationalists told him, whether we help or not, he will order the defense of the Quemoy and Matsu Islands. Howard says Chiang told him the die is cast; Nationalist China will stake her future on all-out defense of these islands.

The French Senate today began its debate on ratification of the Paris treaties, the effect of which would bring Germany into the Western defense alliance. This represents the last obstacle to the rearming of Germany. And, despite some rather heated words, a favorable vote is now expected before the week end.

In Britain the head of the Labor party, Clement Attlee, indicated that he would not press an earlier decision to throw Aneurin Bevan out of the Socialist party for defying his leadership but only if Bevan promises to say in line in the future. Mr. Bevan has yet to be heard from.

The Senate committee looking once again into the promotion of Army dentist Major Peress had reenacted a familiar scene. Senator McCarthy, who had blamed Peress' commanding officer, General Zwicker, for the move at the previous investigation, again shouted that Zwicker was unfit to wear his uniform. This came after General Zwicker said he didn't regard the Senator's first comment about his uniform as funny.

Bernard Baruch, who in another era made a fortune in Wall Street, told the Senate Banking Committee no one knows if stock market prices are too high today. Mr. Baruch said, "Given an effective shield of defense, we can build an economy which can continue to support the freedoms we cherish. By replacing the fear of inflation with the confidence of stability, we can stand guard as long as may be needed, even while preserving for our children and their children the opportunity to better themselves thru their own strivings."

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported no change in the cost of living in February as compared with the previous month. It did note, however, that buying power in February reached a record high.

At Yucca Flat, Nevada, we set off today an underground atomic explosion, the first such test in this country since 1951. Today's shot was the seventh of the current series and the second in the past two days.

Italian Premier Scelba, about to set off for a visit to this country, received a significant vote of confidence from the Chamber of Deputies today. His coalition government was given permission to negotiate Italian oil concessions for more American economic aid. This, over strong Communist and Socialist protests.

A Senate and House conference committee met for an hour today but could reach no agreement on what to do about that twenty-dollar-a-person tax cut voted by the House and later turned down by the Senate. And the Senate has agreed to the sale to private industry of 24 Government-owned synthetic rubber plants built during World War II.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the WORD FOR TODAY. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: (C O M M E R C I A L)

That's my word for today - and here's Mr. Murrow with his WORD FOR TODAY.

MURROW: What President Eisenhower had to say about going back into history reminded me of something that Scotsman John Buchan once said: "I have small patience with the antiquarian habit which magnifies the past and belittles (sic) the president. Change is inevitable - at once a penalty and a privilege."

Good Night and Good Luck! (C O M M E R C I A L)

ANNC'R: This is the CBS RADIO NETWORK.

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 23, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Eisenhower at his news conference today said he was hopeful that last week's release of the Yalta papers by the State Department would have no permanent adverse effects. Mr. Eisenhower said, too, that he could see no useful purpose in trying to pinpoint possible mistakes made ten years ago. Much of the President's talk with newsmen dealt with foreign affairs - and in a moment we'll hear some of his more pertinent comments.

Shortly after the news conference ended, General MacArthur issued a statement saying he had not been consulted about the Yalta conference, but if he had, the general said, he woudd have strongly recommended against bringing Russia into the war in the Pacific at such a late date. MacArthur said, in his opinion, it was fantastic to make such vital concessions to Russia for joining the war when she did. Mac Arthur added: "The collapse of Japan was clearly apparent several months before the Yalta meetings began."

But to get back to the President's news conference, portions of which we recorded. One of the first questions Mr. Eisenhower was asked was how he felt about Senator George's proposal that after the Paris agreements are ratified we take the initiative an setting up a Big-Four Conference at a chiefs of state level. The President said.

EISENHOWER: Of course, you open up a subject that is really involved. However, I have said time and again there's no place in this earth to which I would not travel, there is no chore I would not undertake if I had any faintest hope that, by so doing, I would promote the general cause of world peace. Now, international meetings have a number of purposes, and one of them, let us not forget, is just sheer propaganda. Nevertheless, we must never abandon the hope that in some new conference some constructive step will be taken and start this weary world at least on a path that could lead hopefully and definitely toward a better agreement.

Now, I have, I believe, noted, and I think the State Department has, that at this time, while the Paris agreements are still unratified in certain countries, that it is best not to muddy the water, not to introduce any new subject. However, once that is done - and I'm not going to speak about the matter of initiative, I don't believe that that in itself is particularly important - but I do believe there's got to be new exploratory talks. I think they would be taken up at first on a different level from the chiefs of state. You must remember that in this country the Chief of State has different constitutional and other types of duties than have chiefs of states in other countries. The head of a government abroad is spared many of the duties and responsibilities that here fall upon the head of state. So this meeting at the summit, which we so often hear about, is not so simple for us as it might be for some other countries.

So I believe that with that out of the way, now from a position of strength, that is, moral and spiritual strength, very greatly enhanced through this exhibition of unity, it is time to begin the kind of exploratory talks, propably would be, that might lead to something co structive.

Now, I have used as examples in the past the kind of thing I would regard as deeds that would show the good faith of Russia. I have never meant and never intimated that those deeds would be limited to the examples I gave. In a dozen different ways this might be done. And I repeat that this overnment, as long as I'm the head of it, is never going to be backward in seizing upon any kind of opportunity that will apparently advance this cause.

BARKER: Clifton Barker of the Washington Post. Mr. President, to go back to the high level conference, Senator George's position, as I understand it, is this - that he would not require the Russians to meet any particular conditions; that is, he would not require that they show their earnestness with deeds rather than words. Now, I don't understand that to be your position, Mr. President, and I'm trying to find whether there is a real difference.

EISENHOWER: Well, there may be. I don't deny that every individull that approaches these problems has his own detailed solution for them. I merely want to say that I am seeking an honorable peace and trying to create condidence among the peoples of the free world, and not just bouncing around to do nothing.

Now, there is this one thing, the argument on the other side: there have been at least two changes within the last couple of years in the personnel of the ruling group in the Kremlin. And, consequently, you have at least the element of, let's say, faint hope that new individuals may be different from the old ones, that may make some exploratory talks very valuable. And as long as we are differentiating between a final big so-called meeting at the summit and exploratory talks, well, exploratory talks, I could make a lot of concessions to have that carried out.

RIDER: Mr. President, Walter Ridder of the Ridder Magazines. Do you believe, Sir, that the release of the Yalta documents might cramp styles in future conferences?

EISENHOWER: Well, I would hope not. Among allies, gentlemen -- I want to call your attehtion to this one fact -- good faith is involved. So that, while I earnestly believe that all documents should be published, and not attempting to pin or assess blame for success and failure, but I believe when the good faith with any ally is involved, we want to be exceedingly careful.

And, moreover, I think such documents should be confined in general to those things that are of political and military significance. Casual conversation, I think, should not be included. I would hope that our country would never be legitimately charged with bad faith, and in that particular case I think it wasn't. They had been, I believe, in communication with our allies for a long time about it. However, there was some difference of opinion.

Now, this matter -- let me repeat -- there's nothing, as I can see, to be gained by going back ten years and showing that, in the light of after-events that someone may have been wrong or someone may have been right. People that are so sure that we could do this, forget one thing: You can never recapture the atmosphere of war. You have the great advantage of events. If we believe these people acted for what they thought was the best good of the cause for which they were fighting, of their coungry, well, then let us take and lay the thing out dispassionately, so that we, in our turn, may profit from their mistakes. But don't let's try to just damage reputations by such means.

MURROW: Turning to domestic matters, the President said that he regards his program to lower tariffs and encourage more foreign trade as one of the most critical issues before the American people today. He added, he intends to do all he can to push it through the Senate, despite some obvious opposition. The legislation has already passed the House.

As for reports that we or the British are attempting to negotiate a cease-fire on Formosa, the President said he knows nothing of this. But Roy Howard, President of the New York World Telegram, in an interview with Generalissimo Chiang says the leader of the Chinese Nationalists told him, whether we help or not, he will order the defense of the Quemoy and Matsu Islands. Howard says Chiang told him the die is cast; Nationalist Chian will stake her future on all-out defense of these islands.

The French Senate today began its debate on ratification of the Paris Treaties, the effect of which would bring Germany into the Western defense alliance. This represents the last obstacle to the rearming of Germany . And, despite some other heated words, a favorable vote is now expected before the week end.

In Britain the head of the Labor party, Clement Attlee, indicated that he would not press an earlier decision to throw Aneruin Bevan out of the Socialist party for defying his leadership but only if Bevan promises to stay in line in the future. Mr. Bevan has yet to be heard from.

The Senate committee looking once again into the promotion of Army dentist Major Peress had reenacted a familiar scene. Senator McCarthy, who had blamed Peress' commanding officer, General Zwicker, for the move at the previous investigation, again shouted that Zwicker was unfit to wear his uniform. This came after General Zwicker said he didn't regard the Senator's first comment about his uniform as funny.

Bernard Baruch, who in another era made a fortune in Wall Street, told the Senate Banking Committee no one knows if stock market prices are too high today. Mr. Baruch said, "Given an effective shield of defense, we can build an economy which can continue to support the freedom we cherish. By replacing the fear of inflation with the confidence of stability, we can stand guard as long as may be needed, even while preserving for our childrenand their children the opportunity to better themselves through their own strivings."

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported no change in the cost of living in February as compared with the previous month. It did note, however, that buying power in power in February reached a record high.

At Yucca Flat, Nevada, we set off today an underground atomic explosion the first such test in this country since 1951. Today's shot was the seventh of the current series and the second in the past two days.

Italian Premier Scelba, about to set off for a visit to this country, received a significant vote of confidence from the Chamber of Deputies today. His coalition government was given permission to negotiate Italian oil concessions for more American economic aid. This, over a strong Communist and Socialist protests.

A Senate and House conference committee met for an hour today but could reach no agreement on what to do about that twenty-dollar-a-person tax cut voted by the House and later turned down by the Senate. And the Senate has agreed to the sale to private industry of 24 Government owned synthetic rubber plants built during World War II.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: What President Eisenhower had to say about going back into history reminded me of something that Scotsman John Buchnan once said: "I have small patiencewith the antiquarian habit which magnifies the past and belittles the present. Change is inevitable - at once a penalty and a privilege."

Good Night and Good Luck.

[redacted]

Due to operator cliff there has been an (interruption) on the interstate 9 m. Mr. till we are able to resume the control will pass the word a-

FILL

This is the news: Thursday March 24 1955

The Republican Senate leader - William Knowland - today indicated that on two major issues, he does not agree with the President. Mr. Eisenhower, at his news conference yesterday, said he saw no useful purpose in rehashing the past. Nonetheless, in the Senate today, Knowland put into the Record a list of International Agreements he said the Russians had broken. Some dated as far back as 1920. Knowland said he was doing this to suggest that "deeds, not words" are important in international diplomacy - particularly in weighing the advantages of a possible Big Four Meeting. (Yesterday, the President said that under certain circumstances such a future meeting might be worthwhile.) But today, Knowland said that a Big Four conference might actually lessen "the chance for peace." He reasoned unless there is a reasonable "meeting of minds in advance", major disagreements might break out. And Russia would then be able to "play one free nation off against another." Senator George, Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee said that he interperts the President's remarks yesterday as meaning that he favors a Big Four meeting if there is "reasonable hope of getting [illegible] done." I'd like to discuss this division of opinion at greater length in a few minutes.

In London, as an aftermath to the release of the Yalta papers eight days ago, Sir Winsten Churchill told the House of Commons: any suggestion in the Yalta release that Britain might ever give up the Crown Colony of Hong Kong is absurd. The House cheered.

General Gruenther, the commander of the Nato Armies, said in Washington today that the buildup of anti-communist military forces in Western Europe has made "tremendous progress". But that even with ratification of the Paris agreements it will probably be three or four years before West Germany is effectively armed. Gruenther said: the cold war may be a long one.

The Senate Investigations sub-committee, looking into the case once more of Army Dentist Irving Peress who was given an honorable discharge though classified as a "security risk", heard some "interesting" testimony. Army Secretary Stevens said: the honorable discharge should not have been granted...he once started looking into the possibility of reveking that discharge...and the Army should have given more consideration to Senator McCarthy's demand that Peress, instead of being honorably discharged, be court-martialed. The Counsaler to the Army, John Johnson Adams, told the Committee: had he known all the facts in the Peress case at the time of the discharge, Peress "undoubtedly would have been court-martialed"... he - Adams - "had the last clear chance to close the door on Peress and didn't"...he doesn't feel he should bear the "full responsibility" for what happened...and denied Senator McCarthy's contention that Adams and White House aides conspired to block McCarthy's investigation of Peress. With this testimony in, Sub-Committee Chairman McClellan said he would reopen the possibility of withdrawing Peress' honorable discharge and then starting court-martial proceedings against him.

In New York today, Paul V. McNutt, our former envoy to the Phillipines, and Director of Defense during World War Two, died at the age of 64. He had been ill for the past six months. McNutt, in addition to his wartime government activities, is a former commander of the American Legion and at one time -- in 1940 -- was a Democratic candidate for the Presidential nomination.

John W. Davis, another Democrat who WAS nominated for the Presidency back in 1924, also died today in Charleston, South Carolina. He was 81 years old. Davis, who was defeated by Coolidge in the national election, was one of the country's outstanding constitutional lawyers.

The Director of Civilian Defense - Val Petersen - said today that in the event this Country should be bombed, we could not at present completely evacuate our big cities because of "inadequate highways." Petersen said one quarter of our population is centered in and around 12 cities.

Edward R. Murrow, March 24, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

This what Mr. Murrow said in cable to us tonite:

I think it fair to say that President Eisenhower in his press conference yesterday did some verbal swaying and bending in dealing with the question of a Four Power conference. He wasn't dodging questions. But he was finding his way between words previously used on this question, so as to come out saying something different without appearing to be reversing policy. This occasionally has to be done, and it is never an easy feat.

The "something different" was in the evidence of good faith to be required of the Russians before such a conference could be held. Senator Knowland reported on Tuesday that the President did not favor a top level conference without evidence of good faith and recalled an earlier statement made by Mr. Eisenhower that good deeds were needed, like an Austrian treaty, free elections in Germany or unification of Korea. He as much as said that this was still the President's view.

It was this list of evidences of good faith which President Eisenhower amended and re-interpreted. He called them "just examples". He added another example, Soviet acceptance of his atoms for peace proposal. He said there "could be a dozen such examples." Now, the difference between a dozen examples and three very stiff conditions can be very great. And it is this difference that changes the Administration's position. The President moved closer to Senator George and some distance away from Senator Knowland. He didn't accept Senator George's thesis intact, for the Senator wanted a meeting of three heads of state without any conditions. The President said he wanted first a four power exploratory meeting at a lower level. The chiefs of state, he said, could be brought in if it was desirable to add solemnity or the promise of success. He also said that he himself would make a lot of concessions to have the exploratory talks succeed. He also repeated that he would go anywhere, and any chores whatever, if he had the faintest hope that, by so doing, he would promote the general cause of world peace. One sentence had the true Eisenhower flavor: "I merely want to say that I am seeking an honorable peace" he said, "and trying to create confidence among the peoples of the free world, and not just bouncing around to do nothing." He also said: "I am as sincerely bi-partisan and non-partisan (in this matter) as I know how to be." And that remark also moved him closer to Senator George.

One reason for the greater distance between the President and Senator Knowland lay with the Senator himself. He rejected Mr. Eisenhower's advice not to discuss the Yalta conference. There was nothing, he could see the President had said, to be gained by going back ten years and showing that in the light of after-events somebody may have been wrong or right. Senator Knowland is quoted as retorting that the President was expressing "his personal opinion." He added that he did not agree with him, and intended to discuss Yalta whenever he believed it was pertinent. This remark raises an unusual question. Can a President have a personal opinion, one which Senator Knowland can recognize as such and so disregard? And if it is true that the President's opinions ever can be personal, can they be other than official if stated in an official press conference? What Senator Knowland may have had in mind is that the Republican platform of '52 took a different line on Yalta from the President's. But it would be a novelty to suggest that whatever a president said that went beyond his party's three-year-old platform became personal and was not official.

It is not beside the point to recall a somewhat similar debate in England over past performances. A violent attack against Neville Chamberlain's appeasement policy broke out in Parliament soon after Mr. Churchill came to power. Mr. Churchill himself had been Chamberlain's most ardent critic. But he put a stop to the debate. He did it with a sentence that might be said to have universal application. "If we debate too much the past" he said, "we may lose the future."

Talk about a Big Four conference has been nebulous so far in Washington. Now the United Nations comes up with something specific. It is the possibility of a Big Four meeting, on a foreign minister level, at San Francisco in June, when the U.N. celebrates its tenth birthday. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold is inviting the sixty members to be represented by their foreign ministers. Secretary Dulles will be there, so will be the British and French foreign ministers. If Mr. Molotov attends, then the Big Four can sit down under U.N. auspices, even if they meet behind the scenes. This would reduce the difficulty about inviting the Chinese Communists, or of enlarging the conference by inviting the West Germans. The U.N. correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor says that India is behind the plan, and at first hoped for an informal meeting at San Francisco of heads of state or prime ministers. It found the United States wanted an exploratory conference first. Mr. Krishna Menon, Indian delegate to the U.N. is reported to have raised the possibility of exploratory talks at San Francisco with President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles, and to have found the response favorable.

President Eisenhower had as a White House visitor, Bernard M. Baruch. And he told Mr. Baurch to answer to his question: "Where's the squirrel ?" he - the President - had nothing to do with last week's White House program to rid the grounds of squirrels. There had been printed xxxxxxx stories that the squirrels were eating up the President's golf putting greens. But Mr. Eisenhower said he knew nothing of this till he read it in the papers.

The Atomic Energy C ommission has granted to two private companies xxx permission to explore the possibility of producing an atomic engine for railroad locomotives.

And the Russians today invited Austria's chancellor to come to Moscow to discuss details of an independence treaty for Austria.

WORD TO COME...PLS PHONE WHEN YOU GET THIS

aaron

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, March 24, 1955
7:45-8:00 p.m.

ANNOUNCER: ..... And here's Mr. Murrow with his WORD FOR TODAY.

MURROW: A few minutes ago we were discussing the matter of Presidents having personal opinions, but perhaps of more importance is something Oliver Wendell Holmes once noted: "With effervescing opinions, as with the not-yet-forgotten champagne, the quickest way to let them get flat is to let them get exposed to the air."

Goodnight and good luck!

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Republican Senate leader - William Knowland - today indicated that on two major issues, he does not agree with the President, Mr. Eisenhower, at his news conference yesterday, said he saw no useful purpose in rehashing the past. Nonetheless, in the Senate today, Knowland put into the Record a list of International Agreements he said the Russians had broken. Some dated back as far as 1920. Knowland said he was doing this to suggest that "deeds, not words" are important in international diplomacy - particularly in weighing the advantages of a possible Big Four Meeting. (Yesterday, the President said that under certain circumstances sucy a future meeting might be worthwhile. But today, Knowland said that a Big Four conference might actually lessen "the chance for peace". He reasoned unless there is a reasonable "meeting of minds in advance", major disagreements might break out. And Russia would then be able to "play one free nation off against another." I'd like to discuss this division of opinion at greathr length in a few moments.

In London, as an aftermath to the release of the Yalta papers eight days ago, Sir Winston Churchill told the House of Commons: any suggestion in the Yalta releast that Britain might ever give up the Crown Colony of Hong Kong is absurd. The House cheered General Grunther, the commander of the Nato Armies, said in Washington today that the buildup of anto-Communist military forces in Western Europe has made "tremendous progress." But that even with ratification of the Paris agreements it will probably be three or four years before West Germany is effectively armed. Grunther said: the cold war may be a long one.

The Senate Investigating sub-committee, looking into the case once more of Army Dentist Irving Peress who was given an honorable discharge though classified as a "security risk", heard some "interesting" testimony. Army Secretary Stevens said: the honorable discharge should not have been granted...he once started looking into the possibility of revoking that discharge... and the Army should have given more consideration to Senator McCarthy's demand that Peress, instead of being honorably discharged, be court -martialed. The Counsellor to the Army, John Adams, told the Committee: had he known all the facts in the Peress case at the time of the discharge, Peress "undoubtedly would have been court-martialed",..he- Adams - "had the last clear chance to close the door on Presss and didn't",..he doesn't feel he should bear the "full responsibility" for what happened..and denied Senator McCarthy's contention that Adams and White House aides conspired to block McCarthy's investigation of Peress. With this testimony in, Sub-Committee Chairman McClellan said he would reopen the possibility of withdrawing Peress' honorable discharge and then starting court-martial proceedings against him.

In New York today, Paul V. McNutt, our former envoy to the Phillipines, and Director of Defense during World War Two, died at the age of 64. He had been ill for the past six months. McNutt, inaddition to his wartime government activities, is a former commander of the American Legion and at one time-- in 1940 -- was a Democratic candidate for the Presidential nomination.

John W. Davis, another Democrat who was nominated for the Presidency back in 1924, also died today in Charleston, South Carolina. He was 81 years old. Davis, who was defeated by Coolidge in the national election, was one of the country's outstanding consiitutional lawyers.

The Director of Cifilian Defense - Val Petersen - said today that in the event this country should be bombed, we could not at present completely evacuate our big cities becuuse of "inadequate highways." Petersen said one quarter of our population is centered in and around 12 cities.

I think it fair to say that President Eisenhower in his press conference yesterday did some verbal swaying and bending in dealing with the question of a Four Power conference. He wasn't dodging questions. But he was finding his way between words previously used on this question, so as to come out saying something different without appearing to be reversing policy. This occasionally has to be done, and it is never an easy feat.

The "something different" was in the evidence of good faith to be required of the Russians before such a conference could be held. Senator Knowland reported on Tuesday that the President did not favor a top level conference without evidence of good faith and recalled an earlier statement made by Mr. Eisenhower that good deeds were needed, line an Austrian treaty, free elections in Germany or unification of Korea. He as much as said that this was still the President's view.

It was this list of evidences of good faith which President Eisenhower amended and re-interpreted. He called them "just examples." He added another example, Soviet acceptance of his atoms for peace proposal. He said there "could be a dozen such examples." Now, the difference between a dozen examples and three very stiff conditions can be very great. And it is this difference that changes the Administration's position. The President moved closer to Senator George and some distance away from Senator Knowland. He didn't accept Senator George's thesis in tact , for the Senator wanted a meeting of three heads of state without any conditions. The President said he wanted first a four power exploratory meeting at a lower level. The chiefs of state, he said, could be brought in if it was desireable to add somemnity or the promise of success. He also said that he himself would make a lot of concessions to have the exploratory talks succeed. He also repeated that he would go anywhere, and any Chores whatever, if he had the faintest hope that by so doing, he would promote the general cause of world peace. One sentence had the true Eisenhower flavor: "I merely want to say that I am seeking an honorable peace" he said, "and trying to create confidence among the peoples of the free world, and not just bouncing around to do nothing." He also said: "I am as sincerely bi-partisan and non-partisan (in this matter) as I know how to be." And that remark also moved him closer to Senator George.

One reason for the greater distance between the President and Senator Knowland lay with the Senator himself. Hr rejected Mr. Eisenhower's advice not to discuss the Yalta conference. There was nothing, he could see the President had said, to be gained by going back ten years and showing that in the light of after-events somebody may have been wrong or right. Senator Knowland is quoted as retorting that the Preside t was expressing "his personal opinion." He added that he did not agree with him, and intended to discuss Yalta whenever he believed it was pertinent. This remark raises an unusual question. Can a President have a personal opinion, one which Senator Knowland can recognize as such and so disregard? And if it is true that the President's opinions ever can pe personal, can they be other than official if stated in an official press conference? What Senator Knowland may have had in mind is that the Republican platform of '52 took a different line on Yalta from the President's. But it would be a novelty to suggest that whatever a president said that went beyond his party's three-year-old platform became personal and was not official.

It is not beside the point to recall a somewhat similar debate in England over past performances. A violent attack against Neville Chamberlain's appeasement policy broke out in Parliament soon after Mr. Churchill came to power. Mr. Churchill himself had been Chamberalin's most ardent critic. But he put a stop to the debate. He did it with a sentence that might be said to have universal application. " If we debate too much from the past" he asid, "we may lose the future."

Talk about a Big Four conference has been nebulous so far in Washington. Now the United Nations comes up with something specific. It is the possibility of a Big Four Meeting, on a foreign minister level, at San Francisco in June, when the U.N. celebrates its tenth birthday. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold is inviting the sixty members to be represented by their foreign ministers. Secretary Dulles will be there, so will the British and French foreign ministers. If Mr. Molotov attends, then the Big Four can sit down under U.N. auspices, even if they meet behind the scenes. This would reduce the difficulty about inviting the Chinese Communists, or of enlarging the conference by inviting the West Germans. The U.N. correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor says that India is behind the plan and at first hoped for an informal meeting at San Francisco of heads of state or prime ministers. It found the United States wanted an exploratory conference first. Mr. Krishna Menon, Indian delegate to the U.N. is reported to have raised the possibility of exploratory talks at San Francisco with President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles, and to have found the response favorable.

President Eisenhower had as a White House visitor, Bernard M. Baruch. And he told Mr. Baruch to answer to his question:"Where's the squirrel?" he-the President - had nothing to do with last week's White House program to rid the grounds of squirrels. There had been printed stories that the squirrels were eating pp the President's golf putting greens. But Mr. Eisenhower said he knew nothing of this till he read it in the papers.

The Atomic Energy Commission has granted to two private companies permission to explore the possibility of producing an atomic engine for railroad locomotives.

And the Russians today invited Austria's chancellor to come to Moscow to discuss details of an independence treaty for Austria.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: A few minutes ago we were discussing the matter of President's having personal opinions, but perhaps of more importance is something Oliver Wendell Holmes once noted: "With effervescing opinions, as with the not-yet-forgotten champagne, the quickest way to let them go flat is to let them get exposed to the air."

Goodnight and Good Luck.

Friday, March 25, 1955

This is the news.

On the heels of the latest Russian proposal on disarmament, the Western powers took Andrei Gromyko to task today for leaking details of the disarmament conference to the Russian press. They accused him of grossly distorting THE details. I'll have more to say (ABOUT THIS) later.

In Paris, the French Senate is getting close to a vote on the treaties to rearm West Germany. Debate on the matter is about over and the vote is expected tomorrow.

Foreign Minister Antoine Pinay spoke out strongly for ratification of the treaties---told members of the Senate "don't be behind in the diplomatic times." He warned that the treaties must be ratified to save the Atlantic Alliance and the honor of France---that failure to do so would be falling into the Russian trap. The Russians, he said, have made German re-armament their implement for dislocating the Western solidarity.

Further precautionary measures have been taken in Belgium, where Roman Catholics have threatened large-scale demonstrations for tomorrow. They are protesting the government's cut in subsidies for Catholic schools. The Catholics claim that the move is designed to freeze out church schools, but the government says it is (merely) trying to correct alleged abuses by the previous administration on the matter of subsidies.

At the United Nations, Israel has filed a vigorous complaint, charging that a band of armed Egyptians attacked an Israeli wedding party last night, killing one and wounding eighteen. Israel claims that the attack looked like a well-planned military operation. The UN's truce supervisory commission is investigating.

There are conflicting reports on the meaning of the Atomic Energy Commission's latest test explosion at the Nevada testing grounds today. The Commission announced that it was a non-atomic charge, and that the test involves military studies by the Army and Air Force.

There is some speculation that it was meant to test the ability of TNT to break up the mushroom cloud of an A-bomb. Other observers think it was an air-to-air guided missile that could be set off among high-flying bomber squadrons which would be destroyed by nuclear blasts covering more than two-miles of sky with a fireball.

The Defense Department is inviting 30-senior military officers of North Atlantic Treaty nations to observe the public atomic weapons test in Nevada next month. It will be the first time since the 1946 experiments at Bikini that foreign observers have been invited to attend. The Russians were present at the Bikini tests.

Congressional action today centered around the tax bill and federal pay. On the tax bill, House Democrats gave up in their efforts to push through a personal income tax cut for next year. They gave up in the Senate-House conference committee, and the committee approved the administration bill to continue present corporation income and excise tax rates for one more year. The Senate then passed the bill and sent it to the House for final action.

The administration didn't fare so well on the postal pay bill. The Senate, ignoring the possibility of a Presidential veto, voted to give 500-thousand postal workers and a million other Civil Service workers a ten-percent pay raise. President Eisenhower has voiced strong opposition to a pay increase of that size. He favors a six-percent raise for the Civil Service and 7½-percent for the Postal workers.

But the Senate rejected that 7½-percent proposal in favor of the 10-percent figure.

A Presidential board has recommended an overhaul of the wage rate structure on the nation's railroads. It says there are inequities and out-of-date features, and calls for a commission to modernize the pay structure of the men who run the trains. The recommendation deals specifically with such operating employes as engineers, conductors and trainmen.

President Eisenhower had created the board in order to head off a threatened strike over demands of conductors and brakemen.

The Senate investigating subcommittee HAS voted to end its latest hearing on the case of former Major Peress, but the issue is not closed. The Senators voted to turn over THE testimony to the Justice Department to find out whether anybody should be prosecuted for perjury. They also recommended that the Department "further pursue" the question of whether Peress violated the law.

However, Chairman McClellan has agreed to Senator McCarthy's request that two of his former aides be called next week to testify on a purported phone conversation between General Zwicker and one of the aides, George Anastos. Last September, Anastos testified that General Zwicker told him in a telephone conversation in January, 1954, that Peress was or had been a Communist. That testimony was inserted into the hearing record this week and Zwicker denied, under oath, that he had given Anastos such information. Now the subcommittee will hear from Anastos and from Mary Morrill---another former McCarthy aide---who is said to have listened in on that Zwicker-Anastos conversation.

Edward R. Murrow: March 25, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

A new Soviet proposal has been introduced in the secret disarmament talks in London, and then leaked to the world by Moscow. At the same time the Kremlin has invited Chancellor Raab of Austria to visit Moscow, to discuss matters affecting the long-delayed Austrian treaty. These two moves conceivably can be coupled together. At any rate they are moves on the chessboard of world rivalry, and they are not of pawns. Anyone who wanted to shut his eyes and hope hard, might find in them indications that the Soviet government wants a four power conference, and is trying to meet President Eisenhower's terms for holding it.

These moves on examination turn out to be maneuvers first of all, and then offer no concessions of any great substance. They do show some slight shifts in the Soviet position in the direction of an understanding, and an analysis of them does not eliminate all hope for a more conciliatory Soviet attitude. The Kremlin, at any rate, is trying to create a more favorable impression.

The disarmament proposal was made in the U.N. sub-committee talks, and it is another application of the Kremlin's art, of turning friendliness off and on at will. Last year the Soviet delegation kept the disarmament talks deadlocked for months by insisting on the outlawry of atomic weapons, before discussing the limitation of other arms. Then all of a sudden, the Soviet government made a swift about-face, and accepted a Franco-British proposal, as a basis for further discussion. This was one that permitted nuclear weapons to be retained, if used only to resist aggression. The Soviet delegation then introduced a plan calling for international atomic inspection which however turned out to be little more than control by the Security Council, with the veto in force. But the Kremlin backed the resolution calling for continuation of the disarmament talks, and ended the year putting up a more friendly appearance to the world.

But when the talks were resumed in London in February, Mr. Gromyko snapped back to the original Soviet stand, and insisted that atomic weapons had to be banned and destroyed, before a cut in other armaments was completed. That produced a spell of unfriendliness. The proposal this week is another about-face, and put the Russians back in about the same position they occupied at the end of last year. Only one slight advance is reported, the Russians are willing that international inspectors should be stationed permanently in the countries involved. This was never conceded before. But control would remain with the Security Council, subject to the veto.

It is, of course, an old Soviet trick to make everybody mad by balky conduct, and then make everybody feel better by behaving better. That is what the new disarmament gesture amounts to. Even so, the Kremlin wants people to feel better, and that may be something. But it cannot be very much, for there is a catch in the new proposal that gives the game away, if it can be called a game. The Soviet insists that there can be no agreement on control of nuclear weapons, and on other arms limitations, if Germany is re-armed. The quota of armed strength assigned to each nation, from which reductions are to be made, is to be based on the strength as of last year, before Germany was armed.

By leaking the proposal, the Kremlin violated the secrecy of the negotiation, and the agreement that the talks were not to be exploited for purposes of propaganda. Now some of the western members of the committee are considering publication of reports of things said in secret which will counteract the Kremlin's propaganda.

Now for a look at the invitation to the Austrian chancellor. That too shows little tangible change in Soviet policy. What change there is is mostly in an appearance of greater friendliness. The Soviet position has been that no Austrian treaty can be completed until a settlement of the German issue has been reached. A German settlement still is not in sight, yet the Kremlin is talking with Austria, and that may or may not mean a change in Soviet timing. It should be noted that Mr. Molotov in his high policy speech of February 8th said that an Austrian treaty must wait till after a German settlement.

A slight change in Soviet policy may be seen in the Kremlin note to Vienna saying that a date should be set for withdrawing all foreign troops from Austria. Until now the Kremlin has wanted to keep its troops there indefinitely. The note discloses that Mr. Raab will be asked to announce that Austria will not join any military alliance with the West or permit Austrian soil to be used for foreign bases. Austria has said this already, but not forcibly enough to suit the Kremlin. It is not in the treaty draft, and the Western Powers have refused to put it in. Presumably they will continue to refuse.

One Soviet demand mentioned in the note will be easy to meet. It is a guarantee against another German Anschluss. That already is in the draft of the treaty. But it is not for Mr. Raab and Mr. Molotov to clinch the treaty. It still has to be agreed to by a four-power conference.

Even so, the invitation to Austria, like the disarmament proposal, brings a little better weather, even if no more can be said for it.

Russia's friendly gestures toward Austria would seem to suggest that the Soviet Union still regards Germany as a threat to world peace. In this, Russia is not alone. For, as Publilius Syrus once remarked: "He must fear many whom many fear." But it was James Hall who pointed out something more significant: "The thing that numbs the heart, he said, is that men cannot devise some scheme of life to banish fear."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 25, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

On the heels of the latest Russian proposal on disarmament, the Western powers took Andrei Gromyko to task today for leaking details of the disarmament conference to the Russian press. They accused him of grossly distorting the details. I'll have more to say about this later.

In Paris, the French Senate is getting close to a vote on the treaties to rearm West Germany. Debate on the matter is about over and the vote is espected tomorrow.

Foreign Minister Antoine Pinay spoke out strongly for ratification of the treaties ---told members of the Senate:"don't be behind in the diplomatic times." He warned that the treaties must be ratified to save the Atlantic Alliance and hte honor of France --that failure to do so would be falling into the Russian trap. Rhe Russians, he said, have made German re-armament their implement for dislocating the Western solidarity.

Further precuationary measures have been taken in Belgium, where Roman Catholics have threatened large-scale demonstrations for tomorrow. They are protesting the government's cut in subsidies for Catholic schools. The Catholics claim that the move is designed to freeze out church schools, but the government says it is merely trying to correct alleged abuses by the previous administration on the matter of subsidies.

At the United Nations, Israel has filed a vigorous complaint, charging that a band of armed Egyptians attacked an Israeli wedding party last night killing one and wounding eithteen. Israel claims that the attack looked like a well-llanned military operation, The UN's truce supervisory commission is investigating.

There are conflicting reports on the meaning of the Atomic Energy Commission's latest test explosion at the Nevada testing grounds today. The Commission announced that it was a non-atomic charge and that the test involves military studies by the Army and Air Force.

There is some speculation that it was meant to test the ability of TNT to break up the mushroom cloud of an A-bomb. Other observers think it was an air-to-air guided missile that could be set off among high-flying bomber squadrons which would be destroyed by nuclear blasts covering more than two miles of sky with a fireball.

The Defense Department is inviting 30-senior military officers of the North Atlantic Treaty nations to observe the public atomic weapons test in Nevada next month. It will be the first time since the 1946 experiments at Bikini that foreign observers have been invited to attend. The Russians were present at the Bikini tests.

Congressional action today centered around the tax bill and federal pay. On the tax bill, House Democrats have up in their efforts to push through a personal income tax cut for next year. They gave up in the Senate-House conference committee, and the committee approved the administration bill to continue present corporation income and excise tax rates for one more year. The Senate then passed the bill and sent it to the House for final action.

The administration didn'f fare so well on the postal pay bill. The Senate, ignoring the possibility of a Presidential veto, voted to give 500-thousand postal workers and a million other Civil Service workers a ten- per cent pay raise. President Eisenhower had voiced strong opposition to a pay increase of that size. He favors a six-per-cent raise for the Civil Service and 7½ percent for the Postal workers.

But the Senate rejected that 7½ percent proposal in favor of the 10 percent figure.

A Presidential board has recommended an overhaul of the wage rate structure on the nation's railroads. It says there are inequiites and out-of-date features, and calls for a commission to modernize the pay structure of the men who run the trains. The recommendation deals specifically with such operating employees as engineers, conductors and trainmen.

President Eisenhower had created the board in order to head off a threatened strike over demands of conductors and brakemen.

The Senate investigating subcommittee has voted to end its latest hearing on the case of former Major Peress, but the issue is not closed. The Senators voted to turn over the testimony to the Justice Department to find out whether anybody should be prosecuted for perjury. They also recommended that the Department "further pursue the question of whether Prress violated the law.

However, Chairman McClellan has agreed to Senator McCarthy's request that two of his former aides be called next week to testify on a purported phone conversation between General Zwicker and one of the aides, George Anastos. Last September, Anastos testified that General Zwicker told him in a telephone conversation in January, 1954, that Peress was, or had been, a Communist. That testimony was inserted into the hearing record this week and Zwicker denied and under oath, that he had given Anastos such information. Now the subcommittee will hear from Anastos and from Mary Morrill --another former McCarthy aide -- who is said to have listened in on that Zwicker -Anastos conversation.

A new Soviet propsal has been introduced in the secret disarmement talks in London, and then leaked to the world by Moscow. At the same time the Kremlin has invited Chancellor Raab of Austria to visit Moscow, to discuss matters affecting the long-delayed Austrian treaty. There two moves conceivably can be coupled together. At any rate they are moves on the chess-board or world rivalry, and they are not of pawns. Anyone who wanted to shut his eyes and hope hard, might find in them indications that the Soviet government wants a four power conference, and is trying to meet President Eisenhower's terms for holding it.

These moves on examination turn out to be maneuvers first of all, and then offer no concessions of any great substance. They do show some slight shifts in the Soviet position in the direction of an understanding, and an analysis of them does not eiliminate all hope for a more conciliatory Soviet attitude. The Kremlin, at any rate, is trying to create a more favorable impression.

The disarmement proposal was made in the U.N. sub-committee talks, and it is another application of the Kremlin's art, of turning friendliness off and on at will. Last year the Soviet delegation kept the disarmament talks deadlocked for months by insisting on the outlawry of atomic weapons, before discussing the limitation of other arms. Then all of a sudden, the Soviet government made a swift about-face, and accepted a Franco-British proposal, as a basis for further discussion. This was one that permitted nuclear weapons to be retained, if used only to resist aggression. The Soviet delegation then introduced a plan calling for international atomic inspection which however turned out to be little more than control by the Security Council, with a veto in force. But the Kremlin backed the resolution calling for continuation of the disarmament talks, and ended the year putting up a more friendly appearance to the world.

But when the talks were resumed in London in February, Mr. Gromyko snapped back to the original Soviet stand, and insisted that atomic weapons had to be banned and destroyed, before a cut in other armaments was completed. That produced a spell of unfriendliness.

The proposal this week is another about-face, and put the Russians back in about the same position they occupied at the end of last year. Only one slight advance is reported, the Russians are willing that international inspectors should be stationed permanently in the countries involved. This was never conceded before. But control would remain with the Security Council, subject to the veto.

It is, of course, an old Soviet trick to make everybody mad by balky conduct, and then make everybody feel better by behaving better. That is what the new disarmament gesture amounts to. Even so, the Kremlin wants people to feel better, and that may be something. But it cannot be very much, for there is a catch in the new proposal that gives the game away, if it can be called a game. The Soviet insists that there can be no agreement on control of nuclear weapons, and on other arms limitations, if Germany is re-armed. The quota of armed strength assigned to each nation, from which reductions are to be made, is to be based on the strength as of last year, before Germany was armed.

By leaking the proposal, the Kremlin violated the secrecy of the negotiation, and the agreement that the talks were not to be exploited for purposes of propaganda. Now some of the western members of the committee are considering publication of reports of things said in secret which will counteract the Kremlin's propaganda.

Now for a look at the invitation to the Austrian chancellor. That too shows little tangible change in Soviet policy. What change there is is mostly in an appearance of greater friendliness. The Soviet position has been that no Austrian treaty can be completed until a settlement of the German issue has been reached. A German settlement still is not in sight, yet the Kremlin is talking with Austria, and that may or may not mean a change in Soviet timing. It should be noted that Mr. Molotov in his high policy speech of February 8th said that an Austrian treaty must wait till after a German settlement.

A slight change in Soviet policy may be seen in the Kremlin note to Vienna saying that a date should be set for withdrawing all foreign troops from Austria. Until now the Kremlin has wanted to keep its troops there indefinitely. The note discloses that Mr. Raab will be asked to announce that Austria will not join any military alliance with the west or permit Austrian soil to be used for foreign bases. Austria has said this already, but not forcibly enough to suit the Kremlin. It is not in the treaty draft, and the Westenn Powers have refused to put it in. Presumably they will continue to refuse.

One Soviet demand mentioned in the note will be easy to meet. It is a guarantee against another German Anschuuss. That already is in the draft of the treaty. But it is not for Mr. Raab and Mr. Molotov to clinch the treaty. It still has to be agreee to by a four-power conference. Even so, the invitation to Austria, like the disarmament proposal, brings a little better weather, even if no more can be said for it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a Moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Russia's friendly gesture toward Austria could seem to suggest that the Soviet Union still regards Germany as a threat to world peace. In this, Russia is not alone. For as Publius Syrus once remarked: "He must fear many whom many fear." But it was James Hall who pointed out something more significant: "The thing that numbs the heart," he said, "is that men cannot devise some scheme of life to banish fear."

Good Night and Good Luck."

Monday, March 28, 1955

This is the news:

Chiang Kai Shek today again predicted that "in the near future" the Chinese Nationalist flag will fly over the Chinese mainland. And "qualified quarters" on Formosa say they know of nothing to indicate that a big Communist attack on the Matsu islands is near. These sources..who cannot be named...insist that the Communists need much more time to build up for an attack on the islands 100 miles northwest of Formosa.

(I'd like to discuss the Chinese situation in a few minutes.)

The State Department announced today that we are now engaged with the British and French in "quite active consultations" on the question of a Big Four meeting with the Russians. In Washington, London and Paris "top level discussions" are going on through regular diplomatic channels. Obviously this is the result of both the French ratification of agreements to re-arm western Germany and Soviet Premier Bulganin's "positive attitude" toward Prsident Eisenhower's stand on a big power meeting.

In the Senate today, Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas told his colleagues that the Democrats "don't want a war party to emerge in the United States any more than they want an appeasement party." Repub lican Leader Knowland answered: "There is no war party and no war faction." But he said this country should not give way before the Chinese Communist effort to seize Formosa. He said: "The road to appeasement is not the road to peace." Yesterday, Knowland urged that we risk a world war if necessary to defend the Nationalist islands of Quemoy and Matsu. Today, Senator Johnson said that he is optomistic that a positive program on international affairs can be worked out at White House meetings with members of Congress later this week.

British Foreign Secretary Eden CONFIRMED in the House of Commons, the fact that discussions are going on with the United States and France. He indicated that the British are looking for a foreign ministers meeting to discuss: the future of Germany AND Austria...a program for world disarmament and an East-West security system to banish fears of another world war.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer said today that the re-armament of his country will "change the world political situation and cause Soviet leaders to review their present policy."

And the three big western powers--the United States, Great Britain and France--today called on the United Nations to condemn Isreal...

for causing the Gaza incident in which 38 Egyptians and 8 Isrealis were killed last month.

In Washington, the President met today with Italian Premier Scleba. They say they reviewed "the general problems of East-West relations as they affect the peace and security of the world."

John Marshal Harlan today took an oath to "administer justice without respect to persons, and do equal right to the poor and to the rich." With that--he became the 9th member of the Supreme Court. Then the court, by [redacted] unanimous vote [redacted], upheld the right of states to ban the advertising of eyeglasses in any manner.

A House committee, after ten weeks of hearings and study, today approved a major part of the Prsident's military reserve program. The committee approved the creation of a volunteer force of between 100-thousand and 250-thousand young men who would take six months of actuve training and then serve an additional seven and a half years in the reserves.

The C.I.O. auto workers, meeting in Cleveland, have started consideration of a plan to triple the dues of its members...from $2.50 to $7.50 a month...to raise 25-million dollars for a strike fund.

And the auto workers heard Democratic Senator Neely of West Virginia attack President Eisenhower as one who "just doesn't know what its all about." Neely said the country needs a President "who won't spend more than half his time playing golf and fishing." He said: "This is not the time for a President who can keep his eye on a golf ball, but for one who can keep the country from behind the eight ball." Neely said the President "may be the first in war, he also has been first in confusion." White House News Secretary Hagerty told reporters the President has not yet seen Neely's attack. But Hagerty said "I don't think anybody in the United States believes it." He called the attention of reporters an an old adage: "What Peter says about Paul, tells more about Peter than it does Paul."

The White House says that Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd will lead a new expedition to the Antarctic next November. Admiral Byrd was the officer-in-charge on the last full-fledged Navy antarctic expedition in 1946.

The House today for the third straight year voted to give the Department of Agriculture more money for farm programs that the President requested: 100-million dollars more.

Edward R. Murrow: March 28, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The Formosa crisis has reached a state where decisions of exceptional gravity are to be made in Washington, probably this week. From high Pentagon sources comes word that the build-up opposite the Quemoy and Matsu Islands, is proceeding at a rate that makes a Communist assault probable by the middle of April. The information is stated to be based on intelligence reports. But it also should be recorded, that Carl Rankin, United States Ambassador to Nationalist China, today authorized Bob Pierpoint, CBS correspondent, to say: "I am not aware of any fundamental change in the local situation in recent weeks. The reports of military build-ups by the Communists have, perhaps, been exaggerated, since they relate to a gradual build-up which started over a year ago."

So it is not clear whether the crisis as seen in Washington, and the big decisions now being reached, are developments to be expected from a year-old danger, or are due to unexpected actions by the Communists. The newsmen in Washington write as though unexpected action has made this a black week in the capital. Yet nothing unexpected has come to the notice of Ambassador Rankin.

Let me hasten to say that either kind of crisis is grave. But one kind points to war with Communist China in about three weeks. The other points to a danger that is only somewhat nearer than it has been for months. Obviously, if any time remains, the hope for peace has not yet been extinguished.

If the United States goes to war with Communist China, and attacks the mainland, as we have virtually promised to do, the Soviet Union may become involved, since the communist countries are bound by an alliance that calls for mutual assistance. One of the striking features of the situation in Washington, is the complete confidence with which men like Senators Knowland and Bridges assure the public that the Soviet Union will not, or almost surely will not, fight on the side of Communist China. That is no assurance to be given lightly, for if world war results from an American defense of Quemoy and Matsu, the death of vast populations is at stake, in our own country included. These Senators cannot guarantee how the Kremlin will act. They have no intelligence agents inside the Kremlin, and are not recipients of the most confidential information that Soviet leaders possess. And since that is so, they are not speaking from knowledge, they are guessing. Some such guessing has to be done in the Pentagon and State Departments, since careful estimates are essential even if they remain guesses. But if we could know for certain that the Soviet Union would not fulfil its treaty obligations, it might influence our course toward China. But if we don't know for certain, our lack of information also should influence our course. Yet the Senators, and those of like mind, advise us to act as though we know something we do not know, and urge us to accept risks, the gravity of which has never been surpassed in history.

Let me repeat, the crisis is grave enough however it is looked at. If the decision is, that the United States will defend Quemoy and Matsu (and, of course, use tactical nuclear weapons) we shall receive no help whatever from any Western Ally, not a gun, plane or warship. Even Canada has served notice on us that it would not help. And we forfeit the goodwill of most of our Allies and most Asians as well. The Western Alliance might even be shattered. But if, on the other hand, we do not lift a finger to defend the islands, we stand to lose what faith remains in us, first in Formosa, then among all overseas Chinese, perhaps ultimately in Japan and Southeast Asia, with fateful consequences. This is a ghastly choice, and one that foresight could have saved us from. We did not have the foresight.

And now we confront a cruel dilema.

But in weighing the consequences, in the train of either alternative, something has to be considered that is on a par with the military and political factors. It is the state of mind of most Americans. If we are going into a major war, perhaps a world war, the American people, if they are going to endure a hard fight, must know what issue carried them into the war, and approve of the decision to fight.

A Gallup poll published yesterday shows that the ignorance of Americans over Quemoy and Matsu is no less than appalling. Of the 77 percent who had even heard of the islands, only 10 percent knew who held them, and only 14 percent knew that they were 30 miles or less from the China mainland. Of the 10 percent who knew who held them, 5 percent favored giving Chiang Kai-shek a guarantee to help defend them, 4 percent were against it, and one percent had no opinion. And of this 10 percent, 7 approved our having advised the evacuation of the Tachens, 2 were against, and one had no opinion. This is not the way a national conviction would look.

A war for Quemoy and Matsu would express the conviction of a tiny fragment of the American public. And President Eisenhower's great hold on the American people, rests ~~first of all~~ to a considerable extent, on the belief that he is a man of peace. These factors surely cannot be the least cogent of those that are to be weighed in Washington this week.

Something Sir Winston Churchill said six years ago - ~~almost to the day~~ - would seem quite appropriate in discussing the Formosan situation: "No technical knowledge, he said, can outweigh knowledge of the humanities. Our inheritance of well-founded slowly-conceived codes of honor, morals and manners are far more precious than anything which scientific discoveries could bestow."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 28, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Chiang Kai Shek today again predicted that "in the near future" the Chinese Nationalist flag will fly over the Chinese mainland. And "qualified quarters" on Formosa say they know of nothing to indicate that a big Communist attack on the Matsu islands is near. These sources..who cannot be named.. insist that the Communists need much more time to build up for an attack on the islands 100 miles nowthwest of Formosa. I'd like to discuss the Chinese situation in a few minutes.

The State Department announced today that we are now engaged with the British and French in "quite active consultations" on the question of a Big Four meeting with the Russians. In Washington, London and Paris "top level discussions" are going on through regular diplomatic channel . Obviously this is the result of both the French ratification of agreements to re-arm western Germany and the Soviet Premier Bulganin's "positive"attitude" toward President Eisenhower's stand on a big power meeting.

In the Senate today, Democratic Leader Johsnson of Texas told his colleagues that the Democrats "don't want a war party to emerge in the United States any more than they want an appeasement party." Republican Leader Knowland answered: "There is no war party and no war faction." But he said this country should not give way before the Chinese Communist effort to seize Formosa. He said: "The road to appeasement is not the road to peace." Yesterday, Knowland urged that we risk a world war if necessary to defend the Nationalist islands of Quemoy and Matsu. Today, Senator Johnson said that he is optimistic that a positive program on international affairs can be worked out at White House meetings with membersof Congress later this week.

British Froeign Secretary Eden confirmed in the House of Commons, the fact that discussions are going on with the United States and France. He indicated that the British are looking for a foreign ministers meeting to discuss: the future of Germany and Austria...a program for world disarmament and an East-West security system "to banish fears of another world war."

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer said today that the re-armament of his country will "change the world political situation and cause Soviet leaders to review their present policy."

And the three big western powers -- the United States, Great Britain and France -- today called on the United Nations to condemn Israel...for causing the Gaza incident in which 38 Egyptians and 8 Israelis were killed last month.

In Washington, the President met today with Italian Premier Scelba. They say they reviewed "the general problems of East-West relations as they affect the peace and security of the world."

John Marshal Harlan today took an oath to "administer justice without respect to persons, and do equal right to the poor and to the rich." With that -- he became the 9th member of the Supreme Court. Then the court, by unanimous vote, upheld the right of states to ban the advertising of eyeglasses in any manner.

A House committee, after ten weeks of hearings and study, today approved a major part of the President's military reserve program. The committee approved the creation of a volunteer force of between 100-thousand and 250-thousand young men who would take six months of active training and then serve an additional seven and a half years in the reserves.

The C.I.O. auto workers, meeting in Cleveland, have started consideration of a plan to triple the dues of its members from $2.50 to $7.50 a month...

to raise 25-million dollars for a strike fund.

And auto workers heard Democratic Senator Neely of West Virginia attack President Eisenhower as one who "just doesn't know what it is all about." Neely said the country needs a President "who don't spend more than half his time playing golf and fishing." He said: "This is not the time for a President who can keep his eye on a golf ball; but for one who can keep the country from behind the eight ball." Neely said the President "may be the first in war, he also ahs been first in confusion." White House News Secretary Hagerty told reporters the President has not yet seen Neely's attack. But Hagerty said "I don't think anybody in the United States believes it." He called the attention of reporters to an old adage:"What Peter says about Paul, tells more about Peter than it does about Paul."

The White House says that Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd will lead a new expedition to the Antarctic next November. Admiral Byrd was the officer- in-charge on the last full-fledged Navy Antarctic expedition in 1946.

The House today for the third straight year voted to give the Department of Agriculture more money for farm programs than the President requested: 100-million dollars more.

The Formosa crisis has reached a state where decisions of exceptional gravity are to be made in Washington, probably this week. From high Pentagon sources comes word that the build-up opposite the Quemoy and Matsu Islands, is proceeding at a rate that makes a Communist assault probable by the middle of April. The information is stated to be based on intelligence reports. But it also should be recorded, that Carl Rankin, United States Ambassador to Nationalist China, today authorized Bob Pierpoint, CBS correspondent, to say: "I am not aware of any fundamental change in the local situation in recent weeks. The reports of military build-ups by the Communists have, perhaps, been exaggerated, since they relate to a gradual build-up which started over a year ago.

So it is not clear whether the crisis as seen in Washington, and the big decisions now being reached, are developments to be expected from a year-old danger, or are due to unexpected actions by the Communists. The newsmen in Washington write as though unexpected action has made this a black week in the capital. Yet nothing unexpected has come to the notice of Ambassador Rankin.

Let me hasten to say that either kind of crisis is grave. But one kind points to war with Communist China in about three weeks. The other points to a danger that is only soemwhat nearer than it has been for months. Obviously, if any time remains, the hope for peace has not yet been extinguished.

If the United States goes to war with Communist China, and attacks the mainland, as we have virtually promised to do, the Soviet Union may become involved, since the Communist countries are bound by an alliance that calls for mutual assistance. One of the striking features of the situation in Washington, is the complete confidence with which men like Senators Knowland and Bridges assure the public that the Soviet Union will not, or almost surely not, fight on the side of Communist China.

That is no assurance to be given lightly, for if World War results from an American defense of Quemoy and Matsu, the death of vast populations is at stake, in our own country included These Senators cannot guarantee how the Kremlin will act. They have no intelligence agents inside the Kremlin, and are not recipients of the most confidential information that Soviet leaders possess. And since that is so, they are not speaking from knowledge, they are guessing. Some such guessing has to be done in the Pentagon and State Departments, since careful estimates are essential even if they remain guesses. But if we could know for certain that the Soviet Union would not fulfill its treaty obligations, it might influence our course toward China. But if we don't know for certain, our lack of information also should influence our course. Yet the Senators, and those of like mind, advise us to act as though we know something we do not know, and urge us to accept the risks, the gravity of which has never been surpassed in history.

Let me repeat, the crisis is grave enough however it is looked at. If the decision is, that the United States will defend Quemoy and Matsu,(and of course, use tactical nuclear weapons) we shall receive no help whatever from any Western Ally, not a gun, plane or warship. Even Canada has served notice on us that it would not help. And we forfeit the goodwill of most of our Allies and most Asians as well. The Western Alliance might even be shattered. But if, on the other hand, we do not lift a finger to defend the islands, we stand to lose what faith remains in us, first in Formosa, then among all overseas Chinese, perhaps ultimately in Japan and Southeast Asia, with fateful consequences. This is a ghastly choice, and one that foresight could have saved us from. We did not have the foresight. And now we confront a cruel dilemma.

But in weighing the consequences, in the train of either alternative, something has to be considered that is on a par with the military and political factors. It is the state of mind of most Americans. If we are going into a major war, perhaps a world war, the American people, if they are going to endure a hard fight, must know what issue carried them into the war, and approve of the decision to fight.

A Gallup poll published yesterday shows that the ignorance of Americans over Quemoy and Matsu is no less than appalling. Of the 77 percent who had even heard of the islands, only 10 percent knew who held them, and only 14 percent knew that they were 30 miles or less from the China mainland. Of the 10 percent who knew hwo held them, 5 percent favored giving Chiang Kai-shek a guarantee to help defend them, 4 percent were against it, and one percent had no opinion. And of this 10 percent, 7 approved our having advised the evacuation of the Tachens, 2 were against it, and one had no opinion. This is not the way a national conviction would look.

A war for Quemoy and Matsu would express the conviction of a tiny fragment of the American public. And President Eisenhower's great hold on the American people, rests to a considerable extent, on the belief that he is a man of peace. These factors surely cannot be the least cogent of those that are to be weighed in Washington this week.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a monent with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Something Sir Winston Churchill said six years ago almost to the day would seem quite appropriate in discussing the Formosan situation: "No technical knowledge, he said, can outweigh knowledge of the humanities. Our inheritance of well-founded, slowly conceived codes ho honor, morals and manners are far more precious than anything which scientific discoveries could bestow.

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday, March 29, 1955

This is the news:

The White House has made it known that the President does not believe Red China is preparing an attack in the Formosa Straits in the weeks just ahead of us. The White House says the President rejects the week-end suggestion that the Communists will attack the Nationalist-held islands of [redacted] Matsu by April 15th. In a few minutes I'd like to examine [redacted] the original story and the President's denial [redacted]

Today, Republican Senate Leader Knowland says he thinks the viewpoint atttributed to the President [redacted] is "perfectly sound". He doesn't think its possible for anyone to predict when an attack will come.

House Speaker Rayburn, who will accompany Democrats who confer with Mister Eisenhower tomorrow and Thursday, told reporters: "I see by the papers that Admiral Carney, the chief of naval operations, says he looks for fighting to start in the Far East in a few weeks. But today the President is quoted as saying he doesn't anticipate any such thing." Rayburn says this is pretty sharp conflict..needs clarification.

Democratic Senator Fulbright of Arkansas thinks "too many Senators are sounding off" about the Far Eastern situation. He feels the approach by Senator Knowland may lead to war. [redacted] Republican Senator Bridges of New Hampshire accuses the Democrats of running out on an Administration [redacted] Far Eastern policy which they had endorsed... by approving the President's request for power to take action to defend Formosa.

And Chairman George of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee says he thinks the American people woll support whatever decision the President is compelled to make between war and peace in the Pacific.

Secretary of State Dulles told Senators today that western unity is now what he called "an irreversible reality." And this, he said, marks "the greatest failure in Soviet diplomacy that has yet occurred." Mr. Dulles believes the time is approaching when "useful" discussions can be held between the free world and Russia. But he makes no prediction on the time.

Italy's Premier Scelba said in Washington today that the 15 North Atlantic states must join in political, social and economic arrangements to strengthen their military defenses against the Communists. And the Italian foreign minister, also visiting Washington, told reporters today that Secretary Dulles is "interested" in his proposal for a meeting of nine western nations in Paris in May..to lay the groundwork for a disarmament confeence with Russia.

Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today that prospects for a four power meeting seem to have brightened lately. He added that he still favors a conference at the summit, "but, so far heads of government have not agreed to this method."Sir Winston said the international situation "certainly seems to have taken a friendly turn latelly."

The United Nations Security Council today voted unanimously to condemn Isreal for the Gaza incident in which 38 Egyptians and 8 Isrealis were killed. Before the vote, Ambassador Lodge said that "whatever the provocation might have been " there was no justification for THE Isreali military action at Gaza. He and other members counseled the Isreali and Arabs, to try to improve conditions along their border.

Reports from Saigon, in south Viet Nam, tell of heavy explosions in the city..with the premier's place under mortar fire. An attack was made on the palace soon after nine of the pro-American members of the cabinet resigned. Eight of them are members of religious sects that have been feuding with the [redacted] Premier. They had threatened to use their private armies to bring down his government.

The National Assembly of Panama today convicted impeached President Jose Ramon Guizado as an accessory in the assassination of his predecessor President Jose Antonio Remon. Guizado has been sentenced to six years and eight months in prison.

In Washington, Welfare Secretary Hobby told a House committee that the latest surveys indicate the shortage of school rooms will be 176-thousand by 1960..instead of a previously estimated 407-thousand. And After Representative Powell of New York said he would insist that no federal funds for schools be used in districts which continue racial segregation, Chairman Barden of North Carolina said this would "endanger the objective we seek."

Attorney General Brownell said today that the Administration's proposed highway bond program is not "a financial monstrosity." He said anyone buying these bonds would be investing in America. The plan calls for [redacted] a new federal corporation to guarantee 21-billion-dollars worth of bonds for the highway program.

George Meany, president of the American Federation of Labor, today told the C.I.O. auto workers convention, that political action by unions is necessary to rid the country of what he called "anti-labor laws that strike at the very heart of our trade union movement."

Edward R. Murrow: March 29, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

During the last few days in Washington we have had an example of how a sensational news story can be "planted." This one had to do with a subject known as "war." It may have been designed to pressure or influence the President into making a decision for the all-out defense of Quemoy and Matsu Islands. This is not at all a complex story. The essence of it can be had by quoting the headlines in Saturday's papers and then again in todays. On Saturday the three-column headline in the New York Times read: "U.S. expects Chinese Reds to attack Isles in April - Weighs All-Out Defense: Policy Re-Studied - Eisenhower May State Get Tough Decision in Coming Talks". The Herald Tribune had an almost identical headline.

Now for a look at this mornings headlines: Three column line in the Times reading: "Eisenhower Sees No War Now Over Chinese Isles: Alarm Deplored - President Hears Reds Lack Build-Up Needed for Major Attack." So this much is clear - the first headlines were just not so. The United States did not, on Saturday expect a Red blow at the Matsus in April. No source was given for the Saturday story, but today's headlines came from the White House. And the Saturday story was utterly demolished. It was stated that the President has more military and political information than the source responsible for the scare headlines. He does not discount the danger, but the Chinese Communists are not ready for a major attack on the Islands. He does not think they would launch an attack on the eve of the Asian-African Conference beginning April 18. He has the backing of the National Security Council and Secretary Dulles, in these conclusions. The President continues to decline to say flatly whether the United States will go to war over the Islands, under any and all circumstances. He knows the source of the stories, and regards them as parochial, representing the view of one man and one service. He realises that among his military advisors there are some who think the time has come for a showdown with the Chinese Communists; some think a naval blockade would be enough, but he disagrees. The President is determined to make his own military decisions. He is displeased that news stories spoke of Administration decisions, which were not in fact his decisions. He is disturbed that a false impression has been given the nation and the world. Some of our Allies inquired whether the story represented United States policy, and were told they did not. He was particularly displeased that one story said he was being urged, if necessary, to destroy Red China's industrial potential, and thus end its expansionist tendencies.

I have used newspaper headlines to illustrate this story, but by so doing, do not imply that Radio and Television exercised any greater care in handling this "plant", in which the opinion of one man representing one military service suddenly became "Administration decisions."

It is not uncommon in Washington for men around the President to oppose his policy. Senator Knowland, the leader of the President's Party in the Senate, does so frequently - but openly. Yesterday Comptroller-General Joseph Campbell attacked the President's road-building program, but he did so publicly. Within any political Party there has to be latitude for differences of opinion. But this episode is utterly different. Here an official of the highest rank gave out information and arguments behind the scenes to chosen reporters. These were published without his identity being disclosed. This is not an uncommon practise, nor is it necessarily unhealthy. Reporters learn to weigh their sources and know from experience that an unimpeachable source may become "peachable", and that today's high level source may not be so high tomorrow. (That clearly happened in this case.) The thing that sets this one apart is that apparently the objective - one of them at least - was to drive the President into a decision he was not ready to make; and a decision which is being stoutly opposed by our Allies as being of the nature that would most likely lead to a major war.

Inspiring Washington correspondents to publish stories that will have a calculated political effect is nothing new. It is not often reprehensible, and on occasion can be useful. But when it amounts to the use of a privileged position to agitate anonymously for a course of action which might lead to war, either local or global, it is something else again. Surely the place for such arguments by those high officials who believe that we should strangle the growing menace of Red China once and for all is in the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the National Security Council and before the President, rather than in newspaper headlines and on the Radio. To contribute to the confusion of an enemy or potential enemy is a legitimate function of both military and civilian leaders. But to confuse and confound both Allies and fellow-citizens in pursuit of an argument over grand strategy cannot serve the Republic, particularly when false impressions are cloaked in anonymity.

We were speaking of news and the handling thereof. Voltaire once said: "In the case of news we should always wait for the Sacrament of confirmation." And those of us whose job it is to follow with some attention both domestic and foreign news despatches, may recently have remembered this from the Bible: "As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 29, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The White House has made it known that the President does not believe Red China is preparing an attack in the Formosa Straits in the weeks just ahead of us. The White House says the President rejects the week-end suggestion that the Communists will attack the Nationalist-held island of Matsu by April 15th. In a few minutes I'd like to examine the original story and the President's denial.

Today Republican Senate Leader Knowland says he thinks the viewpoint attributed to the President is "perfectly sound". He doesn't think its possible for anyone to predict when an attack will come.

House Speaker Rayburn, who will accompany Democrats who confer with Mr. Eisenhower tomorrow and Thursday, told reporters: "I see by the papers that Admiral Carney, the chief of naval operations, says he looks for fighting to start in the Far East in a few weeks. But today the President is quoted as saying he doesn't anticipate any such thing." Rayburn says this is pretty sharp conflict...needs clarification.

Democratic Senator Fulbright of Arkansas thinks "too many Senators are sounding off" about the Far Eastern situation. He feels the approach by Senator Knowland may lead to war. Republican Senator Bridges of New Hampshire accuses the Democrats of running out on an Administration Far Eastern policy which they had endorsed...by approving the President's request for power to take action to defend Formosa.

And Chairman George of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee says he thinks the American people will support whatever decision the President is compelled to make between war and peace in the Pacific.

Secretary of State Dulles told Senators today that western unity is now what he called "an irreversible reality." And this, he said, marks "the greatest failure in Soviet diplomacy that has yet occurred." Mr. Dulles believes the time is approaching when "useful" discussions can be held between the free world and Russia. But he makes no prediction on thd time.

Italy's Premier Scelbe said in Washington today that the 15 North Atlantic states must join in political, social and economic arrangements to strengthen their military defenses against the Communists. And the Italian foreign minister, also visiting Washington, told reporters today that Secretary Dulles isn "interested" in his proposal for a meeting of nine western nations in Paris in May..to lay the groundwork for a disarmament conference with Russia.

Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today that prospects for a four power meeting seem to have brightened lately. He added that he still favors a conference at the summit, "but so far heads of government have not agreed to this method." Sir Winston said the international situation "certainly seems to have taken a friendly turn lately."

The United Nations Security Council today voted unanimously to condemn Israel for the Gaze incident in which 38 Egyptians and 8 Israelis were killed. Before the vote, Ambassador Lodge said that "whatever the provocation might have been" there was no justification for the Israeli military action at Gaza. He and other members counseled the Israeli and Arabs to try to improve conditions along their border.

Reports from Saigon, in South Viet Nam, tell of heavy explosions in the city..with the premier's place under mortar fire. An attack was made on the palace soon after nine of the pro-American members of the cabinet resigned. Eight of them are members of religious sects that have been feauding with the Premier. They had threatened to use their private armies to bring down his government.

The National Assembly of Panama today convicted impeached President Jose Ramon Guidazo as an accessory in the assassination of his predecessor President Jose Antonio Remon. Guizado been sentenced to six years and eight months in prison.

In Washington, Welfare Secretary Hobby told a House committee that the latest surveys indicate the shortage of school rooms will be 176-thousand by 1960...instead of a previously estimated 407 thousand. And after Representative Powell of New York said he would insist that no federal funds for schools be used in distracts which continue racial segregation, Chairman Barden of North Carolina said this would "endanger the objective we seek."

Attorney General Brownell said today that the Administration's proposed highway bond program is not "a financial monstrosity." He said anyone buying these bonds would be investing in America. The plan calls for a new federal corporation to guarantee 21-billion-dollars worth of bonds for the highway program.

George Meany, president of the American Federation of Labor, today told the C.I.O. auto workers convention, that political action by unions is necessary to rid the country of what he called "anti-labor laws that strike at the very heart of our trade union movement."

During the last few days in Washington we have had an example of how a senaational news story can be "planted". This one had to do with a subject known as "war". It may have been designed to pressure or influence the President into making a decision for the all-out defense of Quemoy and Matsu Islands. This is not at all a complete story. The essence of it can be had by quoting the headlines in Saturday's papers and then again in today's. On Saturday the three-column headline in the New York Times read: "U.S. expects Chinese Reds to attack Isles in April - Weighs all-Out Defense: Policy Re-Studied - Eisenhower May State Get Tough Decision in Coming Talks." The Herald Tribune had an almost identical headline.

Now for a look at this mornings headlines: Three column lines in the Times reading:"Eisenhower Sees No War Now Over Chinese Isles: Alarm Deplored - President Hears Reds Lack Build-Up Needed for Major Attack." So this much is clear - the first headlines were just not so. The United States did not, on Saturday, expect a Red blow at the Matsus in April. No source was given for the Saturday story, but today's headlines came from the White House. And the Saturday story was utterly demolished. It was stated that the President has more military and political information than the source responsible for the scare headlines. He does not discount the danger, but the Chinese Co munists are not ready for a major attack on the Islands. He does not think they would launch an attack on the eve of the Asian - Africa Conference beginning April 18. He has the backing of the National Security Council and the Secretary Dulles, in these conclusions. The President continues to decline to say flatly whether the United States will go to war over the islands, under any and all circumstances. He knows the source of the stories and regards them as pawochial ochial, representing the view of one man and one service. He realises that among his military advisors there are some who think the time has come for a showdown with the Chinese Communists; some think t naval blockade would be enough, but his disa rees. The President is determined to make his won military decisions. He is displeased that news stories spoke of Administration ecisions, which were not in fact his decisions. He is disturbed that a false impression has been given the nation and the world. Some of our allies inquired whether the story represented United States policy and were told they did not. He was particularly displeased that one story said he was being urged, if necessary, to destroy Red China's industrial potential, and thus end its expansionist tendencies.

I have used newspaper headlines to illustrate this story, but by so diong, do not imply that Radio and Television exercised any greater care in handling this "plant", in which the opinion of one man representing one military service suddenly became "Administrative decisions."

It is not uncommon in Washington for men around the President to oppose his policy. Senator Knowland, the leader of the President's Party in the Senate, does so frequently - but openly. Yesterday Comptroller-General Joseph Campbell attacked the President's road-building progrmm, but he did so publicly. Within any political party, there has to be latidude for differences of opinion. But this episode is utterly different. Here an official of the highest rank gave out information and arguments behind the scenes to chosen reporters. These were published without his identity being disclosed. This is not an uncommon practice, nor is it necessarily unhealthy. Reporters learn to weigh their sources and know from experience that an unimpeachable source may become "peachable", and that today's high level source may not be so high tomorro . That clearly happened in this case. The think that sets this one apart is thatapparently the objective - one of them at least - was to drive the President into a decision he was not ready to make; and a decision which is being stoutly opposed by our Allies as being of the nature that would most likely lead to a major war.

Inspiring Washington correspondents to publish stories that will have a calculated political effect is nothing new. It is not often reprehensible, and on occasion can be useful. But when it amounts to the use of a priviledged position to agitate anonymously for a course of action which might lead to war, either local or global, it is something else again. Surely the place for such arguments by those high officials who believe that we should strangle the growing menace of Red China once and for all is in the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the National Security Council and before the President, rather than in newspaper headlines and on the Radio..To contribute to the confusion of an enemy or potential enemy is a legitimate function of both military and civilian leaders. But to confuse and confound both Allies and fellow-citizens in pursuit of an argument over grand strategy cannot serve the Republic, particularly when false inpressions are cloaked in anonymity.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were speaking of news and the handling thereof. Voltaire once said: "In the case of news we should always wait for the Sacrament of confirmation." And those of us whose job it is to follow thth some attention both domestic and foreign news dispatches, may recently have remembered this from the Bible:"As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Wed
March 30 '55

Edward R. Murrow
Pawling, New York

This is the news:

The President today discussed the world situation with Republican and Democratic congressmen. And Speaker Rayburn later told reporters: "I don't feel any better about things". And Minority Leader Martin summed up the meeting with the President and Secretary of State Dulles by describing the general situation as "not too bright, and not too gloomy, still tense"

This meeting took place after the President's weekly news conference at which he told reporters: too much speculation about war does not serve the peace of the world. Mr. ~~Eisenhower also explained~~ the dangers that would be involved in holding a big four conference without adequate preparations. In a few minutes we'll hear some excerpts from the President's remarks as he told reporters of his disagreement with Admiral Carney's recent suggestion that the Chinese Reds might attack Matsu and the Quemoy islands in the middle of April.

Democratic Senator Kefauver charged today that there are forces in the Administration "so powerful and apparently so eager for a war with China that they are becoming almost impossible to resist." Kefauver charges that persons in high places in the Administration are "plotting and planning to get us into war over Quemoy and Matsu.

(more)

On Matsu islands, the Nationalist commander told reporters today:"It looks as though the Communists intend to come pretty soon." But he added:"Maybe tomorrow, maybe next week. Or it might be next year. You Can'T tell."

And on Formosa the Nationalists announced that they had attacked an enemy flotilla near the Matus..sinking one wooden craft and damaging seven other small ships.

In Saigon, the French say they have arranged a temporary truce between the Viet Nam National army and a political-religious sect that opposes the American-supported premier.

The Russians today denied that Andrie Gromyko has violated a secrecy pledge by revealing the Soviet position at the London disarmament talks.

In London, the high command of the British Labor Party has decided not to push a move to expel left-winger Aneuran Bevan. He has assured the Labor executives that he will follow the labor party line in the future.

(more)

At the United Nations, Ambassador Lodge has told both Israel and Egypt that if they do not co-operate in ending frontier violence we will question "their whole attitude towards the problems of border security.

Defense Secretary Wilson today ordered the armed forces to cut their publicity staffs by one third ot one-half..and to put civilians in charge. Wilson also ordered that any material written by military personnel for publication should be tested not alone for security but also for its "constructive contribution" to the Defense Department's mission.

Commander Wilkinson of the atomic submarine, Nautilus, told reporters today that the ship's performance in more than 3-thousand miles of tests has been "revolutionary and amazing."

The Senate ~~today~~ has voted unanimously to approve a bill calling for a 750-million dollar a year pay increase for some million and a half persons in the armed services. The bill now goes back to the White House, ~~for minor action.~~

Congress today completed action on a bill to extend for another year almost three billion dollars in wartime corporation income and excise taxes. The old law would have expired at midnight tomorrow. (more)

The State Department implied today that the recent release of the Yalta papers helped pile up a big vote for French and West German ratification of the German re-armament treaties. The Department says the Yalta papers "illuminates graphically" the dangers, as well as possible values, of Big power conferences.

Twnety-three senators proposed today that we take the lead in setting up an international reserve of food and raw materials..under the United Nations.

The New York World-Telegram and Sun reports that the Salk polio vaccine is 100 per cent effective. But Dr. Thomas Francis of the University of Michigan, who is gathering reports on the effectiveness of the vaccine, says he knowsnothing about the newspaper story. He says "The official report has not beenwritten."

Dr. Leo H. Barteimer of the American Medical Association told senators today that mental illness in this country has "reached the proportions in the nature of the greatest epidemic or plague" we have ever experienced.

(MORE)

At the White House today reporters ~~asked the President for~~

~~At the White House telephone conference~~ questioned the President about Admiral Carney's suggestion that the Communists might attack the Nationalist islands of Quemoy and Matsu in about a month. We've recorded for youexcerpts from the President's reply:

(tape runs approximately 4:30 ending with reply to Carney reprimanding :"Not by me.)

Ed says(and hope can pre-record) Then the President was asked to discuss some of thesubjects that could be discussed at a Big Four conference:

(Tape runs 1:10 ending.. "peace of the world."

5 40 whole

~~[illegible]~~

You have heard recorded excerpts from the President's news conference. Mr. Eisenhower also told reporters that in the event of a Big Power meeting with the Russians we do not know who would attend as the Soviet "top man." He said: at face value on the Soviet organization chart, Marshal Bulganin is at the top. But we don't know that he is the chief influence in the Soviet government.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a monet with the word for today. But first here is Bob Dixon.

~~[illegible]~~

Word for today:

The President suggested today that too much speculation about war does not serve the cause of peace.

The President used his news conference today to put ~~[illegible]~~ into perspecetive the speculative talk..however "off the record".. about war. Oliver Wendell Holmes once said:"Talking is like playing on the harp; there is much in laying the hands on the strings to stop their ~~a~~ vibration as in twnaging them to bring out their music." The President today placed his hands upon the strings.

Good night and good luck.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a monet with the word for today. But first here is Bob Dixon.

Word for today:

The President suggested today that too much speculation about war does not serve the cause of peace.

The President used his news conference today to put into perspecetive the speculative talk..however "off the record".. about war. Oliver Wendell Holmes once said:"Talking is like playing on the harp; there is much in laying the hands on the strings to stop their vibration as in twnaging them to bring out their music." The President today placed his hands upon the strings.

Good night and good luck.

5 40
25

51:10

51:10
5 40
56.50

57 10

Pa 3-681

51:10

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, March 30, 1955
7:45-8:00 p.m.

ANNOUNCER: (Commercial)

And, now, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news! The President today discussed the world situation with Republican and Democratic congressmen. Speaker Sam Rayburn later told reporters: "I don't feel any better about things," and Minority Leader Martin summed up the meeting with the President and Secretary of State Dulles by describing the general situation as "not too bright, and not too gloomy; still tense." This meeting took place after the President's weekly news conference at which he told reporters too much speculation about war does not serve the peace of the world. In a few minutes we'llhear some excerpts from the President's remarks as he told reporters of his disagreement with Admiral Carney's recent suggestion that the Chinese Reds might attack Matsu and the Quemoy Islands in the middle of April.

Democratic Senator Kefauver charged today that there are forces in the Administration so powerful and apparently so eager for war with China that they're becoming almost impossible to resist. Kefauver charges that persons in high places in the Administration are plotting and planning to get us into war over Quemoy and Matsu.

On Matsu Island, the Nationalist Commander told reporters today "it looks as though the Communists intend to come pretty soon," but he added "maybe tomorrow, maybe next week, or it might be next year. You can't tell."

And on Formosa the Nationalists announced that they had attacked an enemy flotilla near the Matsus, sinking one wooden craft and damaging seven other small ships.

In Saigon, the French say they have arranged a temporary truce between the Viet Nam National Army and political religious sects that oppose the American-supported Premier.

The Russians today denied that Andrei Gromyko has violated a secrecypledge by revealing the Soviet position atthe London disarmament talks. In London, the high command of the British Labor Party has decided not to push a move to expel Left-Winger Aneurin Bevan. He has assured the Labor executives that he will follow the Labor Party line in the future.

At the United Nations, Ambassador Lodge has told both Israel and Egypt that if they do not cooperate in ending frontier violence we will question their whole attitude towards problems of border security.

Defense Secretary Wilson today ordered the armed forces to cut their publicity staffs by one-third to one-half and to put civilians in charge. Wilson also ordered that any material written by military personnel for publication should be tested,not alone for security but also for its constructive contribution to the Defense Department's mission.

Commander Wilkinson, of the atomic submarine Nautilus told reporters today that the ship's performance in more than three thousand miles of test has been revolutionary and amazing.

The Senate has voted unanimously to approve a bill calling for a seven-hundred-and-fifty-million-dollar-a-year pay increase for some million-and-a-half persons in the armed services. The bill now goes to the White House.

Congress today completed action on a bill to extend for another year almost three billion dollars in corporation, income, and excise taxes. The old law would have expired at midnight tomorrow. The President signed the bill tonight.

The State Department implied today that the recent release of the Yalta Papers helped pile up a big vote for French and West German ratification of the German rearmament treaties. The Department says the Yalta Papers illuminates graphically the dangers,as well as possible values, of big-power conferences.

Twenty-three Senators proposed today that we take the lead in setting up an international reserve of food and raw materials under the United Nations.

The "New York World-Telegram and Sun" reports that the Salk polio vaccine is 100% effective, but Dr. Thomas Francis, of the University of Michigan, who is gathering reports on the effectiveness of the vaccine, says he knows nothing about the newspaper story. He says the official report has not yet been written.

Dr. Leo H. Bartheimer (?), of the American Medical Association, told Senators today that mental illness in this country has reached proportions in the nature of the greatest epidemic of plague we have ever experienced.

At the White House today reporters questioned the President about Admiral Carney's suggestion that the Communists might attack the Nationalist Islands of Quemoy and Matsu in about a month. We've recorded for you excerpts from the President's reply.

PRES.EISENHOWER: Ladies and gentlemen, I've tried to say many times none of us possesses a crystal ball. We cannot pretend to the efficacy of the ancient prophets when we talk about the future. Now, I have heard the possibility of war discussed many times during my governmental career and I've seen it occur on two or three occasions, but to prophesy when a war is going to break out is to pretend ... is to assume that we have an accuracy of information that I think has never yet been attained by a country that was to be attacked. What I have tried to say is this. In this torn (?) and distressed world, the danger, the risk, of war is always with us and we have got to be vigilant. We have got to be careful. And while we're doing it we've got to be as fair and as large-minded as we know how to accommodate and to understand the fears and the ambitions of others that might lead them into a risky venture and such a tragic thing as this, the same time so conducting ourselves that the world knows we arestrong, strong in our principles and our faith, also strong militarily and economically, and I don't believe there is any possible way as of this time of describing the situation any better. And if I can make a comment, itis this. I do not believe that the peace of the world, the tranquility of the world,is being served at this moment by talking too much in terms of speculation about such things. I think that's all I have to say about this.

(?)
(?-barely audible)

SPEAKER: Mr. President, could you assess the present possibilities for a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait?

PRES. EISENHOWER: No, I can't! And, if you'll pardon me, I think we've talked enough about Formosa. I don't believe I have anything more to say about it.

SPEAKER: Do you disagree with the prospects that there might be (balance of question inaudible).

PRES. EISENHOWER: Well, I certainly ... I will go back to that subject long enough to say this. I cannot say that there will not because I don't know,but I do think that if anyone predicting it will be that soon and can give me logical reasons for believing it will be that soon they have information that I do not.

WOMAN: Mr. President, (inaudible) ..... I seem to recall in World War 11, that (inaudible) ..... and in the (inaudible) ..... to say the least, (inaudible).

PRES. EISENHOWER: As a matter of fact, you have something there and (laughter) I meant to express something of thatkind when I said I didn't believe that we were doing the right thing, much good,by speculating too much in the future on (inaudible). There are just certain things in the world, if you're going to live in the confidence that you are right, ready to protect your rights, but you're not going to resort to aggressive force yourself, then you've got to be patient and strong in your principles, not to let anybody run over you, but not to try to say they're going to attack me today, therefore, I attacked them yesterday, so that I (inaudible).

SPEAKER: Mr. President, (inaudible) of the AP. Not meaning to transgress on your (inaudible) the Malta remarks, but will Admiral Carney ... Carney be reprimanded for his remarks of last week?

PRES. EISENHOWER: Not by me!

MURROW: Then the President was asked to discuss some of the subjects that could be discussed at a Big Four conference.

PRES. EISENHOWER: It's not an easy question because there are so many different kinds of meetings that have been proposed by different people. One proposal coming from a very eminent source has been that we merely meet withoutan agenda and we have a broad talk. Well, now, there are many dangers in such a meeting because it could be considered another big (?) social. And if it is a social sort of get-together and trying to be friendly, there are many people in the world that are interpreting actions as well as words and they're interpreting them in terms of what has happened to them. Now, what does this meeting mean to them? Now, that's one kind of a meeting, ~~xxxix~~ that you have to watch. Moreover, if we would have a meeting certain questions would almost have to be examined, for example, let us say, the unificationof Germany, or some question affecting Germany. The wheels are now moving to make Germany ... West Germany a completely independent country. How can you talk about Germany when Germany is (inaudible). But if you had Germany where does it stop? There are sorts of things to be decided in these preparations before you can just meet and have something that is positive (?) for the peace of the world.

MURROW: You have heard recorded excerpts from the President's news conference. Mr. Eisenhower also told reporters that in the event of a big-power meeting with the Russians we do not know who would attend as the Soviet top man. He said at face value on the Soviet organization chart, Marshal Bulganin is at the top, but we don't know that he is actually the chief influence in the Soviet Government.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

ANNOUNCER: (Commercial)

That's my word for today and here's Mr. Murrow with his Word for Today.

MURROW: The President used his news conference today to rather put into perspective the speculating talk about war. Oliver Wendell Holmes once said: "Talking is like playing on the harp. There is as much in laying the hands on the strings to stop their vibration as in twanging them to bring out their music." The President has placed his hands upon the strings.

Good night and good luck!

ANNOUNCER: (Commercial)

Listen to Murrow tomorrow!

This is the CBS RADIO NETWORK

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 30, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The President today discussed the world situation with Republican and Democratic congressmen. And Speaker Rayburn later told reporters:"I don't feel any better about'things". And Minority Leader Martin summed up the meeting with the President and Secretary of State Dulles by describing the general situation as "not too bright, not too gloomy, still tense".

This meeting took place after the President's weekly news conference at which he told reporters:too much speculation about war does not serve the peace of the world. In a few minutes we'll hear some excerpts from the the President's remarks as he told reporters of his disagreement with Admiral Carney's recent suggestion that the Chinese Reds might attack Matsu and the Quemoy islands in the middle of April.

Democratic Senator Kefauver charged today that there wre forces in the Administration "so powerful and apparently so eager for a war with China that they are becoming alsost impossible to resist." Kefauver charges that persons in high places in the Administration are "plotting and planning to get us into war over Quemoy and Matsu.

On Matsu islands, the Nationalist commander told reporters today: "It looks as though the Communists intend to come pretty soon." But he added: "Maybe tomorrow, maybe next week. Or it might be next year. You can't tell".

And on Formosa the Nationalists announced that they had attacked an enemy flotilla near the Matsus..sinking one wooden craft and damaging seven other small ships.

In Saigon, the French say they have arranged a temporary truce between the Viet Nam National army and a political-religious sect that opposes the American-supported premier.

The Russians today denied that Andrie Gromyko has violated a secrecy pledge by revealing the Soviet position at the London disarmament talks.

In London, the high command of the British Labor Party has decided not to push a move to expel left-winger Aneuran Bevan. He has assured the Labor executives that he will follow the labor party line in the future.

At the United Nations, Ambassador Lodge has told both Israel and Egypt that if they do not co-operate in ending frontier violence we will question "their whole attitude towards the problem of border security."

Defense Secretary Wilson today ordered the armed forces to cut their publicity staffs by one third to one-half..and to put civilians in charge. Wilson also ordered that any material written by military personnel for publicantion should be tested not alone for security but also for its "constructive contribution" to the Defense Department's mission.

Commander Wilkinson of the atomic submerine, Nautilus, told reporters today that the ship's performance in more than 3-thousand miles of tests has been "revolutionary and amazing."

The Senate has voted unanimously to approve a bill calling for a 750-million dollar a year pay increase for some million and a half persons in the armed services. The bill now goes to the White House.

Congress today completed action on a bill to extend for another year almost three billion dollars in wartime corporation income and excise taxes. Tho old law would have expired at midnight tomorrow.

The State Department implied today that the recent release of the Yalta papers helped pile up a big vote for French and West German ratification of the German re-armament treaties. The Department says the Yalta papers "illuminates graphically" the dangers, as well as possible values, of Big power conferences.

Twenty three senators proposed today that we take the lead in setting up an international reserve of food and raw materials..under the United Nations.

The New York World-Telegram and Sun reports that the Salk polio vaccine is 100 per cent effective. But Dr. Thomas Francis of the University of Michigan, who is gathering reports on the effectiveness of the vaccine, says he knows nothing about the newspaper story. He says "The official report has not been written."

Dr. Leo H. Barteimer of the American Medical Association told Senators today that mental illness in this country has "reached the proportions in the nature of the greatest epidemic or plague" we have ever experienced.

At the White House today reporters questioned the President about Admiral Carney's suggestion that the Communists might attack the Nationalist islands of Quemoy and Matsu in about a month. We've recorded for you excerpts from the President's reply.

EISENHOWER: Ladies and gentlemen, I've tried to say many times none of us possesses a crystal ball. We cannot pretend to the efficacy of the ancient prophets when we talk about the future. Now, I have heard the possibllity of war discussed many times during my governmental career and I've seen it occur on two or three occasions, but to prophesy when a war is going to break out is to pretend ..is to assume that we have an accuracy of information that I think has never yet been attained by a country that was to be attacked. What I have tried to say is this. In this torn and distressed world, the danger, the risk, of war is always with us and we have got to be vigilant. We have got to be careful. And while we're doing it we've got to be as fair and as large-minded as we know how to accommodate and to understand the fears and the ambitions of others that might lead them into a risky venture ans such a tragic thing as this, the same time so conducting ourselves that the world knows we are strong, strong in our principles and our faith, also strong militarily and economically, and I don't believe there is any possible way of describing the situation any better. And if I can make a comment, it is this. I do not believe that the peace of the world, the tranquility of the world, is being served at this moment by talking too much in terms of speculation about such things. I think that's all I have to say about this.

SPEAKER: Mr. President, could you assess the present possibilities for a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait?

EISENHOWER: No, I can't! And, if you'll pardon me, I think we've talked enough about Formosa. I don't believe t have anything more to say about it.

SPEAKER: Do you disagree with the prospects that there might be (balance inaudible)

EISENHOWER: Well, I certainly..I will go back to that subject long enough to say this. I cannot say that there will not because I don't know, but I do think that if anyone predicting it will be that soon can can give me logical reasons for believing it will be that soon they have information I do not.

WOMAN: Mr. President...(inaudible)..I seem to recall in world War II that (inaudible) and in the (inaudible) ..to say the least, (inaudible)

EISENHOWER: As a matter of fact, you have something there and (laughter)I meant to express something of that kind when I said I didn't believe that we were doing the right thing, much good, by speculating too much on the future on (inaudible). There are just certainthings in the world, if you're going to live in the confidence that you are right, ready to protect your rights, but you're not going to resort to aggressive force yourself, then you've got to be patient and strong in your principles, not to let anybody run over you, but not to try to say they're going to attack me today, therefore, I attacked them yesterday, so that I (inaudible)

SPEAKER: Mr. President, (inaudible) of the AP. Not meaning to transgress on your (inaudible) the Malta remarks, but will Admiral Carney...Carney be rep-remanded for his remarks of last week?

EISENHOWER: Not by me!

MURROW: Then the President was asked to discuss some of the subjects that could be discussed at a Big Four conference.

EISENHOWER: It's not an easy question because there are so many different kinds of meetings that have been proposed by different people. One proposal coming from a very eminent sourse has been that we merely meet without an agenda and we have a broad talk. Well, now, there are many dangers in such a meeting because it could be considered another big social . And if it is such a meeting because it could be considered another big social sort of of get-together and trying to be friendly, there are many people in the world that are interpreting actions as well as words and they're interpreting them in terms of what has happened to them. Now, what does this meeting mean to them? Now, that's one kind of a meeting, that you have to attck. Moreover, if we would have a meeting certain questions would almost have to be examined, for example, let us say, the unification of Germany, or some question affecting Germany. The wheels are now moving to make Germany...West Germany a completely independent country. How cay you talk about Germany when Germany is (inaudible). But if you had Germany where dies it stop? There are sorts of things to be decided in these preparations before you can just meet and have something that is positive for the peace of the world.

MURROW: You have heard recorded excerpts from the President's news conference. Mr. Eisenhower also told reporters that in the event of a big-power meeting with the Russians we do not know who would attend as the Soviet top man.He said at face value on the Soviet organization chart, Marshal Bulganin is at the top, but we don't know that he is actually the chief influence in the Soviet Government.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The President used his news conference today to rather put into perspective the speculating talk about war. Oliver Wendell Holmes once said: "Talking is like playing on the harp. There is as much in laying the hands on the strings to stop their vibration as in twanging them to bring out thiir music." The President has placed his hands upon the strings.

Good Night and Good Luck.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, March 31, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

ANNC'R: (C O M M E R C I A L)

And now, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: THIS IS THE NEWS:

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the Paris treaties to rearm West Germany. The vote was 14 to 1. North Dakota's Republican Senator Langer was the only one who voted no. The treaties now go to the full Senate, where final action may come tomorrow. Thru these treaties, which would restore German sovereignty and allow her to rearm as a full member of NATO, the West hopes to build a stronger bulwark against Communism in Europe.

In another action today the Foreign Relations Committee voted unanimously to request Secretary of State Dulles to discuss in a closed-door session the release of the Yalta papers. Chairman George said this is not an investigation; that the committee wants to ask Secretary Dulles why the documents included informal remarks and materials as well as papers dealing directly with the formal decisions taken. Democrats have accused the Administration of releasing the documents for political purposes. Senator Sparkman today described a Republican summary of the papers as an attempt to disgrace former President Roosevelt.

The President today discussed the world situation with Democratic and Republican leaders of the Senate. And Republican Senator Wiley said later that the President has not made any decision on the question of defending Quemoy and the Matsus. He said that decision will depend on the development of facts in the future. Democratic Senator George said after the talks, "There is nothing alarming and there is no immediate crisis in the Far East."

The State Department says this country is trying to work out arrangements which would permit a delegation of Russian farmers to visit the United States. The idea was originally advanced by an Iowa paper, in commenting on reports of Soviet food difficulties. Now the State Department says that if details can be worked out, it would be handled as an exchange of agricultural delegations between the two countries.

A purge of collective farm bosses is reported under way in Russia. Moscow radio says the Soviet plans to shift tens of thousands of Communist party officials to collective farms in an effort to boost lagging agricultural production.

There is a new development in Indochina. One of the religious sects rebelling against Premier Diem of Free Vietnam has moved over to the side of the Government with its 25,000 troops; but the other two dissenting groups are still threatening more trouble.

Foreign Aid Chief Harold Stassen today informed the McClellan Senate Investigating subcommittee that it may not question any of his aides unless he or his lawyers are on hand. The committee is investigating negotiations on a Pakistan grain shortage problem. One of Stassen's assistants said Stassen feels that the staff of any government agency in the Executive Branch has to be free of any feeling that they will be called on to explain any recommendations they may make. This did not sway the committee. It immediately sent a subpoena for Stassen to appear next Wednesday and bring along every record, every document relating to the Pakistan project.

The Senate Banking Committee, which investigated the stock market, today decided to have one of its subcommittees look into particular phases of the market, such things as proxy fights, uranium stocks and investment trends.

A special Justice Department committee has recommended to Attorney General Brownell that the Federal Fair Trade Law be repealed. After an eighteen months' study the committee contends that the law permits price-fixing agreements which conflict with our free enterprise system. The committee says these pricing arrangements conflict with Federal anti-trust policy.

The President today signed the Military Pay bill, which gives an average 6½% pay raise to more than a million and a half members of the armed forces. It affects enlisted personnel with more than two years' service and officers with more than three years' service.

The American Roadbuilders' Association has told Congress that it can handle the President's proposed highway building program with economy and dispatch. The association agrees that the 101-billion-dollar plan is a job that staggers the imagination.

In Cleveland, CIO President Walter Reuther told the Auto Workers' convention that the new National Labor Federation, combining the AFL and the CIO, must launch an organizing and political crusade and guard against becoming stagnant. He called for a drive to organize the unorganized and to raise the substandard consumers and make them into first-class consumers.

The Labor Department predicts a moderate rise in employment for most of the nation this spring. It says a survey of employers' hiring plans shows that job gains are expected thru mid May in all but 16 of the country's 149 major industrial centers.

The alarm over the China crisis has quieted somewhat in Washington - and it is possible to turn eyes in another direction: to Europe and the approaching four-power conference. In comparison, Europe gives the impression of being more peaceable. However, a closer look shows that to be an illusion. When Premier Bulganin of the Soviet Union professed a positive attitude toward President Eisenhower's advocacy of a four-power meeting he was using words. We know by now the difference between words and deeds in dealing with the Soviet Union. Shortly after Marshal Bulganin used the friendly words, the Communists produced a deed, the first deed which can count as a Soviet response to the ratification of German rearmament. The deed was to start clamping a blockade on West Berlin. It was done without fanfare. It was accompanied by a lame explanation about an economic reason for it, but it was not a peaceable act; and it was a reminder that in the cold war the battleground of Berlin is always available to the Communists, for they always can lock their hands on Berlin's throat.

The Communist deed was to step up the tax on all road traffic entering West Berlin thru the Soviet zone. The tax on trucks was increased eleven times. This is nearly prohibitive. West Berlin gets 37% of its food and raw materials by road. City prices will rise catastrophically and employment fall just as badly unless relief is arranged. The news about this Soviet deed coincides with a great surge of talk about a four-power conference. Much of this talk is optimistic - not only about the conference being held but about its achieving a great deal. The Soviet deed might serve as a warning. I don't mean that the talks are going to fail, or that the West will be outmanoeuvred. That would be prophesying. All I mean is that the deed should bring back memories of what a tough rough-and-tumble experience it is to negotiate with the Kremlin.

The Communists don't just want harmony and happiness for everybody from a meeting. They want to prevent the arming of Germany at any cost. They want to split the Western Allies. They want to clear the way for a sweep of Asia. True, they want to achieve these objectives without war, and Moscow's protestations of peaceful purposes are accurate enough, since the objectives could not be achieved by an all-out war. But the projected four-power talks are not being entered in the hope or determination to end the cold war now - not even by us. Obviously, we should rejoice if they could result in a victory for disarmament in a safely free world, but we foresee the cold war lasting indefinitely.

Nevertheless, four-power talks can do a great deal. They can solve specific problems, like an Austrian treaty. They might even advance the date when Germany can be united, tho that would be expecting a lot. They might put the brakes on the arms race, so that the danger of an intercontinental push-button war was pushed back. But it is healthy for anyone viewing these pleasing prospects to feel the jolt of the increased road taxes at Berlin.

Such far-reaching actions are not accidentally timed by some underling of the Soviet empire. They happen at moments carefully selected at the top. I do not suggest that the jolt should dissuade us from entering a conference or do more than wake us up to the kind of stamina we shall need. Clarly, a conference has to be held - not only because some of our allies are committed to it, but for our own sake. We need a relaxation of tensions and an improvement in understanding and relations all the way 'round. The China crisis has startled many into realizing how easy it would be to be pushed into disaster. It has made a four-power conference appear somewhat more desirable than it did before.

This road tax at Berlin was an opening grab in a tussle, not the final throttling of a city - and West Berlin can get relief. The Bonn Government could bear the tax itself if it wanted to, tho it wouldn't very much want to, since that would be paying blackmail and doing it in public. It can retaliate; it can cut off all exports to East Germany. This would cripple the buyers more than the exporters, since West German products are essential to the East German economy. But Bonn will hesitate to do this as it could lead to Communist reprisals, like putting prohibitive taxes on barge and rail traffic into Berlin - and this could blow up a hurricane. All Bonn has done so far is to interrupt negotiations with East Germany for a new trade agreement. The Big Three in Berlin can protest against the taxes to the Soviet authorities on the Control Commission, but that won't get them very far.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the WORD FOR TODAY. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: (C O M M E R C I A L)

That's my word for today - and here's Mr. Murrow with his WORD FOR TODAY.

MURROW: When the Russians speak friendly words toward us and then start clamping a new blockade on West Berlin, we are reminded of an old Italian proverb: From saying to doing is a long step. And there are many in Washington who would use the blunt words of the Roman playwright Plautus: "Let deeds match words."

Good Night and Good Luck!

DIXON: (C O M M E R C I A L)

ANNC'R: This is the CBS RADIO NETWORK.

Ediphone trans..E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 31, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the Paris treaties to rearm West Germany. The vote was 14 to 1. North Dakota's Republican Senator Langer was the only one who voted no. The treaties now go to the full Senate, where final action may come tomorrow. Through these treaties, which would restore German soverignty and allow her to rearm as a full member of NATO, the West hopes to build a stronger bulwark against Communism in Europe.

In another action today the Foreign Relations Committee voted unanimously to request Secretary of State Dulles to disucss in a closed-door session the release of the Yalta papers. Chairman George said this is not an investigation; that the committee wants to ask Secretary Dulles why the documents included included informal remarks and materials as well as papers dealing directly with the formal decisions taken. Democrats have accused the Administration of releasing the docuaments for political purposes. Senator Sparkman today described a Republican summary of the papers as an attempt to disgrace former President Roosevelt.

The President today discussed the world situation with Democratic and Republican leaders of the Senate. And Republican Senator Wiley said later that the President has not made any decision on the question of defending Quemoy and the Matsus. He said that decision will depend on the development of facts in the future. Democratic Senator George said after the talks, "There is nothing alarming and there is no immediate crisis in the Far East."

The State Department says this country is trying to work out arrangements which would permit a delegation of Russian farmers to visit the United States. The idea was originally advanced by an Iowa paper, in commenting on reports of Soviet food difficulties. Now the State Department says that if details can be worked out, it would be handled as an exchange of agricultureal delegations between the two countries.

A purge of collective farm bosses is reported underway in Russia. Moscow radio says the Soviet plans to shift tens of thousands of Communist party officials to collective farms in an effort to boost lagging agricultural production.

There is a new developemtn in Indochina. One of the religious sects rebelling against Premier Diem of Free Vietnam has moved over to the side of the Government with its 25,000 troops; but the other two dissenting groups are still threatining more trouble.

Foreign Aid Chief Harold Stassen today informed the McClellan Senate Investigating subcommittee that it man not question any of his aides unless he or his Lawyers are on hand. The committee is investigating negotiations on a Pakistan grain shortage problem. One of Stassen's Executive Branch has to be free of any feeling that they will be called on to explain any recommendations they may make. This did not sway the committee. It immediately sent a subpoena for Stassen to appear next Wednesday and bring along every record every document relating to the Pakistan project. The Senate Banking committee, which investigated the stock market, today decided to have one of its subcommittees look into particular phases of the market, such things as proxy fights, uranium stocks and investment trends.

A special Justice Department committee has recommended to Attorney General Brownell that the Federal Fair Trade Law be repealed. After an eighteen months' study the committee contends that the law permits price-fixing agreements which conflict with our free enterprise system. The committee says these arrangements conflict with Federal anti-trust policy.

The President today signed the Military Pay bill, which gives an average 6½% pay raise to more than a million and a half members of the armed forces. It affects enlisted personnel with more than two years' service and officers with more than three years's service.

The American Roadbuilders's Association has told Congress that it can handle the President's proposed highway building program with economy and dispatch. The association agrees that the 101-billion-dollar plan is a job that staggers the imagination.

In Cleveland, CIO President Walter Reuther told the Auto Workers's convention that the new National Labor Federation, combining the AFof L and the CIO, must launch an organizing and political crusade and guard against becoming stagnent. He called for a drive to organize the unorganized and to raise the substandard consumers and make them into first-class consumers.

The Labor Department predicts a moderate rise in employment for most of the nation this spring. It says a survey of employers' hiring plans shows that job gains are expected through mid May in all but 16 of the country's 149 major insustrial centers.

The alarm over the China crisis has quieted somewhat in Washington - and it is possible to turn eyes on another direction: to Europe and the approaching four-power conference. In comparison, Europe gives the impression of being more peaceable. However, a closer look shows that to be an illusion. When Premier Bulganin of the Soviet Union professed a positive attitude toward President Eisenhower's advocacy of a four-power meeting he was using words. We know by now the difference between words and deeds in dealing with the Soviet Union. Shortly after Marshal Bulganin used the friendly words, the Communists produced a deed, the first deed which can count as a Soviet response to the ratification of German rearmament. The deed was to start clamping a blockade on West Berlin. It was done without fanfare. It was accompanied by a lame explanation about an economic reason for it, but it was not a peaceable act; and it was a reminder that in the cold war the battleground of Berlin is always available to the Communists, for they always can lock their hands on Berlin's throat.

The Communist deed was to step up the tax on all road traffic entering West Berlin through the Soviet zone. The tax on trucks was increased eleven times. This is nearly prohibitive. West Berlin gets 37% of its food and raw materials by road. City prices will rise catastrophically and employmend fall just as badly unless relief is arranged. The news about this Soviet deed coincided with a great surge of talk about a four-power conference. Much of this talk is optimistic - not only about the conference being held but about achieving a great deal. The Soviet deed might serve as a warning. I don't mean that the talks are going to fail, or that the West willbe outmaneuvered. That would be prophesying. All I mean is that the deed should bring back memories of what a tough rough-and-tumble experience it is to negotiate with the Kremlin.

The Communists don't just want harmony and happiness for everybody from a meeting. They want to prevent the arming of Germany at any cost. They want to split the Western Allies. They want to clear the way for a sweep of Asia. True, they want to achieve these objectives without war, and Moscow's protestations of peaceful purposes are accurate enough, since the objectives could not be achieved by an all-out war. But the projected four-power talks are not being entered in the hope or determination to end the cold war now - not even by us. Obviously, we should rejoice if they could result in a victory for disarmement in a safely free world, but we foresee the cold war lasting indefinitely.

Nevertheless, four-power talks can do a great deal. They can solve specific problems, like an Austrian treaty. They might even advance the date when Germany can be united, though that would be expecting a lot. They might put the brakes on the arms race, so that the danger of an intercontinental push-button war was pushed back. But it is healthy for any newviewing these pleasing prospects to feel the jolt of the increased road taxes at Berlin. Such far-reaching actions are not accidentally timed by some underling of the Soviet empire. They happen at moments carefully selected at the top. I do not suggest that the jolt should dissuade us from entering a conference or do more than wake us up to the kind of stamina we shall need. Clearly, a conference has to be held - not only because some of our allies are committed to it, but for our own sak. We need a relaxation of tensions and an improvement in understanding and relations all the way 'round. The China crisis has startled many into realizing how easy it would be to be pushed into disaster. It has made a four-power conference appear somewhat more desirable than it did before.

This road tax at Berlin was an opening grab in a tussle, not the final throttling of a city - and West Berlin can get relief. The Bonn Government could bear the tax itself if it wanted to, though it wouldn't very much want to, since that would be paying blackmail and doing it in public. Ti can retaliate; it can cut off all expoets to East Germany. This would cripple the buyers more than the exporters, since West German products are essential to the East German economy. But Bon will hesitate to do this as it would lead to Communist reprisals, like putting prohibitive taxes on barge and rail traffic into Berlin - and this could blow up a hurricane. All Bonn has done so far is to interrupt negotiations with East Germany for a new trade agreement. The Big Three in Berlin can protest against the taxes to the Soviet authorities on the Control Commission, but that won't get them very far.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: When the Russians speak friendly words toward us and then start clamping a new blockade on West Berlin, we are reminded of an old Italian proverb: From saying to doing is a long step. And there are many in Washington who would use the blunt words of the Roman playwright Plautus: "Let deeds match words."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Friday, April 1, 1955

This is the news:

The Senate today ratified the Paris treaties to re-arm West Germany. #

The vote was 76 to two with Republican Senators, Langer of North Dakota and Malone of Nevada voting "no." These treaties, approved recently by West Germany and France, have been approved by the other allies except Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark and Luxembourg. They are expected to take action within a month. The treaties: end the occupation of Germany by western troops.. permit the Germans to organize their own army and air force. AND admit West Germany into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Chairman George says they will "improve the chances for a Big Four or Big Five meeting that will produce something more constructive and helpful than stalemate and propaganda."

The Senate today was still talking about what the President should do if the Chinese Communists invade the Quemoy and Matsu islands. #

Democratic Senator Morse of Oregon proposed that the Nationalists evacuate both islands. Senator Mc Carthy wants the President to make it clear that the islands will be defended. Morse says if we defend the islands, we'll be taking part in a civil war that's none of our business. McCarthy says the President is adopting a deadly dangerous attitude..in refusing to say whether we'll defend the islands. Mc Carthy accused Democratic Senator Kefauver of "appeasement" because Kefauver charged recently that some government officials are plotting to get us into war. And Senator Smith of New Jersey, ranking Republican on the Foreign Relations Committee, says he was wrong in saying--yesterday--that the President does not think the Russians would support a Chinese Communist attack on Matsu and Quemoy.

On Formosa, which we are pledged to defend, the Nationalist commander says he doesn't need American ground troops to defend the island. But he does need our air and naval support.

The Philippines today experienced their worst earthquake in years. The Philippine News Service says at least 164 people were killed..hundreds of homes flattened.. concrete bridges and highways ripped open.

In Great Britain, the Conservatives scored solid gains in the nation's county council elections.

And in Germany, west German truckers are paying the new high Communist taxes to keep the highway open to west Berlin. The West calls the tax political blackmail...retribution for West German ratification of the Paris agreements.

In Washington, The Senate Investigating Subcommittee says it has served a supbena on Foreign Aid Director Stassen to appear on Wednesday with all records concerning a project to build grain elevators in Pakistan. Stassen's office says he has not been served with the subpena..that Stassen feels this would be "superfluous" because he intends to appear before the committee voluntarily.

The Interstate Commerce Commission today threw out government claims that the nation's railroads owe the government between two and three billion dollars...in refunds on World War Two military freight bills. The case was started in 1946 by former Attorney General Clark. The Commission said today that the government had no basis for seeking the refunds.

The President today paid tribute to two newspaper publishers who died a little more than 24 hours apart: Joseph Pulitzer of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and Robert McCormick of the Chicago Tribune. The President said:"Although frequently on opposite sides of public issues, both were staunch champaions of a free press so essential to our freedoms."

The President today withdrew the NOMINATION of retied brigadier-general Julis C. Holmes to be ambassador to Iran. The appointment had been approved by the Foreign Relations Committee. But Holmes asked that it be withdrawn because of advice from his doctor.

Carl Fritts, of the Automotive Safety Foundation, told Congress today that the completion of the 40-thousand mile system of interstate modern superhighways would mean that 35-hundred lives could be saved each YEAR.

In 19 plants of the U.S. Rubber Company some 35-thousand C.I.O. workers went on strike at midnight...for a longer vacation and other benefits.

Here in New York Henry (The Dutchman) Grunewald was sentenced to five years in prison, and fined 10-thousand dollars, for conspiracy in tax-fixes involving 160-thousand dollars. Grunewald is 62. Another defendent, Attorney Max Halperin, 70, of New York, was sentenced to five years and fined 8-thousand dollars.

And Major General Whitney, chief aide to General McArthur, said today that General McArthur did not plead for Russian help in the war against Japan..prior to the Yalta conference. Whitney said that an entry in the "Forrestal Diaries" suggesting this, was either written by someone else or that the late James V. Forrestal was "even then suffering from a mental disorder."

Edward R. Murrow: April 1, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

An announcement in Australia today, that the Australian Commonwealth will send land, sea and air forces to Malaya, to fight at the side of the British and New Zealanders against Communist terrorists, is being presented as a response to a plea by Secretary Dulles, at the Bangkok meeting of the South East Asia Treaty Organization. # On the face of it, this is a little incomprehensible, for it really is not Mr. Dulles's concern, whether Australia sends troops to defend a valuable piece of the British Empire.

However, you may recall that Prime Minister Menzies of Australia showed up in Washington, after the Bangkok meeting, and held quiet talks with our top officials. And if one were to guess that today's announcement from Australia is part of something taking shape in planning stronger defense against Communism in Asia, he might not be far wrong.

Attention in this country has been so focussed on Quemoy and Matsu as to lose sight of the wider problem of organizing strength to meet the rising Communist danger elsewhere in the Far East. It is about this that talks have been held; it was about this, that Mr. Menzies came to Washington. Today's promise of Australian forces for Malaya may clear the way for a number of moves. One might be for the United States itself to assume stronger obligations to share the defense of Malaya than already contained in the SEATO pact. In return for such a pledge, Australia might strengthen its commitments to defend South Korea and Indochina. Australia was one of the sixteen nations fighting for the United Nations in Korea, and still has troops there in the Commonwealth division.

To get to a still more important possibility, Australia might promise to help defend Formosa, if the Communists attacked there. This pledge, however, would not be given before the unclear status of the coastal islands was resolved. Australia will not fight for them. Mr. Menzies made that clear when he was here.

Under the Anzus treaty - that is our alliance with Australia and New Zealand - Australia is bound to help the United States if we are attacked. But it would be going beyond that commitment if it promised to help defend Formosa.

What ~~one~~ can be seen emerging is the three-front idea of Secretary Dulles, that is, the assurance that if the Chinese Communists agress anywhere they will find themselves fighting simultaneously in North, Central and Southeast Asia. This thesis has not yet won the endorsement of Sir Anthony Eden. He doesn't like to be bound to fight in North Asia, and has been cautious about making a binding promise to defend Formosa.

It would appear that Mr. Menzies is taking up a position between Sir Anthony and Mr. Dulles. He is willing to subscribe to the three-front idea and help in Formosa if the United States will do something additional in Malaya and will give up the coastal islands. Whether the United States does so remains to be seen. But it would help Mr. Menzies to win support for his own expansion of Australia's commitments. He faces strong opposition at home, for the Labor Party is on record against sending Australian forces even to Malaya.

But in one respect Mr. Menzies stayed close to Eden. That was in refusing help in Formosa while the status of the coastal islands is unclear, and in taking no part in defending the islands. Canada, Britain and France are all against defending the islands. The pressure on the Administration to give up this defense is about as strong as friendly diplomatic relations permit. It is about as great as the pressure by certain of the President's military and political advisers to make it clear he will defend them.

The Senators who were briefed by the President on foreign policy yesterday, came away with the impression that the views of our Allies weighed heavily with him. Whether he mentioned the possibility of an Australian promise to help defend Formosa is not disclosed. ~~But much a~~

But such a promise might develop into a pattern and bring more promises of aid. This may be the basis for reports published today that when we get adequate guarantees of help in Formosa we could give up the coastal islands, for that no longer would look like a show of weakness.

The Senators who heard the President got the impression that he has not decided to abandon the islands. But they also got the impression that he would not choose to defend them unless it were pretty unmistakable that the Reds really were aiming at Formosa, not just at the islands.

So far the Communist strategy has been to proceed down the coast methodically, starting above the Tachens and moving along till now they are opposite Matsu in their build-up, though preparations may not be finished. If they continue like this they would attack Matsu before they are ready to attack Quemoy.

An assault just strong enough to take Matsu would not look like a blow aimed at Formosa. So if the President wanted to interpret closely the authority given him by Congress, he would not feel obliged to defend Matsu by itself. And if he knew he was gaining international support for the defense of Formosa, he might find it justifiable to give up the coastal islands altogether.

The temptation to prophesy frequently overcomes even modest men. Mark Twain once said of prophecy: "It is the restfullest vocation there is. When the spirit of prophecy comes upon you, you merely cake your intellect and lay it off in a cool place for a rest; and unship your jaw and leave it alone. It will work itself. The result is prophecy."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 1, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Senate today ratified the Paris treaties to re-arm West Germany.

The vote was 76 to two, with Republican Senators Langer of North Dakota and Malone of Nevada voting "no". These treaties, approved recently by West Germany and France, have been approved by the other allies except Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark, and Luxembourg. They are expected to take action within a month. The treaties end the occupation of Germany by western troops. ....permit the Germans to organize their own army and air force..and admit West Germany into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Chairman George says they will "improve the chances for a Big Four or Big Five meeting that will produce something more constructive and helpful than stalemate and propaganda."

The Senate today was still talking about that the President should do if the Chinese Communists invade the Quemoy and Matsu islands.

Democratic Senator Morse of Oregon proposed that the Nationalists evacuate both islands. Senator McCarthy wants the President to make it clear that the islands will be defended. Morse says it we defend the islands we'll be taking part in a civil war that's none of our business. McCarthy says the President is adopting a deadly dangerous attitude..in refusing to say whether we'll defend the islands. McCarthy accused Democratic Senator Kefauver of "appeasement" because Kefauver charged recently that some government officials are plotting to get us into war. And Senator Smith of New Jersey, ranking Republican on the Foreign Relations Committee, says he was wrong in saying--yesterday--that the President does not think the Russians would support a Chinese Communist attack on Matsu and Quemoy.

On Formosa, which we are pledged to defend, the Nationalist commander says he doesn't need American ground troops to defend the island. But he does need our air and naval support.

The Philippines today experienced their worst earthquake in years. The Philippine News Service says at least 163 people were killed...hundreds of homes flattened..concrete bridges and highways ripped open.

In Great Britain, the Conservatives scored solid gains in the nation's county council elestions.

And in Germany, West German truckers are paying the new high Communist taxes to keep the highway open to West Berlin. The West calls the tax political blackmail..retribution for West German ratification of the Paris agreements.

In Washington, the Senate Investigating Subcommittee says it has served a subpoena on Foreign Aid Director Stassen to appear on Wednesday with all records concerning a project to build grain elevators in Pakistan.

Stassen's office says he has not been served with the subpoena..that Stassen feels this would be "superfluous" because he intents to appear before the committee voluntarily.

The Interstate Commerce Commission today threw out government claims that the nation's railroads owe the government between two and three billion dollars ..in refunds on World War Two military freight bills. The case was started in 1946 by former Attorney General Clark. The Commission said today that the government had no basis for seeking the refunds.

The President today paid tribute to two newspaper publishers who died a little more than 24 hours apart: Juseph Politzer of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and Robert McCromick of the Chicago Tribune. The President said: "Although frequently on opposite sides of public issues, both were staunch champions of a free press so essential to our freedoms."

The President today withdrew the nomination of retired brigadier general Julius C. Holmes to be ambassador to Iran. The appointment had been approved by the Foreign Relations Committee. But Holmes asked that it be withdrawn because of advice from his doctor.

Carl Fritts, of the Automotive Safety Foundation, told Congress today that the completion of the 40-thousand mile system of interstate modern superhighways would mean that 35-hundred lives could b saved each year.

In 19 plants of the U.S. Rubber Company some 35-thousand C.I.O. workers went on strike at midnight..for a longer vacation and other benefits.

Here in New York, Henry (The Dutchman) Grunewald was sentenced to five years in prison, and fined 10-thousand dollars, for conspiracy in tax-fixes involving 160-thou and dollars. Grunewald is 62. Another defendent, Attorney Max Halperin, 70, of New York, was sentenced to five years and fined 8-thousand dollars.

And Major General Whitney, chief aide to General McArthur, said today that General McArthur did not plead for Russian help in the war against Japan.. ..prior to the Yalta conference. Whitney said that an entry in the "Forrestal Diaries" suggesting this, was either written by someone else or that the late James V. Forrestal was "even then suffering from a mental disorder."

An announcement in Australia today, that the Australian Commonwealth will send land, sea and air forces to Malaya, to fight at the side of the British and New Zealanders against Communist terrorists, is being presented as a response to a plea by Secretary Dulles, at the Bangkok meeting af the South East Asia Treaty Organization.

On the face of it, this is a little incomprehensible, for it really is not Mr. Dulles's concern, whether Australia sends troops to defend a valuable piece of the British Empire.

However, you may recall that Prime Minister Menzies of Australia showed up in Washington, after the Bangkok meeting, and held quiet talks with our top officials. And if one were to guess that today's announcement from Australia is part of something taking shape in planning stronger defense against Communism in Asia, he might not be far wrong.

Attention in this country has been so focussed on Quemoy and Matsu as to lose sight of the wider problem of organizing strength to m et the rising Communist danger elsewhere in the Far East. It is about this that talks have been held; it was about this, that Mr. Menzies came to Washington. Today's promise of Australian forces for Malaya may clear the way for a number of moves. One might be for the United States itself to assume stronger obligations to share the defense of Malaya than already contained in the SEATO pact. In return for such a pledge, Australia might strengthen its commitments to defend South Korea and Indochina. Australia was one of the sixteen nations fighting for the United Nations in Korea, and still has troops there in the Commonwealth division.

To get to a still more important possibility, Australia might promise to help defend Formosa, if the Communists attacked there. This pledge, however, would not be given before the unclear status of the coastal islands was resolved. Australia will not fight for them. Mr. Menzies made that clear when he was here.

Under the Anzus treaty - that is our alliance with Australia and New Zealand - Australia is bound to help the United States if we are attacked. But if would be going beyond that commitment if it promised to help defend Formosa.

What can be seen emerging is the three-front idea of Secretary Dulles, that is, the assurance that if the Chinese Communists agress anywhere, they will find themselves fighting simultaneously in North, Central and Southeast Asia. This thesis has not yet won the endorsement of Sir Anthony Eden. He doesn't like to be bound to fight in North Asia, and has been cautious about making a binding promise to defend Formosa.

It would appear that Mr. Menzies is taking up a position between Sir Anthony and Mr. Dulles. He is willing to subscribe to the three-front idea and help in Formosa, if the United States will do something additional in Malaya and will give up the coastal islands. Whether the United States does so remains to be seen. But it would help Mr. Merzies to win support for his own expansion of Australias commitments. He faces strong opposition at home, for the Labor Party is on record against sending Australian forces even to Malaya.

But in one respect Mr. Menzies stayed close to Eden. That was in refusing to help in Formosa while the status of the coastal islands is unclear, and in taking no part in defending the islands. Canada, Britain and France are all against defending the islands. The pressure on the Administration to give up this defense is about as strong as friendly diplomatic relations permit. It is about as great as the pressure by certain of the President's military and political advisers to make it clear he will defend the.

The Senators who were breifed by the President on foreign policy yesterday, came away with the impression that the views of our Allies weighed heavily with him. Whether he mentioned the possibility of an Australian promise to help defend Formosa is not disclosed.

But such a promise might develop into a pattern and bring more promises of aid. This may be the basis for erports published today that when we get adequate guarantees of help in Formosa we could give up the coastal islands, for that no longer would look like a show of weakness.

The Senators who heard the President got the impression that he has hot decided to abandon the islands. But they also got the impression that he would not choose to defend them unless it were pretty unmistakable that the Reds really were aiming at Formosa, not just at the islands.

So far the Communist strategy has been to proceed down the coast methodically, starting above the Tachens and moving along till now whey are opposite Matsu in their build-up, though preparations may not be finished. If they continue like this they would attack Matsu before they are ready to attack Quemoy.

An assault just strong enough to take Matsu would not look like a blow aimed at Formosa. So if the President wanted to interpret closely the authority biven him by Congress, he could feel obliged to defend Matsu by itself. And if he knew he was gaining international support for the defense of Formosa, he might find it justifiable to give up the coastal islands altogether.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The temptation to prophesy frequently overcomes even modest men. Mark Twain once said of prophecy: " t is the restfullest vocation there is. When the spirit of prophecy comes upon you, you merely take your intellect and lay it off in a cool place for a rest; and unship your jaw and leave it alone. It will work itself. The result is prophecy."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday April 18th 1955 -

Good evening. Here's what happened today:

The Chinese Communists have had their first purge since they ~~seized~~ conquered the Chinese mainland in 1949. The Peiping Radio says that Kao Kang, described as the Manchurian Stalin, the man who bossed Red China's 5-year-plan, has committed suicide. Peiping says this happened after he was purged from the Communist party for "conspiring" to seize the "leadership of the party and the state." Peiping also tells us that another Communist official, party secretary for East China and boss of Shanghai, has been purged for attacking the party. Apparently this one is still alive. Both men have long been considered high in the pro-Russian wing of the Chinese party. //

A high Chinese Nationalist said today that the Communists have completed one airfield and are nearing completion on another... both on the mainland near ~~the~~ invasion-threatened Quemoy and Matsu islands. And Army Secretary Stevens, visiting Chiang Kai Shek on Formosa today, told reporters that the Nationalist army is "an important bulwark of the free world."

In Indo-China the rebels have sent four more companies of troops across the Mekong River to threaten Saigon with new civil war.

Japanese newspapers today are criticizing Premier Hatoyama and accusing him of "talking too much" and "losing face" because Secretary of State Dulles has refused to talk with the Japanese foreign minister at this time. Opposition parties and even some of Hatoyama's supporters are accusing the government of a major diplomatic blunder. The plan was to send Foreign Minister Shigemitsu to Washington to discuss Japan's defense budget. After Mr. Dulles said he had no time for such a meeting now, Premier Hatoyama said he regretted having announced his plans before "ascertaining the convenience of the other side."

In Moscow today former premier Malenkov showed up at a party honoring the Communist government of Hungary. This was news only because Malenkov had been absent from Soviet functions for nearly two weeks..There had been doubts expressed in western circles about his whereabouts..and speculation that he might have been liquidated.

Foreign Minister Molotov today demanded that the United States return Valery Lysikov, the teen-aged Russian who recently crossed into west Berlin and obtained political asylum. Mr. Molotov says the boy had difficulty in school..had shown instability..was flunking geomoetry. Molotov also charges that the boy was intimidated by American officials when he was recently interviewed in Berlin by his Russian parents. But officials of the United States Escapee program, in Frankfurt reject Molotov's charges. Further, they say: "The kid knows his own mind and has the strength of his own convictions."

In London tonight, Sir Winston Churchill was host at a dinner party to Queen Elizabeth and 50 other guests, who included the top officials of the government. His family. Close friends and leaders of the opposition party. All reports indicate that this is Sir Winston's farewell party as prime minister..that he will HAND his resignation to the queen tomorrow or Wednesday. It's the biggest story of the year for Great Britain but there are no newspapers to tell it. The papers have been strike-bound for the past eleven days. Sir Winston has called a cabinet meeting for tomorrow when he's expected to say farewell to the men who have worked with him since 1951. And tonight, Sir Anthony Eden, who is expected to succeed Churchill, conferred with the men he's expected to have at his side.

In Berlin, East German trade experts refused to bargain with West Germans on the Communist-imposed truck tax on highways into Berlin.

The Eastern members of the trade committee kept the Westerners waiting for five hours. Then they showed up, handed the Westerners a letter, and ~~walked~~ strode out of the room.

Isreal today asked the United Nations Security Council to hold an urgent meeting to consider charges that Egypt has engaged in "aggressive actions" along the Isreali-Egyptian ~~border~~ frontier. A spokesman says Isreal wants the Council to meet as quickly as possible.

In Washington today, Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, told a Senate committee that atomic weapons are now "conventional" in our military strategy. This, he said, permits a reduction in our military manpower. Admiral Radford says he's in "full accord" with the Administration's program..including the sharp reduction in over-all manpower strength. And Defense Secretary Wilson submitted a statement saying we have now developed a sound, long-range defense program with "tremendous striking power" to match the growing Communist threat.

Democratic Senator George predicted ~~today~~ that the President's reciprocal trade agreements program will be approved by the Senate without any "destructive amendments." The program has been under attack..and in trouble. But George said he believes that when the showdown comes. after the Senators return on April 13 from their Easter vacation.. "we are not going to adopt as many amendments as it has been generally thought we would."

Chairman McClellan of the Senate investigating subcommittee conferred today with Foreign Aid Chief Stassen. They talked over their differences and reported progress toward harmony. But McClellan said "everything at issue was not finally resolved." He said he's determined to undertake a full investigation of a Stassen project to build some grain elevators in Pakistan. Stassen, who has refused to permit his employes to testify without a lawyer, says his only concern is to protect the rights of employes trying to do a job for the government.

The Supreme Court today upheld the conviction of former Republican Representative Bramblett of California on charges of payroll padding. Bramblett, who did not run for re-election, was convicted more than a year ago of making false statements to the government about his office payroll. The Supreme Court today cleared the way for a federal district court in Washington to sentence him. Bramblett faces a maximum penalty of 35 years in prison and a 70-thousand dollar fine.

Federal Judge Holtzoff ruled today that the government does not have the right to set nation-wide minimum wage standards, in industries that do contract work for the government. It was the first decision of its kind and MARKED a victory for textile mills which have been fighting the practise for years. Labor Secretary Mitchell has set a minimum wage of one-dollar-an-hour among textile firms doing government business. Judge Holtzoff says that under the law, the Secretary can only set minimum wages on a local basis. He called Mitchell's order "invalid and a contravention of the statute." The Labor Department says it will carry its fight to the supreme court, if necessary.

TVA...the Tennessee Valley Authority..today proposed legislation to provide funds, in addition to federal appropriations, to expand TVA's vast power system. The Authority wants power to issue revenue bonds to be secured by federal power revenues....And it would enter agreements with local distributors of T.V.A. power who might want to build their own generating units.

The Navy today appointed Captain Roy Lee Johnson to be the first commander of the super-carrier Forrestal. one of the most coveted assignments in the Navy. The 60-thousand-ton Forrestal to be commissioned later this year. Johnson, a native of Big Bend, Louisiana, is now head of the air weapons system analysis staff at Navy headquarters.

LeSueur april 4, 1955

We're fond of saying how important face is to the Far East, so its most unfortunate that we've been compelled to give Japan an apparent slap across the face on the very eve of Asia's most important post-war conference...

For while this country has been debating whether or not to defend the little islands of Matsu and Kimmoy, we've suddenly been made aware of another big hole in our Far East policy... the growing danger that Asia's richest prize may SLIP out of its postwar ties with the United States..//

The public professions of continued friendship between this country and Japan, have until NOW, // covered up the fact, that serious rifts have developed between us and Asia's most powerful industrial nation...//

Within Japan, the month-old government of Prime Minister Hatoyama is taking the full brunt of blame for exposing Japan's prestige to Secretary of State Dulles's refusal to arrange rush talks with the Japanese Foreign Minister..

Dulles sent word that he was too busy at the moment to and its a fact that such talks already are in to receive him, [redacted], progress on a lower level, in TOKYO between American and Japanese financial and military experts, // regarding Japan's desire to reduce her contribution to her rearmament program

[redacted]e...

Japan's economic plight is no secret, of course and the nation has been edging toward bankruptcy ever since the end of the Korean War, [redacted] with the consequent [redacted]e reduction of a [redacted] the vast American military purchases there.. // Premier Hatoyama won his election a month ago on a pledge to normalize relations with Red [redacted] China and Russia, while still remaining friendly with the United States, [redacted] for his government is essentially too weak to combat both the economic crisis and the necessity for [redacted] assuming [redacted] a RE*ARMAMENT burden..

The result has been more concessions to the Soviet Union and Red China in the face of the anti-rearmament and neutralist sentiments of Japan's powerful left-wing trade unions...

Secretary Dulles' apparent slap at [redacted] Japan's new government,

[redacted] By his refusal to arrange immediate talks with its foreign minister,

[redacted] grows partially [redacted] out of a conflict within this country itself...A basic conflict between the State Department negotiators and the military men of the Pentagon, on how to treat with Japan. The Pentagon apparently believes that Japanese rearmament should be pushed to the maximum, while the State Department is developing a concept that Japan's economic and political structure must be shored-up first...

One of the complaints of the state department is the inability of their negotiators to talk tough to the Japanese... The Japanese are no mean negotiators themselves, and they place great weight on the frequent public statements of United States Senators that Japan is absolutely indispensable to this country... In fact, despite the honeyed words of Japan's top officials, American negotiators think the Japanese are deliberately dragging their feet because they think they are essential to us. and perhaps they are - at any rate

Japan has declined to talk seriously about a number of issues on which the state department is pressing for settlement...// The most important of these being Japan's own rearmament and also her reluctance to accept implementation of the sale of American agricultural surplusses. in Japan

The focus of the Japanese argument in all these negotiations

is their plea that because of economic conditions, the island nation needs another year, at least, before putting its rearmament program into effect... This apparently is what Japan's foreign Minister, again wished to plead to Dulles

The Japanese do argue with validity that pressure from the left-wing parties which hold more than a third of the seats in Parliament, make it very difficult to boost defense costs at the expense of social services..

The Japanese meanwhile are playing host to a huge chinese Communist trade delegation, and, at the same time, are negotiating with Russia, for better trade and credit facilities...

The effort of the Japanese government to rush its foreign minister to Washington, to try to extract further concessions from the United States, is symptomatic not only of Japan's shaky political and economic structure, but it also marks her gradual re-emergence on the international scene...And underscores an effort to pry herself loose from restrictive relations with the United States, and to plot a more independent foreign policy... One which may unfortunately play into the hands of the communists and their expected powerful preachments of neutrality at the coming crucial anti-imperialist conferance in indonesia...

cue/ I'll be back on a moment with a footnote to the Nun beat here Bob Oxon

At Number Ten Downing Street, a cherubic figure in formal clothes with knee breeches, opened the front door to allow in the guests of honor to his farewell dinner: The Queen and her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh.

As the door closed on Sir Winston Churchill's black breeches and decorations as a Knight of the Garter, a lone voice in the crowd outside was heard to remark wistfully: "It just won't be the same without him."

This is Larry Leseuer saying goodnite!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 4, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LESUEUR: Good evening. Here's what happened today:

The Chinese Communists have had their first purge since they conquered the Chinese mainland in 1949. The Peiping Radio says that Kao Kang, described as the Manchurian Stalin...the man who bossed Red China's 5-year-plan... has committed suicide. Peiping says this happened after he was purged from the Communist party for "conspiring" to seize the "leadership of the party and the state." Peiping also tells us that another Communist official, party secretary for East China and boss of Shanghai, has been purged for attacking the party. Apparently this one is still alive. Both men have long been considered high in the pro-Russian wing of the Chinese party.

A high Chinese Nationalist said today that the Communists have completed one air field and are nearing completion an another..both on the mainland near invasion-threatened Quemoy and Matsu islands. And Army Secretary Stevens visiting Chiang Kai Shek on Formosa today, told reporters that the Nationalist army is "an important bulwark of the free world."

In Indo-China the rebels have sent four more companies of troops across the Mekong River to threaten Siagon with new civil war.

In Moscow today former Premier Malenkov showed up at a party honoring the Communist government of Hungary. This was news only because Malenkov had been absent from Soviet functions for nearly two weeks...there had been doubts expressed in western circles about his whereabouts..and speculation that he might have been liquidated.

Foreign Minister Molotov today demanded that the Unoted States return Valery Lysikov, the teen-aged Russian who recently crossed into West Berlin and obtained political asylum. Mr. Molotov says the boy had difficulty in school..had shown instability..was flunking geometry. Molotov also charges that the boy was intimidated by American officials when he was recently interviewed in Berlin by his Russian parents. But officials of the United States Escapee program in Frankfurt reject Molotov's charges. Further, they say: "The kid knows his own mind and has the strength of his own convictions."

In London tonight, Sir Winston Churchill was host at a dinner party to Queen Elizabeth and 50 other guests who incluced the top officials of the government..his family.. close friends and leaders of the opposition party. All reports indicate that this is Sir Winston's farewell party as Prime Minister..that he will hand his resignation to the queen tomorrow or Wednesday. It's the biggest story of the year for Great Britain but there are no newspapers to tell it. The papers have seen strike-bound for the past eleven days. Sir Winston has called a cabinet meeting for tomorrow when he's expected to say farewell to the men who have worked with hin since 1951. And tonight, Sir Anthony Eden, who is expected to succeed Churchill, conferred with the men he's expected to have at his side.

In Berlin, East German trade experts refused to bargain with West Germans on the Communist-imposed truck tax on highways into Berlin. The Eastern members of the trade committee kept the Westerners waiting for five hours. Then they showed up, handed the Westerners a letter and strode out of the room.

Israel today asked the United Nations Security Council to hold an urgent meeting to consider charges that Egypt has engaged in "aggressive actions" along the Israeli-Egyptian fronties. A spokesman says Israel wants the Council to meet as quickly as possible.

In Washington today, Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, told a Senate committee that atomic weapons are now "conventional" in our military strategy. This, he said, permits a reduction in our military manpower. Admiral Radford says he's in "full accord" with the Administration's program ..including the sharp reduction in over-all manpower strength. And Defense Secretary Wilson submitted a statement saying we have now developed a sound, long-range defense program with "tremendous striking power" to match the growing Communist threat.

Democratic Senator George predicted that the President's reciprocal trade agreements program will be approved by the Senate without any "destructive amendments." The program has been under attack..and in trouble. But George said he believes that when the showdown comes..after the Senators return on April 13 from their Easter vacation.."we are not going to adopt as many amendments as it's been generally thought we would."

Chairman McClellan of the Senate investigating sub committee conferred today with Foreign Aid Chief Stassen. They talked over their differences and reported progress toward harmony. But McClellan sais "everything at issue was not finally resolved." He said he's determined to undertake a full investigation of a Stassen project to build some grain elevators in Pakistan. Stassen who has refused to permit his employees to testify without a lawyer says his only concern is to protect the rights of employees trying to do a job for the government.

The Surpreme Court today upheld the conviction of former Republican Representative Bramblett of California on charges of payroll padding. Bramblett, who did not run for re-election, was convicted more than a year ago of making false statements to the government about his office payroll. The Supreme Court today cleared the way for a federal district court in Washington to sentence him. Brmablett faces a maximum penalty of 35 years in prison and a 70-thousand dollar fine.

Federal Judge Holtzoff ruled today that the government does not have the right to set nation-wide mimimum wage standards in industries that do contract work for the government. It was the first decision of its kind and marked a victory for textile mills wich have been fighting the practice for years. Labor Secretary Mitchell has set a minimum wage of one dollar an hour among textile firms doing government business. Judge Holtzoff says that under the law the Secretary can only set mimimum wages on a local basis. He called Mitchell's order "invalid and a contravention of the statute." The Labor Department says it will carry its fight to the supreme court, if necessary.

TVA ...the Tennessee Valley Authority..today proposed legislation to provide funds, in addition to federal appropriations, to expand TVA's vast power system. The Authority wants power to issue revenue bonds to be secured by federal power revenues...and it would enter agreements with local distributors of T.V.A. power who might want to build their own generating units.

The Navy today appointed Captain Roy Lee Johnson to be the first commander of the super-carrier Forrestal...one of the most coveted assignments in the Navy. The 60-thousand ton Forrestal to be commissioned later this year. Johnson, a native of Big Bend, Louisiana, is now head of the air weapons system analysis staff at Navy headquarters.

We're fond of saying how important face is the the Far East, so it is most unfortuante that we've been compelled to give Japan an apparent slap across the face on the very eve of Aisa's most important post-war conference...

For while this country has been debating whether or not to defend the little islands of Matsu and Quemoy, we've suddenly been made aware of another big hole in our Far East policy..the growing danger that Asia's richest prize may slip out of its postwar ties with the United States.

The public professions of cintinued friendship between this country and Japan, have until NOW, covered up the fact that serious rifts have developed between us and Asia's most powerful industrial nation.

Within Japan, the month-old government of Prime Minister Hatoyama is taking the full brunt of blame for exposing Japan's prestige to Secretary of State Dulles's refusal to arrange rush talks with the Japanese Foreign Minister.

Dulles sent word that he was too busy at the moment to receive him, and it is a fact that such talks already are in progress on a lower level in Tokyo between American and Japanese financial and military experts, regarding Japan's desire to reduce her contribution to her rearmament program.

Japan's economic plight is no secret, of course, and the nation has been edging toward bankruptcy ever since the end of the Korean War, with the consequent reduction of the vast American military purchases there...Premier Hatoyama won his election a month ago on a pledge to normalize relations with Red China and Russia, while still remaining friendly with the United States, for his government is essentially too weak to combat both the economic crisis and the necessity for assuming a reaemament burden.

The result has been more concessions to the Soviet Union and Red China in the face of the anti-rearmament and neautralist sentiments of Japan's powerful left-wing trade unions.

Secretary Dulles' apparent slap at Japan's new government, by his refuals to arrange immediate talks with its foreign minister, grows practically out of a conflict within this country itself...a basic conflict between the State Department negotiators and the military men of the Pentagon, on how to treat with Japan. The Pentagon apparently believes that Japanese rearmament should bo pushed to the maximum, while the State Department is developing a concept that Japan's economic and political structure must be shored-up first.

One of the complaints of the State Department is the inability of their negotiators to talk tough with the Japanese. The Japanese are no mean negotiators themselves, and they place great weight on the frequent public statements of the United States Senators that Japan is absolutely indispensable to this country..in fact despite the honeyed words of Japan's top officials, American negotiators think the Japanese are deliberately dragging their feet because they think they are essential to us and perhaps they are. At any rate, Japan has declined to talk seriously about a number of issues on which the state department is pressing for settlement...The most important of these being Japan's own rearmement ans also her reluctance to accept implementation of the sale of American agricultural surplusses in Japan.

The focus of Japanese argument in all these negotiations is their plea that because of economic condidions, the island nation needs another year, at least, bevore putting the rearmament program into effect. This apparently is what Japan's foreign Minister again wished to plead to Dulles.

The Japanese do argue with validity that pressure from the left-wimg parties which hold more than a third of the seats in Parliament, make it very difficult to boost defense costs at the expense of social serivces.

The Japanese meanwhile are playing host to a huge Chinese Communist trade delegation, and, at the same time, are negotiating with Russia, for better trade and credit facilities...

The effort of the Japanese government to rush its foreign minister to Washington, to try to extract further concessions from the United States, is symptomatic not only of Japan's shaky political and economic structure, but also it makes her gradual re-emergence on the international scene..And underscores an effort to pry herself loose from restrictive relations with the United States, and to plot a more independent foreign policy...one which may , unfortunately play into the hands of the Communista and their expected powerful preachments of neautrality at the coming crucial anti-imperialist conference in Indonesia.

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: At Number Ten Downing Street, a cherubic figure in formal clothes with knee breeches, opened the front door tonight to allow in the guests of honor to his farewell dinner: The Queen and her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh. As the door closed on Sir Winston Churchill's black breeches and decorations as a Knight of the Garter, a lone voice in the crowd outside was heard to remark wistfully: "It just won't be the same without him."

This is Larry Lesueur saying goodnight.

Tuesday
April 5 1955 Lesson

(1)

Good evening ~~everyone~~. here's what happened today. //

The 80-year-old Sir Winston Churchill has resigned, as prime minister of Great Britain. And tomorrow Queen Elizabeth is expected to name Sir Anthony Eden, to take his place. In a few minutes we'll hear direct reports from London on this event.

The President said today ~~[illegible]~~ in a filmed message to Sir Winston: "We shall never accept the fact that we are to be denied your counsel, your advice." He added: "We know that you will never be backward in bringing forth your great wisdom and courage when we appeal to you for help, as all of us are bound to do."

And West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer described Sir Winston, as "the personification of the spirit of the western world in our times."

A special report on Sir Winston's retirement will be heard over many of these stations..tonight at 10 p.m. eastern time.

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles told reporters that if there is a war in the Formosa area it will be caused by Communist China's provocation and initiative. He said we are trying to deal with the Chinese on a civilized and peaceful basis. We want peace. And we have made it perfectly clear to ~~the~~ Red China that we want no war. Mr. Dulles also said that our only committment to the Chinese Nationalists is to defend Formosa and the Pescadores. He said: "We have no committment of any kind, sort or description, expressed or implied" which binds us to anything more.

But Republican Senator Knowland said again today that if we abandon Quemoy and Matsu to get a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait, it would be nothing but surrender on the installment plan. He said we should stop talking about disarmament and appeasement on Formosa.

Navy Secretary Thomas told a Senate committee that we are prepared to use ground forces, if necessary, to defend Formosa. And Admiral Carney, the chief of naval operations, indicated it might be necessary to use ground forces to defend the Nationalist island against Communist attack.

Admiral Carney also told the Senators that he did NOT predict that the Communists might attack in the Formosa area about the middle of this month. Democratic Senator Ellendar of Louisiana told the Admiral that he had been quoted by newsmen as saying the attack could be expected about April 15th. Admiral Carney replied: "I have not changed my mind because I never made such a statement." Carney said he had discussed with the reporters the capabilities of the known (or possible) enemy and OUR capabilities for meeting that. He said no experienced military man would claim the ability to predict what was in the plans or minds of the possible enemy. When asked why he had not stepped forward when and denied the report attributed to him, Admiral Carney said: "I decided I would make no further statement. I didn't think it would do any good." //

A House committee released testimony today by Walter S. Robertson, assistant secretary of state for Far Eastern Affairs. He says that it is in our selfish interest to see that the morale of the Chinese Nationalist forces on Formosa is maintained.

And two Democratic Senators.. Stennis of Mississippi and Robertson of Virginia..suggested today that the Administration delay its planned cutbacks in the Marine Corps and [redacted] army until the tensions lessens in the Formosa area. But Navy Secretary Thomas told them: "we are keeping a very strong military posture to defend the country." He said even with manpower cuts the Navy and Marine Corps will [redacted] "provide a force which can withstand the initial onslaught of an enemy and strike back with weight and precision."

At his newsconference today, Secretary of State Dulles told reporters, that it's unlikely that any formal meeting of the western foreign ministers with Russia can be arranged as early as june. He also refused to answer any questions on the recently released Yalta papers.

Democratic Senator George said today that a Republican document denouncing the Yalta decisions of the late President Roosevelt is a "sort of rabble-rouser." He predicted it will turn out to be a political dud. But Republican Senator Goldwater of Arizona said the Republican document "will show the American people that they shouldn't return a party to power which engaged in such a sell-out."

The State Department has told a House committee that two of the Department's employes were fired during 1954 on charges that they had Communist party affiliations. A third employe was dropped as a different kind (not explained) of a security risk.

The Soviet government admitted today that its purge of collective farm bosses has bogged down. Moscow Radio said today: "The work of strengthening collective farms with executive personnel is making unsatisfactory progress."

12 secs

[redacted]

There would seem to be no question that Sir Winston's resignation is still the big topic of conversation in Britain tonite. I've asked my c olleague, Alex Kendrick to record f[redacted] from London some first impressions now that the news is out.

RETURN CUE: This is Alex Kendrick Recording in London.

Howard K. Smith, chief European correspondent, has also recorded some very definite impressions about the resignation. But what I want to know first, Howard, is this: did today's development surprise you in any way ?

Tape Runs 3:26

RETURN CUE: This is Howard K. Smith recording in London

One more news item: The United Nations Security Council has been asked to meet tomorrow morning to consider Israel's charge of "continued and purposeful Egyptian aggression." The president of the S.C. for this month is Akeley Sobolev. The Chief Russian delegate. He promptly summoned the council to meet.

This is LL...I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. First, here is Bob Dixon.

That small dead-end alley called downing street reverberated in London tonite, to cockney voices raised in american song.. A crowd of about 3oo [redacted] unofficial well-wishers of Sir Winston, seranaded him with his favorite songs.. "You are my sunshine," and "My Darling Clementine..

Sir Winston came to the window grinning, gave his famed V-for-Victory sign, and then the crowd dispersed, singing, "For he's a jolly good Fellow," in the traditional English way..

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW PROGRAM
(Larry Lesueur, Alex. Kendrick & Howard K. Smith)

Tuesday, April 5, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: .... There would seem to be no question that Sir Winston's resignation is still the big topic of conversation in Britain tonite. I've asked my colleague Alex Kendrick to record from London some first impressions, now that the news is out.

KENDRICK: Just like a Coronation, this is one of those stories that, even tho everyone knows it is going to happen and when and how, is still moving and exciting when it finally does happen. In fact, in the last 36 hours the story generated its own excitement as it went along. For even tho Winston Churchill himself remains on the scene, today marks the end of the Churchill era in British history.

The crowds that stood patiently at three key points in London all day must have sensed the unique drama of the occasion, even tho they had for weeks anticipated it. They gathered at No. 10 Downing Street, where Sir Winston said farewell to his Cabinet ministers at noon, at their last meeting. They gathered outside the House of Commons and filled the public galleries, hoping for a glimpse of the familiar figure. But he, in his turn, must have anticipated some emotional strain during his last appearance, for he chose not to be there.

Finally, the crowds gathered outside Buckingham Palace. They cheered the Queen when she returned from an out-of-town occasion, as they always do. But they really wanted to see Winston today; and when his black car drove into the gate for his last mission there, the formal act of resignation, they gave him an ovation such as even he has seldom received.

What comes next is almost anticlimax. The Government goes on under the leadership of Sir Anthony Eden and presumably with no changes. Parliament recesses for Easter Thursday and will return to consider the budget. Then there will be a general election, tho the present parliamentary situation could have continued for another year. Sir Winston will return to Commons as a private member. About this, in his absence today, a Labor MP delivered the bon mot of the day. Said Everett Hughes of South Ayreshire, Scotland: "Are they going to bury Caesar in the House of Lords or is he going to come back here and worry Anthony?"

Like everything else about the occasion, Mr. Hughes' remark is not being printed here. The ironic touch is that Winston Churchill, among other things the greatest publicist of our century, is retiring with a minimum of publicity because London's thirteen daily newspapers are silenced by a strike. But the crowds today knew that history, and not journalism, is faithfully recording Sir Winston's retirement.

This is Alexander Kendrick recording in London.

LESUEUR: Howard K. Smith, chief European correspondent, also recorded some very definite impressions about the resignation. But what I want to know first, Howard, is this: Did today's development surprise you in any way?

SMITH: Well, I think I was one of the first reporters to send out an alert, about a month ago, that today's resignation was going to take place - and I was, possibly, the last reporter to talk with Churchill before his retirement. CBS edited and produced an hour radio program about Churchill's 80th birthday last year, a kind of CBS tribute to the British Prime Minister, using recordings of his speeches thruout his lifetime to tell the story of his life. Well, Churchill wanted to hear the recording of that program, so I took it to No. 10 Downing Street, his official residence, and spent an evening there playing it for Sir Winston and his wife, Lady Churchill.

In illustration of his unfaded flare for color, Churchill came into the livingroom at 10 Downing Street wearing what in the war was called a siren suit, a kind of coverall uniform. But it was a siren suit the like of which the war never saw. It was made of bright red velvet. Out from the top of it you could see the long wings of a yellow shirt he wore beneath; and on his feet were red velvet slippers bearing the gold braid letters W.S.C., for Winston Spencer Churchill.

Churchill told me beforehand that he might not be able to stay for the whole hour. In the event, however, he became so engrossed hearing his voice retell stirring moments that he not only stayed, he was deeply and visibly moved. Twice he wept tears. Once when he heard the recording of his voice during the blitz call on the English people so to behave that history would say that this was their finest hour. The other time was when he heard his voice in his most famous postwar speech, at Fulton, Missouri.

After the program we spoke a while, and he was extremely dour and gloomy about the world situation, he said. That is what impressed me most. A few days later a member of the staff of 10 Downing Street made the same observation about him being unusually gloomy - and said it was not due to the world situation, as I had thought; it was because Churchill was faced with making a difficult personal decision. His younger colleagues had wanted him to call elections soon, for that is the right of a party in power according to the British Constitution, and he, Churchill, had been reminded by them of a promise he had made to hand over power to Eden before those next elections. At that point I sent a cable to CBS New York, saying that there was a rumor of his retirement in April and it looked this time as tho there might be something to it.

The main reason the younger men of the Cabinet want elections soon is, they fear that the peak of Britain's boom is passing. There is no fear here of a depression, but there is a feeling that the time will never be so favorable to Conservative chances in a new election as it will be for the next few months. Churchill's retirement as Prime Minister will speed up governmental action, for since his illness two years ago the Cabinet has had to adjust to his necessarily slow time schedule. At the same time, however, the Tories do not lose Churchill as an electoral asset. He remains an ordinary Member of Parliament, and there's no doubt whatever that his mightiest weapon, his magnificent control of the weapon of language, is in no way dulled by retirement or age.

This is Howard K. Smith recording in London.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 5, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LESUEUR: Good evening...Here's what happened today:

The 80-year-old Sir Winston Churchill has resigned as Prime Minister of Great Britain. And tomorrow Queen Elizabeth is expected to name Sir Anthony Eden to take his place. In a few minutes we'll hear direct reports from London on this event.

The President said today in a filmed message to Sir Winston:"We shall never accept the fact that we are to be denied your counsel, your advice." He added:"We know that you will never be backward in bringing forth your great wisdom and courage when we appeal to you for help as all of us are bound to do".

And West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer described Sir Winston as "the personification of the spirit of the western world in our times."

A special report on Sir Winston's retirement will be heard ofer many of these stations..tonight at 10 p.m. eastern time.

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles told reporters that if there is a war in the Formosa area it will be caused by Communist China's provocation and initiative. He said we are trying to deal with the Chinese on a civilized and peaceful basis. We want peace. And we have made it perfectly clear to Red China that we want no war. Mr. Dulles also said that our only committment to the Chinese Nationalists is to defend Formosa and the Pescadores. He said: "We have no committment of any kind, sort or description, expressed or implied." which binds us to anything more.

But Republican Senator Knowland said again today that if we abandon Quemoy and Matsu to get a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait, it would be nothing but surrender on the installment plan. He said we should stop talking about disarmament and appeasement on Formosa.

Navy Secreatry Thomas told a Senate committee that we are prepared to use ground forces, if necessary, to defend Formosa. And Admiral Carney, the chief of Naval operations, indicated it might be necessary to use ground forces to defend the Nationalist island against Communist attack.

Admiral Carney also told the Senators that he did not predict that the Communists might attack in the Formosa area about the middle of this month. Democratic Senator Ellendar of Louisisna told the Admiral that he had been quoted by newsmen as saying the attack could be expected about April 15th. Admiral Carney replied :"I have not changed my mind because I never made such a statement." Carney said he had discussed with the reporters the capabilities of the known or possible enemy and our capabilities for meeting that. He said no experienced military man would claim the ability to predict what was in the plans or minds of the possible enemy. When asked why he had not stepped forward and denied the report when attributed to him, Admiral Carney said:" I decided I would make no further statement. I didn't think it would do any good."

A House committee released testimony today by Walter S. Robertson, assistant secretary of state for Far Eastern Affairs. He says that it is in our selfish interest to see that the morale of the Chinese Nationalist forces on Formosa is maintained.

And two Democratic Senators...Stennis of Mississippi and Robertson of Virginia..suggested today that the Administration delay its planned cutbacks in the Marine Corps and army until the tensions lessen in the Formosa area. But Navy Secretary Thomas told them: "we are keeping a very strong military posture to defend the country." He said even with manoower cuts the Navy and Marine Corps will "provide a force which can withstand the initial onslaught of an enemy and strike back with weight and precision."

At his news conference today, Secretary of State Dulles told reporters that it's unlikely that any formal meeting of the western foreign ministers with Russia can be arranged as early as June. He also refused to answer any questions on the recently released Yalta papers.

Democratic Senator George said today that a Republican document denouncing the Yalta decisions of the late President Roosevelt is a"sort of rable-rouser." He predicted it will turn out to be a political dud. But Republican Senator Goldwater of Arizona said the Republican document "will show the American people that they shouldn't reutrn a party to power which engaged in such a sell-out."

The State Department has told a House committee that two of the Department's employees were fired during 1954 on charges that they had Communist party affiliations. A third employee was dropped as a different kind (not explained..of a security risk.

The Soviet government admitted today that its purge of collective farm bosses has bogged down. Moscow Radio said today: "The work of strengthening collective farms with executive personnel is making unsatisfactory progress."

There would seem to be no question that Sir Winston's resignation is still the big topic of conversation in Britain tonight. I've asked my colleague, Alex Kendrick, to record from London some first impressions now that the news is out.

KENDRICK: Just like a Coronation, this is one of those stories that, even though everyone knows it is going to happen and when and how, is still moving and exciting when it finally does happen. In fact, in the last 36 hours the story generated its won excitement as it went along. For even though Winston Churchill himself remains on the scene, today marks the end of the Churchill era in British history.

The crowds that stood patiently at three key points in London all day must have sensed the unique drama of the occasion, even though they had for weeks anticipated it. They gathered at Number 10 Downing Street, where Sir Winston said farewell to his Cabinet ministers at noon, at their last meeting. They gathered outside the House of Commons and filled the public galleries, hoping for a glimpse of the familiar figure. But he, in his turn, must have anticipated some of the emotional strain during his last appearance, for he chose not to be there.

Finally, the crowds gathered outside Buckingham Palace. They cheered the Queen when she returned from an out-of-town occasion, as they always do. But they really wanted to see Winston today; and when his black car drove into the gate for his last mission there, the formal act of resignation, they gave him an ovation such as even he has seldom recieved.

What comes next is almost anticlimax. The Government goes on under the leadership of Sir Anthony Eden and presumably with no changes. Parliament recesses for Easter Thursday and will return to consider the budget. The there will be a general election, though the present parliamentary situation could have continued for another year. Sir Winston will return to Commons as a private member. About this, in his absence today, a Labor MP delivered the bon mot of the day. Said Everett Hughes of South Ayreshire, Scotland: "Are they going to bury Ceaser in the House of Lords or is he going to come back here and worry Anthony?"

Like everything else about the occasion, Mr. Hughes' remark is not being printed here. The ironic touch is that Winston Churchill, among other things the greatest publicist of our century, is retiring with a mimimum of publicity because London's thireten daily newspapers are silenced by a strike. But the crowds today knew that history, and not journalism, is faithfully recording Sir Winston's retirement.

This is Alexander Kendrick recording in London.

LESUEUR: Howard K. Smith, chief European correspondent, also recorded some very definite impressions about the resignation. But what I want to know first, Howard, is this: Did today's development surprise you in any way?

SMITH: Well, I think I was one of the first reporters to send out an alert, about a month ago, that today's resignation was going to take place - and I was, possible, the last reporter to talk with Churchill before his retirement. CBS edited and produced an hour radio program about Churchill's 80th birthday last year, a kind of CBS tribute to the British Prime Minister, using recordings of his speeches throughout his lifetime to tell the story of his life. Well, Churchill wanted to hear the recording of that program, so I took it to Number 10 Downing Street, his official residence, and spend an evening there playing it for Sir Winston and his wife, Lady Churchill.

In illustration of his unfaded flare for color, Churchill came into the living room at 10 Downing Street wearing what in the war was called a siren suit, a kind of coverall uniform. But it was a siren suit the like of which . . the war never say. It was made of bright red velvet. Out from the top of it you could see the long wings of a yellow shirt he wore beneath; and on his feet were red velvet slippers bearing the gold braid letters W.S.C., for Winston Spencer Churchill.

Churchill told me beforehand that he might not be able to stay for the whole hour. In the event, however, he became so engrossed hearing his voice retell stirring moments that he not only stayed, he was deeply and visibly moved. Twice he wept tears. Once when he heard the recording of his voice during the blitz call on the English people so to behave that history would say that this was their finest hour. The other time was when he heard his voice in his most famous postwar speech, at Fulton, Missouri.

After the program we spoke a while, and he was exteemely dour and gloomy about the world situation, he said. That is what impressed me most. A few days later a member of the staff of 10 Downing Street made the same observation, as I had thought; it was because Churchill was faced with making a difficult personal decision. His younger colleagues had wanted him to call elections soon, for that is the right of a party in power according to the British Constitution, and he, Churchill, had been reminded by them of a promise he had made to hand over power to Eden before those next elections. At that point I sent a cable to CBS New York, saying that there was a rumor of his retirement in April and it looked this time as though there might be something to it.

The main reason the younger men in the Cabinet want elections soon is, they fear that the peak of Britain's boom is passing. There is no fear here of a depression, but there is a feeling that the time will never be so favorable to Concervative chances in a new election as it will be for the next few months. Churchill's retirement as Prime Minister will speed up governmental action, for since his illness two years ago the Cabinet has had to adjust to his nesessarily slow time schedule. At the same time, however, the Tories do not lose Churchill as an electoral asset. He ramains an ordinary member of Parliament, and there's no doubt whatever that his mightiest weapon, his magnificent control of the weapon of language, is in no way dulled by retirement or age.

This is Howard K. Smith recording in London.

One more news item: The United Nations Security Council has been asked to meet tomorrow morning to consider Israel's charge of "continued and purposeful Egyptian aggression." The President of the Security Council for the month is Arkdy Sobelev, the Chief Russian delegate. He promptly summoned the Council to meet.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: That small dead-end alley called Downing Street reverberated in London tonight, to cockney voices raised in American song...a crowd of about 300 unofficial well-wishers of Sir Winston, seranaded him with his favorite songs..."You are My Sunshine", and "My Darling Clemantine."

Sir Winston came to the window grinning, gave his famed V-for - Victory sign, and then the crowd dispersed singing, "For he's a holly good Fellow", in the traditional English way.

This is Larry LeSueur saying Goodnight.

April 6 1955 Wednesday

Good evening ...here's what happened today:

5 in Anthony Eden, at the age of 57, became Britain's new Prime Minister - the youngest leader of that nation in more than thirty years. The man Eden replaced - Sir Winston Churchill - said in a letter to his constituents in Woodford, Essex: age forced him to give up his job (Sir Winston is 80)...but he has no intention of withdrawing from public life. Mr. Churchill, as a matter of fact, said he intends not only to hold his present seat in the House of Commons, but will run again when the next general election is held. There was much talk in London on the most likely date for such a vote and all parties seemed in general agreement, that an election will probably take place sometime between now and the end of summer. (I'd like to discuss Sir Winston's successor in a few moments.)

In our own country, the Army chief of staff, General Matt Ridgway, told a Senate Committee today that he is opposed to plans for reducing our military Man Power. Administration leaders are seeking an army cut of 250-thousand men. General Ridgway said he wanted even more men in the service." He remarked that the reductions were not recommended or approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. But he noted that the President - as Commander-in-chief - certainly was aware of the cuts, and added Ridgway: "I don't think anyone else is necessary."

Earlier, Under-Secretary of the Army - Charles Finucane - representing Secretary Stevens who is on tour in the Pacific, said that insofar as the civilian heads of the Army and Defense Department are concerned there's no need for any anxiety." Finucane described the army as "ready and willing instantly to take care of any brush-fire operations that might occur anywhere in the world." He said the reduction was taking place in an orderly way and concluded:"We not only have twice as many men as we had five years ago, but we have many times greater capabilities than we had at that time."

The head of the Air Force, General Twining, testified that the build-up of his branch of the military is "ahead of schedule and should stay that way." He did note somewhat significantly, however, that the Russians have made surprising advances this past year in the development of new heavy jet bombers and guided missiles. He said:"They're aimed squarely in our direction."

There was another atomic explosion at the test grounds in Nevada today---this one, the first known detonation of a flying missile with an atomic war-head. It was launched from a B-36. Then, apparently under rocket power and guided electronically by a 'mother plane' it headed for its target---a smoke screen which had been laid in advance by jet fighters. It exploded with a bright, orange-white metallic flash and a blast perhaps capable of destroying an entire formation of planes. //

In Paris, the Organization for European Economic Cooperation made its sixth annual report today--this one, optimistic. It told Western European countries that they have made striking progress in rebuilding their economies and said there is hope for even greater advances. The report calls for further economic expansion and progress toward the free exchange of national currencies. In this, it said the United States has a large part to play, but that European countries must depend primarily on their own efforts.

The dispute centering around Chief of Naval Operations Admiral Carney was kept alive today by the Philadelphia Bulletin. The paper reported that, despite Carney's denials, there are shorthand notes of his dinner with newsmen two weeks ago--that these show that Carney did forecast, four or five times, that the Chinese Communists probably would attack Matsu island in mid-April.

Two of the newsmen who arranged the dinner, say they know nothing of any such notes, but the Bulletin story is upheld by the Louisville Courier-Journal, and the Chicago Sun-Times. Carney wouldn't comment on today's developments. But two members of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee which questioned him yesterday about the earlier reports, say they want him back so they can take up with him the different versions of what was said at the dinner.

Several Congressmen however, including Senator KeFauver, say the whole affair should end with Carney's denial.

That controversy between Foreign Aid director Stassen and the Senate Investigating subcommittee over Pakistan grain elevators continued. Stassen appeared before the group, but would hand over only eleven of 21-documents which the committee wanted. The other ten, he said, represent confidential exchanges within the government's executive branch and he wants to review them first.

Earlier, he said, he is tearing up the old bids on the Pakistan project and starting over again by asking for new bids. All the trouble is over charges that Stassen's agency awarded the contract to the highest bidder.

Senator McCarthy accused Stassen of perjury today and demanded that he be called before a grand jury. He referred to Stassen's testimony that when McCarthy was running the subcommittee, its investigators would not let witnesses from Stassen's agency see the transcripts of their testimony, and that the witnesses were cross-examined on the basis of "doctored" transcripts.

At the UN, Israel warned that her armistice with Egypt may "cease to exist" unless the Egyptians end what she calls a steady, accumulating, relentless siege of Israel. Egypt's delegate countered with a charge that Israel was trying to turn the blame for recent troubles away from herself. The Security Council heard both sides, then adjourned until it gets a report from its on-the-spot investigators.

Another uneasy truce in South Viet Nam in Indo China. A seven day Easter truce was arranged by our special envoy, General Collins. But the truce is threatened Now by fresh government troop movements, a bombing which injured five persons and the resignation of Premier Diem's Foreign Minister.

At home, four bandits carried off the biggest cash bank holdup in the nation's history this morning. Acting after six-months of preparation and rehearsal, they took some 305-thousand dollars from a branch of the Chase Manhattan Bank and made a clean get-away.

Tornadoes and severe windstorms hit a large part of North Central Texas, Today killing one, injuring 27 and causing millions of dollars in damage.

When Sir Anthony Eden made his maiden speech in Parliament today as Britain's newPrime minister, he told the house of commons that Sir Winston Chruchill would remain the dominant figure..

But while ~~But~~ it seems clear that ~~while~~ British Foreign policy will not depart from the patterns of the past, and from the course set by Churchill, the details of the foreign policy, will be firmly grasped by Sir Anthony Eden, acting through his own foreign minister, ~~probably Harold MacMillan, a war-time associate of President Eisenhower in North Africa~~.

~~It is~~ Sts certain that no basic changes in British Foreign policy are to be anticipated, ~~and~~ of course the foremost plank of British Foreign policy today, is an enduring partnership with the United States... Foreign policy always represents the self-interest of a nation, and ~~[redacted]~~ certainly since the end of world war two, ~~[redacted]~~ Britain's dependence upon ~~on~~ this country has become obvious...

~~[redacted]~~ Sir Winston Chruchill once said that the differences between Britain and the United States were always important, but never serious... But ~~and~~ differences are bound to crop up, especially in the details of meeting tricky international situations..

Now We may have come to think of Sir Anthony Eden as a handsome, young and dashing diplomat, but this really was in contrast to the time-enduring Chruchill ...For Sir Anthony is actually a classic, professional diplomat of the old school...A man who does not look with favor on modern, post-war public diplomacy, in which reporters and [redacted] spectators also are invited to watch the proceedings. Sir Anthony believes in the quiet, closed-door approach, through diplomatic channels, in which the principals are generally represented by their agents, in which the public is told less than everything and the reporters are briefed afterwards along the lines on which they may speculate..

It is Sir Anthony's firm belief that the Wilsonian theory of "open covenants, openly arrived at," has outlived its usefulness, especially since the Communists have made a practice of turning these open meetings into propaganda forums, reducing most diplomatic efforts to an attempt to influence [redacted] the world press... Indeed the communists have exploited this theory so ardently, that even when it was agreed beforehand that a diplomatic session should be held in secret, as in the recent London disarmament talks, The Russian negotiator, Andrei Gromyko,

Could not resist deliberately leaking it to the communist press, thus getting at the public over the heads of the western diplomats, competitively and forcing the western press to pick up the communist version of the talks...

Under Sir Anthony's regime at the head of the British government there is, therefore, likely to be a gradual return to the days of secret diplomacy, if he can get his way, and if the communists obey the rules...

Even before Sir Winston stepped down there was a marked public difference between him and Sir Anthony in a suggested approach to Russia ...Its now believed that Churchill's pet project, a get-together talk between the top leaders of the western powers and Russia, was the goal that kept him in office so long, despite his illness and age...He envisioned a meeting with the successors of Stalin, without formal agenda, on a more-or-less man-to-man basis...But it was Sir Anthony who publically agreed with John Foster Dulles, that a meeting among the lower-ranking foreign ministers, was the first prerequisite...so that a restrictive agenda

could be worked out
[redacted]p, to keep the russians from ~~wrecking the meeting with~~ running away with the meeting by propaganda blasts on ~~other~~ unrelated subjects...

~~It is quite~~ It is
e apparaent that Sir Anthony learned much from the mistakes of the great wartime conferences with Stalin,..Indeed, the Yalta papers disclose that Eden warned against many of the things which ~~[redacted]~~ transpired later, and moreover, his counsel seemed to be ignored in the final bargaining, at Yalta, for it was his belief that Russia could be brought into the Japanese war without making ~~[redacted]~~ too many concessions. to Stalin

~~[redacted]~~ While I was a reporter in Moscow during the war, ~~a number of visitors came~~ prominent visitors used to come from Washington ~~[redacted]~~ for an audience with Stalin... They ranged from Harry Hopkins ~~to~~ thru Wendell Wilkie...Invariably, before they saw Stalin, they held conversations with us American correspondents, and their principal question ~~to~~ ~~[redacted]~~ was whether ~~[redacted]~~ we thought Russia would enter the war against Japan...~~We were fighting practically alone in the Pacific at the time, and apparently there was great pressure on Washington to get Russia to shoulder some of the Japanese burden.~~

One and all, every american correpondent ~~told the [redacted]nt~~ agreed ~~vi[redacted]s~~, that there was no question that the Russia would enter the war against Japan, since they were already preparing the Russian people for such action.. The official russian newspapers often carried detailed analysis of the military actions in Pacific, between us + the Japanese always filled with uncomplimentary references to the Japanese, and The Russian people were being conditioned to remember Port Arthur, when the Japanese jumped their fleet without warning...Indeed the Japanese were even referred to as the macoque-men by the russians, which is a particularly unhandsome type of monkey...

But no matter how many times we asserted to these prominent visitors that once the conditioning of the russian people started, the Kremlin meant business, they would shake their heads, and go off to tell Stalin just how very eager we were for Russia to engage our Japanese enemy...

Not so Anthony Eden.. .. He seemed to feel that the Russians, having first signed an alliance with Hitler, and then found themselves forced to fight him, were on a spot in which they needed us, and we were in a position to call the tune..

The then Mr. Eden, who always pays some attention to his clothes, even seemed to demonstrate his attitude toward the Russians in what he wore in Moscow...Not for him the ambassadorial fur collar and striped pants when he walked the streets of Moscow.. Eden looked more like a foreign correspondent, than we reporters did ourselves.. A white turtle-necked sweater, a well-worn, but very well-cut, tweed sports coat, a pair of RAF flying boots, and an white fur hat worn jauntily on the side of his head..

He didn't ask the foreign correspondents whether Russia would fight Japan, he told us... Just Grinned and said the Russians would have to get into the battle, to stay a Pacific power if they wanted .

He even pointed out to us that there was a good reason why the Soviet government had not bothered to remove the old Czarist double-eagles from the pre-revolutionary buildings.. because Russia is both a Pacific and European nation and must always look both East and West...

~~We used to say there were two kinds of diplomats. Those who thought they could handle the Russians, and those who tried~~..

This country may have differences from time to time with Britain's new Prime Minister...But nobody can say he hasn't been consistent in his attitude toward Russia - I'll be back in a moment with a boot note (two) First Bob Dixon

The eyes of much of the free world are on Great Britain tonite. And the hope expressed by President Eisenhower - [redacted] - [redacted]. The President said:" Sir Anthony Eden is a great successor to a great Prime Minister. In war and in peace he has been an outstanding spokesman of the free world. I know he will continue unceasingly to serve the cause of world peace and freedom."

This is L.L. saying goodnite

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 6, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

LESUEUR: Good Evening. Here's what happened today.

Sir Anthony Eden, at the age of 57, became Britain's new Prime Minister, the youngest leader of that nation in more than thirty years. The man Eden replaced - Sir Winston Churchill - said in a letter to his constituents in Woodford, Essex: age forced him to give up his job (Sir Winston is 80)..but he has no intention of withdrawing from public life. Mr. Churchill, as a matter of fact, said he intends not only to hold his present seat in the House of Commons, but will run again when the next general election is held. There was much talk in London on the most likely date for such a vote and all parties seemed in general agreement that an election will probably take place sometime between now and the end of summer. I'd like to discuss Sir Winston's successor in a few minutes.

In our ownncountry, the Army chief of staff, General Matt Ridgeway, told a Senate Committee today that he is opposed to plans for reducing our military man power. Administration leaders are seeking an army cut of 250 thousand men. General Ridgway said he wanted even more men in the service. He remarked that the reductions were not recommended or approved by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. But he noted that the President as Commander-in-Chief certainly was aware of the cuts, and added Ridgway: "I don't think anyone else is necessary."

Earlier, Under-Secretary of the Army - Charles Fincuane - representing Secretary Stevens who is on tour in the Pacific, said that insofar as the civilian heads of the Army and Defense Department are concerned there's no need for any anxiety. Finucane described the army as "ready and willing instantly to take care of any brush-fire operations that might occur anywhere in the world." He said the reduction was taking place in an orderly way and concluded:"We not only have twice as many men as we had five years ago, but we have many times greater capabilities than we had at that time."

The head of the Air Force, General Twining, testified that the build-up of his branch of the military is "ahead of schedule and should stay that way." He did note somewhat significantly, however, that the Russians have made surprising advances this past year in the development of new heavy jet bombers and guided missiles. He said:"They're aimed squarely in our direction!"

There was another atomic explosion at the test grounds in Nevada today--this one, the first known detonation of a flying missile with an atomic war-head. It was launched from a B-36. Then, apparently under racket power and guided electronically by a 'mother plane' it headed for its target -- a smoke screen which had been laid in advance by jet fighters. It exploded with a bright, orange-white metallic flash and a blast perhaps capable of destroying an entire formation of planes.

In Paris, the Organization for European Economic Cooperation made its sixth annual report today --this one optimistic. It told Western European countries that they have made striking progress in rebuilding their economies and said there is hope for even greater advances. The report calls for further economic expansion and progress toward the free exchange of national curren - cies. In this, it said the United States has a large part to play, but that European countries must depend primarily on their own efforts.

The dispute centering around Chief of Naval Operations Admiral Carney was kept alive today by the Philadelphia Bulletin. The paper reported that, despite Carney's denials, there are shorthand notes of his dinner with newsmen two weeks ago-- that these show that Carney did forecast four or five times that the Chinese Communists would attack Matsu island in mid-April.

Two of the newsmen who arranged the dinner say they know nothing of any such notes, but the bulletin story is upheld by the Louisville Courier-Journal and the Chicago Sun-Times. Carney wouldn't comment on today's developments. But two members of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee which questioned him yesterday about the earlier reports, say they want him back so they can take up with him the different versions of what was said at the dinner.

Several Congressmen however, including Senator Kefauver, say the whole affair should end with Carney's denial.

That controversy between Foreign Aid director Stassen and the Senate Investigating subcommittee over Pakistan grain elevators continued. Stassen appeared before the group, but would hand over only eleven of 21 documents which the committee wanted. The other ten, he said, represent confidential exchanges within the government's executive branch and he wants to review them first.

Earlier, he said, he is tearing up the old bids on the Pakistan project and starting over again by asking for new bids. All the trouble is over charges that Stassen's agency awarded the contract to the highest bidder.

Senator McCarthy accused a Stassen of perjury today and demanded that he called before a grand jury. He referred to Stassen's testimony that when McCarthy was running the subcommittee, its investigators would not let witnesses from Stassen's agency see the transcripts of their testimony, and that the witnesses were cross-examined on the basis of "doctored" transcripts.

At the UN, Israel warned that her armistice with Egypt may "cease to exist" unless the Egyptians end what she calls a steady, accumulating, relentless siege of Israel. Egypt's delegate countered with a charge that Israel was trying to turn the blame for recent troubles away from herself. The Security Council heard both sides, then adjourned until it gets a report from its on-the-spot investigators.

Another uneasy truce in South Viet Nam in Indo China. A seven day Easter truce was arranged by our special envoy, General Collins. But the truce is threatened now by fresh government troop movements, a bombing which injured five persons and the resignation of Premier Diem's Foreign Minister.

At home, four bandits carried off the biggest cash bank holdup in the nation's history this morning. Acting after six-months of preparation and rehearsal, they took some 305-thousand dollars from a branch of the Chase Manhattan Bank and made a clean get-away.

Tornadoes and severe windstorms hit a large part of North Central Texas today, killing one, injuring 27 and causing millions of dollars in damage.

When Sir Anthony Eden made his maiden speech in Parliament today as Britain's new Prime Minister, he told the House of Commons that Sir Winston Churchill would remain the dominant figure.

But while it seems clear that British Foreign policy will not depart from the patterns of the past, and from the course set by Churchill, the details of that foreign policy, whil be firmly grasped by Sir Anthony Eden, acting through his own foreign minister.

It's certain that no basic changes in British Foreign ollicy are to be anticipated, and of course the foremost plank of British Foreign policy today, is an enduring partnership with the United tates. Foreign policy always represents the self-interests of a nation, and certainly since the end of World War Two Britain's dependence upon this country has become obvious.

Sir Winston Churchill once said that the differences between Britain and the United States were always important, but never serious but differences are bound to crop up, especially in the details of meeting tricky international situations.

Now, we may have come to think of Sir Anthony Eden as a handsome, young and dashing diplomat, but this really was in contrast to the time-enduring Churchill, for Sir Anthony is actually a classic, professional diplomat of the old school..a man who does not look with favor on modern, post-war public diplomacy, in which reporters and spectators alike are invited to watch the proceedings. Sir Anthony bleieves in the quiet, closed-door approach, through diplomatic channels, in which the principals are generally represented by their agents in which the public is told less than everything and the reporters are briefed afterwards along the lines on which they may speculate.

It is Sir Anthony's firm belief that the Wilsonian theory of "open covenants, openly arrived at," has outlived its usefulness, especially since the Communists have made a practice of turning these open meetings into propaganda forums, reducing most diplomatic efforts to an attempt to influence the world press. Indeed the Communists have exploited this theory so ardently, that even when it was agreed beforehand that a diplomatic session should be held in secret, as in the recent London disarmement talks, the Russian negotiator, Andrei Gromyko, could not resist deliberately leaking it to the Communist press, thus getting at the public over the heads of the Western diplomats.

Under Sir Anthony's regime at the head of the British government there is, therefore, likely to be a gradual return to the days of secret diplomacy, if he can get his way and if the Communists obey the rules.

Even before Sir Winston stepped down there was a marked public difference between him and Sir Anthony in a suggested approach to Russia. It is now believed that Churchill's pet project , a get-together talk between the top leaders of the western powers and Russia, was the goal that kept him in office so long despite his illness and age. He envisioned a meeting with the successors of Stalin, without formal agenda, on a more-or-less man-to-man basis .

But is was Sir Anthony who publically agreed with John Foster Dulles, that a meeting among the lower-ranking foreign ministers, was the first prerequisite so that a restrictive agenda could be worked out to keep the Russians from runnign away with the meeting by propaganda blasts on unrelated subjects.

It is apparent that Sir Anthony learned much from the mistake of the great wartime conferences with Stalin...indeed the Yalta papers disclose that Eden warned against many of the things which transpired later, moreover, his counsel seemed to be ignored in the final bargaining at Yalta for it was his belief that Russia could be brought into the Japanese war without making too many concessions to Stalin.

While I was a reporter in Moscow during the war, prominent visitors used to come from Washington for an audience with Stalin. They ranged from Harry Hopkins through Wendell Wilkie..invariably, before they saw Stalin, they held conversations with us American correspondents, and their principal question was whether we thought Russia would enter the war against Japan.

One and all, every American correspondent agreed that there was no question that Russia would enter the war against Japan, since they were already preparing the Russian people for such action. The official Russian newspapers often carried detailed analysis of the military actions in the Pacific, between us and the Japanese, and the Russian people were being conditioned to remember Port Arthur, when the Japanese jumped their fleet without warning... Indeed the Japanese were even referred to as the macoque-men by the Russians, which is a particularly unhandsome type of monkey.

But no matter how many times we asserted to these prominent visitors that once the conditioning of the Russian people started, the Kremlin meant business, they would shake their heads and go off to tell Stalin just how very eager we were for Russia to engage our Japanese enemy.

Not so Anthony Eden. He seemed to feel that the Russians, having first signed an alliance with Hitler, and then found themselves forced to fight him, were on a spot in which they needed us and we were in a position to call the tune. And them Mr. Eden, who always pays some attention to his clothes, even seeled to demonstrate his attitude toward the Russians in what he wore in Moscow. Not for him the ambassadorial fur collar and striped pants when he walked the streets of Moscow. Eden looked more like a foreign correspondent than we reporters did ourselves....A white turtle-necked sweater, a well-worn, but very well-cut tweed sports coat, a pair of RAF flying boots and a white fur hat worn jauntily on the side of his head.

He didn't ask the foreign correspondents whether Russia would fight Japan, he told us..Just grinned and said the Russians would have to get into the battleif they wanted to stay a Pacific power. He even pointed out to us that there was a good reason why the Soviet government had not bothered to remove the old Czarist double-eagles from the pre-revolutionary buildings..because Russia is both a Pacific and European nation and must always look both East and West.

This country may have differences from time to time with Britain's new Prime Minister but nobody can say he hasn't been consistent in his attitude toward Russia.

I'll be back in a moment with a footnote in the news. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: The eyes of much of the free world are on Great Britain tonight. And the hope expressed by President Eisenhower is--"Sir Anthone Eden is a great successor to a great Prime Minister. In war and in peace he has been an outstanding spekesman of the free world. I know he will continue unceasingly to serve the cause of world peace and freedom."

This is Larry Lesueur saying good night.

Thursday April 7, 1955

This is the news:

The President today signed the Paris agreements..to re-arm Western Germany and accept her as a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Mr. Eisenhower just ten years ago was an important factor in crushing the Nazi military machine. Today, as he signed the agreements, he said: "This is what we have been working for, for a long time." He called it the biggest treaty signing he's ever had. Yesterday Belgium and Luxembourg completed their parliamentary approval of the agreements. [Only Denmark and the Netherlands have yet to act.] West German officials say that when they have final approval it will take them from two to four years to build-up and equip the 12 divisions , small coastal navy and 13-thousand plane ~~defense~~ air force, ~~they will be permitted.~~

In Berlin today, Communist East Germany agreed to discuss with West Germans the terms for lifting a truck tax blockade they've slapped on west Berlin. They'll meet a week from today.

Britain's new prime minister, Sir Anthony Eden today selected Harold MacMillan to take his old job as foreign minister.

MacMillan is (60) ..son of an American mother...a friend of President Eisenhower's since World War Two when MacMillan was Great Britain's trouble-shooter in North Africa. He's spent THE LAST three years as Minister of (DEFENSE). And he's now regarded as next in line for the prime ministry. After his first cabinet meeting today, Prime Minister Eden also announced that Supply Minister Selwyn Lloyd will take over as defense minister.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, highest prelate in the Church of England, (TERMED) rumors of a romance between Princess Margaret and Captain Peter Townsend (AS) "a newspaper stunt." The Wrchbishop and his wife arrived in Capetown, South Africa, today. He was quoted as having told reporters that "there is no truth (WHATSOEVER) to the rumors that Princess Margaret and Captain Townsend will wed." But later in the day he denied this.. said only that the report was an "offensive newspaper stunt."

In New Delhi today the vice chairman of the Chinese Reds People's Congress told the so-called "Nonpartisan Asian conference" that the Communists must liberate Formosa. He said it is their duty to free the Nationalist islands from what he called "American invaders and occupiers." After Red China has conquered Formosa the Communist delegate supported peaceful co-existence. He claimed Formosa was Red China's "own territory."

Chester Bowles, our former ambassador to India, today called for "a practical, reasonable, rational and responsible" American policy towards Asia and Africa. Bowles recently returned from a trip to Africa and India. He told a Democratic meeting in Washington that for too long we have treated Asia and Africa like step-children. He says our position in the world has deteriorated substantially in the last ten years "because we are not trying hard enough to understand how other people think." And Bowles agrees with Historian Arnold Toynbee that the growing awareness of one-fifth of the world's population is the most significant event of the 20-th century and "more explosive than the atom bomb."

In Washington, the National Academy of Sciences announced tonight that it will try to clear up some of the confusion about the dangers of atomic radiation. With the financial backing of the Rockefeller Foundation and co-operation of the Atomic Energy Commission, the Academy will try to "clarify the issues which are of grave concern as well as great hope to mankind."

And the Atomic Energy Commission says that it has received four proposals to build electric power plants to be run by atomic energy. The plants would be built in Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan and Nebraska. They would cost a total of 150-million dollars with the government paying only ten to twenty per cent of the cost. Lewis L. Straws, the atomic energy chairman, says:"This willingness to assume risks is evidence of the vigor of competitive enterprise. It is also another indication of this nation's faith in the peaceful future of the atom."

The President today allocated five million dollars of his diaaster funds to help Dust Bowl farmers in seven western states. [redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: April 7, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Washington is in something of a dither over the news black-out - or dim-out - resulting from the "silencer" placed on the working of the Pentagon's information services. Secretary Wilson had ordered the professional soldiers who were giving out information replaced by civilians, and the information staffs to be cut down by one-third. New rules have been laid down as to what would be permitted in the way of information. These are now receiving close attention, not only in the suddenly crippled information services, but among news men.

The text of the crucial edict is worth reporting. It bears on what is to be taken into consideration before official approval is given for the release of information. "Such review and clearance" the rule reads, "shall be related not only to a determination of whether release of the material would involve any technical or substantive violation of security, but also to a determination of whether release or publication of the material would constitute a constructive contribution to the primary mission of the Department of Defense." This last proviso is so wide and vague that anything could be suppressed, whatever its security status. All an information officer would have to say, to hold it back, would be that its publication would not be a constructive contribution to the mission of the Defense Department. Newsmen are complaining that under the present set-up, instead of their going to the branches of the services for information first-hand, they have to go through a central office, which then passes on the requests, and it takes days to get an answer.

Part of the trouble in Washington is that everyone in the Pentagon is frightened about the possibility of dynamite in dealings with ~~the press.~~ Reporters. This is the result of the celebrated Carney dinner, when the Naval Chief of Staff briefed a group of correspondents about the Formosa Straits crisis, with results that startled the world and drew a correction from President Eisenhower.

But now it becomes known that the [redacted] Curtain on Pentagon news was being put in position before the Carney dinner. It would have dropped anyhow. The practise of the various services in airing their differences in public had found disfavor in the White House. And the White House is said to have been increasingly disturbed over the release of information about weapons like guided missiles, a great deal of which has come out lately. Secretary Wilson's crackdown on information practises came after the Carney dinner, but that wasn't what produced it.

However, the Carney dinner is a prime reason for the pall of silence that lies over the Pentagon. Discussion of that dinner, and what took place at it, continues. Admiral Carney told the Senate Sub-Committee that he did not predict a Communist attack on Matsu the middle of April, and spoke only of the capability of the Communists to attack at that time. Some of the newsmen at the dinner corroborated him. They didn't remember an outright prediction. But this does not end the discussion. Three newspapers have published actual quotes stated to have been based on shorthand notes taken at the dinner by Robert L. Riggs of the Louisville Courier Journal. Mr. Riggs says that at least four times Admiral Carney said that he expected an attack by April 15. "Here" writes Mr. Riggs, "are his exact words - or almost his exact words: 'Mao and Chou have made a straightforward pitch on what they intend to do. They have had a series of unbroken successes and they are flushed with victory. They should feel safe in continuing to probe and they will probe. The first two things they will go after are the offshore ~~Chinats~~ (Chinese Nationalist) islands. It could be expensive for them, but they could take the islands by spending enough. They probably will initiate an attack on Matsu in mid-April.'"

The significance of the timing" the Admiral is quoted as adding, "is that it would tie in with the Afro-Asian conference in Bandung." One recalls that President Eisenhower was sure the attack would not come at that time because of the same conference. At another point Admiral Carney is quoted as having said: "We could be confronted with one of the most serious decisions our nation has had to make this Spring. I have no doubt that they will attack. If I were Mao's chief of staff I would recommend it. They have declared openly what their objective is. I don't see what they can gain by talk." And he is quoted as saying subsequently: "We cannot restrict ourselves in our targets. That involves enlargement far beyond the tactical area. We may have to engage with China in an all-out war. If we go in with a restricted view, we will find ourselves about to lose all of Asia."

Admiral Carney declined to discuss this shorthand version. He may be questioned about it by the Senate sub-Committee. But this version, if substantially correct, fully justifies the stories published as the result of the dinner, and which filled Washington and the capitals of our Allies with fears of imminent war.

Since that time, Washington has grown calm again. The pressure then was clearly toward war, with some of the President's advisers urging announcement that the islands would be defended. Today the pressure - largely from the country itself - is still more strongly against the defense of the islands. Whether or not Admiral Carney said "capable of attack", or, "will attack" or, "probably will attack" is no more than a detail in the story of a frightening week in which President Eisenhower, at any rate, kept his head.

Bob Dixon

The matter of military security...that thin line between public knowledge and secret information...raises a continuous problem. The Greek writer, Plutarch, once counseled:"Silence at the proper season is wisdom and better than any speech." But de la Fontaine could see no [redacted] circumstance in which silence should prevail. Thus, he concluded:"People who make no noise are always dangerous."

Good nite and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow; April 7, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Washington is in something of a dither over the news black-out - or dim-out - resulting from the silencer placed on the working of the Pentagon's information services. Secretary Wilson had ordered the professional soldiers who were giving out information replaced by civilians, and the information staffs to be cut down by one-third. New rules have been laid down as to what would be permitted in the way of information. These are now receiving close attention, not only in the suddenly crippled information services, but among news men.

The text of the crucial edict is worth reporting. It bears on what is to be taken into consideration before official approval is given for the release of information. "Such review and clearance" the rule reads, "shall be related not only to a determination of whether release of the material would involve any technical or substantive violation of security, but also to a determination of whether release or publication of the material would constitute a constructive contribution to the primary mission of the Department of Defense." This last proviso is so wide and vague that anything could be suppressed, whatever its security status. All an information officer would have to say, to hold it back, would be that its publication would not be a constructive contribution to the mission of the Defense Department. Newsmen are complaining that under the present set-up, instead of their going to the branches of the services for information first-hand, they have to go through a central office, which then passes on the requests, and it takes days to get an answer.

Part of the trouble in Washington is that everyone in the Pentagon is frightened about the possibility of dynamite in dealings with the press. This is the result of the celebrated Carney dinner, when the Naval Chief of Staff briefed a group of correspondents about the Formosa Straits crisis, with results that startled the world and drew a correction from President Eisenhower.

But now it becomes known that the Iron Curtain on Pentagon news was being put in position before the Carney dinner. It would have dropped anyhow. The practise of the various services in airing their differences in public had found disfavor in the White House. And the White House is said to have been increasingly disturbed over the release of information about weapons like guided missiles, a great deal of which has come out lately. Secretary Wilson's crackdown on information practises came after the Carney dinner, but that wasn't what produced it.

However, the Carney dinner is a prime reason for the pall of silence

that lies over the Pentagon. Discussion of that dinner, and what took place at it, continues. Admiral Carney told the Senate Sub-Committee that he did not predict a Communist attack on Matsu the middle of April, and spoke only of the capability of the Communists to attack at that time. Some of the newsmen at the dinner corroborated him. They didn't remember an outright prediction. But this does not end the discussion. Three newspapers have published actual quotes stated to have been based on shorthand notes taken at the dinner by Robert L. Riggs of the Louisville Courier Journal. Mr. Riggs says that at least four times Admiral Carney said that he expected an attack by April 15. "Here" writes Mr. Riggs, "are his exact words - or almost his exact words: 'Mao and Chou have made a straightforward pitch on what they intend to do. They have had a series of unbroken successes and they are flushed with victory. They should feel safe in continuing to probe and they will probe. The first two things they will go after are the offshore Chinats (Chinese Nationalist) islands. It could be expensive for them, but they could take the islands by spending enough. They probably will initiate an attack on Matsu in mid-April.'"

The significance of the timing" the Admiral is quoted as adding, "is that it would tie in with the Afro-Asian conference in Bandung." One recalls that President Eisenhower was sure the attack would not come at that time because of the same conference. At another point Admiral Carney is quoted as having said: "We could be confronted with one of the most serious decisions our nation has had to make this Spring. I have no doubt that they will attack. If I were Mao's chief of staff I would recommend it. They have declared openly what their objective is. I don't see what they can gain by talk." And he is quoted as saying subsequently: "We cannot restrict ourselves in our targets. That involves enlargement far beyond the tactical area. We may have to engage with China in an all-out war. If we go in with a restricted view, we will find ourselves about to lose all of Asia."

Admiral Carney declined to discuss this shorthand version. He may be questioned about it by the Senate sub-Committee. But this version, if substantially correct, fully justifies the stories published as the result of the dinner, and which filled Washington and the capitals of our Allies with fears of imminent war.

Since that time, Washington has grown calm again. The pressure then was clearly toward war, with some of the President's advisers urging announcement that the islands would be defended. Today the pressure - largely from the country itself - is still more strongly against the defense of the islands. Whether or not Admiral Carney said "capable of attack", or, "will attack" or, "probably will attack" is no more than a detail in the story of a frightening week in which President Eisenhower, at any rate, kept his head.

EDWARD R. MURROW
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The President today signed the Paris agreements..to re-arm Western Germany and accept her as a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Mr. Eisenhower just ten years ago was an important factor in crushing the Nazi military machine. Today, as he signed the agreements, he said:"This is what we have been working for for a long time." He called it the biggest treaty signing he's ever did. Yesterday Belgium and Luxembourg completed their parliamentary approval of the agreements. Only Denmark and the Netherlands have yet to act. West German officials say that when they have final approval it will take them from two to four years to build-up and equip the 12 divisions, small coastal navy and 13-thousand plane air force.

In Berlin today, Communist East Germany agreed to discuss with West Germans the terms for lifting a truck tax blockade they're slapped on west Berlin. They'll meet a week from today.

Britain's new prime Minister, Sir Anthony Eden, today selected Harold Mac Millan to take his old job as foreign minister. Mac Millan is 60...son of an American mother...a friend of President Eisenhower's since World War Two when MacMillan was Great Britain's trouble-shooter in North Africa. He's spent the last three years as Minister of Defense. And he's now regarded as next in line for the Prime Ministry. After his first cabinet meeting today, Prime Minister Eden also announced that Supply Minister Selwyn Lloyd will take over as defense minister.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, highest prelate in the Church of England, termed rumors of a romance between Princess Margaret and Captain Peter Townsend as "a newspaper stunt." The Archbishop and his wife arrived in Capetown

In New Delhi today the vice chairman of the Chinese Reds People's Congress told the so-called "Nonpartisan Asian conference" that the Communists must liberate Formosa. He said it is their duty to free the Nationalist islands from what he called "American invaders and occupiers." After Red China has conquered Formosa the Communist delegate supported peaceful co-esistence, He claimed Formosa was Red China's "own territory."

Chester Bowles, our former ambassador to India, today called for a "practical, reasonable, rational and responsible" American policy towards Asia and Africa. Bowles recently returned from a trip to Africa and India. He told a Democratic meeting in Washington that for too long we have treated Asia and Africa like step-children. He says our position in the world had deteriorated substantially in the last ten years "because we are not trying hard enough to understand how other people think." And Bowles agrees with historian Arnlold Toynbee that the growing awareness of one-fifth of the world's population is the most significant event of the 20th century and "more explosive than the atom bomb."

In Washington, the National Academy fo Sciences announced tonight that it will try to clear up someof the confusion about the dangers of atomic radiation. With the financial backing of the Rockerfeller Foundation and cooperation of the Atomic Energy Commission, the Academy will try to "clarify the issues which are of grave concern as well as great hope to mankind."

And the Atomic Energy Commission says that it has received four proposals to build electric power plants to be run by atomic energy. The plants would be built to Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan and Nebraska. They would cost a total of 150-million dollars with the government paying only ten to twenty percent of the cost. Lewis L. Straws, the atomic energy chairman, says: "This willingness to assume risks is evidence of the vigor of competitive enterprise. It is also another indication of this nation's faith in the peaceful future of the atom."

The President today allocated five million dollars of his disaster funds to help dust bowl farmers in seven western states.

Washington is in something of a dither over the news black-out or dim-out resulting from the "silencer placed on the working of the Pentagon's information services. Secretary Wilson had ordered the professional soldiers who were giving out information replaced by civilians and the information staffs to be cut downby one-third. New rules have been laid down as to what would be permitted in the way in information. These are now receiving close attention, not only in the suddenly crippled information services, but among news men.

The text of the crucial edict is worth reporting. It bears on what is to be taken into consideration before official approval is given for the release of information. "Such review and clearance" the rule reads, "shall be related not only to a determination of whether release of the material would involve any technical or substantive violation of security, but also to a determination of whether release or publication of the material would constitute a constructive contribution to the primary mission of the Department of Defense." This last proviso is so wide and vague that anything could be suppressed, whatever its security status. All an information officer would have to say , to hold it back, would be that its publication would not be a constructive contribution to the mission of the Defense Department. Newsmen are complaining that under the present set-up, instead of their going to the branches of services for information first-hand, they have to go through a central office, which then passes on the requests, and it takes days to get an answer.

Part of the trouble in Washington is that everyone in the Pentagon is frightened about the possibility of dynamite in dealings with reporters.

This is the result of the celebrated Carney dinner, when the Naval Chief of Staff briefed a group of correspendents about the Formosa Straits cirsis, with the results that startled the world and drew a correction from President Eisenhower.

But now it becomes known that the Curtain on Pentagon news was being put in position before the Carney dinner. It would have dropped anyhow. The practice of the various services in airing their differecces in public had found disfavor in the White House. And the White House is said to have been increasingly disturbed over the release of information about weapons like guided missiles, a great deal of which has come out lately. Secretary Wilson's crackdown on information practices came after the Carney dinner, but that wasn't what produced it.

However, the Carney dinner is a prime reason for the pall of silence that lies over the Pentagon. Discussion of that dinner, and what took place at it, continues. Admiral Carney told the Senate Sub-Committee that he did not predict a Communist attack on Matsu in the middle of April, and spoke only of the capability of the Communists to attack at that time. Some of the newsmen at the dinner cooborated him. They didn't remember an outright prediction. But this does not end the discussion. Three reporters have published actual quotes stated to have been based on shorthand notes taken at the dinner by Robert L. Riggs of the Louisville Courier Journal. Mr. Riggs says that at least four times Admiral Carney said that he expected an attack by April 15 "Here" writes Mr. Riggs, "are his exact words - or almost his exact words: 'Mao and Chou have made a straightforward pitch on what they intend to do. They have had a series of unborken successes and they are flushed with victory. They should feel safe in continuing to probe and they will probe. The first two things they will go after are the offshore (Chinese Nationalist) islads,

It could be expensive for them, but they could take the islands by spending enough. They probably will initiate an attack on Matsu in mid-April.'"

"The significance of the timing " the Admiral is quoted as adding, "is that it would tie in with the Afro-Aisan conference in Bandung." One recalls that President Eisenhower was sure the attack would not come at that time because of the same conference. At another point Admiral Carney is quoted as having said:"We could be confronted with one of the most serious decisions our nation has had to make this Spring. I have no doubt that they will attack. If I were Mao's chief of staff I would recommend it. They have declared openly that their objective is. I don't see what they can gain by talk." And he is quoted as saying subsequently: "We cannot restrict ourselves in our targets. That involves enlargement far beyond the tactical area. We may have to engage with China in an all-out war. If we go in with restricted view, we will find ourselves about to lose all of Asia. "

Admiral Carney declined to discuss this shorthand version. He may be questioned about it by the Senate sub-Committee. But this version, if substantially correct, fully justifies the stories published as the result of the dinner, and which filled Washington and the capitals of our Allies with fears of imminent war.

Since that time, Washington has grown calm again. The Pressure then was clearly toward war, with some of the President's advisers urging announcement that the islands would be defended. Today the pressure - largely from the country itself - is still more strongly against the defense of the islands. Whether or not Admiral Carney said "capable of attack", or "will attack" or, "probably will attack" is no more than a detail in the story of a frightening week in which President Eisenhower, an any rate, kept his head.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The matter of military security...that thin line between public knowledge and secret information..raises a continuous problem. The Greek writer, Plutarch, once counseled:"Silence at the proper season is wisdom and better than any speech." But de la Fontaine could see no circumstance in which silence should prevail. Thus, he concluded :"People who make no noise are always dangerous."

Good Night and good luck.

Friday April 8, 1955

This is the news:

The Weather Bureau says that virtually the entire nation can look forward to a pleasant Easter weekend. Unless the unexpected happens, the weather will be generally fair...the temperatures reasonably mild...and only in the state of Washington and northern Oregon is there a possibility of rain. [In any event, that's the forecast.]

President Eisenhower plans to spend Easter Sunday at the White House and will attend Church in Washington. (There's still no word on what Mrs. Eisenhower's Easter outfit is like.) [redacted]

Earlier today, the President's news secretary, James Hagerty, was asked about a story appearing in the New York Herald Tribune [redacted] suggesting that the President is getting concerned about security leaks to the Russians...[leaks inadvertently printed in our newspapers.] Hagerty said Mr. Eisenhower does feel that some technical military secrets have been made available to the enemy in this way...and the President is "disturbed" about it. Hagerty made a point of noting that Mr. Eisenhower has never believed in or encouraged censoring legitimate news. But on the other hand, Hagerty said, the President has also always believed there is no reason to make available to the enemy, technical military secrets which by their issuance could do nothing but hurt our interests. Hagerty said on one point he wishes to be most emphatic: in any other instance, the President does not believe that security should be used by any branch of the government as an excuse to cover up the publication of legitimate news.

Hagerty was asked repeatedly by newsmen if his remarks today related in any way to the new controls on news releases set up by Defense Secretary Wilson a week and a half ago. (These call for all such matters clearing his office first.) Hagerty refused to discuss that. But it was made known that Wilson will discuss this with newsmen next week.

For its own part, the Defense Department reports it is "expeditiously" looking over documents relating to the disputed question of whether or not General Mac Arthur wanted Russia to join the war in the Pacific as it neared an end. (Mac Arthur said recently that he would have recommended "emphatically" against it.) (A) Defense Department spokesman said that in due course the "relevant" documents will be made public. They will not be released piecemeal, because he said, this would tend to confuse the situation instead of clarifying it. (General Mac Arthur [redacted] has also taken this position.)

Adlai Stevenson, [redacted] has agreed to make a foreign policy statement on the Far Eastern situation in a CBS RADIO breadcast from Chicago, Next Monday night. Stevenson was not available for comment on the speech, but friends say he feels the public should be given a clearer picture of the implications of the United States' position as regards the Formosan situation.

Secretary of State Dulles has taken steps to try to smooth over the latest flare-up over State Department security. Today, he personally offered another assignment to Edward Corsi who has been his special adviser on immigration problems. That post was abolished yesterday, but the State Department says Corsi [redacted] agreed to consider taking on a new assignment, after Dulles reiterated his confidence in in him.

Corsi has been under attack by Democratic Representative Walter of Pennsylvania, who (SAYS) [redacted] Corsi was once associated with Communist front organizations. Corsi has denied the charge and Dulles says his status in the State Department did not involve any question of security.

The Chinese Nationalists claimed today that the Communists have a new air base in operation 250-miles from Formosa and are remodeling two other fields which are even closer. The report says that the base now completed is capable of handling every type of plane.

In Seoul, THERE WERE charges and counter-charges of air violations of the Korean armistice agreement. The United Nations Command says Communist planes have committed three violations and flown as far as Seoul. The Communists say that UN aircraft penetrated into North Korea twelve times during March.

In Indo China, there is a faint hope that steps may be taken to end the civil [redacted] (WAR) in free South Viet Nam. Both Premier Diem and the leaders of the [redacted] (RIOTING) religious sects have agreed to peace talks to end the trouble. The agreement came after a newly organized conciliation committee handed the Premier a series of compromise proposals designed to end the crisis.

Italy's Premier Mario Scelba walked into an unsavory political situation when he returned to Rome today from his two-week visit to the United States and Canada. The anti-Communist center coalition of his government is on the verge of collapse. The Social Democrats are threatening to bring the government down at the beginning of May, and leaders of Scelba's own Christian Democrat party are flirting with the Socialists. All three parties have agreed to keep the government intact until the end of the month, when both Houses of Parliament will elect a new President of the Republic. Scelba probably will spend the rest of the month trying to devise ways to hold his coalition together.

In Britain, the new Prime Minister---Sir Anthony Eden---has made the first diplomatic move since succeeding Sir Winston Churchill. He sent messages to President Eisenhower and Russia's Foreign Minister Molotov, thanking them for their congratulations. He said he looked forward to continuing good relations with both.

Edward R. Murrow: April 8, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Every era puts new words and terms into the language, for example: "jitney" "jeep" and "social security". Our era is introducing the initials G.A.W. and the word automation. They may foretell an even profounder change in thinking and habits than the cheap automobile and old-age pensions. G.A.W. stands for guaranteed annual wage. Automation stands for a ~~revolution~~ development in technology that already has opened a door to a nearly unbelieve-able future.

These newcomers in the language are in the news today because of the start of negotiations over a guaranteed annual wage between General Motors and the United Automobile Workers. Automation is part of the story because it is one of the reasons the union is obsessed with assuring steady employment.

The negotiations in Detroit are one of the great tests in the story of American labor. The very fact that the issue of the guaranteed annual wage has reached the bargaining table in the motor industry is historic. When union leaders first talked about it -(and it doesn't seem so long ago)- it sounded decades away; that is, decades before it could even become an issue. The negotiations with General Motors will be paralleled next week by negotiations with Ford. The United Steel Workers launch a drive for G.A.W. June 1st, the Electrical Workers will ask General Electric for it July 15th.

Rubber workers and railway shop workers are next in line.

Obviously what General Motors and Ford do will affect other industries right across the country. The United Automobile Workers have raised a strike fund of $25,000,000 which wouldn't go very far if a strike resulted. But it was a flexing of muscles for management to see.

For a time at least, the General Motor and Ford talks will be behind closed doors, and tempers will be kept. An early agreement is desirable because the General Motor's union contract expires May 29th, and the Ford contract June 1st. But agreement will be difficult. G.A.W. is a revolutionary concept for a seasonal industry like automobiles, and it raises more problems than brief negotiations between management and labor can be expected to solve. It is too early to say the negotiations will break down. But it also is not easy to see what compromise both sides might be willing to accept.

G.A.W. is not altogether untried in this country. The soap manufacturers, Proctor and Gamble, have guaranteed an annual wage to six thousand employees for the last 22 years. Chairman Duepree of that company recently said that regular year-around employment "is so economical in the operation of business that it is hard to see why manufacturers have not made more progress toward guaranteed annual employment."

Two other sizeable industries have G.A.W., George A. Hormel and Company, making meat products in Austin, Minnesota; and the Nunn-Bush Shoe company of Milwaukee. Their officials are quoted as saying that G.A.W. gives an inducement to stabilize production and plan efficiently, and that it increases workers' morale.

But soap, shoes and meat products are not seasonal. They are bought even in a recession. New cars, refrigerators and big electrical appliances are not. Moreover, there are seasonal buying habits in the automobile market. The Union argues that the habits can and should be changed, by manufacturers and by consumers. Obviously this is a question of what can be done practically. But the Union argues the practical problem can be solved by increasing unemployment insurance benefits, so that workers can take home full pay during slack seasons.

The part that automation plays in the issue can be illustrated by two figures. In February of this year the man-hour output of the average factory was 7 percent higher than in 1954. This is a much bigger acceleration in productivity than the so-called normal. The steel industry is now producing at the same rate as in 1953 while employing 70,000 fewer men. Electronic controls of machinery are having fantastic results. Before long ~~most~~ MANY machine tools will be obsolete, and some new ones will fill whole factories without any workers being needed beyond a few persons to watch the gauges.

It is part of the revolution that many labor leaders have accepted the axiom that technological improvements create more jobs than they wipe out. But in any change-over due to automation, men are displaced, they need new training for new jobs and they need to live while learning. We are heading for a time when there will be an acute shortage of skilled workers and too many unskilled ones.

This generation already knows that ever-increasing productivity means ever-increasing wealth. But it presumably must learn that there are growing pains in adjusting to revolutionary techniques. Such a time of growing pains may just be arriving.

Easter weekend ~~traditionally~~ is the time for ~~the~~ ladies to insist on new Spring outfits. If you're the man of the household you might try these lines from Ben Franklin: "When you incline to have new clothes remember that a patch on your coat and money in your pocket is better." To this, wives might come back with words by Oliver Goldsmith: "A modest woman, dressed out in all her finery is the most tremendous object of the whole creation." Happy Easter!

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S.,RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 8, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Weather Bureau says that virtually the entire nation can look forward to a pleasant Easter weekend. Unless the enuxpected happens, the weather will be generally fair...the temperatures reasonably mild...and only in the state os Washington and northern Oregon is there a possiblility of rain. In any event, that's the forecast.

President Eisenhower plans to spend Easter Sunday at the White House and will attend Church in Washington. There's still no word on what Mrs. Eisenhower's Easter outfit is like.

Earlier today, the President's news secretary, James Hagerty, was asked about a story appearing in the New York Herald Tribune suggesting that the President is getting concerned about security leaks to the Russians..leaks inadvertently printed in our newspapers. Hagerty said Mr. Eisenhower does feel that some technical military secrets have been made ava lable to the enemy in this way....and the President is "disturbed" about it. Hagerty made a point of noting that Mr. Eisenhower has never believed in or encouraged censoring legitimate news. But on the other hand, Hagerty said, the President has also always believed there is no reason to make available to the enemy, technical military secrets which by their issuance could do nothing but hurt our interests. Hagerty said on one point he wishes to be most emphatic: in any other instance, the President does not believe that secuirty should be used by any branch of the government as an excuse to cover up the publication of legitimate war news.

Hagerty was asked to repeatedly by newsmen if his remarks today related in any way to the new controls on news releases set up by the Defense Secretary Wilson a week and a half ago. (These call for all such matters clearing his office first.) Hagerty refused to discuss that but it was made known that wilson will discuss this with newsmen next week.

For its own part, the Defense Department reports it is "expeditiously" looking over documents relating to the disputed question of whether or not General MacArthur wanted Russia to join the war in the Pacific as it neared an end. (Mac Arthur said recendly that he would have recommended "empahtically against it.) A Defense Deparmtent spokesman said that in due course the "relevant ducuments will be made public. They will not be released piecemeal, because he said, this would tend to confuse the situation instead of clarifying it. General Mac Arthur has also taken this position.

Adlai Stevenson has agreed to make a foreign policy statement on the Far Eastern situation in a CBS radio broadcast from Chicago next Monday night. Stevenson was not available for comment on the speech, but friends say he feels the public should be given a clearer picture of the implications of the United States' position in regards the Formosan situation.

Secretary of State Dulles has taken steps to try to smooth over the latest flare-up over State Department security. Today, he personally offered an another assignment to Edward Corsi who has been his special adviser on immigration problems. That post was abolished yesterday, tht the state Department says Corsi agreed to consider taking on a new assignment, after Dulles reiterated his confidence in him.

Corsi has been under attack by Democratic Representative Walter of Pennsylvania, who says Corsi was once associated with Communist front organizations. Corsi had denied the charge and Dulles says his status in the State Department did not involve any question of security.

The Chinese Nationalists claimed today that the Communists have a new air base in operation 250 miles from Formosa and are remodeling two other fields which are even closer. The report says that the base now completed is capable of handling every type of plane.

In Seoul, there were charges and counter-charges of air violations of the Korean armistice agreement. The United Nations cammand says Communist planes have committed three violations and flown as far as Seoul. The Communists say that UN aircraft penetrated into North Kroea twelve times during March.

In Indo China, there is a faint hope that steps may be taken to end the civil war in free South Viet Nam. Both Premier Diem and the leaders of the rioting religious sects have agreed to peace talks to end the trouble. The agreement came after a newly organized conciliation committee handed the Premier a series of compramise proposals designed to end the crisis.

Italy's Premier Mario Scelba walked into an unsavory political situation when he returned to Rome today from his two-week visit to the United States and Canada. The anti-Communist center coalition of his governm nt is on the verge of collapse. The Social Democrats are threatening to bring the government down at the beginning of May, and leaders of Scelba's own Christian Democrat party are flirting with the Socialists. All three parties have agreed to keep the governemtn intact until the end of the month, when both Houses of Parliament will elect a new President of the Republic. Scelba probably will spend the rest of the month trying to devise ways to hold his coalition together.

In Britain, the new Prime Minister -- Sir Anthony Eden -- has made the first diplomatic move since succeeding Sir Winston Churchill. He sent messages to President Eisenhower and Russia's Foreign Minister Molotov, thanking them for their congratulations. He said he looked forward to continuing good relations with both.

Every era puts new words and terms into the language, for example: "jitney" "jeep" and "social security." Our era is introducing the initials G.A.W. and the word automation. They may foretell an even profounder change in thinking and habits than the cheap automobile and old-age pensions. G.A.W. stands for guaranteed annual wage. Automation stands for a developemnt in technology that already has opened a door to a nearly unbelievable future.

These newcomers in the language are in the news today because of the start of negotiations over a guaranteed annual wage between General Motors and the United Automobile Workers. Automation is part of the story because it is one reason the union is obsessed with assuring steady employment.

The negotiations in Detroit are one of the great tssts in the story of American labor. The very fact that the issue of the guaranteed annual wage has reached the bargaining table in the motor industry is historic. When union leaders first talked about it - and it doesn't seem so long ago - it sounded decades away; that is, decades before it could even become an issue. The negotiations with General Motors will be paralleled next week by negotiations with Ford. The United Steel workers launch a drive for G.A.W. June 1st, the Electrical Workers will ask General Electric for it July 15th.

Obviously what General Motors and Ford do will affect other industires right across the country. The United Automobile Workers have raised a strike fund of $25,000,000 which wouldn't go very far if a strike resulted. But it was a flexing mf muscles for management to see.

For a time at least, the General Motor and Ford talks will be behind closed doors, and tempers will be kept. An early agreement is desirable because the General Motor's union contract expires May 29th, and the Ford contract June 1st. But agreement will be difficult. G.A.W. is a revolutionary concept for a seasonal industry like automobiles, and it raises more problems than brief negotiations between management and labor can be expected to solve. It is too early to say the negotiations will break down. But it also is not easy to see what compormise both sides might be willing to accept.

G.A.W. is not altogether untried in this country. The soap manufacturers, Proctor and Gamble, have guaranteed an annual wage to six thousand employees for the last 22 years. Chairman Duepree of that company recently said that regular year-round employment "is so economical in the operation of business that it is hard to see why manufacuurers have not made more progress toward guaranteed annual employment,"

Two other sizeable industries have G.A.W., George A. Hormel and Company, making meat products in Austin, Minnesota; and the Nunn-Bush Shoe Company, of Milwaukee. Their officials are quoted as saying that G.A.W. gives an inducement to stabilize production and plan efficiently, and that it increases worker's morale.

But Soap, shoes and meat products are not seasonal. They are bought even in a recession. New cars, refrigerators and big electrical appliances are not. Moreover, there are seasonal buying habits in the automobile market. The Union aggues that the habits can and should be changed, by manufacturere and by consumers. Obviously this is a question of what can be done practically. But the Union argues the practical problem can be solved by increasing unemployment insurance benefits, so that workers can take home full pay during slack seasons.

The part that automation plays in the issue can be illustrated by two figures. In February of this year the man-hour output of the average factory was 7 percent higher than in 1954. This is a much higher acceleration in productivity than the so-called normal. The steel industry is now producing at the same rate as in 1954 while employing 70,000 fewer men. Electronic controls of machinery are having fantastic results. Before long many machine tools will be obsolete, and some new ones will fill whole factories without any workers being needed beyond a few persons to watch the guages.

It is part of the revolution that many labor leaders have accepted the axiom that technological improvements create more jobs than they wipe out. But in any change over due to automation, men are displaced, they need not training for new jobs and they need to live while learning. We are heading for a time when there will be an acute shortage of skilled workers and too many unskilled ones."

This generation already knows that ever-increasing productivity means ever-increasing wealth. But it presumably must learn that there are growing pains in adjusting to revolutionary techniques. Such a time of growing pains may just be arriving.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Easter weekend is the time for ladies to insist on new spring outfits. If you're the man of the household, you might try these lines from Ben Franklin :"When you incline to have new clothes, remember that a patch on your coat and money in your pocket is better." To this, wives might come back with words by Oliver Goldsmith:"A modest woman, dressed out in all her finery is the most tremendous object of the whole creation." Happy Easter.

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday April 11, 1955

This is the news:

Adlai Stevenson charged tonight that the Administration's policy of "extravagant words" in the Far Eastern situation has "alarmed our friends a good deal more than it has deterred the aggressors." In a speech that will be heard over many of these CBS Radio stations at 10 p.m. eastern time Stevenson says the division of our coalition with other nations..over what should be done about Quemoy and the Matsu islands off Formosa...has weakened the grand alliance of free nations pledged to stand together. He feels this is a greater peil to enduring peace than the islands themselves. The former Democratic presidential candidate says the United States has assumed what he called "many extravagant positions" in the past two years. He says he's not criticizing the Administration for abandoning these positions. But he is criticizing it for "taking such positions, for making threats which it is not prepared to back up, for bluffing, for [redacted] undermining faith in the United States." Stevenson proposes that we enlist other free nations in an open declaration condeming the use of force in the Formosa Strait. Also we should invite the Russians to declare their position. Then, he says "with the assurance provided by such a common position-[redacted] concurred in by the nations whose weight and prestige are essential to the ultimate success of any Formosan policy" neither we nor Chiang Kai Shek should any longer need to rely on these little offshore islands to resist the aggressive ambitions of the Chinese Reds. Stevenson says we must "repair the broad breech" in the ranks of the free world. He still feels that the supreme aim of Communist policy is to drive a wedge between America and her friends and allies. And he adds:"To divide and conquer is not yet obsolete strategy."

Secretary of State Dulles said tonight that "craven purchase of peace" at any price could lead to "degredation" for the human race and "destroy much of the human spirit on this planet." Without mentioning the far eastern situation, Mr. Dulles said:"We should remember that while modern developments have made war more terrible, they have also made the consequences of retreat and surrender more terrible."

3

In Washington today, Edward J. Corsi bitterly refused to consider a State Department offer of a new job. Instead he charged that our refugee program is in the grip of intolerant, race-minded men. We'll hear more on this development from Washington in a few minutes.

Sherman Adams, the president's chief assistant, says the leaks and "premature disclosures" of present administration policies are caused by federal employes left over from previous ADMINISTRATIONS. Adams wrote this in a letter to Democratic Senator Sparkman of Alabama. And Sparkman replied: "the irresistable inference that must be drawn from your letter, is that Democrats, disloyal to the present Administration, engineered the unauthorized publications to embarrass the Administration. Sparkman asked if Adams is "willing to say definitely" that the persons responsible for the "leaks" are Democrats. Adams has not yet replied.

The Supreme Court today started hearing arguments on how and when to put into effect its decision that public school segregation is unconstiutional. Counsel for Negro parents argued that state attorney generals favor "an interminable continuation of racial segregation" in their suggestions on how to put the court's decision into affect. Generally, the argument of the Southern states is that any sudden end to segregation would be dangerous..and would disrupt their school systems. ~~Attorneys for Negro parents in Virginia and South Carolina want the court to end under integration of white and negro students by next fall. The states of Delaware suggests gradual integration with~~

The Court today voted 5 to 3 against the "quickie" divorce laws of the Virgin islands. The court invalidated the present law which permits divorces to be granted without requiring husbands or wives to swear that they intend to make their permanent home in the Virgin islands.

The President announced today that next week he'll submit to Congress a foreign aid program "including economic aid to the free nations of South and East Asia." And today, Mr. Eisenhower greeted some 6-thousand children and their parents who visited the White House grounds for the traditional Easter egg rolling. Later, he tossed out the first baseball at the opening of the Washington Senators-Baltimore Orioles game. [redacted] The Senators won: 12 to 5.

[redacted] the results of the Salk [redacted] effective. [redacted] the Medical School.

An Indian airliner carrying 19 persons, nine of them Chinese Communists, has disappeared on a flight from Hong Kong to Indonesia. It may have crashed in the South China Sea. Authoritative SOURCES SAY [redacted]. Most of the Chinese are believed to be minor Communist officials and newspapermen enroute to the Asian-African conference in Indonesia.

Edward R. Murrow: April 11, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Washington is again agitated about a man who was hired and then fired by the State Department. He was brought into the Department by Secretary Dulles as an expert on immigration problems. We have asked Dan Schorr in Washington to unscramble the story so far as the facts are available.

Spot Runs 5 Mins
Comes at: 7:51:45

Return cue: " And that Ed is the story of the trouble shooter who got shot before he could shoot the trouble."

Ann Arbor Michigan -
Salk Polio Vaccine -

Tomorrow at this time we will have learned whether or not an effective vacine against polio can be produced for public consumption. All of the advance evidence would seem to suggest that this will be the case. If this is so, it will represent a great forward stride - not only in medicine but in the humanities as a whole. For as Henri-Frederic Amiel once remarked: "In health there is freedom. Heath is the first of all liberties."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, April 11, 1955
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: Washington is again agitated about a man who was hired and then fired by the State Department. He was brought into the Department by Secretary Dulles as an expert on immigration problems. We have asked Dan Schorr, in Washington, to unscramble the story so far as the facts are available.

SCHORR: Edward Corsi, discharged by Secretary of State Dulles from his job of trying to make the faltering refugee program work, today refused a lesser assignment in Latin America. Corsi wrote Dulles that he feels disillusioned and frustrated, that if, as indicated, his presence in one State Department job embarrasses Dulles' relations with Congress, there's no point in taking another, and he warns Dulles that the program to bring in two hundred and nine thousand refugees by the end of next year has been a scandalous failure so far, that it will fail unless it is rescued from what Corsi calls "an intolerant minority both in Congress and within the Department itself." This is not the first controversy over a State Department dismissal. It is the first involving a veteran Republican politician, one who campaigned for President Eisenhower and for Dulles himself when he ran for the Senate.

Corsi was brought into the Administration as a trouble-shooter at the instance of the White House. Corsi says he was first approached by Presidential assistant Maxwell Raab, who told him last November Mr. Eisenhower was concerned about the refugee program and asked Corsi's aid. Corsi agreed to serve. On December 2, Dulles wired him a formal offer, calling him uniquely qualified for the job and later saying it was a source of great encouragement that he accepted it. Corsi reported for work on January 10, under a three-year appointment as a Foreign Service Reserve Officer. His letter of appointment outlined two jobs. One, as Assistant Administrator on Refugees, under Scott McLeod, head of the Security, Consular, and Refugee Affairs Bureau, with complete authority and responsibility for the refugee program. The other, as Special Assistant to Dulles on migration matters.

A few days later, according to Corsi, he was reproached by McLeod for a newspaper interview in which heurged relaxation of security bars to speed the flow of refugees. From the start, Corsi says, he ran into difficulty and he didn't know one secure day in the State Department. For seventeen days he had no office to work in. He found his orders to officers in the field secretly countermanded. In January, Corsi went to Europe on a survey trip and after his return wrote a report to Dulles, saying the refugee program would not work unless reorganized to eliminate excessive security checks and red tape. Dulles acknowledged the report and, without committing himself, suggested that Corsi discuss it with McLeod and others. Suddenly an attack on Corsi opened on another front. On February 28, Representative Francis Walter, co-author of the restrictive McCarran Immigration Act, accused Corsi of membership in a Communist front organization in the thirties, which Corsi flatly denied. What connection this had with Corsi's troubles within the Department we cannot say,but on the basis of Walter's charges McLeod, as Security Chief, held up Corsi's security clearance pending an FBI investigation.

Last Tuesday, Dulles said at his news conference that the Walter charges were being examined and he added that Corsi had a 90-day temporary appointment. Corsi says this is the first time he ever heard of a time limit, which is not mentioned in his letters of appointment. The 90-day appointment is usually a technicality, an administrative device to start a man in his job pending security clearance,and that clearance was being delayed.

On Good Friday, Dulles told Corsi that his ninety days were up on Easter Sunday and offered him the new job, incidentally, a job classified as non-sensitive although Dulles denied any security matter was involved.

New York State Republican Chairman Ward Morehouse pressed Corsi as a matter of Party loyalty to take the job. Today, National Chairman Leonard Hall urged him to continue serving the Administration, but, two hours before seeing Hall, Corsi had already sent his refusal to Dulles. Now, Corsi is trying to sublet the suburban home he rented on a six-months lease and is returning to his farm in Roxbury, New York, to reflect on what he calls the "bitterest experience in my life."

And, so, Dulles has discharged a man he called his good friend and the best qualified man in the country to do the job, and, though he says there is no security question, security rules were used to terminate the appointment. The White House, where Corsi first was offered the job, remains silent.

Incidentally, Democratic Governor Harriman, of New York, recently asked Corsi to serve on a New York State refugee commission as an added chore to his State Department assignment. Tonight, Harriman confirmed to us, through a (?) spokesman in Albany, that the offer still stands. Harriman said: "The refugee problem is not a partisan one and has no place in partisan politics."

And that, Ed, is the story of the trouble-shooter who got shot before he could shoot the trouble.

MURROW: That was Dan Schorr reporting from Washington.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 11, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Adlai Stevenson charged tonight that the Administration's policy of "extravagant words" in the Far Eastern situation has "alarmed our friends a good deal more than it has deterred the aggressors." In a speech that will be heard over many of these CBS Radio stations at 10 p.m. eastern time, Stevenson says the division of our coalition with other nations...over what should be done about Quemoy and the Matsu islands off Formosa...has weakened the grand alliance of free nations pledged to stand together. He feels this is a greater peril to enduring peace than the islands themselves. The former Democratic presidential candidate says the United States has assumed what he called "many extravagant positions" in the past two years. He says he's not criticizing the Administration for abandoning these positions. But he is criticizing it for "taking such positions, for making threats which it is not prepared to back up, for bluffing, for undermining faith in the United States." Stevenson proposes that we enlist other free nations in an opened declaration condeming the use of force in the Formosa Strait. We also should invite the Russians to declare their position. Then, he says, "with the assurance provided by such a common position, concurred in by the nations whose weight and prestige are essential to the ultimate success of any Formosan policy" neither we nor Chiang Kai Shek should any longer need to rely on these little offshore islands to resist the aggressive ambitions of the Chinese Reds. Stevenson says we must "repair the broad breech" in the ranks of the free world. He still feels that the supreme aim of the Communist policy is to drive a wedge between America and her friends and allies. And he adds: "To divide and conquer is not yet obsolete strategy."

Secretary of State Dulles said tonight that "craven purchase of peace" at any price could lead to "degredation" for the human race and "destroy much of the human spirit on this planed." Without mentioning the far eastern situation, Mr. Dulles said:"We should remember that while modern developments have made war more terrible, they also made the consequences of retreat and surrender more terrible."

In Washington today, Edward J. Corsi bitterly refused to consider a State Department offer of a new job. Instead he charged that our refugee program is in the grip of intolerant, race-minded men. We'll hear more on this development from Washington in a few minutes.

Sherman Adams, the president's chief assistant, says the leaks and "premature disclosures" of present administration policies are caused by federal employees left over from previous administrations. Adams wrote this in a letter to Democratic Senator Sparkman of Alabama. And Sparkman replied:"the irresistable inference that must be drawn from your letter is that Democrats, disloyal to the present Administration, engineered the unauthorized publications to embarrass the Administration. Sparkman asked if Adams is "willing to say definitely" that the persons responsible for the "leaks" are Democrats. Adams has not yet replied.

The Supreme Court today started hearing arguments on how and when to put into effect its decision that public school segregation is unconstitutional. Counsel for Negro parents argued that state attorney generals favor "an interminable continuation of racial segregation" in their suggestions on how to put the court's decision into effect. Generally, the argument of the Southern states is that any sudden end to segregation would be dangerous...and would disrupt their school systems.

The Court today voted 5 to 3 against the "quickie" divorce laws of the Virgin islands. The court invalidated the present law which permits divorces to be granted without requiring husbands or wives to swear that they intend to make their permanent home in the Virgin islands.

The President announced today that the next week he'll submit to Congress a foreign aid program "including economic aid to the free nations of South and East Asia." And today, Mr. Eisenhower greeted some 6 thousand children and their parents who visited the White House grounds for the traditional Easter egg rolling. Later, he tossed out the first baseball at the opening of the Washington Senators-Baltimore Orioles game. The Senators won 12 to 5.

An Indian airliner carrying 19 persons, nine of them Chinese Communists, has disappeared on a flight from Hong Kong to Indonesia. It may have crashed in the South China Sea. Authoritative sources say most of the Chinese are believed to be minor Communists officials and newspapermen enroute to the Aisan-African conference in Indonesia.

Washington is again agitated about a man who was hired and then fired by the State Department. He was brought into the Department by Secretary Dulles as an expert on immigration problems. We have asked Dan Schorr in Washington to unscramble the story so far as the facts are available.

SCHORR: Edward Corsi, discharged fr Secretary of State Dulles from his job of trying to make the faltering refugee program work, today refused a lesser assignment in Latin America. Corsi wrote Dulles that he feels disillusioned and frustrated, that if, as indicated, his presence in one State Department job embarrasses Dulles' relations with Congress, there's no point in taking another, and he warns Dulles that the program to bring in two hundred and nine thousand refugees by the end of next year has been scandalous failure so far, that it will fail unless it is rescued from what Corsi calls

"an intolerant minority both in Congress and within the Department itself." This is not the first controversy over a State Department dismissal. It is the first involving a veteran Republican politician, one who campaigned for President Eisenhower and for Dulles himself when he ran for the Senate.

Corsi was brought into the Administration as a trouble-shooter at the insistance of the White House. Corsi says he was first approached by Presidential assistant Maxwell Raab, who told him last November Mr. Eisenhower was concerned about the refugee program and asked Corsi's aid. Corsi agreed to serve. On December 2, Dulles wired him a formal offer, calling him uniquely qualified for the job and later saying it was a source of great encouragement that he accepted it. Corsi reported for work on January 10, under a three-year appointment as a Foreign Service Reserve Officer. His letter of appointment outlined two jobs. One, as Assistant Administrator on Refugees, under Scott McLeod, head of the Security, Consular, and Refugee Affairs Bureau, with complete authority and responsibility for the refugee program. The other, as Special Assistant to Dulles on migration matters.

A few days later, according to Corsi, he was reproached by McLeod for a newspaper interview in which he urged relaxation of sucurity bars to speed the flow of refugees. From the start, Corsi says, he ran into difficulty and he didn't know one secure day in the State Department. For seventeen days he had no office to work in. He found his orders to officers in the field secretly countermanded. In January, Corsi went to Europe on a survey trip and after his return wrote a report to Dulles, saying the refugee program would not work unless reorganized to eliminate excessive security checks and red tape. Dulles acknowledged the report and, without committing himself, suggested that Corsi discuss it with McLeod and others. Suddenly an attack on Corsi opened on another front. On February 8, Representative Francis Walter, co-author of the restrictive McCarran Immigration Act, accused Corsi of membership in a Communist front organization in the thirties, which Corsi flatly denied. That connection this had with Corsi's troubles within the Department we cannot say, but on the basis of Walter's charges, McLeod, as Security Chief, held up Corsi's security clearance pending an FBI investigation.

Last Tuesday, Dulles said at his news conference that Walter charges were being examined and he added that Corsi had a 90-day temporaty appointment. Corsi says this is the first time he ever heard of a time limit, which is not mentioned in his letters of appointment. The 90-day appointment is usually a technicality, an administrative device to start a man in his job pending security clearance, and that clearance was being delayed.

On Good Friday, Dulles told Corsi that his ninety days were up on Easter Sunday and offered him the new job, incidentally, a job classified as non-sensitive although Dulles denied any security matter was involved.

New York State Republican Charmann Ward Marehouse pressed Corsi as a matter of Party loyalty to take the job. Today, National Chairman Leonard Hall urged him to continue serving the Administration, but, two hours before seeing Hall, Corsi had already sent his refusal to Dulles. Now, Corsi is trying to sublet the suburban home he rented on a six-months lease and is returning to his farm in Roxbury, New York, to reflect on what he calls the "bitterest experience on my life."

And, so, Dulles has discharged a man he called his good friend and the best qualified man in the country to do the job, and, though he says there is no security question, security rules were used to terminate the appointment. The White House, where Corse first was offered the job, remains silent.

Incidentally, Democratic Governor Harriman, of New York, recently asked Corsi to serve on a New York State refugee commission as an added chore to his

State Department assignment. Tonight, Harriman confirmed to us, through a spokesman in Albany, that the offer still stands. Harriman said: "The refugee problem is not a partisan one and has no place in partisan politics."

And that, Ed, is the story of the trouble-shooter who got shot before he could shoot the trouble.

MURROW: That was Dan Schorr reporting from Washington. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is a word from Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Tomorrow at this time, we will have learned whether or not an effective vacine against polio can be produced for public consumption. All of the advance evidence would seem to suggest that this will be the case. If this is so, it will represent a great forward stride - not only in medicine but in the humanities as a whole. For an Henri-Frederic Amiel once remarked: "In helath there is freedom. Health is the first of all liberties."

Good Night and Good Luck.

(Now to LL in NYork for the rest of the news.)

Tues-Apr 12 '55

(1)

In Washington today, Secretary of Welfare Hobby, formally licensed the Salk polio vaccine for general use. Six pharmaceutical concerns were given licenses to manufacture and distribute the vaccine.. which has been improved over the vaccine used in the mass tests last year.

In Hyde Park, New York, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt placed a wreath of lilies on the grave of her husband who died ten years ago today. And she told reporters that she is delighted with the outcome of the Salk tests. She reminded them that "we will have to go on with the March of Dimes for a long time because we still have people who have had the disease, who must be cared for."

National Republican and Democratic leaders agreed today that three million dollars is not enough to finance a national political committee in a presidential election campaign. Democratic Chairman Butler wants the present ceiling, which is fixed by a 1939 law, to be raised to at least six million dollars. Republican Chairman Hall calls the present 3-million limit "outmoded and unrealistic" but he suggests no specific new figure. #

Communist China charged today, that the crash of a plane carrying 18 persons from Hong Kong to Indonesia was due to sabotage by American and Chinese Nationalist secret agents. The Communists had three delegates on the plane bound for the African-Asian conference in Bandung. Five Chinese Red reporters were also aboard. So far only three crewmen have been found. The Peiping radio says the accident is "a murder deliberately engineered" by American and Chinese Nationalist agents. The Communists say they warned the British in advance..before the plane took off.

In East Germany, the Communist government tonight announced, the arrest of 521 alleged "western agents" and the liquidation of what it called "a considerable number of espionage and terror groups" in the last few days. The East Germans accuse the United States, Great Britain and

3

The President today spoke to the graduating class of the Citadel at Charleston, South Carolina. He called upon its members to become "apostles of peace" in the hope of promoting understanding among nations. Mr. Eisenhower said there can be no peace in the world "unless there be a magnificent growth of understanding."

The Supreme Court today heard attorneys for four southern states argue that a premature end to racial segregation in the schools would destroy their school systems and might lead to violence. Thurgood Marshall, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, called this "a form of blackmail." He said the southern states are arguing: "If you don't give me what I want, I'll abolish public schools." He wants the court to order integration of the nation's public schools by next fall or by September of 1956 at the latest.

~~It was ten years ago tonight that Harry S. Truman took the oath of office as president. two and a half hours after being informed of the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Mr. Truman said today: he would have been happier if he could have served out his term as vice president.~~

France of having turned West Berlin into a center for espionage activities, directed against East Germany.

In Moscow, Soviet Premier Bulganin and American Ambassador Bohlen exchanged toasts tonight, toward early restoration of Austria's independence. Both indicated they believe an Austrian settlement will be a step in the direction of world peace.

In Washington, Senator McClellan and Harold Stassen announced "a thorough understanding"..which apparently ends their row over Congressional investigating powers. Stassen, handed over all but two of the 22 documents, the Senate investigators had threatened to subpena if he refused.

CUE:

I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH THE WORD FOR TODAY, BUT FIRST HERE'S BOB DIXON.

Here's Ed Murrow's word for today..

Dr. Allan Gregg, of the Rockefeller Foundation said today

It's certain we are Now

That to be faced as a people, with a desperate test. Can we resist the temptation to bootleg, cheat and quarrel, for a vaccine that's in short supply.

Will a scientific victory be followed by a moral defeat?

The challenge is certain...The answer is NOT. It lies with us all.

This is LL saying good Nite & good luck

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, April 12, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

ANNC'R: (C O M M E R C I A L)

And now, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is Ann Arbor, Michigan, where the probing fingertips of science today lifted some considerable part of the burden of fear from American homes. The baseball season is open; the trout season, too, in many places. And as a result of what was made known here today, a lot of youngsters, some of them yet unborn, will be hitting that long ball, chasing flies in the outfield, and scrambling over rocks to their favorite fishing hole instead of being twisted and tortured by polio.

The sun was warm, the earth coming alive; there was hope and promise in the air. The occasion called for banners in the breeze and trumpets in the distance. Instead, the scene was Rackham Auditorium, here at the University of Michigan. About six hundred scientists and reporters. The atmosphere combined that of a clinic and a church. The camera lights were hot. The family of Dr. Jonas Salk sat well down in front, the tall, serene Mrs. Salk and the three boys. The little six-year-old mopped his brow with a clean white handkerchief and then tucked it carefully back in his breast pocket. There were the usual speeches of welcome. Then came Dr. Thomas Francis, Jr., Director of the Polio Vaccine Evaluation Center, the man who had made the measurements and the checks on all the field tests. No oratory, no rhetoric. He was spelling out this unprecedented experiment step by step. His was no effort to persuade - merely to expound. Chart followed chart, graph followed graph on the big screen behind him while he talked on in the dark.

The Salk vaccine works. It is effective and it is safe. It is not perfect, but the speculation has been ended. One set of figures followed another. Adverse reactions to the inoculations were nearly negligible. Four children who received placebo -- that is, the so-called blank shots -- died. No child who received the vaccine died. The figure of eighty to ninety per cent effectiveness in preventing paralytic polio has been used in describing the Salk vaccine. Here are the words used by Dr. Francis: "If the results from the observed study areas are employed, the vaccine could be considered to have been sixty to eighty per cent effective against paralytic polio; sixty per cent against type 1, and seventy to eighty per cent effective against disease caused by types 2 and 3. On this basis it may be suggested that vaccination was eighty to ninety per cent effective against paralytic polio, that it was sixty to seventy per cent effective against disease caused by type 1 virus and ninety per cent or more effective against that of type 2 and type 3 virus.

The report by Dr. Jonas Salk of the University of Pittsburgh, based on his own studies, closely paralleled the findings of Dr. Francis and his group. There was no vanity, no complacency in this small man, who looks like an unusually serious graduate student and whose name now becomes part of the medical and social history of this country.

Almost every speaker referred to the number of people involved in this massive experiment. Basil O'Connor, President of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, said: "Each man needs to feel that he belongs, that he has an expressible relation to others, that he is part of a community in which he can live not only within himself but outside himself, contributing to the welfare of his fellow man."

Those of you who have contributed to the fight against polio would have received your dividend in full measure, had you been here today. And yet, it was a quiet sort of victory. Perhaps because most of the people present were professionals and realized that this was only a step, altho a gigantic one, in the field of preventive medicine. Some of the wisest words of the day were spoken by Dr. Alan Gregg, vice president of the Rockefeller Foundation, who said: "It has been the wise policy of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis to avoid making promises it cannot be sure of keeping, to refrain from letting dreams pass for deed and wishes for thinking." At a time when the media of modern communications are overly inclined to persuade, astonish, frighten, or amuse and tempted to exaggeration and prematurity in each of these gainful activities, there can be a lasting advantage in sobriety of statement.

Dr. Gregg spoke of the parents and children who took part in last year's unprecedented mass experiment. One could not imagine a more phenomenal or heartening example of reasonableness and courage than these volunteers have given. They were not conscripts; there was no certainty of personal advantage; in fact, the uncertainty of it was explicit. There was no deception from above and no defection in the ranks. They willingly took part in a huge unselfish experiment, a loyal, steadfast and intelligent part in an enterprise that called for exactly those qualities: loyalty, steadfastness and intelligence.

Dr. Gregg believes it is possible that the degree of protection offered by the Salk vaccine will be such as to give a control of infantile paralysis comparable to the control we have over smallpox, yellow fever, diphtheria and typhoid. This does not mean or imply complete eradication, tho it does not exclude it. He foresees the possibility of other mass experiments on other diseases; even that ever-present and menacing urchin among diseases, the common cold, may prove susceptible of control. He thinks it probable that this demonstration of mass research will facilitate public and private support for the control of this and other diseases.

In speaking of today's announcement Dr. Gregg said: "It is as tho music that began in a minor key, befitting bewildered suffering and dogged patience, now strikes the major chords of relief and exultation." Modest but not doubtful; cautious but justifiably eager!

The National Institute of Health in Washington will determine standards that must be met by each lot of vaccine before it is licensed for distribution. The supply of vaccine is really divided into two parts. The National Foundation has enough for nine million children, bought with March of Dimes funds. This will be offered to all children who participated in last year's field trials but who did not actually receive vaccine. It will also be offered to all first and second grade students in all types of schools, on written request from their parents. The vaccine is being produced by six pharmaceutical companies and may be obtained by physicians in the same way they obtain similar products in present use. The existing supply of vaccine has not been definitely established, but it is unlikely that there will be enough of it to inoculate every child in the United States before the coming polio season.

There is concern here about the possibility of a black market and the creation of some system of rationing or priorities to assure equitable distribution. If you are interested in these and other problems you can see Doctors Salk, Francis, and Gregg discussing them on CBS' television SEE IT NOW, at 10:30 Eastern Time tonite.

This is Ed Murrow at WUOM, the University of Michigan. Now to Larry Lesueur in New York for the rest of the news.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

No oratory, no rhetoric. He was spelling out this unprecedented experiment step by step. His was no effort to persuade, merely to expound. Chart followed chart; graph followed graph on the big screen behind him while he talked on in the dark. The Salk vaccine works . It is effective, and it is safe. It is not perfect, but the speculation has been ended. One set of figures followed another. Adverse reaction to the inoculations were nearly negligible. Four children who received placebo, the so-called blank shots, died. No child who received the vaccine died of poliomyelitis. The figure of 80 to 90 per cent effectiveness in preventing parlytic polio has been used in describing the Salk vaccine. Here are the exact words used by Dr. Francis:

"If the results from the observed study areas are employed, the vaccine could be considered to have been 60 to 80 per cent effective against paralytic polio. 60 percent against type 1, and 70 to 80 per cent effective against disease caused by types 2 and 3 ... on this basis, it may be suggested that vaccination was 80 to 90 per cent effective against paralytic polio, that it was 60 to 70 percent effective against disease caused by type 1 virus, and 90 percent or more effective against that of type 2 and type 3 virus."

The report by Dr. Jonas Salk of the University of Pittsburgh, based on his own studies, closely paralleled the findings of Dr. Francis and his group. There was no vanity; no complacency in this small man who looks like an unusally serious graduate student, and whose name now becomes part of the medical and social history of this country.

Almost every speaker referred to the number of people involved in this massive experiment. Basil O'Conner, President of the National Foundation for Infantil Paralysis, said: "Each man needs to feel that he belongs, that he has an expressable relation to others, that he is part of a community in which he can live not only within himself but outside himself, contributing to the welfare of his fellow man."

Those of you who have contributed to the fight against polio would have received your dividend in full measure had you been here today, and yet it was a quiet sort of victory, perhaps because most of the people present were professionals and realized that this was only a step, although a gigantic one, in the field of preventive medicine.

Some of the wisest words of the day were spoken by Dr. Alan Gregg, Vice president of the Rockefeller Foundation, who said: "It has been the wise policy of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis to avoid making promises it cannot be sure of keeping, to refrain from letting dreams pass for deeds, and wishes for thinking. At a time when the media of modern communications are overly inclined to persuade, astonish, frighten or amuse - and tempted to exaggeration and prematurity in each of these gainful activities, there can be a lasting advantage in sobriety of statement."

Dr. Gregg spoke of the parents and children who took part in last year's unprecedented mass experiment, one could not imagine a more phenomenal or heartening example of reasonableness and courage that these volunteers have given. They were not conscripts. There was no certainity of per sonal advantage; in fact, the uncertainty of it was explicit. There was no deception from above, and no defection in the ranks. They willingly took part in a huge unselfish experiment. A loyal, steadfast and intelligent part in an enterprise that called for exactly those qualities: loyalty, steadfastness and intelligence.

Dr. Gregg belives it is possible that the degree of protection offered by the Salk Vaccine will be such as to give a control of Infantile Paralysis comparable to the control we have over smallpox, yellow fever, diptheria and typhoid. This does not mean or imply complete eradication, though it does not exclude it. He foresees the possibility of other mass experiments on other diseases, even that ever present and menacing urchin among diseases, the common cold may prove susceptible of control. He thinks it probable that this demonstration of mass research will facilitate public and private support for the control of this and other diseases. In speaking of today's announcement, Dr.Gregg said: "It is as though music that began in the minor key befitting, bewildered, suffering and dogged patience, now strikes the major chords of relief and exultation, modest but not doubtful; cautious, but justifiably eager."

The National Institute of Health inWashington will determine standards that must be met by each lot of vaccine before it is licensed for distribution. The supply of vaccine is really divided into two parts.- The National Foundation has enough for nine million children, bought with March of Dimes funds. This will be offered to all children who participated in last year's field trials, but who did not actually receive vaccine. It will also be offered to all first and second grade students in all types of schools on written request from their parents. The vaccine is being produced by five pharmaceutical companies and may be obtained by physicians in the same way they obtain similar products in present use. The existing supply of vaccine has not been definitely established, but it is unlikely that there will be enough of it to inoculate every child in the United States before the coming polio season. There is concern here about the possibility of a black market and a creation of some system of rationing or priorities to assure equitable distribution. If you are interested in these and other problems, you can see doctors Salk, Francis and Gregg discussing them on CBS Television, "See It Now" at ten thirty, Eastern Time tonight.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 12, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

MURROW: This is Ann Arbor, Michigan, where the probing fingertips of science today lifted some considerable part of the burden of fear from American homes. The baseball season is open; the trout season, too, in many places. And as a result of what was made known here today, a lot of youngsters, some of them yet unborn, will be hitting that long ball, chasing flies in the outfield, and scrambling over rocks to their favorite fishing hole instead of being twisted and tortured by polio.

The sun was warm, the earth coming alive; there was hope and promise in the air. The occasion called for banners in the breeze and trumpets in the distance. Instead, the scene was Rackham Auditorium, here at the University of Michigan. About six hundred scientists and reporters. The atmosphere combined that of a clinic and a church. The camera lights were hot. The family of Dr. Jonas Salk sat well down in the front, the tall, serene Mrs. Salk and the three boys. The little six-year-old mopped his brow with a clean white handkerchief and then tucked it carefully back in his breast pocket. There were the usual speeches of welcome. Then came Dr. Thomas Francis, Jr., Director of the Polio Vaccine Evaluation Center, the man who made the measurements and the checks on all the field tests. No oratory, no rhetoric. He was spelling out this unprecedented experiment step by step. His was no effort to persuade - merely to expound. Chart followed chart, graph followed graph on the big screen behind him while he talked on in the dark.

The Salk vaccine works. It is effective and it is safe. It is not perfect, but the speculation has been ended. One set of figures followed another. Adverse reactions to the inoculations were nearly negligible.

Four children who received placeba - that is, the so-called blank shots -- died. No child who received the vaccine died. The figure of eighty to ninety percent effectiveness in preventing paralytic polio has been used in describing the Salk vaccine. Here are the words used by Dr. Francis: "If the results from the observed study areas are employed, the vaccine could be considered to have been sixty to eighty per cent effective against paralytic polio, that it was sixty to seventy per cent effective against disease caused by type 1 virus and ninety percent or more effective against that of type 2 and type 3 virus.

The report by Dr. Jonas Salk of the University of Pittsburgh, based on his own studies, closely paralleled the findings of Dr. Francis and his group. There was no vanity, no complacency in this small man, who looks like an unusually serious graduate student and whose name now becomes part of the medical and social history of this country.

Almost every speaker referred to the number of people involved in this massive experiment. Basil O'Connor, President of the National Foundation for Infantile Papalysis, said: "Each man needs to feel that he belongs, that he has an expressible relation to others, that he is part of a community in which he can live not only within himself but outside himself, contributing to the welfare of his fellow man."

Those of you who have contributed to the fight against polio would have received your dividend in full measure, had you been here today. And yet, it was a quiet sort of victory. Perhaps because most of the people present were professionals and realized that this was only a step, although a gigantic one, in the field of preventive medicine. Some of the silent words of the day were spoken by Dr. Alan Gregg, vice president of the Rockerfeller Foundation, who said: "It has been the wise policy of the National Foundation who said: "It has been the wise policy of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis to avoid making promises it cannot be sure of keeping, to refrain from letting dreams pass for deed and wishes for thinking." At a time when the media of modern communications are overly inclined to persuade astonish, frighten, or amuse and tempted to exaggeration and prematurity in each of these gainful activities, there can be a lasting advantage in sobriety of statement.

Dr. Gregg spoke of the parents and children who took part in last year's unprecedented mass experiment. One could not imagine a more phenomenal or heartening example of reasonableness and courage than these volunteers have given; They were not conscripts; there was no certainty of personal a vantage; in fact, the uncertainty of is was explicit. There was no deception from above and no defection in the ranks. They willingly took part in a huge unselfish experiment, a loyal, steadfast and intelligent part in an enterprise that called for exactly those qualities: loyalty, steadfastness and intelligence.

Dr. Gregg believes it is possible that the degree of protection offered by the Salk vaccine will be such as to give a control of infantile paralysis comparable to the control we have over smallpox, yellow fever, diphtheria and typhoid. This does not mean or imply complete eradication, though it does not exclude it. He foresees the possibility of other mass experiments on other diseases; even that ever-present and menacing urchin among diseases, the common cold may prove susceptible of control. He thinks it probable that this demonstration of mass research will facilitate public and private support for the control of this and other diseases.

In speaking of today's announcement Dr. Gregg said: "It is as though music that began in a minor key, befitting bewildered suffering and dogged patience, now strikes the major chords of relied and exultation."

Modest but not doubtful; cautious but justifiably eager!

The National Institute of Health in Washington will determine standards that must be met by each lot of vaccine before it is licensed for distribution. The supply of vaccine is really divided into two parts. The National Foundation has enough for nine million children, bought with March of Dimes funds. This will be offered to all children who participated in last year's trials but who did not actually receive vaccine. It will also be offered to all first and second grade students in all types of schools, on written request from their parents. The vaccine is being produced by six pharmaceautical companies and may be obtained by physicians in the same way they obtain similar products in present use. The existing supply of vaccine has not been definitely established, but it is unlikely that there will be enough of it to inoculate every child in the United States before the coming of the polio season.

There is concern here about the possibility of a black market and the creation of some system of rationing or priorities to assure equitable distribution. If you are interested in these and other problems you can see Doctors Salk, Francis, and Gregg discussing them on CBS's television SEE IT NOW, at 10:30 Eastern Time tonight.

This is Ed Murrow at WUOM, the University of Michigan. Now to Larry Lesueur in New York for the rest of the news.

LL: In Hyde Park, New York, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt placed a wreath of lillies on the grave of her husband who died ten years ago today. And she told reporters that she is delighted with the outcome of the Salk tests. She reminded them that "We will have to go on with the March of Dimes for a long time because we wtill have people who have had the disease, who must be cared for."

The President today spoke to the graduating class of the Citadel at Charleston, South Carolina. He called upon its members to become "apostles of peace" in the hope of pormoting understanding among nations. Mr. Eisenhower said there can be no peace in the world "unless there be a magnificent growth of understanding."

The Supreme Court today heard attorneys for four southern states argue that a premature end to racial segregation in the schools would destroy their school systems and might lead to violence. Thurgold Marshall, attorney for the National Association for the Admancement of Colored People, called this "a form of blackmail". He said the southern states are arguing:"If you don't give me what I want, I'll abolish public schools." He wants the court to order integration of the nation's public schools by next fall or by September of 1956 at the latest.

National Republican and Democratic leaders agreed today that three million dollars is not enough to finance a national political committee in a presidential election campaign. Democratic Chairman Butler wants the present ceiling...which is fixed by 1939 law..to be raised to at least six million dollars. Republican Chairman Hall calls the present 3-million limit "outmoded and unrealistic" but he suggests no specific new figure.

Communist China charged today that the crash of a plane carrying 18 persons from Hong Kong to Indonesia was due to sabotage by American and Chinese Nationalist secret agents. The Communists had three delegates on the plane bound for the African - Asian conference in Bandung. Five Chinese Red reporters were also aboard. So far only three crewmen have been found. The Peiping radio says the accident is "a murder deliberately engineered" by American and Chinese Nationalist agents. The Communists say they warned the British in advance..before the plane took off.

In East Germany, the Communist government tonight announced the arrest of 521 alleged "western agents" and the liquidation of what it called "a considerable number of espionage and terror groups" in the last few days. The East Germans accuse the United States, Great Britain and France of having turned West Berlin into a center for espionage activities directed against East Germany.

In Moscow, Soviet Premire Bulganin and American Ambassador Bohlen exchanged toasts tonight toward early restoration of Austrian independence. Both indicated they believe an Austrian settlement will be a step in the direction of world peace.

In Washington, Senator McClellan and Harold Stassen announced "A thorough understanding"..which apparently ends their row over Congressional investigating powers. Stassen handed over all but two of the 22 documents the Senate investigators had threatened to subpoena if he refused.

I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today, but first, here's Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

LESUEUR: Here's Ed Murrow's Word for Today...Dr. Allan Gregg, of the Rockerfeller Foundation said today that its certain we are now to be faced as a people, with a desperate test. Can we resist the temptation to bootleg, cheat and quarrel for a vaccine that's sn short supply.

Will a scientivic victory be followed by a moraldefeat? The challenge is certain..the answer is NOT. It lies with us all.

This is Larry Lesueur saying Good Night and Good Luck.

Wednesday - April 13, 1955

This is the news:

The President has decided to send the latest information on the Salk polio vaccinne to [redacted] nations all over the world. This gesture of international good will would include the Russians and their satellites. Secretary of State [redacted] Dulles said he'll send-on the information... and he'll consult with other government officials to see how far we can go in making the vaccine itself available for export. [redacted] In a few minutes I'd like to discuss other developments in the vaccine story.

~~This is the news~~:

Secretary of State Dulles says we are trying "in many ways" to bring about a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. He told the Church Press Association in Washington: America does not believe in backing down to the Chinese Communists. And we will never agree to "the surrender of human beings into slavery." Mr. Dulles says the Chinese Reds appear to be inspired "by the type of aggressiveness that is unhappily reminiscent of Nazi Germany. [redacted]

[redacted] are [redacted] Again today, the Chinese Communist radio accused "western agents" of sabotaging a planeload of Communist delegates bound for the African-Asian conference at Bandung.

The State Department says this is propaganda... calls the charges preposterous.

The President--in Augusta, Georgia-- today approved a plan for the exchange of some atomic secrets ~~with~~ among the 14 members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. He says he considers this "a great stride forward in the strengthening of our common defense." We would not give our allies atomic weapons..or information on how to make such weapons. But we would share with them information that deals with the development of defense plans....training of personnel in the use of atomic weapons..and the evluation of the capabilities of potential enemies in the use of such weapons. The agreement would go into effect only when it has been signed by all the NATO countries.

The Administration today asked the Supreme Court to use "mderation with firmness" in ordering the states to end racial segregation in their public schools. United States Solicitor General Simon E. Sobeloff ended three days of arguments on how and when the states must comply with the Supreme Court's ruling that segregated schools are not constitutional. Sobeloff said: the government does not agree with attorneys for Negro groups that schools should be integrated immediately. And it does not favor turning the problem over to lower courts with no target date for ending segregation. What the government suggests is this: the school cases should be sent back to lower courts with specific orders to end segregation as fast as possible. He would not give the lower courts blank checks. But he would give them some guide, some criteria to follow. He would instruct the lower courts to accept no delays--except for good cause. Earlier, the Supreme Court heard representatives of North Carolina explain that the immediate mingling of white and Negro students might mean the end to the state's public school system...might result in "race hatred and bitterness unparalleled since the days of the Ku Klux Klan." Oklahoma joined Maryland in asking for a gradual adjustment from segregated to non-segregated schools. Texas said it wants to handle the problem itself. And Solicitor General Sobeloff told the court the first thing it should do is make it clear that all state constitutions and laws that conflict with its anti-segregation decision are void. He said no important change in social custom has ever been accomplished without some resistance. He urged the court not to under-rate "the immense influence of its authority among men of good-will and patriotism in all parts of the country."

5

A Senate judiciary subcommittee today voted unanimously to make a "complete and thorough" inquiry into the way the 1953 refugee law has been handled..and the removal of Edward J. Corsi, as a top adviser on refugees, by Secretary of State Dulles. The committee started by questioning Scott McCloud, the state department security chief, in secret session. Chairman Langer says the Senators will probably call Corsi and Secretary Dulles. ~~Democratic Senator Hennings of Missouri charges that the small number of refugees admitted under the law is a "disgrace to the Administration" and an "indictment of the good faith" of McCloud and his associates. And Corsi has accused McCloud of waging a "whispering campaign" against him.~~

Congress returned to work today after its ten-day Easter recess. And in the Senate, 23 Democrats, nearly half the party's strength, paid tribute to the late President Roosevelt..who died ten years ago yesterday. Mr. Roosevelt was ranked with Washington and Lincoln. And the Democratic Senators defended the course he followed at Yalta and other international conferences. Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas called Mr. Roosevelt "the greatest man of our generation." And he added:"It is a real test of his greatness that even now there are those who feel compelled to descend into his grave to debate endlessly the questions of his time."

General Peyton C. March, the army chief of staff in World War One died today in the army's Walter Reed Hospital. He was 90 years old.

In Berlin, the East German Communists have repeated their threat of security measures against isolated West Berlin. And West Berlin's Lord Mayor Otto Suhr called on the western allies for action to block the "economic blockade." He said this is a matter that only the western allies can settle.

In Moscow, Foreign Minister Molotov says he expects a "positive result" from the present negotiations on an Austrian state treaty which the West can accept.

Edward R. Murrow: April 13, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The confusion about the distribution of the Salk polio vaccine continues. The government has placed controls on the export of it, which means that shipment abroad, except to Canada, must be specially licensed. Today in Washington, Democratic Senator Hill of Alabama asked the Secretary of Welfare, Mrs. Hobby, to immediately urge President Eisenhower to call a national conference of those concerned, which will result in assurances to the parents of America that so long as supplies of the Salk vaccine are insufficient to meet demand, they will be used fairly, justly, and where they will do the most good. Senator Hill said it would be: "tragic and a shame to our society if one eight-year-old child was allowed to die, or to go through life unnecessarily crippled because some adult had, for purposes of greed, decided to build a black market in the Salk vaccine." Mrs. Hobby said: "The White House is very much aware of the problem."

Dr. Scheele, the United States Surgeon General, said the government already is doing everything possible to prevent any black market. He said the idea of a conference of health officers, the American Medical Association, the firms making the vaccine and the scientists who developed it, is already being discussed. A spokesman for the Public Health Service said today it has no plans to set up a system for government allocation of the polio vaccine. He said: "It doesn't seem to be necessary" - added that the supply is not adequate right now, which is a very considerable understatement, although no one in a responsible position has said what the present supply is.

The final decision between a two or a three-shot vaccine for the nation's school children has not yet been made. If the decision is in favor of two shots instead of three, that will of course increase the number that can be innoculated.

One fact stands out in this perhaps necessarily confused situation. There will not be enough vaccine available to innoculate all school children before the beginning of this year's polio season. The men who developed and tested the vaccine are inclined to favor the two-shot operation, partly because they think it will be effective, and partly because they want to spread the available supply as widely as possible.

However, there is another consideration involved in this whole matter. The statistics show that the highest rate of vulnerability to polio lies somewhere between the ages of four and eight. [The exact age groups vary in different parts of the country.] But that's the bracket where the virus is most likely to strike. It follows that in view of the limited supply available, any adult who buys the vaccine - black market or otherwise - deprives some kid in that critical age group of protection. It is also the opinion of a number of public health officers that a reserve supply of the vaccine should be kept on hand to be rushed to areas where epidemic strikes, or is threatened. It is easy enough to outline the dilemma, and to appreciate the problem presented. But it is not so easy to get agreement between the various groups and individuals involved, as to what should be done about it. There is in many quarters a natural reluctance to turn to government control; but there is at the same time a widespread belief among scientists who have participated in this fight, that the national interest may require intervention in one form or another by the President; - a belief that in this situation the so-called law of supply and demand cannot safely be allowed to operate. For the question, basically, can be put in reverse fashion. It is not only who shall be protected against polio, it is also who shall run the risk of getting it. And the greatest risk is run, with variations, by the group between four and eight.

It would appear evident that there is here present a test of statesmanship and fair play on the part of government authorities, scientists, medical men, and those firms producing the vaccine. No one pretends that the solution will be easy or agreeable to all parties concerned. But there does appear to be agreement that solution is urgent.

(& PARENTS?)

Basically the question would seem to be what is best, most fair and most equitable in the national interest. There is some precedent for XXX the solution of this problem. There is in existence the National Research Council. It is the operating section of the National Academy of Sciences. It is the only privately endowed institution formally designated as the scientific advisor to the government. The Academy is made up of the nation's top scientists. It receives some government support for special projects, but it is independent of government control. When it was necessary to ration and allocate gamma globulin and penicillin, the National Research Council did the job. It might prove to be a useful and useable instrument in deciding XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX who gets the Salk Polio Vaccine.

In the matter of dispensing the limited amounts of polio vaccine at hand, it would seem that the very least to be expected is that no one be granted preferential treatment. Aristotle once remarked: "The only stable state is the one in which all men are equal." This should apply to children too. For, as Publilius Syrus concluded long ago:"The one time we are all equal is in the presence of death."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow: April 13, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The confusion about the distribution of the Salk polio vaccine continues. The government has placed controls on the export of it, which means that shipment abroad, except to Canada, must be specially licensed. Today in Washington, Democratic Senator Hill of Alabama asked the Secretary of Welfare, Mrs. Hobby, to immediately urge President Eisenhower to call a national conference of those concerned, which will result in assurances to the parents of America that so long as supplies of the Salk vaccine are insufficient to meet demand, they will be used fairly, justly, and where they will do the most good. Senator Hill said it would be: "tragic and a shame to our society if one eight-year-old child was allowed to die, or to go through life unnecessarily crippled because some adult had, for purposes of greed, decided to build a black market in the Salk vaccine." Mrs. Hobby said: "The White House is very much aware of the problem."

Dr. Scheele, the United States Surgeon General, said the government already is doing everything possible to prevent any black market. He said the idea of a conference of health officers, the American Medical Association, the firms making the vaccine and the scientists who developed it, is already being discussed. A spokesman for the Public Health Service said today it has no plans to set up a system for government allocation of the polio vaccine. He said: "It doesn't seem to be necessary" - added that the supply is not adequate right now, which is a very considerable understatement, although no one in a responsible position has said what the present supply is.

The final decision between a two or a three-shot vaccine for the nation's school children has not yet been made. If the decision is in favor of two shots instead of three, that will of course increase the number that can be innoculated.

One fact stands out in this perhaps necessarily confused situation. There will not be enough vaccine available to innoculate all school children before the beginning of this year's polio season. The men who developed and tested the vaccine are inclined to favor the two-shot operation, partly because they think it will be effective, and partly because they want to spread the available supply as widely as possible.

However, there is another consideration involved in this whole matter. The statistics show that the highest rate of vulnerability to polio lies somewhere between the ages of four and eight. The exact age groups vary in different parts of the country. But that's the bracket where the virus is most likely to strike. It follows that in view of the limited supply available, any adult who buys the vaccine - black market or otherwise - deprives some kid in that critical age group of protection. It is also the opinion of a number of public health officers that a reserve supply of the vaccine should be kept on hand to be rushed to areas where epidemic strikes, or is threatened. It is easy enough to outline the dilemma, and to appreciate the problem presented. But it is not so easy to get agreement between the various groups and individuals involved, as to what should be done about it. There is in many quarters a natural relustance to turn to government control; but there is at the same time a widespread belief among scientists who have participated in this fight, that the national interest may require intervention in one form or another by the President; a belief that in this situation the so-called law of supply and demand cannot safely be allowed to operate. For the question, basically, can be put in reverse fashion. It is not only who shall be protected against polio, it is also who shall run the risk of getting it. And the greatest risk is run, with variations, by the group between four and eight.

It would appear evident that there is here present a test of statesmanship and fair play on the part of government authorities, scientists, medical men, and those firms producing the vaccine. No one pretends that the solution will be easy or agreeable to all parties concerned. But there does appear to be agreement that solution is urgent.

Basically the question would seem to be what is best, most fair and most equitable in the national interest. There is some precedent for XXX the solution of this problem. There is in existence the National Research Council. It is the operating section of the National Academy of Sciences. It is the only privately endowed institution formally designated as the scientific advisor to the government. The Academy is made up of the nation's top scientists. It receives some government support for special projects, but it is independent of government control. When it was necessary to ration and allocate gamma globulin and penicillin, the National Research Council did the job. It might prove to be a useful and useable instrument in deciding XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX who gets the Salk Polio Vaccine.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 13, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The President has decided to send the latest information on the Salk polio vaccine to nations all over the world. This gesture of international good will would include the Russians and their satellites. Secretary of State Dulles said he'll send on the information .. and he'll consult with other government officials to see how far we can go in making the vaccine itself available for export. In a few minutes I'd like to discuss the other developements in the vaccine story.

Secretary of State Dulles says we are trying "in many ways" to bring about a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. He told the Church Press Association in Washington: America does not believe in backing down to the Chinese Communists And we will never agree to "the surrender of human beings into slavery." Mr. Dulles says the Chinese Reds appear to be inspired "by the type of aggressiveness that is unhapilly reminiscento of Nazi Germany.

The President -- in Augusta, Georgia -- today approved a plan for the exchange of some atomic secrets among the 14 members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. He says he considers this "a great stride forward in the strengthening of our common defense." We would not give our allies atomic weapons..or information on how to make such weapons. But we could share with them information that deals with the developement of defense plans... training of personnel in the use of atomic weapons.. and the evaluation of the capabilities of potential enemies in the use of usch weapons. The agreement would go into effect only when it has been signed by all the NATO countries.

The Administration today asked the Supreme Court to use "moderation with firmness" in ordering the states to end racial segregation in their public schools. United States Solicitor General Simon E. Sobeloff ended three days of arguments on how and when the states must comply with the Supreme Court's ruling that segregated schools are not constitutional. Sobeloff said: the government does not agree with attorneys for Negro groups that schools should be integrated immediately. And it does not favor turning the problem over to lower courts with no target date for ending segregation. What the government suggests is this: the school cases should be sent back to lower courts with specific orders to end segregation as fast as possible. He would not give the lower courts blank checks. But he would give them some guide, some criteria to follow. He would instruct the lower courts to accept no delays -- except for good cause. Earlier, the Surpeme Court heard representatives of North Carolina explain that the immediate mingling of white and Negro students might mean the end to the state's public school system..might result in "race hatred and bitterness unparalleled since the days of the Klu Klux Klan." No important change in social custom has ever been accomplished without some resistance. He urged the court not to under-rate "the immense influence of its authority among men of good-will and patriotism in all parts of the country."

A Senate judiciary subcommittee today voted unanimously to make a "complete and thorough" inquiry into the way the 1953 refugee law has been handled ..and the removal of Edward J. Corsi as a top adviser on refugees by Secretary of State Dulles. The committee started by questioning Scott McCloud, the State Department security chief, in secret session. Chairman Langer says the Senators will probably call Corsi and Secretary Dulles.

Congress returned to work today after its ten-day Easter recess. And in the Senate, 23 Democrats, nearly half the party's strength, paid tribute to the late President Roosevelt..who died ten years ago yesterday. Mr Roosevelt was ranked with Washington and Lincoln. And the Democratic Senators defended the course he followed at Yalta and other international conferences Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas called Mr. Roosevelt "the greatest man of our generation." And he added:"It is a real test of his greatness that even now there are those who feel compelled to descend into his grave to debate endlessly the questions of his time."

General Peyton C. March, the army chief of staff in World War One, died today in the army's Walter Reed Hospital. He was 90 years old.

In Berlin, the East German Communists have repeated their threat of security measures against isolated West Berlin. And West Berlin's Lord Mayor Otto Suhr called on the western allies for action to block the "economic blockade". He said this is a matter that only the western allies can settle.

In Moscow, Foreign Minister Molotov says he expects a "positive result" from the present negotiations on on Austrian state treaty which the West can accept.

The confusion about the distribution of the Salk polio vaccine continues. The government has placed controls on the export of it, which means that shipment abroad, except to Canada, must be specially licensed.

Today in Washington, Democratic Senator Hill of Alabama asked the Secretary of Welfare, Mrs. Hobby, to immediately urge President Eisenhower to call a national conference of those concenned, which will result in assurances to the parents of America that so long as supplies of the Salk vaccine are insufficient to meet demand, they will be used fairly, justly, and where they will do the most good. Senator Hill said it would ge:"tragic and a shame to our society of one eight-year-old child was allowed to died, or to go through life unnecessarily crippled because some adult had, for purposes of greed, decided to build up a black market in the Salk vaccine." Mrs. Hobby said: "The White House is very much aware of this problem."

Dr. Scheele, the United States Surgeon General, said the government already is doing everything possible to prevent any black market. He said the idea of a conference of health officers, the American Medical Association, the firms making the vaccine and the scientists who developed it, is already being discussed. A spokesman for the Public Health Service said it has no plans to set up a system for government allocation of the polio vaccine He said: "It doesn't seem no be necessary" - added that the supply is not adequate righe now, which is a very considerable understatement, although no one in a responsible position has said what the present supply is.

The final decision between a two or three-shot vaccine for the nation's school children has not yet been made. If the decision is in favor of two shots instead of three, that will of course increase the number than can be innoculated.

One fact stands out in this perhaps necessarily confused situation. There will not be enough vaccine available to innoculate all school children before the beginning of this year's polio season. The men who developed and tested the vaccine are inclined to favor a two-shot operation, partly because they think it will be effective, and partly because they want to spread the available supply as widely as possible.

However, there is another consideration involved in this whole matter. The statistics show that the highest rate of vulnerability to polio lies somewhere between the ages of four and eight. The exact age groups vary in different parts of the country. But that's the bracket where the virus is most likely to strike. It follows that in view of the limited supply available, any adult who buys the vaccine - black market or otherwise - deprives some kid in that critical age group of protection. It is also the opinion of a number of public health officers that a reserve supply of the vaccine should be kept on hand to be rushed to areas where epidemic strikes, or is threatened. It is easy enough to outline the dilemma, and to appreciate the problem presented. But it is not so easy to get agreement between the various groups and individuals involved, as to what should be done about it. There is in many quarters a natural reluctance toturn to government control; but there is at the same time widespread belief among scientists who have participated in this fight, that the national interest may require intervention in one form or another by the President; - a belief that in this situation the so-called law of supply and demand cannot safely be allowed to operate.

For the question, basically, can be put in reverse fashion. It is not only who shall be protected against polio, it is also who shall run the risk of getting it. And the greatest risk is run, with ramiations, by the group between four and eight.

It would appear evident that there is here present a test of statesmanship and fair play on the part of government authorities, scientists, medical men, and those firms producing the vaccine. No one pretends that the solution will be easy or agreeable to all parties concerned. But there does appear to be agreement that solution is urgent.

Basically the question would seem to be what is best, most fair and most equitable in the national interest. There is some precedent for the solution of this problem. There is in existence the National Research Council. It is the operating section of the National Academy of Sciences. It is the only privately endowed institution formally designated as the scientific advisor to the government. The Adademy is made up of the nation's top scientists. It receives some government support for special projects, but it is independent of government control. When it was necessary to ration and and allocate gamma globulin and penicillin, the National Research Council did the job. It might prove to be a useful and useable instrument in deciding who gets the Salk Polio Vaccine.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixnn.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In the matter of dispensing the limited amounts of polio vaccine at hand, it would seem that the very least to be expected is that no one be granted preferential treatment. Aristotle once remarked:"The only stable state is the one in which all men are equal." This should apply to children too. For, as Pubilius Syrus concluded long ago; "The one time we are all equal is in the presence of death."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday, April 14, 1955

This is the news:

The government has called a meeting of medical and health representatives... the drug industry and others..to work out a plan for the fair distribution of the Salk polio vaccine. Welfare Secretary Hobby called the meeting for next Friday a week from tomorrow in Washington. She acted on instructions from the President "to explore every possible means to assure equal opportunity for immunization for all who wish it"..as quickly as possible.

Earlier today, the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis announced that it was accepting Dr. Salk's recommendation for two shots of the vaccine (two to four weeks apart) to be followed by a third-booster shot seven months later. The Foundation will supply TWO SHOTS free to 9 million first and second grade youngsters and those who were given "dummy shots" in last year's test. They'll have to get their booster shots from private doctors. The Foundation expects that these DOCTORS will follow its plan for two shots now..and one later. (This will mean a spread of the available vaccine.) IT means that some 45-million youngsters, in all, will be vaccinated.. rather than the 30-million that could be vaccinated if all three shots were to be given in a short period.

~~The National Polio Foundation will gove two shots to all first and second grade children. They'll have to get their third shots from local doctors.~~

The Foundation also made it known today that last September, at an International Polio Conference in Rome, it shared its vaccine KNOW-HOW with a number of foreign countries..including Russia. [Last night the President directed Secretary of State Dulles to make this information available to all countries.] We Recognise,

Today, from Augusta, the President asked Congress to approve our membership in the Organization for Trade Cooperation.. a new world trade organization. He said this would be an important step in the struggle against Communist domination.

And Soviet Ambassador Zarubin called at the State Department, to get a reply to Moscow's inquiry, last November, about the President's proposal to distribute atomic data among all nations for peaceful purposes.

The Supreme Court today heard the last of arguments on how and when to put into EFFECT its order ending segregation in the schools. Solicitor General Sobeloff urged the court to "suggest motion, to encourage motion" toward ending segregation. But he does not want the court to set any ironclad deadline. On the other hand, Thurgood Marshal, chief attorney for the Negroes involved in the court cases, said that Negro children are entitled to their constiutional rights -- without delay. He asked the court to set a deadline for ending segregation... either September of this year or September of next year. #

Marshal said that never before had the argument been made to postpone constitutional rights. He said:"We are asked for the sake of the group which has denied these rights, that the Negroes should give up their rights."

Commerce Secretary Weeks said today that 1955 may well turn out to be the best year so far in the history of our economy.

And the Administration proposed that the minimum wage be increased from 75 cents to 90 cents an hour..with an additional two million 200-thousand workers to be covered by it. Both the A.F of L. and the C.I.O. are fighting for a [redacted] wage floor OF $1.25 AN HOUR. And northern members of Congress have been pushing for a 1-dollar an hour minimum wage. Labor Secretary Mitchell said a new minimum of 90 cents an hour would more than compensate for the cost of living increase since 1950. The present law applies to 24-million workers.

A Senate Judiciary subcommittee says it will start public hearings tomorrow on the controversey over Edward Corsi's ouster as State Department adviser on refugee problems. ~~Chairman Langer says Corsi and Scott McCloud, the state department security chief, are in "very sharp disagreement" over how the new refugee act has worked.~~

Here in New York, Daniel A. Bolich, former assistant commissioner of internal revenue, was sentenced to five years in prison and fined 15-thousand dollars...for corrupting Internal Revenue officials and inducing witnesses to commit perjury before a federal grand jury.

The State Department says 11 Russian editors who have waited almost a year for permission to enter the United States, missed their boat in Great Britain today... because they would not permit their fingerprints to be taken. The State Department, still expecting the editors, says they did not know that fingerprinting is required by the McCarran-Walter immigration act.

In Moscow today, the Austrian ambassador said his country and Russia have "agreed on practically all questions" on a treaty to restore Austraia's independence. And Premier Rabb's Peoples Party in Vienna says the premier telephoned a message saying:"Austria will be free, and we will receive back our native soil in its entirety."

Edward R. Murrow: April 14, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Next Monday the Asian conference opens in Bandung, in Indonesia. (It represents about 53 percent of the population of the world.) Nothing quite like it has ever been held before. And if it should be held again, it might develop into a fixture in the international heavens, like some newly arrived planet, that affects the orbits and positions of all the other planets. For this is the first time in history that the government leaders of virtually all of Asia and Africa have ever sat down together, to learn if they have interests and aims in common. If they find they do, there will be a shift in power relationships everywhere. It won't be a revolutionary shift, one that upsets the balance of military power. Except for Communist China, the nations represented at Bandung don't have much military power. But they have populations, undeveloped resources, and a future. They are sure to become more important, not less so, as time goes on. And if they find they can help each other they will be more important still.

The conference has been branded as anti-Western. But that is only indirectly true. The one thing most of the twenty-nine countries represented at Bandung have in common, is their history of subservience and inferiority. Most of them were colonies until recently, and if not colonies in a formal sense they were weak, and exploited for the benefit of stronger countries. Japan is the outstanding exception. Since in the main this is their common heritage, they start with an innate resentment against imperialism, colonialism and racialism. And these memories will hold them together far more than any practical and immediate plans for the future. And that is what gives the conference the appearance of being anti-Western.

Not only have Asian and African countries never met as such before, this is the first decade in which they ever could have met. One of the phenomena of the last war was the political liberation it brought vast numbers of subject people. / The Bandung conference is convening at the invitation of the five so-called Colombo powers. And of the five, four used to belong to the British Empire, and acquired independence only recently. / These are India, Pakistan, Burma and Ceylon. Indonesia has a similar heritage, having only recently become independent of The Netherlands. / Three of these states are members of the British Commonwealth, India, Pakistan and Ceylon. They are free nations, not nations still fighting for freedom. / They may not glory in being close to Britain, but they are distinctly not anti-British, and the relation with Britain was not the genesis of this conference. / It wasn't conceived as an occasion for ex-colonials to close ranks against the white man.

Actually the conference is unique for the political varieties that are represented. Even if it looks anti-Western, it is not Communist, nor pro-Communist. Only two Communist states are to be present, Red China and Viet Minh. Eight Arab states are there, so is Pakistan, so are the Philippines, so is Japan, so is Ethiopia and so is Turkey - all more anti than pro-Communist. And Pakistan, Turkey and the Philippines not only are pro-Western, they belong to the Western defense system. Countries like India, Burma, Ceylon, Vietnam, Afghanistan, Nepal, are less outspokenly anti-Communist, but they are cautious about being linked closely with it.

Because of its common heritage, one might expect the conference to be anti-white man. But not all the nations represented are colored. Turkey and Iran count themselves white, and the Arab peoples, while dark complexioned are not racially colored. Of course, with Red China and India as members, the vast majority of populations represented are not white, and the non-Arabian Africans increase the non-white total. The conference certainly did not originate as a strictly racial meeting, though it is sure to pass a resolution against racialism.

The most arresting fact about the conference is that Premier Chou En-lai of Red China intends to be there and bring the largest delegation, well over a hundred in number. The Soviet Union, though it rules a vast Asian territory, was not invited, because it was considered to be primarily European. Instead, the door has been opened to a majority of the human race, for the influence of Communist China.

It was Burma more than India that insisted on Red China being asked. The motive was to encourage Communist China to temper its relations with its neighbors. Peiping had made a pact with New Delhi based on five points of amity, and put the same points into a pact with Burma. These include non-interference in each other's internal affairs, non-aggression, mutual respect for each other's territories and sovereignty, and peaceful co-existence. As China is expansionist and militarily strong, and as its neighbors are ~~XXXXXXX~~ militarily weak and pacific, one may say that Red China was invited as much out of fear, as friendship, and certainly in the hope of inducing it to be friendly.

Chou En-lai will share the spotlight with Mr. Nehru and his every word and action will be intently studied. Due to the nature of the conference, Chou can be expected to be honey-mouthed in all his speech with his neighbors. Any brimstone in his system will be reserved for the United States.

The Asian Conference which starts in Bandung next week will bring together many people of many nationalities, with many interests and many prejudices. [redacted] All concerned would do well to keep in mind something Edmund Burke once said: "There is no method of drawing up an indictment against a whole people." For, as Rousseau put it: "Nature never deceives us; it is always we who deceive ourselves."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 14, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The government has called a meeting of medical and health representatives.. the drug industry and others..to work out a plan for the fair distribution of the Salk polio vaccine. Welfare Secretary Hobby called the meeting for next Friday, a week from tomorrow, in Washington. She acted on instructions from the President "to explore every possible means to assure equal opportunity for immunization for all who wish it."..as quickly as possible.

Earlier today, the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis announced that it was accepting Dr. Salk's recommendation for two shots of the vaccine (two to four weeks apart) to be followed by a third-booster shot seven months later. The Foundation will supply two shots free to 9 million first and second grade youngsters and thosewho were given "dummy shots" in last year's test. They'll have to get their booster shots from private doctors. The Foundation expects these doctors will follow its plan for two shots now and one later. This will mean a spread of the available vaccine. It means that some 45-million youngsters, in all, will be vaccinated..rather than the 30-million that could be vaccinated if all three shots were to be given in a short period.

The Foundation also made it known today that last September, at an International Polio Conference in Rome, it shared its vaccine know-how with a number of foreign countries..including Russia. Last night the President directed Secretary of State Dulles to make this information available to all countries we recognise.

Today, from Augusta, the President asked Congress to approve our membership in the Organization for Trade Cooperation..a new world trade organization. He said this would be an important step in the struggle against Communist domination.

And Soviet Ambassador Zarubin called at the State Department to get a reply to Moscow's inquiry last November about the President's proposal to distribute atomic data among all nations for peaceful purposes.

The Supreme Court today heard the last of arguments on how and when to put into effect its order ending segretation in the schools. Solicitor General Sobeloff urged the court to "suggest motion,to encourage motion" toward segregation. But he does not want the court to set any ironclad deadline. On the other hand, Thurgood Marshal chief attorney for the Negroes involved in the court cases, said that Negro children are entitled to their constitutional rights without delay. He asked the court to set a deadline for ending segregation...either September of this year or September of next year.

Marshal said that never before had the argument been made to postpone constitutional rights. He said:"We are asked for the sake of the group which has denied these rights, that Negroes should give up their rights. "

Commerce Secretary Weeks said today that 1955 may well turn out to be the best year so far in the history of our economy.

And the Administration porposed that the mimimum rate be increased from 75 cents to 90 cents an hour ..with an additional two million 200-thousand workers to be covered by it. Both the A.F. of L. and the C.I.O. are fighting for a wage floor of $1.25 an hour. And northern members of Congress have been pushing for a $1 an hour mimimum wage. Labor Secretary Mitchell said a new mimimum of 90 cents an hour would more than compensate for the cost of living increase since 1950. The present law applies to 24-million workers.

A Senate Judiciary subcommittee says it will start public hearings tomorrow on the controversy over Edward Corsi's ouster as State Department adviser on refugee problems.

Here in New York, Daniel A. Bolich, former assistant commissioner of internal revenue, was sentenced to five years in prison and fined 15-thousand dollars..for corrupting Internal Revenue officials and inducing witnesses to commit perjury before a federal grand jury. The State Department says 11 Russian editors who have waited almost a year for permission to enter the United States, missed their boat in Great Britain today...because they would not permit their finger-prints to be taken. The State Department, still expecting the editors, says they did not know that fingerprinting is required by the McCarran - Walter immigration act.

In Moscow today, the Austrian ambassador said his country and Russia have "agreed on practically all questions" on a treaty to restore Austria's independence. And Premier Rabb's Peoples Party in Vienna says the premier telephoned a message saying: "Austria will be free, and we will receive back our native soil in its entirety."

Next Monday the Asian conference opens in Bandung, in Indonesia. It represents about 53 percent of the population of the world. Nothing quite like it has ever been held before. And if it should be held again, it might develop into a fixture in the international heavens, like some newly arrived planet, that affects the orbits and positions of all the other planets. For this is the first time in history that the government leaders of virtually all of Asia and Africa have ever sat down together, to learn if they have interests and aims in common. If they find they do, there will be a shift in power relationships everywhere. It won't be a revolutionary shift, one that upsets the balance of military power. Except for Communist China, the nations represented at Bandung don't have much military power. But they have populations, undeveloped resources, and a future. They are sure to become more important, not less so, as time goes on. And if they wind they can help each other, they will be more important still.

The conference has been branded as anti-Western. But that is only indirectly true. The one thing most of the twenty-nine countries represented at Bandung have in common is their history of subservience and inferiority. Most of them were colonies until recently, and if not colonies in a formal sense, they were weak, and exploited for the benefit of stronger countries. Japan is the outstanding exception. Since in the main this is their common heritage, they start with an innate resentment against imperialism, colonialism and racialism. And these memories will hold them together far more than any practical and immediate plans for the future. And that is what gives the conference the appearance of being anti-Western.

Not only have Asian and African countries never met as such before, this is the first decade in which they ever could have met. One of the phenomena of the last war was the political liberation it brought vast numbers of subject people. The Bandung conference is convening at the invitation of the five so-called Colombo powers. And of the five, four used to belong to the British Empire, and acquired independence only recently. These are India, Pakistan, Burma, and Ceylon. Indonesia has a similar heritage, having only recently become independent of the Netherlands. Three of these states are members of the British Commonwealth, India, Pakistan and Ceylon. They are free nations, not nations still fighting for freedom. They may not glory in being close to Britain, but they are distinctly not anti-British, and the relation with Britain was not the genisis of this conference. It wasn't conceived as an occasion for ex-colonials to close ranks against the white man.

Actually the conference is unique for the political varieties that are represented. Even if it looks anti-Western, it is not Communist, nor pro-Communist. Only two Communist states are to be present, Red China and Viet Minh. Eight Arab states are there, so is Pikistan, so are the Philippines, so is Japan, so is Ethiopia and so is Turkey - all are more anti than pro-Communist. And Pakistan, Turkey and the Philippines not only are pro-Western, they beolong to the Western defense system. Countries like India, Burma, Ceylon, Vietnam, Afganistan, Nepal, are less outspokenly anti-Communist, but they are cautious about being linked closely with it.

Because of its common heritage, one might expect the conference to be anti-white man. But not oll the nations represented are colored. Turkey and Iran count themselves white, and the Arab peoples, while dark co plexioned are not racially colored. Of course, with Red China and India as members, the vast majority of populations represented are not white, and the non-Arabian Africans increase the non-white total. The conference certainly did not originate as a strictly racial meeting, though it is sure to pass a resulution against racialism.

The most arresting fact about the conference is that Premier Chou En-lai of Red China intends to be there and bring the largest delegation, well over a hundred in number. The Soviet Union, though it rules a vast Asian territory, was not invited, because it was considered to be primarily European. Instead, the door has been opened to a majority of the human race, for the influence of Communist China.

It was Burma, more than India that insisted on Red China being asked. The motive was to encourage Communist China to temper its relations with its neighbors. Peiping had made a pact with New Delhi based on five points of amity, and put the same points into a pact with Burma. These include non-interference in each other's internal affairs, non-aggression, mutual respect for each other's territories and soverignty, and peaceful co-existence. As China is expansionist and militarily strong, ans as its neighbors are militarily weak and pacific, one may say that Red China was invited as much out of fear, as friendship, and certainly in the hope of inducing it to be friendly.

Chou En-lai will share the spotlight with Mr. Nehru and his every word and action will be intently studied. Due to the nature of the conference, Chou can be expected to by honey-mouthed in all his speech with his neighbors. Any brimstone in his system will be reserved for the United States.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Asian Conference which starts in Bandung next week will bring together many people of many nationalities, with many interests and many prejudices. All concerned would do well to keep in mind something Edmund Burke once said: "There is no method of drawing up an indictment against a whole people." For, as Rousseau put it:"Nature never deceives us; it is always we who deceive ourselves."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Friday, April 15, 1955

This is the news:

Prime Minister Eden today called for a national election in Great Britain, on May 26. Just nine days after taking office, the new premier challenged the divided Labor Party to a fight. And Morgan Phillips, secretary of the Labor Party, told reporters: "We are ready and eager."

Russia and Austria have agreed on steps that might lead to Austrian independence. (I'd like to discuss this development in a few minutes.)

And the western Big Three tonight proposed a four-power meeting with the Russians. (among the high commissioners in Germany.) We want to discuss reducing the recently increased Communist tax on trucks, carrying supplies to western Berlin. [redacted]

In Nevada today, the Atomic Energy Commission set off another explosion..designed to test the ability of weapons and supplies to withstand the force of an atomic explosion. And in Washington, Chairman Straws of the Atomic Energy Committee, told a Congressional committee: the radioactive fall-out from the Nevada tests has "barely added" to the natural radiation that is present everywhere, all the time. Straws

said the commission's medical and biological advisers believe that "the possibility of serious genetic effects from a small amount of radiation produced by the testing program is remote." ~~And the condition has no information to suggest that the explosions have influenced weather conditions. Strauss also said that so far as the commission knows, no mmm civilian has ever been injured as a result of atomic tests in Nevada.~~

Scott McLeod, the State Department's security chief, told Senators ~~today that of 115 thousand refugees believed eligible for admission to this country, one thousand and forty four have been admitted and 37-hundred have received visas, authority to enter the country. McCloud also testified~~ TODAY that he suggested that Edward J. Corsi resign as chief adviser to Secretary of State Dulles on immigration matters...two days after Democratic Congressmen Walter demanded Corsi's resignation. McCloud said he wanted to let Corsi withdraw gracefully and with dignity. The committee also heard Representative Walter read a letter he had sent to Mr. Dulles. In this he described Corsi as "a person of inferior judgement" who was once associated with what he called "highly objectionable SUBVERSIVE groups."

Walter also charged that Corsi had expressed "disdain and contempt" for the refugee laws he was to help administer. Corsi has accused Walter and McCloud of manuvering to get him fired because of his "liberal" views. Corsi has said that Dulles told him privately it was necessary to get rid of him in order to maintain friendly relations with Congress.

Attorney General Brownell told reporters today that Corsi "is an old friend of mine and I admire him very much." When reporters asked if he thought Corsi got a "fair deal", Brownell said: "I will have to limit my comments." The attorney general also announced that the Justice Department has abandoned its practise of retaining full-time consultants on Communism at guaranteed salaries. But, he said, persons with specific knowledge about specific cases are still used as expert witnesses..and paid as such.

Chief Justice Earl Warren announced today that he will not, under any circumstances, be a candidate for president. Last week one poll was published showing that if [redacted] Mr. Eisenhower does not run for re-election Warren would be first choice for the post. Today, the chief justice issued a statement saying: such reports embarrass him..because they reflect upon his duties as chief justice of the United States. The Warren statement adds: "When I accepted this position it was with the fixed purpose on leaving politics permanently for service on the court. That is still my purpose. It is irrevocable. I will not change it under any circumstances or conditions."

Democrats are in Washington for a two-day meeting. And today they were told by National Chairman Butler that prospects for victory next year "are bright regardless of who is heading the Republican ticket."

In New England, more than 20-thousand textile workers are expected to strike at midnight despite an appeal by Archbishop Richard J. Cushing that talks be resumed with management over the week-end. The C.I.O. Textile Workers are seeking a renewal of their current contract. Mill owners who have not signed with the union want a ten cent an hour cut in wages and fringe benefits. The current hourly wage is $1.30.

In Birminghman, ALABAMA, about 25-thousand steel workers walked off their jobs in sympathy with striking Southern Bell Telephone employes. The demonstration ended with the afternoon shift.

The Illinois Supreme Court ruled today that when Montgomery Ward stockholders meet in Chicago a week from today they must vote for all nine director positions. This was a victory for Louis E. Wolfson who is trying to gain control of the company from Sewell Avery. In the past Montgomery Ward has elected only three of its nine directors each year.

Assistant Secretary of Defense Hensel said today that the Korean war cost us about 18 billion dollars..with the Army alone spending 16-billions..not including the pay of troops.

Here in New York, City Health Commissioner Baumgartner called on the public to ce-operate in the Administration of the Salk anti-polio vaccinne..to prevent growth of a black market.

Edward R. Murrow: April 15, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The Austrian Chancellor returned to Vienna today from his trip to Moscow. The Russians have promised him, in three days of talks, that they would pull their troops out of Austria as soon as a treaty of independence has been signed - not later than the end of this year. The Western Powers have been pressing for an Austrian treaty for almost ten years. The Big Four have had about three hundred meetings on the subject. Now the Russians have called Chancellor Raab to Moscow and agreed, without the presence of the Western Powers, to pretty much what the West has been proposing all along.

In addition to the removal of all foreign troops, the Russians propose to let the Austrians buy back, with goods instead of cash, various industrial enterprises in the Russian zone. The oilfields and refineries in their zone will be returned to the Austrian Government in exchange for crude oil in an amount to be agreed upon between the two countries. The Austrians will also get back some of the ships the Russians commandeered on the Danube.

If the Russians are serious this will mean an early Big Four conference to agree upon the terms of a final treaty, restoring Austria to full independence. The Austrians have agreed not to join any military pacts - not to permit the establishment of foreign military bases on their soil.

In London, Paris and Bonn, the agreement has been welcomed in a very cautious fashion.

In assessing the significance of this move, it is necessary to remember that what is important in middle Europe is not Austria, but Germany. Having failed to prevent the re-armament of West Germany and its association with the Western Powers, the Russians are now playing their highest cards in trying to nullify the Paris agreements. The major question confronting world diplomacy now is, when will the Kremlin invite West German Chancellor Adenauer to Moscow, and how can he refuse to go? The Russians will immediately start saying that if they can make an agreement with Austria, why not with Germany? The Russians could have made this Austrian deal any time in the last ten years. They have done it now in order to raise the question and arouse the hopes in the minds of millions of Germans. The question of a settlement with Germany is obviously much more complex; but the Austrian maneuver will raise hopes nonetheless. The Russians will undoubtedly begin to say to the Germans: You, too, can have a deal if you come and talk with us, without bothering about your newly acquired Western Allies. They have established an Austrian "neutrality", hoping it may become a precedent for German neutrality. But at the same time the Russians adopt a reasonable attitude toward Austria, they are permitting the East German Communists to whip up a rising propaganda tempest over Berlin. It's a sort of cookie and whip demonstration, designed to show the Germans what they might gain by accepting Russian terms; and on the other hand what difficulties they can expect if they don't. For the moment the Austrian cookie probably won't make German mouths water, but they will know it's there. Already in Germany the Socialists are saying that the Austrian settlement is proof that successful negotiation is possible with the Soviet Union. They are saying the basic reason for the Austrian settlement is that Austria has wisely remained outside both military blocs. There is already a growing demand in Germany that Adenauer take the same kind of initiative that was taken by Austrian Chancellor Raab. that is - go to Moscow - Theoretically a Russian offer of German re-unification, a peace treaty, and the return of some fifty thousand German prisoners of war, in return for German neutrality along the Austrian lines, would be tempting.

All along the Russians have been holding an Austrian treaty as a bargain counter, and now they have apparently used it. Chancellor Adenauer will be under increasing pressure to make one last attempt to achieve re-unification and the release of the prisoners. Meanwhile, just to keep the pot boiling, the Russians maintain their astronomic highway tolls on the roads going into Berlin - haven't even bothered to answer the Allied note of protest. The East Germans are speaking of "unpleasant consequences" and "special difficulties" for the population of West Berlin. The Communists in the East Zone have been staging demonstrations, talking about "plugging the rat hole of Berlin". The purpose seems fairly clear, to convince all concerned that bucking the Russians means trouble, whereas appeasement is easier and safer. The Communists may decide to ease the "little blockade" of Berlin, and thereby try to get credit for reasonableness, credit which will be as foney as they are now getting for the Austrian agreement.

There are times when the ways of diplomacy are difficult to explain. This could be, as Joseph Addison once maintained, because "the friendships of the world are often confederacies in vice." If this is so, such alliances can't be sustained indefinitely. For, as Epicurus concluded a long time ago:"Without confidence there is no friendship."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B. S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 15, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Prime Minister Eden today called for a national election in Great Britain on May 26. Just nine days after taking office the new Premier challenged the divided Labor Party to a fight. And Morgan Phillips, secretary of the Labor Party, told reporters:"We are ready and eager."

Russia and Austria have agreed on steps that might lead to Austrian independence. I'd like to discuss this development in a few minutes.

And the western Big Three tonight proposed a four-power meeting with the Russians..among the high commissioners in Germany. We want to discuss reducing the recently increased Communist tax on trucks carrying supplies to western Berlin.

In Nevada today, the Atomic Energy Commission set off another explosion.. designed to test the ability of weapons and supplies to withstand the force of an atomic explosion. And in Washington, Chairman Straws of the Atomic Energy Committee told a Congressional committee: the radioactive fall-out from the Nevada tests has "barely added" to the natural radiation that is present every where all the time. Straws said the Commission's medical and biologiczl advisers believe that "the possibility of serious genetic effects from a small amount of radiation produced by the testing program is remote."

Scott McLeod, the State Department's security chief, told Senators today that he suggested that Edward J. Corsi resign as chief adviser to Secretary of State Dulles on immigration matters...two days after Democratic Congressmen Walter demanded Corsi's resignation. McCloud said he wanted to let Corsi withdraw gracefully and with dignity. The committee also heard Representative Walter read a letter he had sent to Mr. Dulles. In this he described Corsi as "a person of inferior judgement", who was once associated with what he called "highly objectionable subversive groups." Walter also charged that Corsi had expressed "disdain and contempt" for the refugee laws he was to help administer. Corsi has accused Walter and MdCloud of maneuvering to get him fired.because of his "liberal" views. Corsi has said that Dulles told him privately it was necessary to get rid of him in order to maintain friendly relations with Congress.

Attorney General Brownell told reporters today that Corsi "is an old friend of mine and I admire him verymuch." When reporters asked if he thought Corsi got a "fair deal", Brownell said:"I will have to limit my comments." The attorney general also announced that the Justice Department has abandoned its practice of retaining full-time consultants on Communism at guaranteed salaries. But, he said, persons with specific knowledge about specific cases, are still used as expert witnesses...and paid as much.

Chief Justice Earl Warren announced today that he will not, under any circumstances, by a candidate for president. Last week one poll was published showing that if Mr. Eisenhower does not run for re-election Warren would be first choice for the post. Today, one Chief Justice issues a statement saying such reports embarrass him...because they reflect opon his duties as chief justice of the United States. The Warren statement adds:"When I accepted this position it was with the fixed purpose on leaving politics permanently for service on the court. That is still my purpose. It is irrevobable. I will not change it under any circumstanced or conditions."

Democrats are in Washington for a two day meeting. And today they were told by National Chairman Butler that prospects for a victory next year "are bright regardless of who is heading the Republican ticket."

In New England, more than 20-thousandtextile workers are expected to strike at midnight despite an appeal by Archbishop Richard J. Cushing that talks be resumed with management over the week-end. The C.I.O. Textile Workers are seeking a renewal of their current contract. Mill owners who have not signed with the union want a ten cent an hour cut in wages and fringe benefits. The current hourly wage is $1.30.

In Birmingham, Alabama, about 25-thousand steel workers walked off their jobs in sympathy with striking Southern Bell Telephone employees. The demonstration with the afternoon shift.

The Illinois Supreme Court ruled today that when Montgomery Ward stockholders meet in Chicago a week from today they must vote for all nine director positions. This was a victory for Louis E. Wolfson who is trying to gain control of the company from Sewell Avery. In the past Montgomery Ward has elected only three of its nine directors each year.

Assistant Secretary of Defense Hensel said today that the Korean war cost us about 18 billion dollars..with the Army alone spending 16 billions ...not including the pay of troops.

Here in New York,City Health Commissioner Baumgartner called on the public to co-operate in the Administration of the Salk anti-polio vaccine.. to prevent growth of a black market.

The Austrian Chancellor returned to Vienna today from his trip to Moscow. The Russians have promised him, in three days of talks, that they would put their troops out of Austria as soon as a treaty of independence has been signed - not later than the end of this year. The Western Powers have been pressing for an Austrian treaty for almost ten years. The Big Four have had about three hundred meetings on the subject. Now the Russians have called Chancellor Raab to Moscow and agreed, without the presence of the Western Powers, to pretty much what the West has been proposing all along.

In addition to the removal of all foreign troops, the Russians propose to let the Austrians buy back, with goods instead of cash, various industrial enterprises in the Russian zone. The oilfields and refineries in their zone will be returned to the Austrian Governement in exchange for crude oil in an amount to be agreed upon between the two countries. The Austrians will also get back some of the ships the Russians commandeered on the Danube.

If the Russians are serious this will mean an early Big Four conference to agree upon the terms of a final treaty, restoring Austria to full independence. The Austrians gave agreed not to join any military pacts and not to permit the establishment of foreign military bases on their soil.

In London, Paris and Bonn, the agreement has been welcomed in a very cautious fashion.

In assessing the significance of this move, it is necessary to remember that what is important in middle Europe is not Austria, but Germany. Having failed to prevent the re-armament of West Germany and its association with the Western Powers, the Russians are now playing their highest cards in trying to nullify the Paris agreements. The major question confronting world diplomacy now is, when will the Kremlin invite West German Chancellor Adenauer to Moscow, and how can he refuse to go? The Russians will immediately start saying that if they can make an agreement with Austria, why not Germany? The Russians could have made this Austrian deal any time in the last ten years. They have done it now in order to raise the question and arouse the hopes in the minds of millions of Germany The question of a settlement with Germany is abviously much more complex; but the Austrian manuuver will raise hopes nonetheless. The Russians will undoubtedly begin to say to the Germans: You, too, can have a deal if you come and talk with us, without bothering about your newly acquired Western Allies. They have established an Austrian "neautrality", hoping it may become a prescendent for German neautrality. But at the same time the Russians adopt a reasonable attitude toward Austria, they are permitting the East German Communists to whip up a rising propaganda tempest over Berlin. It's a sort of cookie and whip demonstration, designed to show the Germans what they might gain by accepting Russian terms; and on the other hand what difficulties they can expect if they don't. For the moment the Austrian cookie probably won't make German mouths water, but they will know it's there. Already in Germany the Socialists are saying that the Austrian settlement is proof that successful negotiation is possible with the Soviet Union. They are saying the basic reason for the Austrian settlement is that Austria has wisely remained outside both military blocs. There is already a growing demand in Germany that Adenauer take the seme kind of initiative that was taken by Austrian Chancellor Raab. That is--go to Moscow. Theoretically a Russian offer of German re-unification, a peace treaty, and the return of some fifty thousand German Prisoners of war, in return for German neautrality along the Austrian lines, would be tempting.

All along the Russians have been holding an Austrian treaty as a bargain counter, and now they have apparently used it. Chancellor Adenauer will be under increasing pressure to make one last attempt to achieve re-unification and the release of the prisoners. Meanwhile, just to keep the pot boiling, the Russians maintain their astronomic highway tolls on the roads going into Berlin - haven't even bothered to answer the Allied note of protest. The East Germans are speaking of "unpleasant consequences" and "special difficulties" for the population of West Berlin. The Communists in the East Zone have been staging demonstrations, talking about "plugging the rat hole of Berlin." The purpose seems fairly clear, to convince all concerned that bucking the Russians means trouble, whereas appeasement is easier and safer. The Communists

Communists may decide to ease the "little blockade" of Berlin, and thereby try to get credit for reasonableness, credit which will be as phoney as they are now getting for the Austrian agreement.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There are times when the ways of diplomacy are difficult to explain. This could be, as Joseph Addison once maintained, because "the friendships of the world are often confederacies in vice." If this is so, such alliances can't be sustained indefiniteyy. For, as Epicurus concluded a long time ago: "Without confidence there is no friendship."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday April 18, 1955

This is the news:

Dr. Albert Einstein died in Princeton Hospital this morning./The 76-year-old author of the theory of relativity, leader in the fields of nuclear fission and electronics, had been ill for four days./His death was due to a rupture of the main artery of the body and a hardening of the arteries./Dr. Einstein opposed surgery./And today, a pathologist who performed an autopsy on the body said Einstein was right.. surgery would not have helped./In accordance with the wishes of the scientist, who contributed the theoretical knowledge from which the atom bomb was developed, his body was cremated 15 hours after his death./All of the major organs, including the brain, were removed for medical study and research.

The President said today of the German-born scientist, who fled his country in the 1930's:"No other man contributed so much to the vast expansion of twentieth century knowledge./Yet no man was more modest in the possession of the power that is knowledge, more sure that power without wisdom is deadly." West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer said: "Einstein's death is an immeasurable loss for science throughout the world and for all mankind." Dr. Einstein is survived by two sons and a stepdaughter. A review of his life will be presented over many of these CBS radio stations at 10;05 eastern time tonight.

Dr. Jonas E. Salk returned to his University of Pittsburgh laboratory today to resume the work interrupted by the report on his polio vaccine last week. Dr. Salk told reporters: "Our problem now is to continue working." He said he has not taken any action on the many offers made to him.

In the House of Representatives today bills were introduced to prevent a black market in the sale of the polio vaccine. Representative Rains of Alabama said: "The American people, through the March of Dimes, have paid for the vaccine. Now their elected representatives have a clear responsibility to see that a handful of profiteers and black market operators do not monopolize its supply."

Former President Truman told a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee that except for the United Nations "the events of these last ten years would again have plunged the world into unlimited international warfare." Mr. Truman said the United Nations, more than once, has kept the peace, where a serious outbreak was threatened. He told the senators: The U.N. should be used more..and we should use it now by bringing before the General Assembly "the current threats to world peace."

Republican Senator Knowland said today he will ask Secretary of State Dulles and Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, whether the Chinese Communist buildup of air power opposite Formosa threatens the security of our 7th fleet. Mr. Dulles said yesterday, after conferring with the President, that the activities opposite Formosa had "grave implications."

Madame Chiank Kai Shek revealed today that last Thursday Communist guns on the Chinese mainland heavily shelled the island of Matsu..for the first time. Matsu is nine and a half miles from the nearest mainland point. In the past it has not been shelled. Now, apparently the Communists have brought big coastal guns to the area to bring Matsu into range.

Senator McClelland said in Washington that the State Department "is still optimistic" about prospects for freeing American prisoners in China. He said steps are being taken "primarily through the United Nations" to obtain the release of the prisoners.

The President's Transportation Advisory Committee today called for a prompt and decisive over-hauling of federal transportation policies. The committee says this would save shippers and consumers billions of dollars a year. Among other things the committee would give common carriers a chance to put proposed rate increases into effect without the present waiting periods for government agencies to decide whether the new rates are justified. The committee would place greater reliance on competitive factors.

A.F. of L. President Meany told Congress today he favors raising the present minimum wage from 75 cents an hour to $1.25. The Administration WANTS TO make it 90 cents an hour. Meany also called for a standard 35-hour work week.

Communist Hungary's parliament today purged Premier Nagy and replaced him with Andras Hegedues, former minister of agriculture. The new premier is expected to place heavy emphasis on new industry in contrast to Nagy's policy of improving living conditions for his people.

Edward R. Murrow: April 18, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Raymond Swing cables from Bandung that the Asian-African Conference has opened, which is its first great achievement. For this is the first meeting of nations of Asia and Africa representing more than half the population of the world, the majority of whom were not independent ten years ago. And the conference has as many views and voices as ancient Babylon itself. Its second achievement will be to meet in amity and unite on some broad principles. When it first was called it seemed to be dominated by Nehru's outspoken neutralism, and a somewhat naive reliance on Communist China's sincerity in the promises made in recent treaties with India and Burma. It looked as though the West might take a bad beating, and its friendships with Eastern and Middle Eastern friends be undermined. If the neutralists stood to gain, so did Communist China, with fewer vigorous opponents to its expansion. But the twenty-nine nations of the conference contain some dedicated adherents of Western policy, and others who would not like to take sides against the West.

The more ardent friends of the West came to Bandung ready to accept any challenge from Communist China, or even from the neutralists, and prepared to defend the technique of collective security against aggression. The Philippines, Thailand, Japan, Pakistan, Turkey and Iraq were among the most vigorous in intimating that, if a fight was asked for at Bandung, they would not shirk. No great wisdom was needed to see that a conference that fought over basic policy in public, would not unite Asia and Africa, but hopelessly divide them. And the word went out that nobody was to be attacked or accused.

To guarantee that the conference was not maneuvered into taking sides in the cold war, the rule of unanimity was to be adopted last night. The heads of delegations met and confirmed this decision. They also adopted a draft agenda in which some twenty-five items were boiled down to seven. But today's plenary session went still further to avoid rifts, and eliminated three contentious topics - universality of U.N. membership, which was the way of getting action on China's entry - the peaceful use of atomic energy - and peaceful co-existence.

Chou En-lai on arriving in Djakarta had spoken moderately, but also charged that there were those who wanted to wreck the conference. But at last night's meeting Chou, in his pleasantest manner, sought out General Romulo, the leading anti-Communist ~~here~~ there, and said: "You are General Romulo, aren't you," and thereupon introduced him to the other Chinese delegates. And as he ended he beamed on Romulo, saying: "Don't forget we are neighbors."

Today's meeting over-ruled some of last night's decisions. It insisted on all the speeches of heads of delegations being heard and not just circulated. And it specified that the final communique would have to be approved by the whole conference, as well as by the committees which drafted it. So the whole accent is on avoiding conflict, and on achieving unity. After the agenda was adopted, the plenary session went back to speech-making, and it quickly was shown that not all will be non-controversial. The ~~former Premier~~ Foreign Minister of Iraq asked for realism in discussing colonialism; and after attacking colonialism in North Africa he startled the conference by attacking the communism of Soviet Russia, as a modern kind of colonialism, more dangerous than the oldfashioned type. The Soviet Union, he said, now controlled more territory than any nation in the history of the world. Such speeches strike like lightning, and may draw lightning; but the basic mood of the day was one of inspiration that the peoples of Asia and Africa at last are free, and now can contribute constructively to peace and the world's well-being.

President Sokarno's Indonesian speech certainly was not anti-American, for he called our revolutionary war the first war ever waged successfully against colonialism; and he knew that today was the anniversary of Paul Revere's ride, and he quoted a stanza of Longfellow's poem about it.

The city of Bandung has been a surprise to most visitors, with its population of four hundred thousand. And any country would be proud to have its broad streets lined with white stucco houses under steeply pitched red tile roofs. Indonesia's ability to stage a big conference has been tested, and most of the difficulties surmounted with great enthusiasm. It has not been easy. ~~This part of the country~~ The BANDUNG AREA is still beset by guerillas, and truckloads of soldiers rolled through the city last night to complete the circle of defenders around the resort. Every building is guarded by green-uniformed soldiers with tommy guns, and they look grim and ready to touch the trigger at the slightest provocation. But this in its way is symbolic of Asia and Africa, still tormented by fanaticism, and going through ~~the~~ growing pains of independence.

SWING SAYS

What strikes an American in appraising what is being said ~~here~~ AT BANDUNG is a difference in word meanings. When Americans talk of freedom they think of individual freedom, and it doesn't occur to them to be grateful that their country is not ruled by someone else. But these Asians and Africans talk of freedom only for their country. President Sokarno said all types of states are represented ~~here~~ AT BANDUNG - Democracies, Monarchies, Theocracies and their variants. Individual freedom is not the main consideration, but they unite in their joy that their countries are free; and they did so today in a ritual of two continents that had the dignity of an historic achievement, produced with good will, in a fervent and moving burst of idealism.

The Bandung conference is now under way...attended by many nations, with many interests and many problems. If there is to be any progress in these meetings, it will have to be based on something William Ellery Channing once said:"The spirit of liberty, ~~he concludes,~~ is not a jealousy of our own particular rights, but a respect for the rights of others; an unwillingness that anyone, whether high or low, should be wronged or trampled under foot."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 18, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Dr. Albert Einstein died in Princeton Hospital this monning. The 76-year-old author of the theory of relativity, leader in the fields of nuclear fission and electronics, had been ill for four days. His death was due to a rupture of the main artery of the body and a hardening of the arteries. Dr. Einstein opposed surgery. And today, a pathologist who performed an autopsy on the body said Einstein was right..surgery would not have helped. In accordance with the wishes of the scientist who contributed the theoretical knowledge from which the atom bomb was developed, his body was cremated 15 hours after his death. All of the major organs, including the brain, were removed for medical study and research.

The President said today tf the German-born scientist who fled his country in the 1930's:"No other man contributed so much to the vast expansion of twentieth century knowledge. Yet no man was more modest in the possession of the power that is knowledge, more sure that power without wisdom is deadly." West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer said: "Einstein's death is an immeasurable loss for science throughout the world and for all mankind." Dr. Einstein is survived ty two sons and a stepdaughter. A review of his life will be presented over many of these CBS radio stations at 10:15 eastern time.

Dr. Jonas E. Salk returned to his University of Pittsburgh laboratoty today to resume the work interrupted by the report on his polio vaccine last week. Dr. Salk told reporters:"Our problem now is to continue working." He said he was not taken any action on the many offers made to him.

In the House of Representatives today bills were introduced to prevent a black market in the sale of the polio vaccine. Representative Rains of Alabama said:"The American people through the March of Dimes have paid for the vaccine. Now their elected representatives have a clear responsibility to see that a handful of profiteers and black market operators do not monopolize its supply."

Former President Truman told a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee that except for the United Nations "the events of these last ten years would again have plunged the world into unlimited international warfare." Mr. Truman said the United Nations, more than once, has kept the peace where a serious outbreak was threatened. He told the senators:The U.N. should be used more and we should use it now by bringing before the General Assembly "the current threats to world peace."

Republican Senator Knowladd said today he will ask Secretary of State Dulles and Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, whether the Chinese Communis buildup of air power opposite Formosa threatens the security of our 7th fleet. Mr. Dulles said yesterday, after conferring with the President, that the activities opposite Formosa had "grave implications" Madame Chiang Kai Shek revealed today that last Thursday Communist guns on the Chinese mainland heavily shelled the island of Matsu..for the first time. Matsu is nine and a half miles from the nearest mainland point. In the past it has not been shelled. Now, apparently the Communists have brought big coastal guns to the area to bring Matsu into range.

Senator McClelland said in Washington that the State Department "is still optimistic" about prospects for freeing American prisoners in China. He said steps are being taken "primarily through the United Nations" to obtain the release of the prisoners.

Tuesday April 19, 1955

This is the news:

The United States is giving prompt and sympathetic consideration to Russia's call for a meeting of the Big Four foreign ministers to discuss independence for Austria. The State Department says we are glad to learn that the Soviet government "appears now to seek urgently" a treaty restoring Austria's independence. This announcement was made after Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov, in Moscow, proposed a foreign ministers meeting in Vienna in the near future. And British Foreign Minister Eden told the House of Commons that he welcomes the desire of the Soviet and Austrian governments for an independence treaty.

Sir Anthony also told the House: it is possible to "look forward with greater confidence to the prospect of fruitful talks with the Soviet Union." He said present "brightened prospects" are not due to an accident. He feels they have developed because the unity of the West has been established.."and it has always been on the basis of that unity that successful negotiations can be conducted with the East."

In East Berlin, the Communist-controlled premier, Otto Grotewohl said in a speech that the problem of German unification can be solved on the same basis as the Austrian treaty. In East Germany today the government announced the arrest of ten coalition party leaders...It's a new purge aimed at heading-off another workers revolt against the Russians. ~~The government says western powers smuggled agents into the major political party which dominates East Germany.. to plot a new uprising similar to the one in June of 1953 that had to be put down by Red Army tanks.~~

That British newspaper strike..by electricians and maintenance men,,which caused papers to suspend publication for 25 days, was settled tonight. And in the House of Commons, the government announced that it is going to cut income taxes slightly. The income tax rate is now 45 per cent. It will drop to 42 and a half per cent of income for persons in the middle AND UPPER income tax groups. ~~and this is the upper income group~~. Almost two and a half million PERSONS will not have to pay any taxes. This announcement, a month before the general election, is described by one former Labor minister as a "bribe" to voters. The government's statement shows that it finished the last financial year with a surplus equivalent to one and a quarter billion dollars.

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that Assistant Secretary of State McCardle "leaked" the Yalta Papers to the New York Times ahead of their general release to all papers. Mr. Dulles said: "This involved an exercise by McCardle of a discretion that was his. It involved no breach of security." The meeting which lasted for more than three and a half hours was not open to the public. When it was over Democratic Senator Humphrey of Minnesota told reporters that Mr. Dulles had testified that the Yalta agreements were "advantageous" to the United States. When reporters asked if that was the precise word the Secretary used, Humphrey said Dulles used one of three words: beneficial..advantageous or helpful. He also quoted Mr. Dulles as saying that "in the light of the times and circumstances of the Yalta conference" Dulles "would not disagree" with the Yalta decision on Poland. Humphrey also says Dulles does not now favor repudiation of the Yalta agreement..although this was a promise in the Republican platform of 1952, which Dulles helped write. Chairman George says the inquiry into the release of the Yalta papers is now closed.

Dag Hammershuld, the secretary-general of the United Nations, today questioned the value of bringing the Formosa problem before the U.N. at the present time. He refused to explain why this was not the proper time. ~~Hammershuldalso told reporters there had been no significant new developments in his effort to obtain the release of American flyers held by Red China.~~

The A.D.A... Americans for Democratic Action..today released a statement, signed by 47 persons who describe themselves as liberals. It calls on the President to make it clear that he will not commit our forces to the defense of Quemoy and the Matsus. This group, ~~which includes, Mrs. Roosevelt, Norman Thomas, among others,~~ supports our pledge to defend Formosa and the Pescadores. But ~~they~~ IT feels the off-shore islands "must not be allowed to become a cause of war."

In Indo-China today, eleven persons were wounded in gunfire between loyal army troops and rebels in Saigon. American Ambassador J. Lawton Collins is on his way home to review our support of Premier Diem's GOVERNMENT.

In Tokyo, the Japanese have agreed to spend 15 per cent more on their military forces. In exchange for this we have agreed to cut [redacted] 43-million dollars off Japan's share in keeping American defense forces in Japan. In effect, we are financing the new Japanese military buildup.

The United Nations Security Council today refused to take action on Isreal's demand for condemnation of Egyptian border violations in Palestine. Isreal had warned that a failure to condemn Egypt would be "a discriminatory course of action". The council, instead, called on Isreal and Egypt to co-operate in restoring frontier order.

Soviet Marshal Zhukov, Russia's defense minister, in a message to the Overseas Press Club, tonight sent his good wishes to President Eisenhower and said he was certain his war-time colleague "remembers our common assurances concerning the peaceful intentions of our countries and will do his best to promote practically the cause of peace."

Senator McCarthy said today that that he has been cleared of charges that he engaged in tax irregularities during the years 1946 to 1952. The Senator called on two committees, that investigated his finances, (among other things) to apologize to the people for spending public funds on their inquiries.

And in Washington the Daughters of the American Revolution convention is considering a resolution urging "immediate abandonment" of the President's atoms-for-peace plan. The resolution says an international atomic pool would threaten our security and "turn into an international oligarchy which could hold nations in terror."

Edward R. Murrow: April 19, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The Afro-Asian Conference at Bandung, in Indonesia, is still in the sparring stage, with its leaders trying to prevent an open split between the Communist countries and their sympathisers, and those who support the West. # General Romulo of the Philippines warned the delegates against surrendering blindly to what he called "a new super-barbarism, a new super-imperialism, a new super-power." Romulo didn't ~~name~~ mention Communism by name, but he said the countries at the conference "had not fought to end Western colonialism, only to surrender to rulers among ourselves, who seize the power to keep us enslaved." He warned, too, of the danger of an organization based upon race and color.

India's Prime Minister Nehru and China's Chou En-lai found nothing to applaud in Romulo's speech. The conference began to speculate as to how the Chinese Communist leader would reply to Romulo. Most thought he would hit back with the familiar Communist shrillness; but Chou was rather restrained, for him. He said the United States is continuing to create tension in the Formosa area, trying to overthrow the Communist regime in China; but he insisted that peaceful co-existence of countries with different social systems can be realized. He said, too, that peace in Indochina ~~INDONESIA~~ is endangered, but he didn't elaborate on this.

Pakistan's Premier, Mohammed Ali, a friend of the West, also didn't mention Communism by name, but he warned the conference "not to open the door to new and more insidious forms of imperialism that masquerades in the guise of liberation."

Raymond Swing cables me from Bandung that the sensation of the day out there was the report that a meeting has been set up for tomorrow, where the five Colombo powers, plus Thailand and the Philippines will sit down with Chou En-lai to discuss the Formosa question. It turned out that the meeting will take place all right, but it will not be a formal conference, merely a social occasion. This group can, of course, discuss Formosa without limit; but it can't settle anything. Chou En-lai continues to try to win friends, belaboring only the United States. He offered to make a treaty with Thailand and the Philippines, based on the same five points as his treaty with Burma and India. He also promised to settle the question of dual ~~XXXX~~ citizenship for the Chinese who live in other parts of Asia, and who are a source of constant concern to the governments and security forces in the countries where they live. He didn't spell out the terms of such an arrangement, but it is expected that the overseas Chinese will be given a year in which to choose formally which citizenship they care to retain.

This arrangement, if it works, would give the Asian and African countries having Chinese minorities, a freer hand to deal with any Chinese who are suspected of disloyalty or subversion.

It was Nehru of India who took the lead some time ago, in raising this problem with Peiping. That was after he signed the treaty with Communist China, in which the two countries agreed upon mutual respect, non-aggression, non-interference, equality, and peaceful co-existence. These are high-sounding words that can mean everything or nothing. Nehru urged the Chinese Communists to settle the business of dual citizenship, to show good faith in the promise of non-interference. So this conference may be showing one of the fruits of Nehru's strategy, in relation to Communist China. Or it may be that Chou En-lai is merely talking reasonably, with no intention of acting.

In a very real sense the competition for leadership in this conference is between Nehru and Chou En-lai. Nehru has often been critical of the West, but at the same time has fought the Communists successfully in his own country. Swing reports that the Bandung conference so far is not turning into a triumph for Nehru. Chou En-lai has taken the limelight. He is the idol of the Bandung crowds, and the focus of rapt attention from the conference. The Chinese Communist leader has appeared to be moderate in the presence of his neighbors, reserving his venom for the United States. And in much of Asia it is Chou En-lai who is feared, and not Nehru. Therefore any relaxation of the tension, even though it be only temporary, redounds to the credit of Chou En-lai. This is an old Communist strategem, the promise to stop doing what they should never have started doing, and then get credit for stopping.

Those who are attending the Bandung Conference are confronted with many problems - the basic one being how to bring about an easing of world tensions. ~~But this is no simple matter. For~~ as the Englishman Edward Herbert concluded many years ago:"There needs a long time to know the world's pulse." Perhaps until the world's pulse is known, Abdulla Ansari's advice is sound:"Regard life on earth not as a place for enjoyment but a place where humanity is on trial."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 19, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The United States is giving prompt and sympathetic consideration to Russia's call for a meeting of the Big Four foreign ministers to discuss independence for Austria. The State Department says we are glad to learn that the Soviet government "appears now to seek urgently" a treaty restoring Austria's independence. This announcement was made after Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov, in Moscow, proposed a foreign ministers meeting in Vienna in the near future. And the British Foreign Minister Eden told the House of Commons that he welcomes the desire of the Soviet and Austrian governments for an independence treaty.

Sir Anthony also told the House: it is possible to "look forward with greater confidence to the prospect of fruitful talks with the Soviet Union." He said present "brightened prospects" are not due to accident. He feels they have developed because the unity of the West had been established "and it has always been on the basis of thet unity that successful negotiations can be conducted with the East."

In East Berlin, the Communist-controlled premier, Otto Grotewohl said in a speech that the problem of German unification can be solved on the same basis as the Austrian treaty. In East Germany today the government announced the arrest of ten coalition party leaders..It's a new purge aimed at heading-off another revolt against the Russians.

That British newspaper strike..by electricians and maintenance men, which caused papers to suspend publication for 25 days was settled tonight. And in the House of Commons, the government announced that it is going to cut income taxes slightly. The income tax rate is now 45 per cent. It will drop to 42 and a half per cent of income for persons in the middle and upper income tax groups. Almost two and a half million persons will not have to pay any taxes. This announcement, a month before the general election, is described by one former Labor minister as a "bribe" to voters. The government's statement shows that it finished the last financial year with a surplus equivalent to one and a quarter billion dollars.

In Washington today, Secretary of State Dulles told the Senate Foreign Relations committee that Assistant Secretary of State McCardle "leaked" the Yalta Papers to the New York Times ahead of their general release to all papers. Mr. Dulles said: "This involved an exercise by McCardle of a discretion that has his. It involved no breach of security." The meeting which lasted for more than three and a half hours was not opened to the public. When it was over Democratic Senator Humphrey of Missesota told reporters that Mr. Dulles had testified that the Yalta agreements were "advantageous" to the United States. When reporters asked if that was the precise word the Secretary used, Humphrey said Dulles used one of three words: beneficial..advantageous or helpful. He also quoted Mr. Dulles as saying that "in the light of the times and circumstances of the Yalta conference", Dulles "would not disagree" with the Yalta decision on Poland. Humphrey also says Dulles does not now favor repudiation of the Yalta agreement... although this was a promise in the Republican platform of 1952, which Dulles helped write. Chairman George says the inquirey into the release of the Yalta papers is now closed.

Dag Hammerskjold, the secretary-general of the United Nations, today questioned the value of bringing the Formosan problem before the U.N. at the present time. He refused to explain why this was not the proper time.

The A.D.A....Americans for Democratic Action..today released a statement signed by 47 persons who describe themselves as liberals. It calls on the President to make it clear that he will not commit our forces to the defence of Quemoy and the Matsus. This group supports our pledge to defend Formosa and the Pescadores. But it feels the off-shore islands "must not be allowed to become a cause for war."

In Indo-China today, eleven persons were wounded in gunfire between loyal army troops and rebels in Saigon. American Ambassador J. Lawton Collins is on his way home to review our support of Premier Diem's government.

In Tokyo, the Japanese have agreed to spend 15 per cent more on their military forces. In exchange for this we have agreed to cut 43-million dollars off Japan's share in keeping American defense forces in Japan. In effect, we are financing the new Japanese military buildup.

The United Nations Security Council today refused to take action on Israel's demand for condemnation of the Egyptian border violations in Palestine. Israel had warned that a failure to condemn Egypt would be "a discriminatory course of action". The Council, instead, called on Israel and Egypt to co-operate in restoring fronties order.

Soviet Marshal Zhukov, Russia's defense minister, in a message to the Overseas Press Club, tonight sent his good wishes to President Eisenhower and said he was certain his war-time colleague "remembers our common assurances" concerning the peaceful intentions of our countries and will do his best to promote practically the cause for peace."

Senator McCarthy said today that he has been cleared of charges that he had engaged in tax irregularities during the years 1946 to 1952. The Senator called on two committees that investigated his finances.(among other things) to apologize to the people for spending public funds on their inquiries.

And in Washington the Daughters of the American Revolution convention is considering a resolution urging "immediate abandonment" of the President's atoms-for peace plan. The resolution says an international atomic pool would threaten our security and "turn into an international oligarchy which could hold nations in terror."

The Afro-Asian Conference at Bandung, in Indonesia, is still in the sparring stage, with its leaders trying to prevent an open split between the Communist countries and their sympathisers, and those who support the West.

General Rumulo of the Philippines warned the delegates against surrendering blindly to what he called "A new super-barbarism, a new super-imperialism, a new super-power." Romulo didn't mention Communism by name, but he said the countries at the conference "had not fought to end Western Colonialism, only to surrender to rulers among ourselves who sieze the power to keep us enslaved." He warned, too, of the danger of an organization based upon race and color.

India's Prime Minister Nehru and China's Chou En-lai found nothing to applaud in Romulo's speech. The conference began to speculate as to how the Chinese Communist leader sould reply to Romulo. Most thought he would hit back with the familiar Communist shrillness; but Chou was rather restrained, for him. He said the United States is continuing to create tension in the Formosa area, trying to overthrow the Communist regime in China; but he insisted that peaceful co-existence of countries with different social systems can be realized. He said, too, that peace in Indochina is endangered, but he didn't elaborate on this.

Pakistan's Premier, Moahmmed Ali, a friend of the West, also didn't mention Communism by name, but he warned the conference "not to open the door to new and more insidious forms of imperialism that masquerades in the guise of liberation."

Raymond Swing cables me from Bandung that the sensation of the day out there was the report that a meeting has been set up for tomorrow, where the five Comombo powers, plus Thailand and the Philippines will sit down with

Chou En-lai to discuss the Formosa question. It turned out that the meeting will take place all right, but it will not be a formal conference, merely a social occasion. This group can. of course, discuss Formosa without limit; but it can't settle anything.

Chou En-lai continues to try to win friends, belaboring only the United States. He offered to make a treaty with Thailand and the Philippines, based on the same five points as his treaty with Burma and India. He also promised to settle the question of dual citizenship for the Chinese who live in other parts of Asia, and who are a source of constant concern to the governments and security forces in the countries where they live. He didn't spell out the terms of such an arrangement, but it is expected that the overseas Chinese will be given a year in which to choose formally which citizenship they care to remain.This arrangement, if it works, would give the Aisan and African countries having Chinese minorities a freer hand to deal with any Chinese who are suspected of disloyalty or subversion.

It was Nehru of India who took the lead some time ago in raising this problem with Peiping. That was after he signed the treaty with Communist China, in which the two countries agreed upon mutual respect, non-aggression, non-interference, equality and peaceful co-existence. These are high-sounding words that can mean everything or nothing. Nehru urged the Chinese Communists to settle the business of dual citizenship, to show good faith in the promise of non-interference. So this conference may be showing one of the fruits of Nehru's strategy in relation to Communist China. Or it may be that Chou En-lai is merely talking reasonably, with no intention of acting.

In a very real sense the competition for leadership in this conference is between Nehru and Chou En-lai. Nehru has often been critical of the West, but at the same time has fought the Communists successfull in his own country. Swing reports that the Bandung conference so far is not turning into a triumph for Nehru. Chou en-lai has taken the limelight. He is the idol of the Bandung crowds, and the focus of rapt attention from the conference. The Chinese Communist leader has appeared to be moderate in the presence of his neighbors, reserving his venom for the United States. And in much of Asia it is Chou En-lai who is feared, and not Nehru. Therefore any relaxation of the tension, even though it be only temporary, redounds to the credit of Chou En-lai. This is an old Communist strategem, the promise to stop doing what they should have started doing, and then get credit for stopping.

This is Ed Murrow, I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Those who are attending the Bandung Conference are confronted with many problems - the basic one being how to bring about an easing of world tensions. For the Englishman Edward Herbert concluded many years ago:"There needs a long time to know the world's pulse." Perhaps until the world's pulse is known. Abdulla Ansari's advice is sound: "Regard life on earth not as a place for enjoyment but a place where humanity an on trial. "

Good Night and Good luck.

Wednesday April 20, 1955

This is the news:

The entire National Guard is being mobilized tonight..as a test. In the first experiment of its kind, a surprise alert to test combat-readiness of 400-thousand guardsmen was started at 6;30 p.m. eastern time..with later times for the midwest and west coast. General Erickson, chief of the National Guard Bureau, emphasizes that there is no cause for alarm on the part of the public. This is a test, to see how fast the guardsmen in 56-hundred units in 24-hundred communities can answer the call for duty. The objective is to test how quickly the Guard could report to assigned posts in an emergency.

Admiral Radford, head of the joint chiefs of staff, and Assistant Secretary of State Robertson left Washington by plane today for Formosa and consultations about "the tense situation which continues." The State Department says no crisis is involved; But periodic conferences with the Chinese Nationalists are necessary "so long as the Communists indicate by deeds and words their purpose to take Formosa by force."

~~The Nationalist press says the Communists are rushing work on four air bases across Formosa Strait. The Nationalists says the~~

~~Communists have moved in 800 war planes along the southeast coast.~~

In Bandung..at the Asian-African conference.. Red China's Premier Chou en Lai today wooed the anti-Communist Moslem countries by taking the side of the Arab states against Isreal. The Arabs are represented at the meeting. Isreal is not. In addition, Chou accepted a compromise declaration on human rights..in line with the United Nations charter.

~~In New Delhi, the Indian parliament eased the way for the government to start expropriating private property.. a major step in Prime Minister Nehru's plan for a socialist society.~~

Moscow today called on its people and the people of Red China and Eastern Europe to increase their defense and economic capacities..and unite more closely. And the premier of Communist Poland is calling for a single command of all Eastern European armed forces to "face any eventuality arising from the Paris pacts" in the west.

West Germany and the United States today deposited in Bonn, their treaties to end the allied occupation of West Germany..and allow allied troops to remain on German soil.

In Great Britain, Deputy Labor Leader Herbert Morrison said Prime Minister Eden is shaky in his new office..has limited domestic experience..and is using proposed tax cuts as a device to catch votes in the May 26 election. Morrison charges the tax cuts give greater benefits to the rich.

There are reports from Paris that American officials now agree with the French view that Premier Diem of South Viet Nam should be replaced immediately. American officials say we have turned down this suggestion and urged the French to give Diem greater support.

The President today returned to Washington from Augusta. And he asked Congress for three and a half billion dollars in new foreign aid funds. He said the major part would go to build up free nations in "the vast arc of free Asia."

The House of Representatives disregarded the President and voted to boost the salaries of a half million postal workers by eight point two per cent..retroactive to March first. The President favored a smaller increase. The vote, 224 to 189, was along party lines with the Democrats favoring the larger increase.

Republican Senator Bricker of Ohio told a Senate committee that the United Nations charter should be amended "to deny to the U.N. any power not expressly delegated by the charter." He also suggested an amendment to state the specific right of member nations to leave the U.N. He says at present the right to do this rests on a mere implication. Bricker contended that the U.N. has failed as "the world's policeman."

Here in New York, a plan to start anti-polio innoculations of 280-thousand children on Monday has been cancelled. The job was to be done under the National Foundation for Infantile Parlysis. But no vaccine has been delivered to the city. Apparently the vaccine New York expected has been sent to southern states where the POLIO season starts earlier than it does here. And the National Foundation says it is 11-million dollars short of its 1955 goal "to carry on the unfinished fight against polio."

Scott McCloud, the state department's security chief, told Senate investigators today that former immigration advisor, Edward Corsi once told him he planned to run for political office in New York next year. McCloud, TESTIFYING FOR A SECOND TIME, also said that Corsi refused to serve as his acting deputy during McCloud's absence from Washington. The security chief said the aims of the refugee program will be "substantially" achieved. Then Corsi took the stand. We've recorded for you part of his STATEMENT to the Senate committee:

(runs.... 5:35

(return cue.... "who has ever had any experience with immigrants or refugees."

That was a recorded portion of a statement read to a Senate Committee today by Edward Corsi.

Edward R. Murrow: April 20, 1955.

Whenever an aircraft crashes or splashes, it's news. Maybe the following item of intelligence isn't news, but it should be. It merits mention. Colonial Airlines has celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary - twenty-five years stretching back to the old tri-motor Fords. It's carried three million passengers, made almost a million take-offs and landings - a lot of them on small fields - and all this without a single fatal accident. A salute is due to Colonial, its crews, management, and maintenance men - especially the maintenance men.

The manner in which the refugee problem is handled by American officials should be of as much concern to those of us at home as it is to those who live abroad. For, in the last analysis, we are dealing with the most precious commodity there is: human lives. Aesop once remarked appropriately:"The injuries we do and those we suffer are seldom weighed in the same scales." This, despite the fact that Thomas Fuller maintained: "The only way to measure injury is by malice."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, April 20, 1955
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: Scott McLeod, the State Department's security chief, told Senate investigators today that former immigration advisor, Edward Corsi, once told him he planned to run for political office in New York next year. Mr. McLeod, testifying for a second time, also said that Corsi refused to serve as his acting deputy during McLeod's absence from Washington. The security chief said the aims of the refugee program will be substantially achieved. Then, Mr. Corsi took the stand. We've recorded for you part of his statement to the Senate Committee..

CORSI: Now, what is the matter with the program? First of all, let me admit that it was, is, or at least the final product was, born under an unlucky star, as a sort of illegitimate foundling that no one really wanted, with very difficult administrative features with enough "if" and "buts" to render it a problem child the moment it was born. Secondly, it was entrusted to the wrong people. Abroad, it was put in the hands of an already overburdened consular service, and I might add a not exceedingly sympathetic foster parent, and here at home, in the lap of what I might call, for the lack of a better term, the security gang under the leadership of State Department's chief Security Officer, Mr. Scott McLeod. There were good reasons why the late Senator McCarran and his colleagues wanted this law administered by McLeod and a completely unsympathetic Robert Alexander, but there is really no sense in going into that just now. It is better to look ahead.

These arms of the State Department, the Consular Service and the Security Section, mutually distrustful of each other and in turn not particularly in love with refugees, have swallowed the act but have never digested it. Our consuls abroad have taken the act in their stride, but they have never given it the priority nor the emergency consideration which as an emergency act it should have. In most cases, they have just gone along rather reluctantly. In others they have completely washed their hands of the whole operation and only in spots here and there have they really tried to make it work and speed it along.

When I asked a spokesman of the voluntary agencies in Germany during my recent trip to tell me what they considered the real reason for the breakdown, they made no secret of their opinion - the apathy of the consuls. This act can be made to work, said the leader of the National Catholic Welfare Council inGermany, but it is necessary to get the consuls off their hot seats. In Germany and in Holland the whole operation of the act was bogged down completely. There is simply no act in Germany and the alibi that there are no Germans willing to come to America gets a hearty laugh from the Germans themselves, including the highest officials of the German Government who again and again have testified as to the need of relieving the conditions of the thousands of farmers and little people, escapees from behind the Iron Curtain, who are unresettled in Western Germany and eager to come to America if we give them half a chance to come in. The Consul-General in charge of the whole program in Germany, when I visited him in Bonn, was surprised that I would waste my time with this project and that I would associate with the McLeod gang, to whom they referred as the Cohn and Schine boys. Nobody said (name unintelligible) to me through the side of his mouth takes this refugee business seriously. The whole act was merely intended as a political move, said he, to win a few Italian and Greek votes.

I relate this conversation (unintelligible), Mr. Chairman, to indicate with what enthusiasm the act is being administered by the supervising Consul-General for the whole of Germany. In Naples, one of the largest operating centers on the Continent,the indifference of the Consul-General is known to the whole service. When John Rieger, Roy Wade,and I called on him in January to get some explanation of the delays in Italy, he disappeared. On that trip, incidentally, we were accompanied by his boss,Joe Gray (?), the Consul-General in Rome. And while there might be some reasons why he wouldn't appear for the representative of John Foster Dulles, he at least should have been on the job to meet his immediate boss in Rome.

Many consuls were perfectly frank with me: they haven't the time for the project; it was a mistake to tie it up with the regular consular service; it should be separated. In fact, the best operationin all Europe is in Salsburg, Austria, where there is separation between the project and the consular service. In Germany, Mr. Chairman, the situation is so hopeless and deplorable and so inefficiently administered that at the time of my visit in February, the CIC investigating staff in charge of refugee investigations was turning in 2.4 investigations per investigator per month, as poor a performance as the CIC does anywhere in the world. The act has never been, and is not now, in particularly friendly hands. The Displaced Persons Act, whatever its faults, was at least in the hands of men who believed in its philosophy and objectives and were suited to their jobs. The President's Refugee Relief Act is in the hands of policemen. It is a police job. Mr. McLeod is police-trained,with Mr. John Rieger, the second in command of security, police-trained; Mr. Roy Wade, the Europeanrepresentative is a Texas Ranger, and so on down the line. I have the highest respect for policemen and their services for society, Mr. Chairman, but I do not believe they are particularly qualified to administer refugee relief projects. There is not a single top administrator in the whole administration of the act who has ever had any experience with immigrants or refugees.

MURROW: Thatwas a recorded portion of a statement read to a Senate Committee today by Edward Corsi.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The entire National Guard is being mobilized tonight..as a test. In the first experiment of its kind a surprise alert to test combat-readiness of 400-thousand guardsman was started at 6:30 P.M., eastern time..with later times for the midwest and west coast. General Eirckson, chief of the National Guard Bureau, emphasizes that there is no cause for alarm on the part of the public. This is a test to see how fast the guardsmen in 16 hundred units in 24 hundred communities ca answer the call for duty. The objective is to test how quickly the Guard could report to assigned posts in an emergency.

Admiral Radford, head of the joint chiefs of staff, and assistant Secrerary of State Robertson left Washington by plane today for Formosa and consultations about "the tense situation which continues."

The State Department says no crisis is involved; but periodic conferences with the Chinese Nationalists are necessary "so long as the Communists indicate by deeds and words their puropse to take Formosa by force."

In Bandung..at the Asian-African conference..Red China's Premier Chou en Lai today would the anti-Communist Moslem countries by taking the side of the Arab states against Israel. The Arabs are represented at the meeting, Israel is not. In addition, Chou accepted a compormise declaration on human rights...in line with the United Nations charter.

Moscow today called on its people and the people of Red China and Eastern Europe to increase their defense and economic capacities..and unite more closely. And the premier of Communist Poland is calling for a single command of all Eastern European armed forces to "face any eventuality arising from the Paris pacts" in the West.

West Germany and the United States today deposited in Bonn their treaties to end the allied occupation of West Germany..and allow allied troops to remain on German soil.

In Great Britain, Deputy Labor Leader Herbert Morrison said Prime Minister Eden is shaky in his new office has limited domestic experience..and is using proposed tax cuts as a device to catch votes in the May 26 election. Morrison charges the tax cuts give greater benefits to the rich.

There are reports from Paris that American officials now agree with the French view that Premier Diem of South Viet Nam should be replaced immediately. American officials say we have turned down this suggestion and urged the French to give Diem greater support.

The President today returned to Washington from Augusta. And he asked Congress for three and a half billion dollars in new foreign aid funds. He said the major part would go to build up free nations in "the vast arc of free Asia."

The House of Representatives disregarded the President and voted to boost the salaries of half a million postal workers by eight point two per cent.. retroactive to March first. The President favored a smaller increase. The vote 224 to 189, was along party lines with the Democrats favoring the larger increase.

Republican Senator Bricker of Ohio told a Senate committee that the United Nations charter should be amended "to deny to the U.N. any power not expressly delegated by the charter." He also suggested an amendment to state the specific right of member nations to leave the U.N.. He says at present the right to do this rests on a mere implication. Bricker contended that the U.N. has failed as "the world's policeman."

Here in New York, a plan to start anti-polio innoculations of 280-thous - and children on Monday has been cancelled. The job was to be done under the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. But no vaccine has been delivered to the city. Apparently the vaccine New York expected has been sent to the southern states where the polio season starts earlier than it does here. And the National Foundation says it is 11-million dollars short of its 1955 goal "to carry on the undinished fight against polio."

Scott McCloud, the state department's security chief, told Senate investigators today that former immigration advisor., Edward Corsi once told him he planned to run for political office in New York next year. McCloud, testifying for a second time, also said that Corsi refused to serve as his acting deputy. during McCloud's absence from Washington. The security chief said the aims of the refugee program will be "substantially achieved. Then Corsi took the stand. We've recorded for you part of his statement to the Senate committee:

CORSI: Now, what is the matter with the program? First of all, let me admit that it was, is, or at least the final product was, born under an unlucky star, as a sort of illegitimate foundling that no one really wanted, with very diffucult administrative features with enough "if" and "buts" to render it a problem child the moment it was born. Secondly, it was entrusted to the wrong people. Abroad, it was put in the hands of an already overburdened consular service, and I might add a not exceedingly sympathetic foster parent, and here at home, in the lat of what I might call, for lack of a better term, the security gang under the leadership of State Department's Chief Security Officer, Mr. Scott McLeod. There were good reasons why the late Senator McCarran and his colleagues wanted this law administered by McLeod and a completely unsympathetic Robert Alexander, but there is really no sense in going into that just now. It is better to look ahead.

These arms of the State Department, the Consular Service and the Security Section, mutually distrustful of each other and in turn not particularly in love with refugees, have swallowed the act but have never digested it. Our consuls abroad have taken the act in their stride, but they have never given it the priority nor the emergency consideration which as an emergency act it should have. In most cases, they have just gone along rather reluctantly. In others they have completely washed their hands of the whole operation and only in spots here and there have they really tried to make it work and speed it along.

When I asked a spokesman of the voluntary agencies in Germany during my recent trip to tell me what they considered the real reason for the breakdown, they made no secret of their opinion - the apathy of the consuls. This act can be made to work, said the leader of the National Catholic Welfare Council in Germany and in Holland the whole operation of the act was bogged down completely. There is simply no act in Germany and the alibi that there are no Germans willing to come to America gets a hearty laugh from the Germans themselves, inclucing the highest officials of the German Government who again and again have testified as to the need of releiving the conditions of the thousands of farmers and little people, escapees from behind the Iron Curtain. who are unresettled in Western Germany and eager to come to America if we give them half a chance to come in. The Consul-General in charge of the whole program in German, when I visited him in Bonn, was surprised that I would waste my time with this project and that I would associate with the McLeod gang, to whom they referred as the Cohn and Schine boys. Nobody daid (unintelligible) to me through the side of his mouth takes this refugee business seriously. The whole act was merely intended as a political move, said he, to win a few Italian and Greek votes.

I relate this converstaion (unintelligible), Mr. Chairman, to indicate with what enthusiasm the act is being administered by the supervising Consul-General for the whole of Germany. In Naples, one of the largest operating centers of the Continent, the indifference of the Consul-General is known to the whole service. When John Rieger, Roy Wade, and I called on him in January to get some explanation of the delays in Italy, he disappeared. On that trip, indicentally, we were accompanied by his boss, Joe Gray (?), the Consul General in Rome. And while there might be some reasons why he wouldn't appear for the representative of John Foster Dulles, he at least should have been on the job to meet his immediate boss in Rome.

Many consuls were perfectly frank with me: they haven't the time for the project; it should be separated. In fact, the best operationin all Europe is in Salsburg, Austria, where there is separation between the project and the consular service. In Germany, Mr. Chairman, the situation is so hopeless and deplorable and so inefficiently administered that at the time of my visit in February, the CIC investigating staff in charge of refugee investigations was turning in 2.4 investigations per investigator per month, as poor a performance as the CIC does anywhere in the world. The act has never been, and is not now, in particularly friendly hands. The Displaced Persons Act, whatever its faults, was at least in the hands of men who believed in its philosophy and objectives and were suited to their jobs. The President's Refugee Relief Act is in the hands of policement. It is a police job. Mr. McLeod is police-trained, with Mr. John Rieger, the second in command of security, police-trained; Mr. Roy Wade, the European representative is a Texas Ranger, and so on down the line. I have the highest respect for policemen and their services for society, Mr. Chairman, but I do not believe they are particularly qualified to administer refugee relief projects. There is not a single top administrator in the whole administration of the act who has ever had any experience with immigrants or refugees.

MURROW: That was a recorded portion of a statement read to a Senate Committee today by Edward. Corsi.

Whenever an aircraft crashes or splashes, it's news. Maybe the following item of intelligence isn't news, but it should be. It merits mention. Colonial Airlines has celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary - twenty-five years stretching back to the old tri-motor Fords. It's carried three million passengers, made almost a million take-offs and landings - a lot of them on small fields - and all this without a single fatal accident. A salute is due to Colonial, its crews, management, and maintenance men - especially the maintenance men.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The manner in which the refugee problem is handled by American officials should be of as much concern to those of us at home as it is to those who live abroad. For, in the last analysis, we are dealing with the most precious commodity there is: human lives. Aesop once remakred appropriately: "the injuries we do and those we suffer are seldom weighed in the same scales". This, despite the fact that Thomas Fuller maintained: "The only way to measure injury is by malice."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday, April 21 1955

This is the news:

The prime minister of Ceylon today demanded that the Asian-African conference at Bandung denounce Communist colonialism as well as western colonialism. I'd like to discuss developments at the Bandung conference in a few minutes.

On Formosa, worried Nationalist officials are telling reporters that they fear the United States may be about to ask them to abandon Quemoy and the Matsu islands. This is the interpretation the Nationalists put on the visit to their island by Assistant Secretary of State Robertson and Admiral Radford, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff.

General Collins, our special representative to Viet Nam, returned to Washington today and told reporters the situation there is "serious." He said our government is still supporting the Diem government in South Viet Nam. Collins reports to the President tomorrow.

Today Mr. Eisenhower met with the National Security Council. There is speculation that we are about to ask Chiank Kai Shek to consider new peace moves in the Formosa Strait. But Chairman George of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee says he doubts reports that we will ask Chiang to withdraw from Matsu and Quemoy.

Harold Stassen said today that the biggest handicap in the search for a way toward world disarmament is "cynicisym...confirmed, congealed, compounded cynicism." In his new role as the president's assistant on disarmament problems, Stassen told newspaper editors in Washington; "It is only through the maintenance of an abiding determination, of a never failing hope, of a deep faith, that results can be obtained in the most adverse circumstances."

The House today approved a one and a third billion dollar "atomic age" Navy bill. Among other things it calls for the construction of a fifth super-carrier...three more atomic submarines..and the conversion of more ships to guided-missile carriers. A House committee discloses that the Navy has served notice that it will need more men and money if the Far East crisis continues. And the record shows that Marine Commandant, General Shepherd, argued strongly for a force of 215-thousand men. He accepted the President's cut as "the decision of my superior."

Democratic Senator Humphrey acknowledged today that when Secretary of State Dulles testified before the Senate Foreign Relations committee Mr. Dulles said that the Yalta agreements were not advantageous to this country in their entirety. Previously, Humphrey quoted Dulles as saying the Yalta agreements had been advantageous to our over-all policy.

Former President Hoover who once wanted Russia out of the United Nations told a Senate committee today: He no longer favors expelling Russia.. He thinks "we've got to go on and worry with the Russians in the U.N. in the hope that things will get better." Mr. Hoover said we cannot abandon the U.N. even though it has not fulfilled our hopes as a mechanism for peace. He said he has no notion that we can abandon "any organization that has the prospect of aiding our search for peace."

Edward Corsi who was recently fired as a special assistant to Secretary of State Dulles on immigration problems, tangled at a Senate hearing today with Republican Senator Jenner of Indiana. Jenner said Corsi "wanted a big hat and wouldn't co-operate with anyone" unless he could run the show. Corsi said that was an unfair charge. Jenner defended Scott McCloud, the state department's security officer, against Corsi's charge that McCloud had turned the immigration program into a national scandal. Jenner said any official who does his duty must expect to be smeared. Corsi answered:"All the patriotism in America does not reside in you and Mr. McCloud.# And McCloud tesified that he resents the "security gang" LABEL applied to him by Corsi. McCloud said:"I do not belong to any gang. I work for the Eisenhower Administration and we call it a team."

C.I.O. President Reuther told a Senate committee the President is "way in back of the parade" in advocating an increase of the 75 cents an hour minimum wage to 90 cents an hour. Reuther says the President "has not been able to translate his regard for human rights into political action."

Diplomatic sources in London say that tomorrow the Western Big Three will propose a meeting of ambassadors, with the Russians, to draft a treaty freeing Austria. The Russians had suggested that the Big Four foreign ministers tackle this problem.

In East Germany, the Communists say they are ready to negotiate with West Germany.. a move that could lead to the end of the crippling road taxes imposed on trucks bringing supplies to West Berlin.

In Brooklyn, the Dodgers set a new modern major league record when they beat the Philadelphia Phillies, 14 to 4. It was Brooklyn's tenth straight victory, without a loss, since the baseball season opened.

The Asian African Conference is pretty much a sounding board and the sounds reverberating today are tones of discouragement over the search for a peace formula for Formosa. This is not the conference's business but everyone understands that it has been the main preoccupation of the Asian leaders ~~here~~ AT BANDUNG. A statement by India's Krishna Menon that the search for it had been given-up followed his own long session with Chou En-Lai, and it presumably reflected his inability to find common ground between the American position, as he knew it, and the fixed policy of Chou's. The eight-nation meeting proposed by CEYLON'S Prime Minister Sir John Kotelawala was scheduled for today, but it has again been put off UNTIL FRIDAY. This was to bring Chou En-Lai together with Prince Wan and Romulo and the five Colombo Prime Ministers. Sir John told a press conference he still hoped to hold the meeting but that Chou had been too busy to attend as yet. He also aroused interest with a comment on peaceful coexistence. He said it could have no reality until the Cominform as well as Peiping liquidated all the Communist parties in other countries. As one of the inviting Primeministers, Sir John carries weight and the ~~recommendation to Communist China~~ denunciation of Communist Colonialism like the Formosa proposal, was seen as an effort to increase the pressure on Chou for moderation.

17

Inasmuch as Nehru last night had Chou Romulo and Wan at a dinner together with the chief delegates of Saudi Arabia and Iran, the Ceylon project may have become superfluous. Last night's meeting proved to be a purely social occasion in which Formosa was not even mentioned. There was much pleasant small talk on such themes as the relative advantages of Philippine and Bombay mangoes and the various ways Asian peoples cook their rice. However, Chou, who is said to have taken quite a liking for Romulo, did invite him to come to China "to see the good, the bad and the in-between---go anywhere he liked and make up his own mind about China".

The dinner party served the obvious purpose of Communist China to appear friendly and even conciliatory without trying to get anywhere on most specific matters. Sweing Says - It added to the general note of discouragement ~~here~~ IN BANDUNG to learn that Admiral Radford and Assistant Secretary of State Robertson have gone to ~~Taipeh~~ FORMOSA. This is said to report accurately the atmosphere in Bandung, and is not an assumption that it reflects realities. Indeed, if Krishna Menenon had struck pay dirt with Chou, he would be more likely to deny it than affirm it, so as not to endanger any slight progress by premature publicity. And at the most, only slight-progress could be expected in Bandung, for negotiations with the Communists have to go through a normal protracted and rough course. As for the Radford-Robertson visit, it could mean that Washington was sending to Formosa the two men most capable of persuading Chiang to accept unfavorable terms of a settlement. This is said only to point out that Bandung is not the place for actual negotiations and everything that happens there can be read both ways. The only convincingly authentic statement Swing has heard is that any Formosa settlement that sets up two Chinas is out. Chou wouldn't touch it. Presumably Chiang Kai Shek wouldn't touch it either, but this sweeping statement leaves room for consideration of a settlement that makes a mandate of Formosa to be ended with a plebiscite. Taipeh wouldn't accept that voluntarily, either. But if peace in the Pacific was assured that way, and it carried a United Nations guarantee, it might not be a fantastic formula that the United States would have to ~~reject~~ Reject offhand.

17

But it is one thing to talk about such a settlement and another to impose it on Chiang who may insist on fighting it out even if he must do it alone. And there is no assurance that Syngman Rhee would not join him in scuttling any cease fire. And it also is hard to believe Chou would accept it either--- after Peiping's claims to Formosa as Chinese and the reiterated pledges to liberate it.

There is a pretty story circulating in Bandung about a letter from Einstein that arrived before the conference pleading for a Formosa settlement by demilitarizing the offshore islands and declaring a five year truce. Such a letter did come. And when Einstein's death became known the story is that his recommendation took on a kind of providential sanctity that affected the thinking of Chou En-Lai. The point of the story is that Einstein in his death furthered the cause which so greatly concerned him in the last days of his life. ~~Touching as this sounds, the hard fact is that the Einstein formula is not identified as such by the top men here. It bears a slight resemblance to the Kotelawala formula~~ AT BANDUNG.

which calls for a plebiscite in five years but gives the coastal islands outright to china and calls for the "honorable retirement" of Chiang Kai-shek. The Kotelawala formula goes further than Einstein's and is in dispute. But the impact of Einstein's letter has not been noticeable.

The actual work of the conference is now proceeding in committee sessions where agreement on Asian-African problems has to be unanimous. Perhaps the most far reaching decision to be expected is in the economic report. This may recommend that Asian and African finance be taken out of the hands of Western financiers and "Asianized". This would put much of it in the hands of Indian bankers. A similar recommendation would take cultural communications out of Western hands and "Asianize" it.

It now appears that the Arab states after all will get some mention of Palestine in the communique. An Afghanistan resolution that stays within the limits of United Nations decisions already reached on Palestine will probably make a compromise possible.

3

~~This still is opposed by those like U Nu of Burma who want no mention made of Israel since it is not here to defend itself. But if the language says no more than already has been by the United Nations it may be accepted.~~

The Political Committee at Bandung has backed the Arabs stand on Palestine — appealed to France to grant independence to Tunisia, Morocco and Algeria — and condemned Racial Policies particularly in South Africa. —

###

URGENT.....

FOR ~~ED MURROW NEWSROOM KGV~~

IT WOULD SEEM THAT THOSE ATTENDING THE BANDUNG CONFERENCE, ARE SERIOUSLY CONCERNED OVER THE PROSPECT OF A POSSIBLE WAR IN THE FORMOSA STRAITS # AND ALL SEEMINGLY ARE IN AGREEMENT WITH THE ROMAN SALLUST WHEN HE SAID..." ANYONE CAN COMMENCE A WAR. IT,S ALWAYS EASY TO BEGIN ONE. BUT VERY DIFFICULT TO STOP ONE."/THERE COULD ALSO BE NO ARGUMENT WITH EMERSON,S CONCLUSION THAT "THE REAL AND LASTING VICTORIES ARE THOSE OF PEACE, NOT WAR." GOOD NITE & GOOD LUCK...

~~END AARON CBS NY~~

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 21. 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Prime Minister of Ceylon today demanded that the Asian-African conference at Bandung denounce Communist colonialism as well as western colonialism. I'd like to discuss developments at the Bandung conference in a few minutes.

On Formosa, worried Nationalist officials are telling reporters that they fear the United States may be about to ask them to abandon Quemoy and the Matsu islands. This is the interpretation the Nationalists put on the visit to their island by Assistant Secretary of State Robertson and Admiral Radford, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff.

General Collins, our special representative to Viet Nam, returned to Washington today and told reporters the situation is "serious". He said our government is still supporting the Diem governmment in South Viet Nam. Collins reports to the President tomorrow.

Today, Mr. Eisenhower met with the National Security Council. There is speculation that we are about to ask Chiang Kai Shek to consider new peace moves in the Formosa Strait. But Chairman George of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee says he doubts reports that we will ask Chiang Kai Shek to consider new peace moves in the Formosa Strait. But Chairman George of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee says he doubts reports that we will ask Chiang to withdraw from Matsu and Quemoy.

Harold Stassen said today that the biggest handicap in the search for a way toward world disarmament is "cynicism..confirmed, congealed, compounded cynicism." In his new role as the president's assistant on disarmement problems, Stassen told newspaper editors in Washington; "It is only through the maintenance of an abiding determination, of a never failing hope, of a deep faith, that results can be obtained in the most adverse circumstances."

The House today approved a one and a third billion dollar "atomic age" Navy bill. Among other things it calls for the construction of a fifth super-carrier...three more atomic submarines..and the conversion of more ships to guided-missile carriers. A House committee discloses that the Navy has served notice that it will need more men and money if the Far East crisis continues And the record shows that Marine Commandant, General Shepherd, argued strongly for a force of 215- thousand men. He accepted the President's cut as "the decision of my superior."

Democratic Senator Humphrey acknowledge today that when Secretary of State Dulles testified before the Senate Frreign Relations Commite Mr. Dulles said that the Yalta agreements were not advantageous to this country "in their entirety." Previously, Humphrey quoted Dulles as saying the Yalta agreements had been advantageous to our over-all policy.

Former President Hoover who once wanted Russia out of the United Nations told a Senate committee today: He no longer favors expelling Russia..He thinks "we've got to go on and worry with the Russians in the U.N. in the hope that things will get better." Mr. Hoover said we cannot abandon the U.N. even though it has not fulfilled our hopes as a mechanism for peace. He said he has no notion that we can abandon "any organization that has the prospect of aiding our search for peace."

Edward Corsi who was recently fired as a special assistant to Secretary of State Dulles in immigration problems, tangled at a Senate hearing today with Republican Senator Jenner of Indiana. Jenner said Corsi "wanted a big hat and wouldn't co-operate with anyone" unless he could run the show. Corsi said that was an "unfair charge." Jenner defended Scott McCloud, the State Department's security officer, against Corsi's charge that McCloud had turned the immigration program into a national scandal. Jenner said any official who does his duty must expect to be smeared. Corsi answered: "All the patriotism in America does not reside in you and Mr. McCloud". And McCloud testified that he resents the "security gang" label applied to him by Corsi. McCloud said:"I do not belong to any gang. I work for the Eisenhower Administration and we call it a team."

C.I.O. President Reuther told a senate committee the President is "way in back of the parade" in advocating an increase of the 75 cents an hour minimum wage to 90 cents an hour. Reuther says the President "has not been able to translate his regard for human rights into political action."

Diplomatic sources in London say that tomorrow the Western Big Three will propose a meeting of ambassadors, with the Russians, to draft a treaty freeing Austria. The Russians had suggested that the Big Four foriegn ministers tackle this problem.

In East Germany, the Communists say they are ready to negotiate with West Germany ...a move that could lead to the end of the crippling road taxes imposed on trucks bringing supplies to West Berlin.

In Brooklyn, the Dodgers set a new modern major league record when they beat the Philadelphia Phillies, 14 to 4. It was Brooklyn's tenth straight victory, without a loss, since the baseball season opened.

The Asian African Conference is pretty much a sounding board and the sounds reverberating today are tones of discouragement over the search for a peace formula for Formosa. This is not the conference's business but everyone understands that it has been the main preoccupation of the Asian leaders at Bandung. A statement by India's Krishna Menon that the search for it had been given up followed his own long session with Chou En-Lai, and it presumably reflected his inability to find common ground between the American position, as he knew it, and the fixed policy of Chou's. The eight-nation meeting proposed by Ceylon's Prime Minister, Sir John Kotelawala was scheduled for today, but it has again been put off until Friday. This was to bring Chou En-Lai together with Prince Van and Romulo and the five Colombo Prime Ministers. Sir John told a press conference he still hoped to hold the meeting but that Chou had been too busy to attend as yet. He also arouned interest with a comment on peaceful co-esistence. He said it could have no reality until the Cominform as well as Peiping liquidated all the Communist parties in other countries. As one of the inviting Prime Ministers, Sir John carries weight and the denunciation of Communist colonialism, like the Formosa proposal, was seen as an effort to increase the pressure on Chou for moderation.

Inasmuch as Nehru last night had Chou, Romulo and Wat at a dinner together with the chief delegates of Saudi Arabia and Iran, the Ceylon project may have become superfluous. Last night's meeting proved to be a purely social occasion in which Formosa was not even mentioned. There was much pleasant small talk on such theses as the relative advantages of Phillipine and Bombay mangoes and the various ways Asian peoples cook their rice. However, Chou, who is said to have taken quite a liking for Romulo, did invite his to come to China "to see the good, the bad, and the in-between---go anywhere he liked and make up his own mind about China."

The dinner party served the obvious purpose of Communist China to appear friendly and even conciliatory without trying to get anywhere on most specific matters. Swing says it added to the general note of discouragement in Bandung to learn that Admiral Radford and Assistant Secretary of State Robertson have gone to Formosa. This is said to report accurately the atmosphere in Bandung, and is not an assumption that it reflects realities. Indeed, if Krishna Menon has struck pay dirt with Chou, he would be more likely to deny than affirm it, so as not to endanger any slight progress by premature publicity. And at the most, only slight progress could be expected in Bandung, for negottations with the Communists have to go through a normal protracted and rough course. As for the Radford-Robertson visit, it could mean that Washington was sending to Formosa the two men most capable of persuading Chiang to accept unfavorable terms of a settlement. This is said only to point out that Bandung is not the place for actual negotiations and everything that happens there can be read both ways. The only convincingly authentic statement Swing has heard is that any Formosa settlement that sets up two Chinas is out. Chou won't touch it. Persumably Chiang Kai Shek wouldn't touch it either, but this sweeping statement leaves room for consideration of a settlement that makes a mandate of Formosa to be ended with a plebiscite. Taipeh wouldn't accept that voluntarily, either. But if peace in the Pacific was assured that way, and it carries a United Nations guarantee, it might not be a fantastic formula that the United States would have to reject off hand.

But it is one thing to talk about such a settlement and another to impose it on Chiang who may insist on fighting it out even if he must do it alone. And there is no assurance that Syngman Rhee would not join him in scuttling any cease fire. And it also is hard to believe Chou would accept it either...after Peiping's claims to Formosa as Chinese and the reiterated pledges to liberate it.

There is a pretty story circulating in Bandung about a letter from Einstein that arrived before the conference pleading for a Formosa settlement demilitarizing the offshore islands and declaring a five year truce. Such a letter did come. And when Eisntein's death became known, the story is that recommendation took on a kind of providential sanctity that affected the thinking of Chou-En-Lai. The point of the story is that Einstein in his death furthered the cause which so greatly concerned him in the last days of his life. But the impact of Einstein's letter has not been noticeable.

The actual work of the conference is now proceeding in committee sessions, where agreement on Asian-African problems has to be unanimous. Perhaps the most far reaching decision to be expected is in the economic report. This may recommend that Asian and African finance be taken out of the hands of Western financiers and "Asianized." This would put much of it in the hands of Indian bankers. A similar recommendations would take cultural communication out of Western hands and "Asianize it."

The political committee at Bandung has banned the Arabs stand on Palestine --appealed to France to grant independence to Tunisia, Morocco, and Algeria - and condemmed racial policies particularly in South Africa.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem that those attending the Bandung conference are seriously concerned over the prospect of a possible war in the Formosa Straits. And all seemingly are in agremment with the Roman Sallust when he said.."Anyone can commence a war. It's always easy to begin one...but very difficult to stop one." There could also be no argument with Emerson's conclusion that "The real and lasting victories are those of peace, not war." Good Night and good luck.

Friday April 22, 1955

This is the news:

The National Polio Conference was told today that there will be enough of the Salk vaccine available to give shots to 25-million children by the first of July. The conference, called on order of the President, was also told that all children under 10 can be inocculated by the end of August. The closed-door conference of government..medical... drug manufacturing and other officials also recommended a voluntary allocation system to make the vaccine available first to persons under twenty. Distribution would be up to the states. And the conference proposes that each state set up priorities based on age groups in areas where children are in the greatest danger of getting polio. All of these suggestions will now go to the President.

Today Mr. Eisenhower..showing his feelings...awarded a citation to Dr. Jonas E. Salk "for his extraordinary achivement as a benafactor of mankind "in developing the anti-polio vaccine. The President said he had no words to thank Dr. Salk for curbing the fear of Americans and people throughout the world about polio. Mr. Eisenhower said:"I am very, very happy." And the young scientist, in the presence of his wife and three boys said he had never dreamed of meeting the President of the United States. He said his reward came to him two and a half years ago in his laboratory "when a light glimmered through the darkness with hopeful brilliance." He paid tribute to the many people who had helped him. And he said he hoped the world could move on to conquer other fears which plague it.

The government reported today that the cost of living remained unchanged in March for a fourth straight month. This is described as the longest period of stability since the beginning of World War Two. And Labor Secretary Mitchell says there's every reason to believe that this will be "the best year on record for American workers and their families" in terms of buying power.

In Chicago today, Sewell Avery, the 81-year-old head of Montgomery Ward and Company, won the proxy fight for control of the mail order firm. Although the official result of an election of a new nine-man board of directors will not be known for three weeks, Louis E. Wolfson, who hoped to gain control, conceded he is certain of only three or four directors. He says he's sure he'll gain control of the company next year.

Attorney General Brownell said in Texas tonight that because there was a lack of enforcement of anti-racket laws under Democratic Administrations, gangsters became rich in the labor union field. He said that since the start of 1953 the F.B.I. has made 14-hundred investigations of reported labor racketeering. About 50 new cases are being opened each month.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt told a Senate committee today that she does not believe this is the time to push for changes in the United Nations charter. She said she doubts the charter could be improved by a full dress revision conference at this time. She would prefer to wait until the atmosphere was suited for calm deliberations.

Edward Corsi told a Senate committee today that the real issue involved in his ouster as immigration adviser in the State Department is "the integrity of the public service in Washington".... not the "petty" differences between himself and Scott McCloud, the department's security officer. Corsi says dozens of men have had their characters destroyed in Washington. Most were willing to take it. He is not willing. And he told the Senators he has not finished talking about his experience.

Federal Judge Edward J. Dimock today ordered a new trial for two #13 convicted Communist leaders on the ground that government witness Harvey Matusow almost certainly lied at their trial. He exhonerated government attorneys, including former Assistant United States Attorney Roy M. Cohn, of having knowledge of Matusow's perjury. The new trials were ordered for Alexander Trachtenberg, a member of the party's educational group, and George Blake Charney, the party's trade union director. Judge Dimock called Matusow "a completely irresponsible witness."

George Meany, the president of the A.F. of L., today called on the government to "stop beating about the bush on the Quemoy and Matsu issue." He said the government should be frank with the American people on whether we should defend them or abandon them.

And on Formosa, high Nationalist Chinese officials say its "absurd..unthinkable..ridiculous..and impossible" that Assistant Secretary of State Robertson and Admiral Radford are coming to Formosa to recommend that the islands should be given up to the Communists.

The western Big Three today agreed to a meeting of ambassadors with Russia in Vienna on May second. If the ambassadors can draft an Austrian peace treaty then the foreign ministers could meet later to sign it.

The mayor of Weet Berlin tonight called on American authorities to demand the release of four city custom officials seized by the Communists yesterday. Lord Mayor Otto Suhr says the seizure of the guards is new proof " of the boldness of the Communist people's police." His appeal is believed to be designed to have the allies give better arms to western police patrols.

Edward R. Murrow: April 22, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The Asian-African Conference at Bandung finds itself in a real dilemma. Practically all of the twenty-nine nations represented want to denounce Colonialism - the oldfashioned kind, the "devil they knew." Part of the nations want also to denounce the new kind of communist colonialism and subversion. The committee drafting the communique is now deadlocked trying to find a set of words that will satisfy both sides. India's Prime Minister Nehru didn't contribute very much to clarification today, when he contended that both the Communist and the Western blocs are wrong; both pursuing policies that are "leading us to the brink of war." Nehru was against the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; he was against the Southeast Asia Collective Security Organization. He urged all the nations represented at Bandung not to take sides in the cold war.

The Turkish delegate reminded Mr. Nehru that Turkey would not have survived as a nation, and that he would not be at the conference today if Turkey had not joined the Western Powers. Nehru's neutralism was never more clearly expressed than when he said: "India does not stand for either side. We do not approve the Communist or the anti-Communist powers." And he added: "It is an intolerable humiliation for any nation of Asia or Africa to degrade itself by becoming a camp follower of one or the other of the power blocs. We will not join either bloc, because that means losing our identity."

The central issue in this conference might be called a definition and recognition of colonialism. Most of the countries represented have experienced, in one form or another, oldfashioned Western colonialism. Many of them fear the new Communist version. How to condemn the one without the other, or to condemn them both - that is the question. Several nations, led by the Prime Minister of Ceylon, want to go on record against all colonialism - what remains of the Western brand and the modern Soviet type that keeps in subjection the satellite countries behind the Iron Curtain. In speaking of Communist expansion he warned that a devil you know is to be preferred to the devil you don't know. He also called on the Communist countries to liquidate all Communist parties in other lands if they really want peaceful co-existence.

Communist China's Chou En-lai continued to show restraint. He spoke no abuse. It looked as though the unity of the conference might in some fashion be maintained. But then later in the day's session a resolution backed by Turkey, Pakistan, the Philippines, Iran, Iraq, Sudan, Liberia, Japan and southern Vietnam, came up for debate. One after another the speeches thundered against Soviet colonialism. No punches were pulled, and the outlook for the survival of the conference darkened again. Raymond Swing cables me from Bandung that the heat was certainly on Chou En-lai. The strategy against him was formidable. Only the Soviet Union was being attacked by name, but Communist China was certainly being attacked by inference. If Chou En-lai said nothing to defend Moscow, he was a poor Ally. But anything he said would weaken the unity of a conference where he had been ~~XXXXX~~ scoring a considerable personal success. Chou had been playing the role of a reasonable, decent fellow, in harmony with his neighbors, threatening no one, attacking no one, except of course the United States. When the Chinese leader rose to speak, he said that he had observed the rules against asking to speak twice, but so many speeches had been made against the Soviet Union that he must now assert that he disagreed, just to have it on the record, and that he would answer more fully in the drafting committee ~~XXXXXX~~ in the afternoon. That's the committee that is now deadlocked over how to condemn colonialism, both of the oldfashioned ~~XXXX~~ and the communist kinds. The committee report must be unanimous, so the language finally agreed upon isn't likely to have much of a cutting edge; but it will probably be stronger in tone than if the floor fight had not occurred.

As a matter of fact, one of the most useful by-products of this conference, which ends on Sunday, may be in the field of adult education. The anti-Communist forces have been more vocal and coherent than many people had expected. The Warnings about Communist colonialism will not be published or heard in China or in Russia, but they will become known throughout Asia and Africa. The fear that the conference would be dominated or maneuvered by the Communist powers has not so far been realised. The roots of democracy nourished by freedom are deeper and stronger in Asia and Africa than many pessimists had believed.

The problems of diplomacy are frequently complicated not only by the use of words, but also by the interpertation our statesmen put on them. Confucius, wise in the ways of the world, once maintained that "in language, clearness is everything." But that was long ago. Today perhaps a more practical bit of advice can be found in this line from Thomas Fuller: "It is sweet language, he said, that multiplies friends."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 22, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The National Polio Conference was told today that there will be enough of the Salk vaccine available to give shots to 25-million children by the first of July. The conference, called on order of the President, was also told that all children under 10 can be inoculated by the end of August. The closed-door conference of government..medical..drug manufacturing and other officials also recommended a voluntary allocating system th make the vaccine available first to persons under twenty. Distribution would be set up to the states. And the conference proposes that each state set up priorities based on age groups in areas where children are in the greatest danger of getting polio. All of these suggestions will now go to the President.

Today Mr. Eisenhower..showing his feelings..awarded a citation to Dr. Jonas E. Salk "for his extraordinary achievement as a benafactor of mankind" in developing the anti-polio vaccine. The President said he had no words to thank Dr. Salk for curbing the fear of Americans and people throughout the world about polio. Mr. Eisenhower said: "I am very, very happy." And the young scientest, in the presence of his wife and three boys said he had never dreamed of meeting the President of the United States. He said he reward came to him two and a half years ago in his laboratory "when a light glimmered through the darkness with hopeful brilliance." He paid tribute to the many people who had helped him. And he said he hoped the world could move on to conquer other fears which plague it.

The government reported today that the cost of living remained unchanged in March for a fourth straight month. This is described as the longest period of stability since the beginning of World War Two. And Labor Secretary Mitchell says there's every reason to believe that this will be "the best year on record for American workers and their families" in terms of buying power.

In Chicago, today, Sewell Avery, the 81-year-old head of Montgomery Ward and Company, won the proxy fight for control of the mail order firm. Although the official result of an election of a new nine-man board of directors will not be known for three weeks, Louis E. Wolfson, who hoped to gain control, conceded he is certain of only three or four directors. He says he's sure he'll gain control of the company next year.

Attorney General Brownell said in Texas tonight that because there was a lack of enforcement of anti-racket laws under Democratic Administrations, gangsters became rich in the labor union field. He said that since the start of 1953 the F. B. I. has made 14-hundred investigations of reported labor racketeering. About 50 new cases are being opened each month.

Mrs. Eaileanor Roosevelt told a Senate committee today that she does not believe this is the time to push for changes in the United Nations charter. She said she doubts the charter could be improved by a full dress revision conference at this time. The could prefer to wait until the atmosphere was suited for calm diliberations.

Edward Corsi told a Senate committee today that the real issue involved in his ouster as immigration adviser in the State Department is "the integrity of the public service in Washington"...not the "petty" differences between himself and Scott McCloud, the department's security officer. Corsi says dozens of men have had their characters destroyed in Washington. Most were willing to take it. He is not willing. And he told the Senators he has not finished talking about his experience.

Federal Judge Edward J. Dimock today ordered a new trial for two of 13 convicted Communist leaders on the ground that government witness Harvey Matusow almost certainly lied at their trial. He exhonerated government attorneys, including former Assistant United States Attorney Roy M. Cohn, of having knowledge of Matusow's perjury. The new trials were ordered for Alexander Trachtenberg, a member of the party's educational group, and George Balke Charney, the party's trade union director. Judge Dimock called Matusow "a completely irresponsible witness."

George Meany, the president of the A. F. of L. today called on the government to "stop beating about the bush on the Quemoy and Matsu issue." He said the government should be frank with the American people on whether we should defend them or abandon them.

And on Formosa, high Nationalist Chinese officials say its "absurd..unthinkable..ridiculous..and impossible" that assistant Secretary of State Robertson and Admiral Radford are coming to Formosa to recommend that the island should be given up to the Communists.

The Western Big Three today agreed to a meeting of ambassadors with Russia in Vienna on May second. If the ambassadors can draft an Austrian peace treaty then the foreign ministers could meet later to sign it.

The mayor of West Berlin tonight called on American authorities to demand the release of four city custom officials seized by the Communists yesterday. Lord Mayor Otto Suhr says the Seizure of the guards is new proof "of the boldness of the Communist peoples police." His appeal is believed to be deisgned to have the allies give better arms to western police patrols.

The Asisan-African Conference at Bandung finds itself in a real dilemma. Practically all of the twenty-nine nations represented want to denounce Colonialism - the old fashioned kind, the "devil they knew." Part of the nations want also to denounce the new kind of Communist Colonialism and subversion.

The committee drafting the communique is not deadlocked trying to find a set of words that will satisfy both sides. India's Prime Minister Nehru didn't contribute very much to clarification today, when he contended that both the Communist and the Western blocs are wrong; both pursuing policies that are "leading us to the brink of war " Nehru was against the North Atlantic Treaty Organization; he was against the Southeast Asia Collective Security Organization. He urged all the nations represented at Bandung not to tkae sides in the cold war.

The Turkish delegate reminded Mr. Nehru that Turkey would not have survived as a nation, and that he would not be at the conference today if Turkey had not joined the Western Powers. Nehru's neautralism was never more clearly expressed than when he said:"India does not stand for either side, We no not approve of the Communist or the anti-Communist powers." And he added:"It is an intolerable humiliation for any nation of Asia or Africa to degrade itself by becoming a camp follower of one or the other of the power blocs. We will not join either bloc, because that means losing our identity."

The central issue in this conference might be called a definition and recognition of colonialism. Most of the countries represented have experienced in one form or another, old fashioned Western colonialsm. Many of them fear the new Communist version. How to condemn the one without the other, or to condemn them both - that is the question. Several nations, led by the Prime Minister of Ceylon, want to go on record against all colonialism - what remains of the Western brand and the modern Soviet type that keeps in subjection the satellite countries behind the Iron Curtain.

In speaking of Communist expansion he warned that a devil you know is to be preferred to the devil you don't know. He also called on the Communist countries to liquidate all Communist parties in other lands if they really want peaceful co-existence.

Communist China's Chou En-lai continues to show restraint. He spoke no abuse. It looked as though the unity of the conference might in some fashion be maintained. But then later in the day's session a resolution backed by Turkey, Pakistan, the Philippines, Iran, Iraq, Sudan, Liberia, Japan and southern Vietnam, came up for debate. One after another the speeches thundered against Soviet colonialism. No punches were pulled, and the outlook for the survival of the conference darkened again. Raymond Swing cables me from Bandung that the heat was certainly on Chou En-lai. The strategy against him was formidable. Only the Soviet Union was being attacked by name, but Communist China was certainly being attacked by inference. If Chou En-lai said nothing to defend Moscow, he was a poor ally. But anything he said would weaken the unity of a conference where he had been scoring considerable personal success. Chou had been playing the role of a reasonable, decent fellow, in harmony with his nieghbors, threatening no one, attacking no one, except of course the United States.

When the Chinese leader rose to speak, he said that he had observed the rules against asking to speak twice, but so many speeches had been made against the Soviet Union that he must now assert that he disagreed, just to have it on the record, and that he would answer more fully in the drafting committee in the afternoon. That's the committee that is now deadlocked over how to condemn colonialism, both of the old fashioned and the Communist kind. The committee report must be unanimous, so the language finally agreed upon isn't likely to have much of a cutting edge; but it will probably be stronger in tone than if the floor fight had not occureed.

As a matter of fact, one of the most useful by-products of this conference, which ends on Sunday, may be in the field of adult education.

The anti-Communist forces have been more vocal and choherent than many people had expected. The warnings about Communist colonialism will not be published or heard in China or in Russia, tht they will become know throughout Asia and Africa. The fear that the conference would be dominated or maneuvered by the Communist powers has not so far been realised. The roots of democracy nourished by freedom are deeper and stronger in Asia and Africa than many pessimists had believed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The problems of diplomacy are frequently complicated not only by the use of words, but also by the interpretation our statesmen put on them. Confucius, wise in the ways of the world, once maintained that "in language, clearness is everything." But that was long ago. Today perhaps a more practical bit of acvice can be found in this line from Thomas Fuller: It is sweet language," he said, "that multiplies friends."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday April 25, 1955

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles will meet with the British and French foreign ministers in Paris to discuss concrete plans for a Big Four conference with the Russians. The Foreign Ministers meeting, set for May 8, may be followed by another with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov. In Moscow, on Saturday, Premier Bulganin indicated he is ready for a meeting of top government officials. He told reporters to "ask Eisenhower and Eden about the date."

British Foreign Secretary MacMilan says he's ready for a four-power meeting with the Russians "at any level, whether heads of government or foreign ministers."

Moscow radio said today that the foreign affairs committees of the Soviet parliament have recommended that Moscow cancel the British-Soviet alliance. because the British have ratified the Paris agreements to re-arm west Germany.

On Formosa today, Assistant Secretary of State Robertson and Admiral Radford, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, are winding up their meetings with Chiang Kai Shek. They have all been held in secret. Nationalists who want no compromise with Communism give the impression that they are disappointed with the Robertson-Radford talks. [I should like to discuss recent developments in the Far East in a few minutes.]

The President said here in New York today that he plans to send a new atomic-powered merchant ship around the world. This would be a dramatic demonstration of our determination to win "a just and lasting peace." As the President sees it, the ship would travel thousands of miles without refueling. "It will demonstrate to people everywhere, this peace-time use of atomic energy, harnessed for the improvement of human living." The President will ask Congress for money to build the new ship.

He also spoke to the Associated Press luncheon of his desire for congressional approval of the Administration's program to cut tariffs 15 per cent over the next three years. He said two-way trade is "a broad avenue by which all men and nations of good will can travel toward a golden era of peace and plenty."

Senate Democrats in Washington say Mr. Eisenhower is offering only weak support of the liberalized trade bill. Senator Gore of Tennessee charged that the President has a habit of "never coming to grips with the realities of the situation." He asked that the President "get at least one Republican" to vote for the bill.

When Mr. Eisenhower flew back to Washington this afternoon, he held a 40-minute meeting with Secretary of State Dulles..to review world affairs. The Secretary said he and the President were catching up on world developments since THEY last conferred at Augusta eight days ago.

B1

[redacted]

The Atomic Energy Commission today called-off the big atomic civil defense open-shot that had been scheduled for tomorrow morning. High winds over the Nevada desert forced a postponment until Wednesday--at the [redacted] earliest.

A House [redacted] committee today released testimony on what our military leaders think of Soviet military might. General Ridgeway, the army's chief of staff, testified that: the Red army is virtually on a war footing.. it has received new atomic warfare training..is "equipped and disposed to undertake a major war with little warning." General Ridgeway also said: the red army is the most powerful land force in the world, "in an excellent state of combat readiness."

And General Twining, the air force chief of staff, told the committee: Communist China's air force can be doubled or tripled overnight by the Russians. [redacted] RED CHINA'S rapidly expanding system of bases gives them "the ability to move in aircraft rapidly from the Soviet Union." General Twining says:"We cannot ignore their capability".

And an army witness testified that we now have 20 billion dollars worth of fighting equipment stored in this country and abroad.

Former President Truman..in Nashville today..told reporters the Eisenhower administration is trying to sabotage the Tennessee Valley Authority. He said:"Without T.V.A. the South would never have the industrial centers it now has. And there would be no such thing as rural electrification."

~~The Census Bureau estimates that 29 million Americans changed their homes in the year ending April 1954. The western states showed the biggest net gain,. 272-thousand families. The southern states showed a net loss of 400-thousand persons.~~

The F.B.I. says the United States crime rate took another five per cent jump in 1954. One major crime was committed in the country every 14 seconds. J. EDgar Hoover says that this was the seventh consecutive year in which the crime rate rose. It was the third straight year in which the F.B.I. reported more than two million serious offenses. The largest increase in crimes was in burglaries..up almost eight and a half per cent. There was some 413-million dollars in property stolen, of which about 55 per cent was recovered by law enforcement officers.

5

Republican Senator Langer of North Dakota proposed today that the government "acquire, distribute and administer" the new Salk anti-polio vaccine.

And State Department Security Chief Scott McCloud, said in Paris today:"the refugee relief program is almost in full gear." His organization will soon admit refugees to the United States in increasing numbers. McCloud says he's thoroughly satisfied with the progress of security investigations in Paris..required by the act.

Edward R. Murrow: April 25, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The week-end elections in the German province of Saxony have been awaited as a test of German public opinion. The elections brought no clearcut decision; they reflect the confusion and conflict which pervade German politics. ~~One of the~~ principal points at issue was whether Germany should join the West under the Paris treaties. On this issue neither side won a clear or overwhelming mandate. The vote does show a majority for the basic elements of Chancellor Adenauer's foreign policy, but with a strong opposition minority. Perhaps the most important result of the elections was a demonstration of great faith in democratic procedures. The Parties committed to democratic processes got 95 percent of the total vote. The Communists and the would-be Nazis received only 5 percent. On balance this important election leaves Germany's position in the cold war unchanged.

On the other side of the world the conflict between freedom and communism remains pretty much what it was, but the initiative for the time being at least, rests with the Chinese Communists. Pakistan's Prime Minister, Mohammed Ali, an anti-communist friend of the West, said Red China's premier, Chou En-lai, told him that the door to direct negotiations with the United States over Formosa is still open a slight crack. Chou En-lai had proposed on Saturday that Washington and Peiping negotiate directly on the matter of Formosa. Then he appeared to pull the rug from under his own proposal by saying that such negotiations would "not affect in the least what he called "Communist China's sovereign right in the liberation of Formosa." Our State Department asked Communist China to let the Nationalists sit in on any talks about Formosa. We also asked for an immediate cease-fire in the Formosa Strait, the release of our flyers and civilians now held by the Communist Chinese; and we asked them to accept a United Nations invitation to discuss the ending of hostilities in the Formosa area.

Pakistan's Mohammed Ali says there is too much suspicion on both sides - Chinese and Americans. He believes the Communists are willing to talk about whether Chiang Kai shek should be represented in discussions about the future of Formosa.

In the course of the Bandung conference China's Chou En-lai acted with restraint, scored something of a personal success, and made a number of promises. He promised the Japanese Delegation that he would release at once one thousand Japanese prisoners of war still held by the Chinese. He gave personal assurances to Burma and Thailand that there would be no infiltration across their borders. He invited everyone at the conference to come to Yenan and see for themselves that no movement is being organised there to invade Thailand and overthrow its government. He is also reported to have signed a non-aggression pact with Laos. He assured the political committee at Bandung that anyone who wanted to could come to China and move about freely. Chou En-lai gave his neighbors plenty of assurances, but only time will tell how meaningful they are. (The course record for Communist assurances isn't very good.) Chou tried to play the role of "Chou the Gentle". He was gracious and affable, was particularly gracious to Romulo of the Philippines and Prince Wan of Thailand, two staunch opponents of Communism. His announcement of willingness to negotiate on Formosa may well have been intended only to impress the delegates to the Bandung conference. In any event it gave him something of a diplomatic triumph.

The conference was in a sense a personal conquest for Chou En-lai, but at the same time it was not a defeat for the West. Our friends in Asia and Africa demonstrated their conviction and their coherence more consistently and effectively than had been expected.

The Russians have announced that they are looking outside the earth. They have announced the formation of a Commission on Inter-Planetary Communication. This commission is supposed to create an automatic laboratory for scientific research in the cosmos. According to the announcement this laboratory will be in outer space, and will revolve around the earth like a ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ satellite, "for a prolonged period of time." This new commission is under the Academy of Sciences - the senior scientific arm of the Soviet Government, and it includes only the most able scientists in Russia. The group includes P.L. Kapitza, the world famous physicist; and the composition of the commission indicates that the Russians have given this effort to create an artificial satellite a high priority in their scientific research.

Mohammed Ali was expressing the ~~sentiments~~ opinion of many...~~within and outside government affairs~~...when he noted the growing suspicion and distrust in international diplomacy today. It may well be true, as La Fontaine once contended, that "to know what to mistrust is the mother of safety." But ~~if this is so,~~ it is equally true, as Francis Bacon concluded, that "a superabundance of suspicion is a kind of political madness."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 25, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles will meet with the British and French foreign ministers in Paris to discuss concrete plans for a Big Four conference with the Russians. The Foreign Ministers meeting, set for May 8, may be followed by another with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov. In Moscow, on Saturday, Premier Bulganin indicated he is ready for a meeting of top government officials. He told reporters to "ask Eisenhower and Eden about the date."

British Foreign Secretary Mac Milan says he's ready for a four power meeting with the Russians "at any level, whether heads of government or foreign ministers."

Moscow radio said today that the foreign affairs committees of the Soviet parliament have recommended that Moscow cancel the British-Soviet alliance..because the British have ratified the Paris agreements to re-arm West Germany.

On Formosa today, Assistant Secretary of State Robertson and Admiral Radford, the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, are winding up their meetings with Chiang Kai Shek. They have all been held in secret. Nationalists who want no compromise with Communism give the impression that they are disappointed with Robertson-Radford talks. I should like to discuss recent developemtt in the Far East in a few minutes.

The President said here in New York today that he plans to send a new atomic-powered merchant ship around the torld. This wuuld be a dramatic demonstration of our determination to win "a just and lasting peace." As the President sees it, the ship would travel thousands of miles without refueling. "It will demonstrate to people everywhere this peace-time use of atomic energy, harnessed for the improvement of human living." The President will ask Congress for money to build the new ship.

He also spoke to the Associated Press luncheon of his desire for congressional approval of the Administration's program to cut tariffs 15 per cent over the next three years. He said two-way trade is "a broad avenue by which all men and nations of good will can travel toward a golden era of peace and plenty."

Senate Deomcrats in Washington say Mr. Eisenhower is offering only weak support of the liberalized trade bill. Senator Gore of Tenessee charges that the President has a habit of "never coming to grips with the realities of the situation." He asked the President "to get at least one Republican" to vote for the bill.

When Mr. Eisenhower flew back to Washington this afternoon he held a 40 minute meeting with Secretary of State Dulles..to review world affairs. The Secretary said he and the President were catching up on world developments since they last conferred at Augusta eight days ago.

The Atomic Energy Commission today called-off the big atomic civil defense open-shot that had been scheduled for tomorrow morning. High winds over the Nevada desert forced a postponmnet until Wednesday--at the earliest.

A House committee today released testimony on what our military leaders think of Soviet military might. General Ridgeway, the army's chief of staff, testified that: the Red army is virtually on a war footing ..it has received new atomic warfare training...is "equipped and disposed to undertake a major war with little warning." General Ridgeway also said: the red army is the most powerful land force in the world. "in an excellent state of combat readiness."

And General Twining, the air force chief of staff, told the committee: Communist China's air force can be doubled or tripled overnight by the Russians.

Red China's rapidly expanding system of bases gives them "the ability to move in aircraft rapidly from the Soviet Union." General Twining says "We cannot ignore their capability."

And an army witness testified that we now have 20 billion dollars worth of fighting equipemtt stored in this country and abroad.

Former President Truman..in Nashville today..told reporters the Eisenhower administration is trying to sabotage the Tennessee Valley Authority. He said:"Without T.V.A. the South would never have the industrial centers it now has. And there would be no such thing as rural electrification."

The F.B.I. says the United States crime rate took another five per cent jump in 1954. One major crime was committed in the country every 14 seconds. J. Edgar Hoover says that this was the seventh consicutive year in which the crime rate rose. It was the third straight year in which the F.B.I. reported more than two millionserious offenses. The largest increase in crimes was in burglaries...up almost eight and a half per cent. There was some 113 million dollars of property stolen, of which about 55 per cent was recovered by law enforcement officers. Republican Senator Langer of North Dakota proposed today that the government "acquire, distribute and administer the new Salk anti-polio vaccine.

And State Department Security Chief Scott McCloud, said in Paris today: "the refugee relief program is almost in full gear." His organization will soon admit refugees to the United States in increasing mumbers. McCloud says he's throughly satisfied with the progress of security investigations in Paris.. required by the act.

The week end elections in the German province of Saxony have been awaited as a test of German public opinion. The elections brought no clearcut decision; they reflect the confusion and conflict which pervade German politics. One of the principal points at issue was whether Germany should join the West under the Paris treaties. On this issue neither side wan a clear or overwhelming mandate. The vote does show a majority for the basic elements of Chancellor Adenauer's foreign policy, but with a strong opposition minority. Perhaps the most important result of the elections was a demonstration of great faith in democratic procedures. The Parties committed to democratic processes bot 95 percent of the total vote. The Communists and the would-be Nazis received only 5 percent. On balance this important election leaves Germany's position in the cold war unchanged.

On the other side of the world the conflict between freedom and Communism remains pretty much what it was, but the initiative for the time being at least, rests with the Chinese Communists. Pakistan's Prime Minister, Mohammed Ali, an anti-Communist friend of the West, said Red China's premier, Chou En-lai, told him that the door to direct negotiations with the United States over Formosa is still open a slight crack. Chou En-lai had proposed on Saturday that Washington and Peiping negotiate directly on the matter of Formosa. Then he appeared to pull the rug from under his own proposal by saying that such negotiations would "not affect in the least"what he called "Communist China's soverign right in the liberation of Formosa." Our State Department asked Communist China to let the Nationalists sit in on any talks about Formosa. We also asked for an immediate cease fire in the Formosa Strait, the release of our flyers and civilians not held by the Communist Chinese; and we asked them to accept a United Nations invitation to discuss the ending of hostilities in the Formosa area.

Pakistan's Mohammed Ali says there is too much suspicion on both sides - Chinese and Americans. He believes the Communists are willing to talk about whether Chiang Kai Shek should be represented in discussions about the future of Formosa.

In the course of the Bandung conference China's Chou En-lai acted with restraint, scored something of a personal success, and made a number of promises. He promised the Japanese Delegation that he would release at once one thousand Japanese prisoners of war still held by the Chinese. He gave personal assurances to Burma and Thailand that there would be no infiltration across their borders. He invited everyone at the conference to come to Yenan and see for themselves that no movement is being organized there to invade Thailand and overthrow its government. He is also reported to have signed a non-aggression pact with Laos. He assured the political committee at Bandung that anyone who wanted to could come to China and move about freely. Chou En-lai gave his neighbors plenty of assurances, but only time will tell how meaningful they are. The course record for Communist assurances isn't very good. Chou tried to play thr role of "Chou the Gentle". He was gracious and affable, was particularly gracious to Romulo of the Philippines and Prince Van of Thailand, to staunch opponints of Communism. His announcement of willingness to negotiate on Formosa may well have been intented only to impress the delegates to the Bandung conference. In any event it gave him something of a diplomatic triumph.

The conference was in a sense a personal conquest for Chou En-lai, but at the same time it was not a defeat for the West. Our friends in Asia and Africa demonstrated their conviction and their coherence more consistently and effectively than the been expected.

The Russians have announced that they are looking outside the earth, They have announced the formation of a Commission on Inter-Planetary Communication. This commission is supposed to create an automatic laboratory for scientific research in the cosmos. According to the announcement this laboratory will be in outer space, and will revolve around the earth like a satellite, "for a prolonged period of time." This new commission is under the Academy of Sciences - the senior scientific arm of the Soviet Government, and it includes only the most able scientists in Russia. The group includes P.L. Kapitaza, the world famous physicist; and the composition of the commission indicates that the Russians have given this effort to create an artificial satellite a high priority in their scientific research.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Mohammed Ali was expressing the opinion of many when he noted the growing suspicion and distrust in international diplomacy today. It may well be true, as La Fontaine once contended, that "to know what to mistrust is the mother of safety." But it is equally true, as Francis Bacon concluded, that "a superabundance of suspicion is a kind of political madness."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday April 26, 1955

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles said today, we could hold talks with the Chinese Communists, without the Chinese Nationalists being present. The Secretary said we intend to try to find out whether Red China is sincere in wanting a peaceful settlement in the Formosa area. Or, if they are merely playing a propaganda game. On Saturday the State Department, with the President's approval, said we would "insist" that the Nationalists participate in any discussion concerning Formosa. Chairman George of the Foreign Relations Committee urged that we could meet without the Nationalists, providing no decisions were made to prejudice Nationalist claims. And today, Secretary Dulles seemed to agree. He told reporters: we would promise to respect and protect Nationalist China's interests at any meeting with the Communists. We will not stand upon protocol in so grave an issue. We're still not clear on what Chou en Lai meant when he said the Communists will not give up their right to liberate Formosa.

Some Republican Senators..Bridges and Hickenlooper..are surprised by the Secretary's statement today.. think its a mistake to sit down with Red China unless the Nationalists are present. Senator Knowland is seeking a "fuller explanation" of Mr. Dulles' remarks.

On Formosa, Assistant Secretary of State Robertson and Admiral Radford are again conferring with Ching Kai Shek. Dispatches that were warning, a few days ago, that the Americans might be asking Chiang to give up Quemoy and Matsu, now describe the Americans as fact-finders... trying to get the best estimate of the situation. A Nationalist [redacted]r newspaper urges us not to "sell out our ally." And the Communist radio accused us (before the Dulles news conference) of raising "unreasonable prerequisities" for a conference on Formosa.

Secretary Dulles sees in developments at the recent Bandung conference, and at Moscow's agreement today to attend a meeting of Big Four ambassadors to work on a final Austrian treaty....Secretary Dulles sees in this "new ground for hope". Although he again warns of disappointments AND setbacks we must expect.

And the British Foreign Office calls the Dulles [redacted] statement on Formosa a helpful contribution to a peaceful settlement.

Mr. Dulles told reporters today [redacted] he is still opposed to Senator Bricker's proposed amendment to the constiution to limit the President's [redacted] treaty-making power. He cancelled his appearance before a Senate committee only because the Administration doesn't want any of its witnesses to testify until all are ready. And some are not ready.

Mr. Dulles told a Senate appropriations subcommittee that action by the House in cutting requested State Department funds by 20 and a half million dollars "cuts into the bone" and increases the chance of war.

The Defense Department today accused the Hoover commission of issuing an erroneous and misleading report on alleged waste in military stockpiling programs. Defense Secretary Wilson told reporters: the Department expects to get some good from the report. But he said the department's basic problems can be solved only by "some more doers and not so many critics." He said the Hoover report seemed to deal with "tremendous trifles."

Senate Finance committee sources say the White House and key Senators have agreed on a compromise amendment to the President's foreign trade bill. It would empower the President to limit imports of particular items if they reach such volume that they would endanger an industry vital to national security.

Dr. Leonard A. Scheele, surgeoun general of the United States Public Health Service, said today that SO FAR only a "trickle" of the Salk antipolio vaccine has reached commercial channels. [redacted] He said the entire output of six licensed manufacturers is being bought up by the Polio Foundation to innoculate first and second graders. He said the big problem now is the immediate shortage of the vaccine. Government officials say the government so far has approved enough vaccine to protect more than 5-million children. And the Army reveals that Dr. Jonas Salk, discoverer of the vaccine, made a major contribution to the army's battle against influenza. He headed extensive POST-WAR field studies, [redacted] that resulted in finding an effective combination of [redacted] influenza vaccines now in use throughout the armed forces.

Frieda Hennock, a member of the Federal Communications Commission, proposed to a Senate committee today that [redacted] major party candidates in elections of national interest be given free radio and television time. CBS Vice President Richard S. Salant argued that the idea of compulsory free time is [redacted] "unsound, unwise and unworkable."

The Atomic Energy Commission is now prepared to set-off an "open shot" in Nevada tomorrow morning..if the weather permits.

At the Navy's underwater Ordnance station at Newport, Rhode Island, four civilians were killed, one missing, and five wounded in an explosion caused by compressed air and fluid used in testing torpedo propulsion mechanism.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer FLEW [redacted] to West Berlin toDAY TO try to END THE [redacted] Communists "cold bloackade". And American officials disclose that Rudolf Hess, once the Number Two Nazi, tried to commit suicide in Spandau prison several days ago. Fast action by American medics saved [redacted] HIS LIFE.

Edward R. Murrow: April 26, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

One of the problems that always plagues a democracy, particularly in a time of uneasy peace, is what information shall be released to the general public. It has been said by a number of high-ranking intelligence experts that eighty to ninety percent of the information a nation receives about a potential enemy comes from a careful reading of published documents, particularly scientific and technical journals. This information doesn't come in any large measure from beautiful spies or traitors.

About a month ago the Administration being worried about this aspect of security as well as inter-service rivalry, and perhaps about the indiscretions of some of its high-ranking officials too, laid down a new set of regulations covering the dissemination of news. Defense Secretary Wilson ordered the information staffs in the Pentagon to be cut down by a third to a half. Many of the men in uniform in charge of handing out information were replaced by civilians. New and stringent regulations as to what serving officers may write and publish were also announced. But of particular interest to news men and the public was that portion of the order dealing with the general release of official information. It reads as follows: "Such review and clearance shall be related not only to a determination of whether release of the material would involve any technical or substantive violation of security, but also to a determination of whether release or publication of the material would constitute a constructive contribution to the primary mission of the Department of Defense." This last phrase, "a constructive contribution to the primary mission of the Department of Defense" is so wide and vague that anything could be suppressed, regardless of whether security considerations were involved. A given official might regard criticism as not being constructive. Whatever the reasons, the Secretary's order has produced a pall of silence over the military establishment.

For example, the Defense Department said today that a pamphlet put out by the Republican Party contains information about three military items that had not previously been cleared for publication. However, the Department concluded that its publication is not considered a breach of security. Its title was: "National Defense Under the Republican Administration, Today and Tomorrow." Democrats in Congress have claimed that it violates the new secrecy or security orders.

Defense Secretary Wilson announced that he's going to reorganize his information department, so as to separate security and policy clearance from information. That will be a neat trick in both organization and semantics, if it can be done. (No nation has ever succeeded in doing it in the past.) Secretary Wilson also said he wanted to make it clear that in handling information we should not inadvertently give our enemies advantages which they do not already have. This is certainly an objective with which all reporters would agree.

This is a most difficult and delicate task to deny information to an enemy, without denying to the citizen information which is essential to the formation of intelligent opinion. Here is one example of how the new directive works. A few days ago Secretary Dulles spoke of a new Communist air build-up opposite Formosa. A colleague of mine, in Tokyo, asked a spokesman of the Far East Air Force whether anything had changed since his recent reports from Formosa. The reply was that he really could not say anything about Communist air strength. It was explained that the Wilson order had shut off any comment whatsoever on enemy activities. Further questioning about the Luchow and Fuchow air bases produced the reply: "I'm sorry, we can't even answer these question off the record to our friends." There followed questions based on information that the Russians are building a second new air base in the Kurile Islands. It may already be operational.

Again the answer came: "It's impossible to tell you anything about that." My colleague then said: "It seems to me that this order, as you interpret it, completely bars the American public from any information on Communist air activities in the whole Far East, unless Washington chooses to make public release of such information." And the reply was: "That is exactly right."

Reporters pick up information where they can, much of it from untrustworthy sources. It is their habit to check this information with our own official sources. But it is clear that in the Far East reporters are no longer given the guidance or background, even off the record, of official military sources. Like most problems, this conflict between security and information is easier stated than solved.

The search for the facts comes instinctively to those whose business it is to report the news. And it often happens, as Oliver Wendell Holmes remarked: "A moment's insight can be worth a life's experience." ~~Because this sometimes is so,~~ Restrictions on the sources of news can be dangerous. Samuel Johnson concluded ~~a longtime ago:~~ "A desire of knowledge is the natural feeling of mankind. And every human being whose mind is not debauched, will be willing to give all that he has to get it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow: April 27, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

~~This is the News~~ -

The National Public Health Service in Washington reported today that six cases of paralytic polio have occurred among children vaccinated with the serum made by Cutter Laboratories of Berkeley, California. Five of the cases were in California, one in Chicago. In addition a seven-year-old girl died, in Pocatello, Idaho, a week after innoculation; an eight-year-old boy in Idaho was also reported stricken four days after innoculation. TODAY, All of the unused vaccine manufactured by Cutter Laboratories was ordered withdrawn from use.

The Surgeon General, Leonard A. Scheele, this afternoon expressed "complete faith" in the vaccine - said there is no reason to suspect that vaccination itself caused the polio. And he added: "The action in this one instance does not indicate even that the batches of vaccine which were used were in any way faulty." Scheele thought it might be coincidence, the children might have been on their way to getting polio before they got the shot. He pointed out that it takes more than a month to build up effective antibodies after the injections are given.

Dr. Jonas Salk, who developed the vaccine, issued a statement in Pittsburgh, saying: "The Public Health Service's action in withdrawing the Cutter product seemed reasonable." He said: "It is difficult to say whether or not the association between vaccination and the cases reported is one of cause and effect, or one of coincidence. When you realize how much investigation was done to verify each case in the field trial, then it is not difficult to appreciate that only after a similar kind of thorough investigation can any valid conclusions be drawn concerning the reported cases." Dr. Salk said the interpretation as to whether or not the particular batches of vaccine employed are implicated as a cause, should await the same scientific criteria so as to provide the basis for sound judgment, and any further action that might be necessary.

~~The National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis said~~ The Cutter vaccine was shipped to five states and Hawaii, the states being California, Arizona, Idaho, Nevada and New Mexico. Smaller commercial shipments have been made to at least 12 southern states. Each bottle of the vaccine is labeled with the name of the originating laboratory, so the doctor administering it knows where it came from.

The Director of the California Department of Public Health said it is not known at this point whether these cases are related to injection of the vaccine, or are naturally occurring infections. If there is any difficulty with the vaccine, it may be limited to a few production lots. However, further investigation will be necessary to completely identify such lots.

The Wyeth Laboratories, which have supplied the Salk vaccine to the states of Maryland, Ohio, Delaware, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia, reports that they have "had absolutely no reports of adverse reactions of any kind" from the use of anti-polio vaccine produced in their laboratories.

A spokesman for the National Institute of Health said today that written "protocols" from the Cutter Laboratories concerning their vaccine had "measured up to the minimum standards which we established for safety, purity and potency." These protocols were required from all manufacturers before distribution of any batch of vaccine was allowed. They include the manufacturers' accounts of tests he has conducted "in test tubes and in animals." The spokesman could not say whether the National Institute of Health had made any tests of its own on Cutter samples. And he added: "We did not make tests of our own on most batches from any manufacturer." But he said that the written protocols, or reports on safety, purity and potency, met the minimum requirements on all lots of the vaccine cleared for distribution.

This whole situation is one where the experts are cautious, and the reporter must be likewise. However, from today's announcements and official statements, certain general conclusions can be drawn. The field tests of the Salk vaccine were exhaustive and conclusive, conducted by scientists of impeccable reputation. No one claimed that it was one hundred percent effective.

The polio cases reported today may have been in the incubation stage before the innoculations; or they could have been the result of a faulty batch of vaccine. This is not known. The Cutter-produced vaccine was withdrawn as a precautionary measure, while studies are being made.

There have been no reports of paralytic polio in children who have received other than the Cutter vaccine. It is possible that the children stricken were on the way to getting polio before they were vaccinated. It is possible that adequate tests of all the vaccine manufactured were not carried out. We do not know. The stop order, which applies only to the Cutter-produced vaccine, was issued in order that the situation might be fully studied. The scientists must have scientific data in order to form judgment. That is what they are now trying to get.

a

The President told reporters today that he believes efforts to work out a voluntary distribution program from the anti-polio vaccine are on the right track. And he told reporters that we would be glad to meet with the Chinese Communists on a cease-fire for Formosa..the freeing of Americans they hold as prisoners..without the presence of Chinese Nationalists. Mr. Eisenhower said talk on these two subjects would not directly affect the Nationalists .. we could discuss the problems without damaging the interests of the Nationalists.

Senate Republican Leader Knowland disagrees. He issued a statement saying there is nothing to demonstrate that the Communist pledged word is worth the paper it is written on. He thinks the Chinese Reds are inviting talks to cover up their efforts to build-up striking power to seize Formosa. Another Republican, Capehart of Indiana, says these problems should be "left up to the judgment of the President and Secretary of State". He would not have Congress interfere with the day-to-day responsibility for conducting foreign policy.

And on Formosa, official Nationalist quarters say the visiting Admiral Radford and Assistant Secretary of State Robertson discussed with Chiang kai Shek the basic problems involved in obtaining a cease-fire in Formosa strait. Both American and Nationalist quarters say that while we want a cease-fire , Chiang wants to fight on. But we're told that a compromise is possible.

At the White House news conference today the President had a number of other things to tell questioning reporters: He has been holding personal correspondence with Soviet Defense Minister Zhukov. But he does not want to release it. He doesn't know if THE exchange of letters will do any good..He considers it a slim hope. Mr. Eisenhower also said: he has a hunch that peace prospects are on the upswing.. The situation in Viet Nam is "strange and almost unexplainable"... He hasn't changed one iota in his opposition to the Bricker constiutional amendment to limit the President's treaty-making powers. Mr. Eisenhower also said: he is not satisfied with the operation of the law dealing with admitting refugees to this country.. His major interest in changing the minimum wage law is to spread the coverage. He approves an increase to 90 cents an hour--from the present 75 cents..to match the increase in the cost of living. And the President feels that someone blundered in compiling a Senate Republican policy papmhlet dealing with information on our weapons. Mr. Eisenhower feels that technical military secrets should not be made public to anyone except those who absolutely need to know about the matter. He has been "plagued" by unexplainable "leaks" in the government.

British Foreign Secretary MacMillan expressed the hope today that the explosive Far Eastern situation "may begin to develop along more favorable lines." He's instructed his representative in Peiping to get additional information on Chou en Lai's recent offer to negotiate with the United States on Far Eastern problems.

Austrian Chancellor Raab today called on the Big Four powers to free Austria from the occupation by early November.

In Washington, the President today sent Congress a program to help poor farmers. Secretary of Agriculture Benson says the plan is to help the million and a half farmers who make less than one thousand dollars a year...with educational techniques. supervised credit, vocational training and employment information. Democratic Senator Russell says it might bring some help in four or five generations. But Republican Representative Hope of Kansas says he's delighted because "something is going to be done right away."

The Atomic Energy Commission today again postponed the big civil defense nuclear explosion. Its been re-scheduled for tomorrow morning.

~~The House Armed Services committee has approved a new stiffened military reserve program. But it left out the Pentagon's requested authority to draft youths into the reserves.~~

Stanley M. Barnes, chief of the Justice department's anti-trust division, says the Department will seek a court order to block the merger of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and Youngstown Sheet and Tube..if the two companies go ahead as scheduled. And the C.I.O. Steelworkers told the basic steel industry today that the union wants a pay increase for 600-thousand members employed in steel producing plants. Steelworkers now earn an average of $2.33 an hour. Only yesterday United States Steel announced that its first quarter profits this year were 62 per cent higher than a year ago

And General Motors reported today that the first three months of THIS year was the greatest first-quarter in its history. Its consolidated net income reached 309-million dollars..the greatest ever earned by any company in any quarter.

~~The Federal Housing Administration says that in the future it will require home buyers with government insured loans to pay dea-closing costs in cash. The Veterans Administration has taken similar action.~~

The Justice Department today filed an anti-trust suited aimed at whittling down the size of the Conrad Hilton Hotel Empire. ~~Hilton now has 96 hotels in operation or under construction in this country and abroad.~~ The government charges that the Hilton Corporation violated the law's anti-merger section when it acquired the Statler hotel chain last year. In Paris today, Conrad Hilton said he will fight the suit.. he does not believe his coporation is violating any anti-trust laws.

Here in New York, Richard W. Slocum, president of the American newspaper Publishers Association, told the organization's convention: the publishers "must raise their voices" against any increase in the price of newsprint. He said the economy of the newsprint manufacturers is "a healthy one..far healthier profit-wise than most newspapers.

f

The Federal Housing Administration today tightened home mortgage rules. The Administration will require home buyers , with government insured loans, to pay deal-closing costs in cash. The Veterans Administration has taken similar action.

The decision by ~~the Public Health Service~~ to withdraw all unused polio vaccine marketed by Cutter Laboratories is in the nature of a normal precaution, summed up centuries ago by Terence in these words:"When you can guard against a danger, it is stupid to let it come near you." But, there is also no need for panic. The Roman poet Lucan once advised wisely:"The mere apprehension of a coming danger has put many into a situation of the utmost danger."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 27, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The National Public Health Service in Washington reported today that six cases of paralytic polio have occurred among children vaccinated with the serum made by Cutter Laboratories of Berkley, California. Five of the cases were in California, one in Chicago. In addition a seven-year-old-girl died in Pocatella Idaho, a week after innoculation; an eight-year-old-boy in Idaho was also reported stricken four days after innoculation. Today all th the unused vaccine manufactured by Cutter Laboratories was ordered withdrawn from use.

The Surgeon General, Leonard A. Scheele, this afternoon expressed "complete faith" in the vaccine - said there is no reason to suspect that vaccination itself caused the polio. And he added "The action in this one instance does not indicate even that the batches of vaccine which were used were in any way faulty." Scheele thought it might be coincidence, the children might have been on their way to getting polio before they got the shot. He pointed out that it takes a more than a month to build up effective anti-bodies after the injections are given.

Dr. Jonas Salk, who developed the vaccine, issued a statement in Pittsburgh, saying:"The Public Health Service's action in withdrawing the Cutter product seemed reasonable." He said: "It is difficult to say whether or not the association between vaccination and the cases reported is one of cause and effect, or one of coincidence. When you realize hos much investigation was done to verify each case in the field tiral, then is is not difficult to appreciate that only after a similar thorough investigation can any valid conclusions be drawn concerning the reported cases." Dr. Salk said the interpretation as to whether or not the particular batches of vaccine employed are implicated as a cause, should await the same scientific criteria so as to provide the basis for sound judgement, and any further action that might be necessary.

The cutter vaccine was shipped to five states and Hawaii, the states being California, Arizona, Idaho, Nevada, and New Mexico. Smaller commercial shipments have been made to at least 12 southern states. Each bottle of the vaccine is labled with the name of the originating laboratory, so the doctor administering it knows where it comes from.

The Director of the California Department of Public Health said it is not known at this point whether these cases are related to injection of the vaccine, or are naturally occuring infections. If there is any difficulty with the vaccine, it may be limited to a few production lots. However, further investigation will be necessary to completely identify such lots.

The Wyeth Laboratories, which have supplied the Salk vaccine to the states of Maryland, Ohio, Delaware, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia, reports that they have had"absolutely no reports of adverse reactions of any kind"from the use of anti-polio vaccine produced in their laboratories.

A spokesman for the National Institute of Health said today that written "protocols" from the Cutter Laboratories concerning their vaccines had "measured up to the minimum standards which we established for safety, purity and potency." These protocols were required from all manufacturers before distribution of any batch of vaccine was allowed. They include the manufacturers' accounts of tests he has conducted" in test tubes and in animals." The spokesman could not say whether the National Institute of Health had made many tests of its own on Cutter samples. And he added:"We did not make tests of its own on Cutter samples. And he added:"We did not make tests of our own on most batches from any manufacturer." But he said that the written protocols, or reports on safety, purity and potency met the mimimum requirements on all lots of the vaccine cleared for distribution.

This whole situation in one where the experts are cautious, and the reporter must be likewise. However, from today's announcements and official statements, certain general conclusions can be drawn. The field tests of the Salk vaccine were exhaustive and conclusive, conducted by scientists of impeccable reputation. No one claimed that it was one hundred percent effective.

The polio cases reported today may have been in the incubation stage before the innoculation ; or they could have been the result of a faulty batch of vaccine. This is not known. The Cutter-produced vaccine was withdrawn as a precautionary measure, while studies are being made.

There have been no reports of paralytic polio in children who have received other than Cutter vaccine. It is possible that the children stricken were on the way to getting polio before they were vaccinated. It is possible that adequate tests of all the vaccine manufactured were not carried out. We do not know. The stop order, which applies only to the Cutter-produced vaccine, was issued in order that the situation might be fully studied. The scientists must have scientific data in order to form judgement. That is what they are now trying to get.

The President told reporters today that he believes efforts to work out a voluntary distribution program from the anti-polio vaccine are on the right track. And he told reporters that we would be glad to meet with the Chinese Communists on a cease fire for Formosa...the freeing of Americans they hold as prisoners..without the presence of Chinese Nationalists. Mr. Eisenhower said talk on these two subjects would not directly affect the Nationalists..we could discuss the problems without damaging the interests of the Nationalists.

Senate Republican Leader Knowland disagrees. He issued a statement saying there is nothing to demonstrate that the Communist pledged word is worth the paper it is written on. He thinks the Chinese Reds are inviting talks to cover up their efforts to build-up striking power to seize Formosa. Another Republican, Capehart of Indiana, says these problems should be "left up to the judgement of the President and Secretary of State." He would not have Congress interfere with the day-to-day responsiblilty for conducting foreign policy."

And on Formosa, official Nationalist quarters say the visiting Admiral-Radford and Assistant Secretary of State Robertson discussed with Chiang kai Shek the basic problems involved in obtaining a cease-fire in Formosa Strait Both American and Nationalist quarters say that while we want a cease-fire, Chiang wants to fight on. But we're told that a compromose is possible.

At the White House news conference today the President had a number of other things to tell questioning reporters: He has been holding personal correspondence with Soviet Defense Minister Zhukov. But he does not want to release it. He considers it a slim hope. Mr. Eisenhower also said: he has a hunch that peace prospects are on the upswing...The situation in Viet Nam is "strange and almost unexplainable." He hasn't changed one iota in his opposition to the Bricker constitutional amendment to limit the President's treaty-making powers. Mr. Eisenhower also said: he is not satisfied with the operation of the law dealing with admitting refugees to this country...His major interest in changing the minimum wage law is to spread the coverage. He approves an increase to 90 cents an hour--from the present 75 cents..to match the increase in the cost of living. And the President feels that someone blundered in compiling a Senate Republican policy pamphlet dealing with information on our weapons. Mr. Eisenhower feels that technical military secrets should not be made public to anyone except those who absolutely need to know about the matter. He has been "plagued" by unexpalinable "leaks" in the government.

British Foreign Secretary MacMillan expressed the hope today that the explosive Far Eastern situation "may begin to develop along more favorable lines." He's instructed his representative in Peiping to get additional information on our weapons. Mr. Eisenhower feels that technical military secrets should not be made public to anyone except those who absolutely need to know about the matter. He has been "plagued" by unexplainable "leaks" in the government.

British Foeign Secretary MacMillan expressed the hope today that the explosive Far Eastern situation "may begin to develop along more favorable lines." He's instructed his representative in Peiping to get additional information on Chou en Lai's recent offer to negotiate with the United States on Far Eastern problems.

Austrian Chancellor Raab today called on the Big Four powers to free Austria from the occupation by early November.

In Washington, the President today sent Congress a program to help poor farmers. Secretary of Agriculture Benson says the plan is to help poor farmers. Secretary says the plan is th help the million and a half farmers who make less than one thousand dollars a year...with educational techniques, supervised credit, vocational training and employment information. Democratic Senator Russell says it might bring some help in four or five generations. But Republican Representative Hope of Kansas says he's delighted because "something is going to be done right sway."

The Atomic Energy Commission today again postponed the big civil defense nuclear explosion. It has been re-scheduled for tomorrow morning.

Stanley M. Barnes, chief of the Justice department's anti-trust division, says the Department will seek a court order to block the merger of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and Youngstown Sheet ant Tube..if the two companies go ahead as scheduled. And the C.I.O. Steelworkers told the basic steel industry today that the union wants to pay increase for 600-thousand members employed in steel producing plants. Steelworkers now earn an average of $2.33 an hour. Only yesterday United States Steel announced that its first quarter profits this year were 62 per cent higher than a year ago.

And General Motors reported today that the first three months of this year was the greatest first-quarter in its history. Its consolidated net income reached 309-million dollars..the greatest ever earned by and company in any quarter.

The Justice Dppartment toady filed an anti-trust suit aimed at whittling down the size of the Conrad Hilton Hotel Empire. The government charges that the Hilton Corporation violated the law's anti-merger section when it acquired the Statler hotel chain last year. In Paris today Conrad Hilton said he will fight the suit..he does not believe his corporation is violating any anti-trust laws.

Here in New York, Richard W. Slocum, president of the American newspaper Publishers Assosiation, told the organization's convention: the publishers "must raise their voices" against any increase in the price of newsprint. He said the economy of the newspring manufacturers is "a healthy one..far healthier profit-wise than most newspapers."

The Federal Housing Administration today tightened home mortgage rules. The Administration will require home buyers, with government insured loans, to pay deal-closing costs in cash. The Veterans Administration has taken similar action.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The decision to withdraw all unused polio vaccine marketed by Cutter Laboratories is in the nature of a normal precaution, summed up centuries ago by Terence in these words: "When you can guard against a danger, it is stupid to let it come near you." But, there is also no need for panic. The Roman poet Lucan once advises wisely: "The mere apprehension of a coming danger has put many into a situation of the utmost danger."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday April 28, 1955

This is the news:

The pro-western government of South Viet Nam is now engaged in a battle for survival. It started this morning when the palace of Premier Diem was attacked by the army of former river pirates who control all of Saigon's gambling and prostitution. Premier Diem's army struck back. At last report a square mile of Saigon was on fire. More than 100 persons were killed..about 500 wounded in the first nine hours of battle. The government says the National Army has now captured seven REBEL strongholds. An American SOURCE in Saigon says Premier Diem must meet this challenge firmly.. with force... "because if he stops now he might as well resign because he'll never be able to govern again."

But a few hours after the fighting broke out, Chief of State Bao Dai, still vacationing on the French Riviera, summoned Premier Diem to an emergency conference in Cannes BY NEXT TUESDAY. to keep this date Diem would have to leave Saigon almost immediately...at a crucial time. He would leave a power vacuum which his enemies COULD easily seize. There is no indication yet whether Premier Diem will heed the summons from Bao Dai. And if he decides to remain in Saigon he faces a new problem. Bao Dai has relieved him of his military powers and handed them to a general who took refuge with rebellious forces only a few days ago.

Our ambassador to Indo-China, General J. Lawton Collins, is now in Washington. He is understood to have told the President and the National Security Council that the future American policy towards non-Communist IndoChina could be drastically affected by the outcome of today's fighting. American officials are dismayed by Bao Dai's action in calling Premier Diem to France.

In Europe today, the Dutch completed their parliamentary approval of the Paris agreements. This was the last such action needed to bring Western Germany into the alliance against Communism. Fifteen nations have now completed the necessary action on agreements which, among other things: creates the framework for German re-armament,,, permits Allied troops to stay in Germany to help defend Europe... and admits West Germany as the 15th member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The NATO commander, General Greunther, has told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that when it comes down to the capacity to deliver nuclear weapons "the Soviets are not in the same league with us." In secret testimony, parts of which were released today, General [redacted] Greunther said: "In spite of Soviet strength, if they went to war today they would lose because of our overwhelming air capability."

~~Grunther pointed out that when General Eisenhower first took command of NATO forces in 1951 he asked a "cynical" general what the Russians would need to march to the English channel. The reply was "General, all they need is shoes." Now, says Greunther, they need more than shoes. They would have to bring in additional forces from the Soviet Union. They could do that. But we would have warning."~~ This is the way General Greunther estimates Russian strength: their land forces are "very good... their air force is "reasonably good". What they don't have in quality they make up in quantity.....they have a "relatively weak" surface navy. But there is a continuing emphasis on submarines. Grunther also told the Senators the Russians are "having trouble..there is a creaking in their MACHINERY [redacted]...there is a certain amount of strain and it could well be the result of their agricultural program.

British Prime Minister Eden told the House of Commons today that the WAY is now clear to hold talks with Russia at any level. He's hopeful about prospects. He said:"We are anxious to explore with the Soviet government the possibility of reaching agreement on all outstanding matters between East and West," He said the Allies are now discussing how such a conference can be arranged.

The British Labor party tonight made public ITS "platform" FOR the May elections. I'd like to discuss these issues in a few minutes. And left-wing Laborite Aneurin Bevan today was given back his membership in the party..so he can run as an official party candidate. He has apologized in writing for opposing the leadership, AND promised not to do it any more.

Japan's former premier Yoshida suggested today that the non-Communist world use 10 million Chinese, outside Red China, as a fifth column to detach Red China from Soviet Russia.

In Washington today the government announced it is setting up teams of medical experts to be rushed to various parts of the country to track down and CURB polio outbreaks. The plan was announced as four more youngsters who had received the anti-polio vaccine were listed as polio victims. Three of the cases were reported from Los Angeles and involved the Cutter vaccine which has been temporarily withdrawn from use. The fourth case, in Columbus, Georgia, involved Eli Lilly Company's vaccine. This has not been banned. And one of eleven cases previously reported among innoculated children today was described as another ailment.. an improper diagnosis. [redacted]

Democratic Senator George said today that he has strong doubts that Senator Bricker and the Administration can agree on a constitutional amendment to limit the treaty power. He thinks it will be impossible to get any such amendment through the Senate this year.

Attorney General Brownell says he's prepared to take action, under the anti-trust laws, against certain advertising practises in the publishing industry..particularly the matter of "uniform" agency commissions. ~~Earlier, Elisha Hanson, general counsel for the American Newspaper Publishers Association, told the A.N.P.A. convention that the government is trying to make it the guinea pig in an attempt to change anti-trust laws through the courts rather than through Congress. Hanson told the convention the Justice Department is about to~~

~~bring a suit charging the A.N.P.A. with violation of the~~

And out at Las Vegas, the Atomic Energy Commission postponed the scheduled big atomic explosion for a third straight day. There is now a possibility it may not be fired until next week.

Edward R. Murrow: April 28, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The British political parties are ~~winding~~ turning up for a national election ~~this~~ to be held on May 26th. Traditionally British election campaigns last only about three weeks. The Public Opinion polls, which have a remarkable record of accuracy in England, are indicating a narrow victory for the Conservative Party, now led by Sir Anthony Eden. But predicting the outcome of a British election is about as unprofitable as attempting to predict an American election. The classic example over there was the election in 1945, during the Potsdam Victory Conference, when the British electorate decided to turn Mr. Churchill and his Conservative Party out to pasture. They cheered Churchill wherever he went, and then proceeded to vote him out of power, mainly because of the Labor Party's slogan: "Fair Shares for All".

The political balance of power in England is held by the middle class wage earners. The Labor Party bid for a return to power was issued today in what is called the Party Manifesto. The Labor Party said: "The Hydrogen Bomb looms over all mankind. The existence of this terrible weapon on both sides of the Iron Curtain maintains an uneasy balance under the threat of mutual destruction - deterrents can at best only give us a breathing space. We are faced with a choice between world co-operation and world annihilation.

The Labor Party says the first objective of the British Government should be to end the delay in setting up high level talks with the Russians. But high level talks are not enough. Labor says the Prime Minister who takes part in them must stand for a positive peace policy. The Conservatives are also in favor of high level talks, but they want the Austrian Treaty signed, and Germany formally tied to the West before such talks are held. The Labor Party wants a neutralized Formosa. The Conservatives are on the fence about this, but if they're crowded will probably go along with a guarantee of Formosa; but they will have no part of any fighting for Quemoy and Matsu.

Labor also wants a more socialized Welfare State at home - wants to kill the Conservative Government's plans for commercial sponsorship of Television in Britain, scheduled to start in September.

Again in the field of foreign affairs, the Labor Party is committed to trying to get Chiang Kai Shek's forces off the Chinese offshore islands. The Labor Party also commits itself to do everything it can to get Communist China admitted to the United Nations. Labor is committed to work for worldwide disarmament, even if it means "sacrifices of national sovereignty." It proposes the immediate cessation of all hydrogen bomb tests, but promises to keep Britain strong if there is no worldwide agreement to disarm. There is also the promise of a new effort to unify East and West Germany by means of genuinely free elections.

On the domestic scene Labor promises to again nationalize Britain's steel industry, and long-distance trucking. The Labor Party did this in 1950, but Winston Churchill's Conservatives de-nationalized both industries after the 1951 election. Labor would nationalize water supplies, and some parts of the chemical and machine tool industries. The abolition of present small charges for prescriptions, false teeth and spectacles, is also promised. Likewise a reform of education, by recruiting more teachers and raising classroom standards.

The significant aspect of this British election is that foreign affairs and foreign policy will play an important if not dominant role. Traditionally, with few exceptions, the British have been content to leave the conduct of foreign affairs to the Foreign Office. But in the election that is coming, the Hydrogen Bomb, Formosa, relations with Russia, will be more important than purely domestic issues, a field in which neither Party offers anything startling or new.

The Conservative Party will play upon the theme of relative prosperity, stability and the importance of the Western Alliance. The Labor Party will play upon the prospect of another war.

For the next month we can expect no decisive or dramatic action by Sir Anthony Eden's government - we can expect some very hard things to be said about American policy - even though that policy changes from day to day or week to week it would probably better be served by a Conservative rather than a Labor victory. Only one thing is reasonably certain, and that is that any attempt in this country - no matter the source or motivation - to influence the outcome of the British Election will backfire against those who initiate it.

The British Labor Party is making a strong bid to be returned to power in the May elections. To achieve this end, as is frequently the case in politics, there are a lot of tempting promises being bandied about. T.C. Haliburton once contended that "mankind lives on promises." But to this, George Washington had a ready reply:"Be careful with your promise. Undertake not what you can not perform."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 28, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The pro-western government of South Viet Nam is now engaged in a battle for survival. It started this morning when the palace of Premier Diem was attacked by the army of former river pirates who control all of Saigon's gambling and prostitution. Premier Diem's army struck back. At last report a square mile of Saigon was on fire. More than 100 persons were killed...about 500 wounded in the first nine hours of battle. The government says the National Army has now captured seven rebel strongholds. An American source in Saigon says Premier Diem must meet this challenge firmly..with force.."because if he stops now he might as well resign because he'll never be able to govern again.

But a few hours after the fithting broke out, Chief of State Bao Dai, still vacationing on the French Riviera, summoned Premier Diem to an emergency conference in Cannes by next Tuesday. To keep this date Diem would have to leave Saigon almost immediately..at a crucial time. He would leave a power vacuum which his enemies could easily seize. There is no indication yet whether Premier Diem will heed the summons from Bao Dai. And if he decides to remain in Saigon he faces a new problem. Bai Dai has relieved him of his military powers and handed them to a general who took refuge with rebellious forces only a few days ago.

Our ambassador to Into China, General J. Lawton Collins, is now in Washington. He is understood to have told the President and the National Security Council that the future American policy towards non-Communist Indo China could be drastically affected by the outcome of today's fighting. American officials are dismayed by Bao Dai's action in calling Premier Diem to France.

In Europe today, the Dutch completed their parliamentary approval of the Paris agreements. This was the last such action needed to bring Western Germany into the alliance against Communism. Fifteen nations have now completed the necessary action on agreements which, among other things: creates the framework for German rearmament...permits Allied troops to stay in Germany to help defend Europe..and admits West Germany as the 15th member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The NATO commander, General Greunther, has told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that when it comes down to the capacity to deliver nucle r weapons "the Soviets are not in the same league with us." In secret testimony, parts of which were released today, General Greunther said:"In spite of Soviet Strength, if they went to war today they would lose because of our overwhelming air capability." This is the way General Greunther estimates Russian strength: their land forces are "very good"..their force is "reasonably good". What they don't have in quality they make up in quantity...they have a "relatively weak" surface navy. But there is a continuing emphasis on submarines. Gruenther also told the Senators the Russians are "having trouble...there is a creaking in their machinery..there is a certain amount of strain and it could well be the result of their agricultural program.

British Prime Minister Eden told the House of Commons today that the way is now clear to hold talks with Russia at any level. He's hopeful about prospects. He said:"We are anxious to explore with the Soviet government the possibility of reaching agreement on all outstanding matters between East and West." He said the Allies are now discussing how such a conference can by arranged.

The British Labor party tonight made public its "platform" for the May elections. I'd like to discuss these issues in a few minutes. And left-wing Laborite Aneurin Bevan today was given bach his membership in the party..so he can run as an official party candidate. He has apologized in writing for opposing the leadership and promised not to do it any more.

Japan's former premier Yoshida suggested today that the non-Communist world use 10 million Chinese, outside Red China, as a fifth column to detach Red China from Soviet Russia.

In Washington today the government announced it is setting up teams of medical experts to be rushed to various parts of the country to track down and curb polio outbreaks. The plan was announced as four more youngsters who has received the anti-polio vaccine were listed as polio victime. Three of the cases were reported from Los Angeles and involved the Cutter vaccine which has been temporarily withdrawn from use. The fourth case, in Columbus, Georgia, involved Eli Lilly Company's vaccine. This has not been banned. And one of eleven cases previously reported among innoculated children today was described as another ailment...an imporper diagnosis.

Democratic Senator George said today that he has strong doubts that Senator Bricker and the Administration can agree on a constitutional amendment to limit the treaty power. He thinks it will be impossible to get any such amendment through the Senate this year.

Attorney General Brownell says he's propared to take action, under the anti-trust laws, against certain advertising practices in the publishing industry..particularly the matter of "uniform" agency commissions.

And out at Las Vegas, the Atomic Energy Commission postponed the scheduled big atomic explosion for a third straight day. There is now a possibility it may not be fired until next week.

The British political parties are turning up for a national election to be held on May 26th. Traditionally British election campaigns last only about three weeks. The Public Opinion polls, which have a remarkable record of accuracy in England, are indicating a narrow victory for the Conservative Party, now lead by Sir Anthony Eden. But predicting the outcome of a British election is about as unprofitable as attempting to predict an American election. The classic example over there was the election in 1945, during the Postdam Victory Conference, when the British electorate decided tu turn Mr. Churchill and his Conservative Party out to pasture. They cheered Churchill wherever he went, and then prodeded to vote him out of power, mainly because of the Labor Party's slogan: "Fair Shares for All."

The political balance of power in England is held by the middle class wage earners. The Labor Party bid for a return to power was issued today in what is called the Party Manifesto. The Labor Party said: "The Hydrogen Bomb looms over all mankind. The existence of this terrible weapon on both sides of the Iron Curtain maintains an uneasy balance under the threat of mutual destruction - deterrents can at best only give us a breathing space. We are aced with a choice between world-co-operation and world annihilation.

The Labor Party says the first objective of the British Government should be to end the delay in setting up high level talks with the Russians. But high level talks are not enough. Labor says the Prime Minister who takes part in them must stand for a positive peace policy. The Conservatives are also in favor of high level talks, but they want the Austrian Treaty signed, and Germany formally tied to the West before such talks are held. The Labor Party wants a neautralized Formosa. The Conservatives are on the fence about this, but if they're crowded, will probably go along with a guarantee of Formosa; but they will have no part of any fighting for Quemoy and Matsu.

Labor also wants a more socialized Welfare State at home - wants to kill the Conservative Government's plans for a commercial censorship of television in Britain, scheduled to start in September.

Again in the field of foreign affairs, the Labor Party is committed to trying to get Chiang Kai Shek's forces off the Chinese offshore islands. The Labor Party also commits itself to do everything it can to get Communist China admitted to the United Nations. Labor is committed to work for worldide disarmament, even if it means "sacrifices of national soverignty." It proposes the immediate cessation of all hydrogen bomb tests, but promises to keep Britain strong if there is no worldwide agreement to disarm. There is also the promise of a new effort to unify East and West Germany b means of genuinely free elections.

On the domestic scene Labor promises to again nationalize Britain's steel industry, and long-distance trucking. The Labor Party did this in 1950, but Winston Churchill's Conservatives de-nationalized both industries after the 1951 election. Labor would nationalize water supplies, and some parts of the chemical and machine tool industries. The abolition of present small charges for precriptions, false teeth and spectacles, is also promised. Likewise a reform of education, by recruiting more teachers and raising classroom standards.

The significant aspect of this British election is that foreign affairs and foreign policy will play an important if not dominant role. Traditionally, with few exceptions, the British have been content to leave the conduct of foreign affairs to the Foreign Office. But in the election that is coming the Hydrogen Bomb, Formosa, relations with Russia, will be more important than pure y domestic issues, a field in which neigher Party offers anything startling or new.

The Conservative Party will play upon the theme of relative prosperity, stability and the importance of the Western Alliance. The Labor Party will play upon the prospect of another war.

For the next month we can expect no decisive action by Sir Anthony Eden's government - we can expect some very hard things to be said about American policy - even though the policy changes from day to day or week to week it would probably better be served by a conservative rather than a Labor victory. Only one thing is reasonably certain, and that is that any attempt in this country - no matter the source or motivation - to influence the outcome of the British Election will backfire against those who initiate it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The British Labor Party is making a strong bid to be returned to power in the May elections. To achieve this end, as is frequently the case in politics, there are a lot of tempting promises being bandied about. T.C. Hali - burton once contended that "minkind lives on promises." But to this, George Washington had a ready reply:"Be careful with our promise. Undertake not what you can not perform.

Good Night and Good Luck

Friday, April 29, 1955

This is the news:

The American-supported government of Premier Diem appears to be winning the civil war in South Viet Nam. The latest reports from Saigon tell us: The Nationalist army has struck back hard at the rebel Bin Soo-Yen forces. An estimated one thousand persons have been killed or wounded in the second day of the civil war. The Nationalists appear to have split the four to five thousand rebels. Two square miles of Saigon are now in flames. So much for the fighting.

Diem is also having political troubles. Yeterday Chief of State Bao Dai, who has been living on the Riviera for a year, summoned Diem for a meeting..by next Tuesday. Today Diem's cabinet said his presence in Saigon is "indispensable" to Viet Name. He will not be able to leave. And the cabinet turned down Bao Dai's appointment of a new army chief of staff.. an enemy of Premier Diem. There has been no further word on this from Bao Dai except that he is sending another enemy of Premier Diem to Indo-China on "a mission of information."

This split between Viet Nam's premier and chief of state was reflected in another way. The French have made it clear they have had enough of Diem. The State Department says we are still supporting him.

French Premier Faure said in Paris that Diem's government is "no longer equal to the task entrusted to it." The British are reported to agree. But the State Department, a few hours after Faure spoke, made it very clear we are still behind Diem. And a spokesman refused to say whether we recognize Bao Dai as South Viet Nam's chief of state.

~~In [redacted]~~ I'd like you to hear a report now from my colleague Bill Costello in Washington who has spent much time in the Far East and knows the situation in Indo-China intimately.

(runs 5;20..return cue...

(And we don't have the troops to back up our support of Diem)

The Chinese Nationalists reported today that their warships have shelled the mainland near the Matsu islands. They say they destroyed a considerable number of artillery positions, started fires, and returned safely.

Washington reporters were told today that our government is considering sending troops to Formosa..either soldiers or Marines... to boost the morale of Chinese Nationalists and offset opposition to any cease-fire in the area. The story is that no final decision has been made but the idea of a token force of troops may have been discussed on Formosa by Admiral Radford and Assistant Secretary of State Robertson. Both are now on their way home after meeting with Chiang Kai Shek.

On Tuesday the President will meet with Republican and Democratic congressional leaders. House Republican Leader Martin says they'll discuss the situation in Formosa as well as the President's foreign aid request.

British Prime Minister Eden said today that he will seek early talks with the Russians to assure world peace. In OUTLINING the Conservative platform for the May elections, Sir Anthony said:

"I have always and shall always support talks at whatever level seems to me to have a real chance of success." This means that the Conservatives and the Labor Party are now agreed on this issue. In other areas, the Conservatives: promised to develop Great Britain into a "property-owning democracy"... with help on income taxes, slum clearance and schools.

British Field Marshal Lord Montgomery said today that the western allies could hit the Soviet Union in the first few hours of any future war with more explosive punch than has been used before in all history.

In Italy, Giovanni Gronchi today was elected president. He won by a landslide on the fourth ballot. Gronchi, who leans to the left, is 67.. veteran president of the Chamber of Deputies.. leader of a partisan band in Northern Italy in World War Two. Italian experts interpret ~~mmmm~~ Gronchi's election as a blow at Prime Minister Scelba who backed another candidate.

In this country the often postponed atomic test in Nevada has been put off again..at least until Sunday..because of bad weather.

In Washington, the Defense Department urged Congress to give the government power to bar known subversives from defense plants that are vital to national security. General Counsel Wilbur Brucker says there are now known subversives working in such plants. But the government has no authority to meet this potential threat to our "productive capabilities and therefore to our military effectiveness."

Emerson Schmidt, of the United States Chamber of Commerce told a Senate committee that the President's proposal to raise the mimimum wage from 75 cents an hour to 90-cents is unrealistic and self-defeating.

The American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars made known their support of the proposed Bricker amendment to the constitution to limit the treaty-making powers. The League of Women Voters representative testified against it.

A Senate subcommittee today voted the scrap the President's highway program in favor of a five-year 21 and a third billion dollar road building plan. It also provides for increasing federal gasoline taxes from two to three cents a gallon to help finance the program.

The National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis said today that almost three and a third million first and second grade children in 27 states.. Hawaii and the District of Columbia..have received their first anti-polio shots.....Attorney General Brownell says the Justice Department is keeping a close check on sales of the vaccine to make sure there is no "collusion or price-fixing."...

Four more youngsters who received the shots came down with polio today, bringing the total to 18. And in Nassau County here in New York, the president of the Medical Society reported what he called "a shocking and deplorable situation"....39 YOUNGSTERS up to 19 years of age received shots before youngsters in the key danger years of five to nine GOT THEIRS. Physicians who gave the shots to the older children will be investigated.

And the State Department says it has granted passports to 12 American veterans who met Soviet forces at the Elbe River in Germany in 1945. The 12 will be permitted to go to Moscow for a reunion with Russian soldiers on May 9.

The confused situation in South Vietnam raises a number of complications which ev[redacted]y could seriously affect our foreign policy decisions...this, despite the fact, that Vietnam is a long way from America. But those in the State Department might get some small measure of comfort from these words by Edmund Burke and a Greek philosopher [redacted] Ep[redacted]. "Difficulty is a severe instructor...but it is difficulties which show what men are."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, April 29, 1955
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... I'd like you to hear a report now from my colleague, Bill Costello, in Washington, who has spent much time in the Far East and knows the situation in Indo-China intimately.

COSTELLO: As the crisis in Viet Nam deepens so does the paralysis in Washington. As matters stand tonight, the United States Government has no definite policy for dealing with the situation except to repeat stubbornly that we are supporting the legal Government now headed by Premier Diem. Even that assertion can no longer be taken at face value. Some officials in the Department are saying that a decision was reached Wednesday to let Diem go down the drain. Others, like Secretary of State Dulles, are still insisting, for the record, that we will not give him up. Behind the scenes there is an argument within the Administration. Some of the stronger personalities are saying Diem now has to prove himself. If he will revolt openly against the Emperor, Bao Dai, then we will give him all-out support. Others, more timorous, are afraid Premier Diem may, indeed, revolt and nobody then dares predict what the French reaction will be or how far we will go in supporting Diem. Our firmness is being eroded.

For weeks this crisis has been brewing just as for years the armistice crisis moved its inexorable way toward Geneva. When Geneva finally came this Government was tongue-tied and flabbergasted, and it is pertinent, recalling that, because the same drama is being reenacted now. Premier Diem is opposed by three forces, - by the rebellious Binh Xuyen Society, by the French, and by the Emperor Bao Dai, who is allied with both the other factions. The Binh Xuyen have the simplest of all reasons for wanting Premier Diem out of office. They are the vice overlords of Saigon, as well as being the police. They run the opium dens, the brothels, the gambling joints, and their operations run into millions of piastres. Before the war the leaders of the Binh Xuyen were pirates on the Saigon River. During the war they got allied arms in the struggle against the Japanese. After the war they marched into Saigon with their arms and made themselves the custodians of the Police Department. The French tolerated them first because they needed an embodiment of power and some of the Frenchmen who came later continued to tolerate the pirates because they were given a share of the loot from Saigon's vice dens. In the course of time, the Emperor Bao Dai was cut in on the swag. It is said he has been getting half-a-million dollars a month to squander on the French Riviera or to salt away in Swiss banks.

Last winter, when Premier Diem announced he would close the gambling casinos of Cholon observerssmelled trouble. They knew that neither the French, the Emperor, nor the Binh Xuyen would let themselves be pauperized without putting up a fight.

In Washington for months now the authorities have been temporizing, have been urging Diem to go slowly, and urging Bao Dai not to take any unilateral action against Diem because it was felt we must postpone a showdown. Now, Bao Dai has acted and in two ways. First, he appoints a new army chief-of-staff, his appointee being a General who is hiding in the jungles. Premier Diem parries smothly by suggesting it is not possible now to carry out this order. The French and Americans sigh in relief because one crisis is thus postponed. Then, Bao Dai orders Premier Diem to hasten to France so that he can get fired. The Cabinet defiantly rejects the Emperor's demand, saying Diem is indispensable. This conflict has until next week to simmer. In both cases the issue is whether Bao Dai has any power or any influence left in Viet Nam. It appears that the present nationalist-minded rulers of the country are ready to repudiate the ex-Emperor and look around for a wholly new symbol of sovereignty. That showdown creates fresh anxiety in Washington. High officials here say Bao Dai is the only link of legitimacy between the old and new regimes. They fear chaos if that thread is broken. Democratic Senator Humphrey says if theViet Namese Government no longer has room for both Diem and Bao Dai then the phony Emperor must go. The Administration hesitates to make this clear choice.

The State Department's concern arises from the fact that if Diem goes we don't know whom to endorse as Premier and if Bao Dai goes we don't know whom to back as chief-of-state or how to placate the French. Today, when the French finally told Premier Diem, finally said that he is not fitted for his job, a State Department spokesman repeated with melancholy firmness that there is no change in our attitude, which is to support this legal Government - Free Viet Nam. Asked, however, if we still recognized Bao Dai, the spokesman made extensive inquiries in the Department and replied finally: "We do not recognize individuals."

The American dilemma is that we do not want to offend France openly because of German rearmament problems, but neither do we want Diem's overthrow to lead to a Communist victory in Viet Nam. France now provides the troops and we provide the money to keep South Viet Nam afloat. Our fear is that France might pull out its troops if we demand too great a voice in policy and we don't have the troops to back up our support of Diem.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 29, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The American supported government of Premier Diem appears to be winning the civil war in South Viet Nam. The latest reports from Saigon tell us: the Nationalist army has struck back hard at the rebel Bin Soo-Yen forces. An estimated one thousand persons have been killed or wounded in the second day of the civil war. The Nationalists appear to have split the four to five thousand rebels. Two square miles of Saigon are now in flames. So much for the fighting.

Diem is also having political troubles. Yesterday Chief of State Bao Dai, who has been living on the Riviera for a year, summoned Diem for a meeting..by next Tuesday. Today Diem's cabinet said his presence in Saigon is "indespensible" to Viet Nam. He will not be able to leave. And the cabinet turned down Bao Dai's appointment of a new army chief of staff ..an enemy of Premier Diem. There has been no further word on this from Bao Dai except that he is sending another enemy of Premier Diem to Indo China on "a mission of information."

This split between Viet Nam's premier and the chief of state was reflected in another way. The French have made it clear they have had enough of Diem. The State Department says we are still supporting him.

French Premier Faure said in Paris that Diem's government is "no longer equal to the task entrusted to it." The British are reported to agree. But the State Department, a few hours after Faure spoke, made it very clear we are still behind Diem. And a spokesman refused to say whether we recognize Bao Dai as South Viet Nam's chief of state.

MURROW: I'd like you to hear a report now from my colleague, Bill Costello, in Washington, who has spent much time in the Far East and knows the situation in Indo-China intimately.

COSTELLO: As the crisis in Viet Nam deepens so does the paralysis in Washington. As matters stand tonight, the United States Government has no definite policy for dealing with the situation except to repeat stubbornly that we are supporting the legal government now headed by Premier Diem. Even that assertion can no longer be taken at face value. Some officials in the Department are saying that a decision was reached Wednesday to let Diem go down the drain. Others, like Secretary of State Dulles, are still insisting, for the record, that we will not give him up. Behind the scenes there is an argument within the Administration. Some of the stronger personalities are saying Diem now has to prove himself. If he will revolt openly against the Emperor, Bao Dai, then we will give him all-out support. Others, more timorous, are afraid Premier Diem may, indeed, revolt and nobody then dares predict what the French reaction will be or how far we will go in supporting Diem. Our firmness is being eroded.

For weeks this crisis has been brewing just as for years the armistice crisis moved its inexorable way toward Geneva. When Geneva finally came this government was tongue-tied and flabbergasted, and it is pertinent, recalling that, becuase the same drama is being reenacted now. Premier Diem is opposed by three forces, by the rebellious Binh Xuyen Society, by the French, and by Emperor Bao Dai, who is allied with both the other factions. The Binh Xuyen have the simplest of all reasons for wanting Premier Diem out of office. They are the vice overlords of Saigon, as well as being the police. They run the opium dens, the brothels, the gambling joints, and thier operations run into millions of piastres. Before the war the leaders of the Binh Xuyen were pirates on the Saigon Riber. During the war they got allied arms in the struggle against the Japanese. After the war they marched into Saigon with their arms and made themselves the custodians of the Police Department. The French tolerated them first because they needed an embodiment of power and some of the Frenchmen who came later continued to tolerate the pirates because they were given a share of the loot from Saigon's vice dens. In the course of time, the Emperor Bao Dai was cut in on the swag. It is said he has been getting half-a-million-dollars a month to squander of the French Riviera or to salt away in Swiss banks.

Last winter, when Premier Diem announced he would close the gambling casinos of Cholon observers smelled trouble. They knew that neither the French, the Emperor, nor the Binh Xuyen would let themselves be pauperized without putting up a fight.

In Washington for months now the authorities have been temporizing, have been urging Diem to go slowly, and urging Bao Dai not to take any unilateral action against Diem because it was felt we must postpone a showdown. Now Bao Dai has acted and in two ways. First, he appoints a new army chief-of-staff, his appointee being a General who is hiding in the jungles. Premier Diem parries smoothly by suggesting it is not possible now to carry out his order. The French and Americans sigh in relief because one crisis is thus postponed. Then, Bao Dai orders Premier Diem to hasten to France so that he can get fired. The Cabinet defiantly rejects the Emperor's demand, saying Diem is indispensable. This conflict has until next week to simmer. In both cases the issue is whether Beo Dai has any power or any or any influence left in Viet Nam. It appears that the present nationalist-minded rulers of the country are ready to repudiate the ex-Emperor and look around for a wholly new symbol of soverignty. That showdown creates fresh anxiety in Washington. High officials here say Bao Dai is the only link of legitimacy between the old and new regimes. They fear chaos if that thread is broken. Democratic Senator Humphreys says if the Viet Namese Government no longer has room for both Diem and Bao Dai, then the phony Emperor must go. The Administration hesitates to make this clear choice.

The State Department concern arises from the fact that if Diem goes we don't know whom to endorese as Premier and if Bao Dai goes we don't know whom to back as chief-of-state or how to placate the French. Today, when the French finally told Premier Diem, finally said that is is not fitted for his job, a State Department spokesman repeated with melancholy firmness that there is no change in our attitude, which is to support this legal Government -Free Viet Nam. Asked, however, if we still recognized Bao Dai, the spokesman made extensive inquiries in the Department and replied finally:"We do not recognize individuals."

The American dilemma is that we do not want to offend France openly because of German rearmament problems, but neither do we want Diem's overthrow to lead to a Communist victory in Viet Nam. France now provides the troops and we provide the money to keep South Viet Nam afloat. Our fear is that France might pull out its troops if we demand too great a voice in policy and we don't have the troops to back up our support of Diem.

MURROW: The Chinese Nationalists reported today that their warships have shelled the mainland near the Matsu islands. They say they destroyed a considerable number of artillery positions, started fires, and returned safely.

Washington reporters were told today that our government is considering sending troops to Formosa, either soldiers or Marines...to boost the morale of Chinese Nationalists and offset opposition to any cease-fire in the area. The story is that no final decision has been made but the idea of a token force of troops may have deen discussed on Formosa by Admiral Radford and Assistant Secretary of State Robertson. Both are now on their way home after meeting with Chiang Kai Shek.

On Tuesday the President will meet with Republican and Democratic congressional leaders. House Republican Leader Martin says they'll discuss the situation in Formosa as well as the President's foreign aid request.

British Prime Minister Eden said today that he will seek early talks with the Russians to assure world peace. In outlining the Conservative platform for the May elections, Sir Anthony said: "I have always and shall always support talks at whatever level seems to me to have a real chance of success." This means that the Conservatives and the Labor Party are now agreed on this issue. In other areas, the Conservatives: promised to develop Great Britain into a "property owning democracy"..with help on income taxes, slum clearance and schools.

British Field Marshal Lord Montgomery said today that the western allies could hit the Soviet Union in the first few hours of any future war with more explosive punch than has been used before in all history.

In Italy, Giroanni Gronchi today was elected president. He won by a landslide on the fourth ballot. Gronchi, who leans to the left, is 67... veteran president of the Chamber of Deputees...leader of a partisan band in Northern Italy in World War Two. Italian experts interpret Gronchi's election as a blow at Prime Minister Scelba who backed another candidate.

In this country the often postponed atomic best in Nevada has been cut off again..at least until Sunday..because of bad weather.

In Washington, the Defense Department urged Congress to give the government power to bar known subversives from defense plants that are vital to national security. General Cousell Wilbur Brucker says there are now known subversives working in such plants. But the government has no authority to meet this potential threat to our "productive capabilities and therefore to our military effectiveness."

Emerson Schmidt, of the United States Chamber of Commerce told a Senate committee that the President's proposal to raise the minimum wate from 75 cents an hour to 90 cents is unrealistic and self-defeating.

The American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars made known their support of the proposed Bricker amendment to the constitution to limit the treaty-making powers. The League of Women Voters representative testified against it.

A Senate subcommittee today voted the scrap the President's highway program in fa or a a five-year 21 and a third billion dollar road building plan. It also provides for increasing federal gasoline taxes from two to three cents a gallon to help finance the program.

The National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis said today that almost three and a third million first and second grade children in 27 states..Hawaii and the District of Comumbia..have received their first anti-polio shots... Attorney General Brownell says the Justice Department is keeping a close check on sales of the vaccine to make sure there is no "collusion or price-fixing."

Four more youngsters who received the shots came down with polio today, bringing the total to 18. And in Nassau County here in New York, the president of the Medical Society reported that he called "a shocking and de lorable situation"..39 youngsters up to 19 years of age received shots before youngsters in the keydanger years of five to nine got theirs. Physicians who gave the shots to the older children will be investigated.

And the State Department says it has granted passports to 12 American veterans who met Soviet forces at the Elbe river in Germany in 1945. The 12 will be permitted to go to Moscow for a reunion with Russian soldiers on May 9.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The confused situation in South Vietnam raises a number of complications which could seriously affect our foreign policy decisions..this, despite the fact, that Vietnam is a long way from America. But those in the State Department might get some small measure of comfort from these words by Edmund Burke and a Greek philosopher "Difficulty is a severe instructor... but it is difficulties which show what men are."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday, May 2, 1955

This is the news:

The French have now joined the State Department in supporting Premier Diem of South Viet Nam. Only a few days ago French Premier Faure said Diem was unequal to the tasks facing him. But now authoritative French sources say the French support Diem and they are prepared to sacrifice Chief of State Bao Dai if that will help produce stability. Over the week-end Premier Diem weathered a number of political moves. Today he remains in control of the government and the army. And Bao Dai, on the French Riviera has been warned by Diem and three army generals that no Bao Dai-appointed government will be recognized by Viet Nam. ~~Bao Dai told my colleague David Schoenbrun on the French Riviera today: a minority faction of revolutionaries dominates the government in Saigon. He cannot believe these "little known men can carry the country with them."~~ In Washington, the State Department, again declaring its support of Diem, refused any comment on its attitude towards Bao Dai.. a clear indication that we might approve deposing him.

There was more fighting in Saigon today as government forces tried to wipe out the last rebel command post..in a Saigon suburb. A French news agency says the fighting now is over.

On Formosa, two Chinese Nationalist newspapers argued against any talks between the United States and Red China on easing tension in Formosa Strait. And a State Department spokesman in Washington says the Nationalist promise, five months ago, not to attack the Communist mainland without our approval, still stands.

In Vienna today, the ambassadors of the Big Four powers spent four and a half hours talking about a final Austrian peace treaty. Austrian Foreign Minister Figl says "The chances are good." A communique reports "notable progress" at today's meeting.

Secretary of State Dulles told a Senate committee today he is in complete opposition to the proposed Bricker amendment to the Constitution. He warned that the President "would be unable properly to conduct foreign relations" if the amendment is approved. ~~Mr. Dulles added: "Our constitution was designed to form a more perfect union, Let us not bring imperfection into this world."~~

The President told the United States Chamber of Commerce meeting today: that prosperity at home and free trade abroad are the major ingredients for a victory over Communism. Mr. Eisenhower said:"I feel that the aspiration of global peace is based on justice and decency and respect for others, and that it means we must continue our [redacted] prosperity at home."

The group heard ~~Eugene Holman, board chairman of Standard Oil of New Jersey, express the hope that the President's tax program would be approved by Congress without crippling amendments. He~~ Lester L. Colbert president of Chrysler Corporation, forecast that by 1975 "a large proportion of families may be using three or more cars." [redacted] Chamber President Clem D. Johnston predicted: "We can double the American standard of living by 1965 if we really put our minds to it."

Leaders of the A.F of L. and the C.I.O. today approved a new constiution for the combined labor organization. Among other things it would give the governing board of the new merged union, the power to suspend, on a two-thirds vote, any member unions found to be dominated by Communists or corruption.

A House committee today released testimony showing that Defense Secretary Wilson and Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, DISAGREE WITH ~~[redacted]~~ Army Chief of Staff [redacted] Ridgeway. General

Ridgeway has testified that he was given little warning that the army's manpower would be cut.. and no chance to protest to the National Security Council. Wilson and Admiral Radford say the army cut was planned long ago and the army's views were fully considered.. and rejected. During the questioning Secretary Wilson agreed that the cutback meants the army views "were not given primary consideration." He said:"If you listen to the military people only, they will bankrupt the nation or else create a military dictatorship."

Benjamin Fairless, board chairman of United States Steel, retired today under a company rule which calls for retirment at age 65. Fairless will be 65 tomorrow when his replacement is named.

The Public Health Service says its latest count shows 29 confirmed polio cases among the more than 4-million children innoculated since the program got under way two weeks ago. ~~Democratic Senator Morse of Oregon has called on Congress to impose compulsory federal controls on the distribution of the Salk anti-polio vaccine.~~

William Faulkner's "A Fable" today was awarded the Pulitzer prize for literature. Tennessee William's "Cat on a hot tin roof" was given the drama prize . The History award goes to Paul Morgan, for his book about the Rio Grande river.. and William S. White's "The Taft Story" is honored for biography. Wallace Stevens wins the poetry award and Gian-Carlo Menotti the music prize. A number of reporters were honored: Mrs. Caro Brown of Alice, Texas....Roland K. Towery of the Cuero (texas) Daily record... Anthony Lewis of the Washington Daily News... Harrison Salisbury of the New York Times...the Detroit free press for editorial writing... AND The Colmbus (Georgia) Ledger and Sunday [redacted]e: Ledger-Enquirer, for its coverage of curruption in Pheonix City, Alabama. [redacted]

Edward R. Murrow: May 2, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Sometimes the stories that are told reveal more of the climate of public opinion than the official communiques and speeches. It's an old form of communication, and no dictator has yet been able to stop it. Here are a few samples of stories now circulating in Eastern Germany, behind the Iron Curtain. Two East Germans are talking about what they would do the moment the Communist Government is overthrown. "The first thing I'd do", says one, "is go to the government's Pankow headquarters and break Ulbricht's neck." "That's what you think," replies the other, "you'd have to stand in line patiently to await your turn." Walter Ulbricht is the most hated as well as the most powerful figure in Communist Germany. He appears sinister even when he smiles. There is another story about him. Ulbricht tells a high-ranking railroad official: "We must do something, and immediately, about the recurrent delay of trains." The official replies: "We have worked out a new schedule, and offered cash rewards for improved service." Says Ulbricht: "That is ridiculous. You must build more waiting rooms."

This story is also circulating in East Germany. A farmer went to the annual fair at Minsk. In the market square he saw a merry-go-round, standing still. He asked a man standing near: "Comrade, why doesn't the merry-go-round move?" The comrade replies: "Don't you know that Comrade Vishinsky has died?" The farmer says: "No - too bad; but don't you have anybody else in town who could move the thing?"

There is also the story of Comrade Flunsch, who went to visit his brother in West Germany. The brothers had a wonderful boat trip on the Rhine; much food and more drink; very hilarious. When it was all over the Western brother said: "I hope this trip gave you a lot of pleasure." "It was very nice" replied Flunsch, "but nothing compared to the joy I feel at home when the Security Police knock on my door, drag me out of bed, check my papers, and find out it's not me but my neighbor they want."

Two other brothers meet: the one from the West says: "The Americans are all right, but I can't get used to the fact that they always have their hands in their pockets." "That's exactly how I feel, too." says the one from the East zone. "What", replies the one from the West: "do the Russians have their hands in their pockets all the time, too?" And the Eastern brother says: "No, in ours!"

In a slightly more serious vein, the Moscow newspaper Pravda reported recently that there aren't enough razor blades in the Soviet Union to go round. More than a hundred years ago Marx blue-printed the Communist way to a happy life for the little man. In 1917 Lenin put it into operation.

In 1928 Stalin colletivized the peasants in order, he said, that the little man could get more food and the essentials he needed. Now Pravda admits that there is a shortage of razor blades, needles, thimbles, kerosene lamps and primus stoves. Yet Soviet industry has turned out the tanks, guns, planes and bombs to equip a hundred and seventy-five divisions - has undertaken to deliver the necessary equipment to industrialize Communist China. And only a few weeks ago Premier Malenkov was kicked out of office for favoring the light industries which produce the needles, the thimbles and the razor blades, at the expense of the heavy industry which produces the guns and tanks. This is a measure of how far Russia has moved from the promise of the happier life for the little man toward the goal of world domination. If he were alive, Marx probably wouldn't worry about the razor blades, for he wore a full beard anyway. But what would he or his wife say about the shortage of needles, thimbles and kerosene lamps, to say nothing of butter, sugar and shoes?

There's another story out of Russia that is about as unfunny as it could be. The creation of a committee for the return of Displaced Persons to the homeland. This is the latest move in a campaign to break up anti-communist groups in the West. Already it has eliminated at least fifty active anti-communists by blackmail, kidnapping and murder. Recently a broadcaster was murdered in Munich; a Russian agent sentenced for trying to kidnap an anti-communist Russian writer.

There is a clause in the proposed Austrian Treaty which bears on this Communist effort to silence or recapture anti-communists in the West. It is paragraph number sixteen tentatively accepted by the Western delegates. It requires the Austrian government to hand over to the Russians any Soviet refugees they may ask for. Under this provision, if it stays in the treaty, something over six thousand anti-communist refugees from Russia now living in Austria, may be forced to go back to Russia. In Germany and elsewhere, anti-communist refugees are asking if it can happen in Austria now, why not in Germany in a year or two? At the end of the war many Russians committed suicide rather than go back to the Soviet Union. If that clause remains in the Austrian Treaty, there will be more suicides, and the West will have betrayed some of its ablest soldiers in the cold war.

International diplomacy is frequently complicated by language barriers. But there is one almost universal language in foreign affairs - and that is the political joke. And more than 250 years AGO, John Dryden recognized its worth when he noted:"Satire has always shone among the rest and is the boldest way if not the best...to tell men freely of their foulest faults, to laugh at their vain deeds and vainer thoughts."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 2, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The French have now joined the State Department in supporting Premier Diem of South Viet Nam. Only a few days ago French Premier Foure said Diem was unequal to the tasks facing him. But now, authoritative French sources say the French support Diem and they are prepared to sacrifice Chief of State Bao Dai if that will help produce stability. Over the week-end Premier Diem weathered a number of political moves. Today he remains in control of the government and the army. And Bao Dai, on the French Riviera, has been warned by Diem and three army generals that no Bao Dai appointed government will be recognized by Viet Nam. In Washington, the State Department again declaring its support of Diem refused any comment on its attitude towards Bao Dai...a clear indication that we might approve deposing him.

There was more fighting in Saigon today as government forces tried to wipe out the last rebel command post..in a Saigon suburb. A French news agency says the fighting now is over.

On Formosa two Chinese Nationalist newspapers argued against any talks between the United States and Red China on easing tension in Formosa Strait. And a State Department spokesman in Washington says the Nationalist promise, five months ago, not to attack the Communist mainland without our approval, still stands.

In Vienna today, the ambassadors of the Big Four powers spend four and a half hours talking about a final Austrian peace treaty. Austrian Foreign Minister Figl says:"The chances are good." A communique reports "notable progress at today's meeting.

Secretary of State Dulles told a Senate committee today he is in complete opposition to the proposed Bricker amendment to the Constitution. He warned that the President "would be unable properly to conduct foreign relations" if the amendment is approved.

The President told the United States Chamber of Commerce meeting today: that prosperity at home and free trade abroad are the major ingredients for a victory over Communism. Mr. Eisenhower said: "I feel that the aspiration of global peace is based on justice and decency and respect for others, and that it means we must continue our prosperity at home."

Lester L. Colbert, president of Chrysler Corporation, forecast that by 1975 "a large proportion of families may be using three or more cars." Chamber President Clem D. Johnson predicted: "We can double the American standard of living by 1965 if we really put our minds to it."

Leaders of the A. F. of L. and the C.I.O. today approved a new constitution for the combined labor organization. Among other things it would give the governing board of the new merged union, the power to suspend, on a two-thirds vote, any member unions found to be dominated by Communists or corruption.

A House committee today released testimony showing that Defense Secretary Wilson and Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, disagree with Army Chief of Staff Ridgeway. General Ridgeway has testified that he was given little warning that the army's manpower would be cut..and no chance to protest to the National Security Council. Wilson and Admiral Radford say the army cut was planned long ago and the army's views were fully considered ...and rejected. During the questioning, Secretary Wilson agreed that the cutback meant the army views "were not given primary consideration." He said:"If you listen to the military people only, they will bankrupt the nation or else create a military dictatorship."

Benjamin Fariless, board chairman of United States Steel, retired today under a company rule which calls for retirement at age 65. Fairless will be 65 tomorrow when his replacement is named.

The Public Health Service says its latest count shows 29 confirmed polio cases among more than 4 million children innoculated since the program got under way two weeks ago.

William Faulkner's "A Fable" today was awarded the Pulitzer prize for literature. Tennessee Williams' "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" was given the drama prize. The history award goes to Paul Morgan for his book about the Rio Grande River...and William S. White's "The Taft Story" is honored for biography. Wallace Stevens wins the poetry award and Gian-Carlo Menotti the music prize. A number of reporters were honored: Mrs Caro Brown of Alice, Texas...Roland K Towery of the Cuero (Texas) Daily Record...Anthony Lewis of the Washington Daily News...Harrison Salisbury of the New York Times.... the Detroit Free Press for editorial writing ...and the Columbus (Georgia) Ledger and Sunday Ledger-Inquirer for its coverage of the corruption in Phoenix City, Alabama.

Sometimes the stories that are told reveal more of the climate of public opinion than the official communiques and speeches. It's an old form of communication, and no dictator has yet been able to stop it. Here are a few samples of stories now ciruulating in Eastern Germany, behind the Iron Curtain.

Two East Germans are talking about what they would do the moment the Communist Government is overthrown. "The first thing I'd do", says one, "is go to the government's Pankow headquarters and break Ulbrich's neck." "That's what you think", replies the other, "You'd have to stand in line patiently and await your turn." Walter Ulbricht is the most hated as well as the most powerful figure in Communist Germany. He appears sinister even when he smiles.

There is another story about him. Ulbricht tells a high-ranking railroad official: "We must do something, and immediately, about the recurrent delay of trains." The official replies: "We have worked out a new schedule, and offered cash rewards for improved service." Says Ulbricht:"That is ridiculous. You must build more waiting rooms."

This story is also circulating in East Germany. A farmer went to the annual fair at Minsk. In the market square he say a merry-to-round, standing still. He asked a man standing near: "Comrade, why doesn't the merry-go-round move?" The comrade replies: "Don't you know that Comrade Vishinsky has died?" The farmer says: "No - too bad; but don't you have anybody else in town who could move the thing."

There is also the story of Comrade Flunsch, who went to visit his brother in West Germany. The brothers had a wonderful boat trip on the Rhine; much food and more drink; very hilarious. When it was all over the Western brother said; "I hope this trip gave you a lot of pleasure." "It was very nice" replied Flunsch, "but nothing compared to the joy I feel at home when the Security Police knock on my door, drag me out of bed, check my papers, and find out it's not me but my neighbor they want."

Two other brothers meet: the one from the West says: "The Americans are all right, but I can't get used to the fact that they always have their hands in their pockets." "That's exactly how I feel, too," says the one from the East zone. "What", replies the one from the West:"do the Russians have their hands in their pockets all the time, too?" And the Eastern brother says: "No, in ours!"

In a slightly more serious vein, the Moscow newspaper Pravda reported recently that there aren't enough razor blades in the Soviet Union to go round. More than a hundred years ago Marx blue-printed the Communist way to a happy life for the little man. In 1917 Lenin put it into operation. In 1928 Stalin collectivized the peasants in order, he said, that the little man could get more food and the essentials he needed. Now Pravda admits that there is a shortage of razor blades, needles, thimbles, derosene lamps, and primus stoves. Yet Soviet industry has turned out the tanks, guns, planes and bombs to equip a hundred and seventy five divisions - has undertaken to deliver the necessary equipment to industrialize Communist China. And only a few weeks ago Premier Malenkov was kicked out of office for favoring the light industries which produce needles, the thimbles and razor blades, at the expense of the heavy industry which produces the guns and tanks. This is a measure of how far Russia has moved from the promise of the happier life for the little man toward the goal of world domination. If he were alive, Marx probably wouldn't worry about the razor blades, for he wore a full beard anyway. But what would he, or his wife say about the shortage of neeldes, thimbles and kerosene lamps, to say nothing of butter, sugar ans shoes?

There's another story out of Russia that is about as unfunny as it could be. The creation of a committee for the return of Displaced Persons to the homeland. This is the latest move in a campaign to break up anti-Communist groups in the West. Already it has eliminated at least fifty active anti-Communists by blackmail, kidnapping and murder. Recently a broadcaster was murdered in Munich; a Russian agent sentenced for trying to kidnap an anti-Communist Russian writer.

There is a clause in the proposed Austrian Treaty which bears on this Communist effort to silence or recapture anti-Communists in the West. It is paragraph number sixteen tentatively accepted by the Western delegates. It requires the Austrian government to hand over to the Russians any Soviet refugees they may ask for. Under this provision, if it stays in the treaty, something over six thousand anti-communist refugees from Russia no living in Austria, may be forced to go back to Russia. In Germany and elsewhere, anti-communist refugees are asking if it can happen in Austria now, why not in Germany in a year or two? At the end of the war many Russians committed suicide rather than go back to the Soviet Union. If the clause remains in the Austrian Treaty, there will be more suicides, and the West will have betrayed some of its ablest soldiers in the cold war.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: International diplomacy is frequently complicated by language barriers. But there is one, almost universal language in foreign affairs - and that is the political joke. And more than 250 years ago, John Dryden recognized its worth when he noted:"Satire has always shone among the rest and is the boldest, way, if not the best..to tell men freely of their foulest faults, to laugh at their vain deeds and vainer thoughts."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday May 3, 1955

This is the news:

Admiral Radford says: "There is no question that a Communist buildup is going on, on the Chinese mainland." / The chairman of the joint chiefs of staff conferred with the President for almost an hour. / Assistant Secretary of State Robertson, who made the trip to Formosa with Radford, attended the meeting. / After it was over the two men offered few details. / Reporters asked if we plan to send Marines to Formosa. Radford said: "We are not sending any Marines." / Reporters asked whether we plan to send any troops to Formosa. / Radford said: "We probably will do what we have to do in the future."

In Viet Nam today, a general of a religious sect supporting Premier Diem was killed in action. / Earlier, four of this general's batallions..perhaps 24-hundred men--had decided to join the premier in the fight against a rebellious group. Government forces are still tracking down the last group of rebels outside Saigon.

On Formosa, the Nationalist Foreign Office denies a local press report that the Nationalist Foreign Minister had hinted that China might agree to a cease-fire in Formosa strait.

In Vienna tonight, its reported that the Army has ordered all occupation forces to be ready to start withdrawing shortly..after an Austrian peace treaty is signed. But today, the ambassadors trying to settle this, ran into trouble. The Russians evidently want their own repatriation teams to be permitted to enter the country in unlimited numbers. They would arrange wholesale deportation of refugess who have fled from Iron Curtain countries..perhaps as many as 36-thousand persons. The western powers want to permit Austria to have a larger army than the Russians..who would limit it to 53-thousand men.

~~The New York Times reports that we have agreed to train selected British bomber crews in using American atomic weapons.~~

In Washington today, the United States and Turkey signed the first international agreement for co-operative research in the peaceful use of atomic energy. The President said: "This may be a historic day."

Mr. Eisenhower conferred today with 29 key members of Congress, on his foreign aid program. Later, Senate Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas said the Administration plans to give nearly a billion dollars worth of new military aid to Korea, Indo China and the Chinese on Formosa. Johnson described the meeting as "helpful and hopeful".

Senate and House conferees today agreed on an eight point eight per cent average increase for the government's 500-thousand postal workers. This would cost an estimated 178-million dollars a year. [redacted] The President has indicated he would not approve a raise of more than seven point six per cent.

The National Foundation for Infantile Parylsysis says it has shipped more than six million "first-shot" Doses of the Salk anti-polio vaccine. It has contracted for 18-million cubic centimeteres to provide first and second shots for 9-million school children.

Republican Senator Ives of New York says the limited supply of the vaccine constitutes a national emergency that demands immediate imposition of federal controls and priorities. Ives and ten other Senators have introduced a bill to compel the Welfare Department to set up a control program without delay.

Here in New York, the World-Telegram and Sun says it has learned from a top phameceutical source that the vaccine is pouring steadily into offices of many New York doctors..but not a drop has been made available to the city's school children. ~~The paper says the vaccine is going to some doctors in exchange for drug orders ... to others as samples for their children.~~

Great Britain has postponed its vaccination tests until American experts determine why some children, inocculated with the vaccine, have been stricken with polio.

Harold Stassen says a Senate investigation has disclosed an effort "to play favoritism" in awarding a grain storage contract for Pakistan. Stassen, the outgoing foreign aid chief, says he has barred those involved from another chance to bid on the job.

Frank B. Cliffe, vice president of the H.J. Heinz Company, told the Chamber of Commerce today that the guaranteed annual wage is "a beautiful rose" but it has thorns that can scratch.

United States Steel today chose Roger M. Blough, a corporate lawyer, to be chairman and chief executive officer of the corporation. He succeeds Benjamin Fairless who has retired. Blough is 51.. vice chairman of the board since 1952.

In Washington today, Indiana's Republican Governor Craig, said Indiana's Republican Senator Jenner, has made "neurotic" complaints about the Administrations' foreign policy. Jenner replied that Governor Craig is a "monkey." Each said the other was embarrassing Indiana.

Edward R. Murrow: May 3, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The deposit of ratifications of the treaties that incorporate the Federal German Republic in the Western defense family, is to take place day after tomorrow. Anyone able to remember vividly what was said about these treaties when they were in danger of defeat would expect the final completion of the ratification to ring out as an historic event of great importance. Now, one should be able to say, the West has arrived at the point it set out to reach; now Germany is in truth a member of the free world, now the West is correspondingly strengthened, and now can go on to negotiate from strength for a world of peace. Now it is able to seize on any proof of good faith from the Soviet Union and get along with negotiations. And since the Soviet Union has come up with a demonstration of good faith in negotiating an Austrian treaty, what could be more propitious? The news from Austria, where the talks about a treaty are making remarkable progress, is better than anyone dreamed would be possible a few weeks ago.

But something unpredictable has happened. The elation that should be registered in the capitals of the free world is strangely absent. And some hard realities are now coming into view. One of these is, that when the Soviet Union turns moderate it becomes a far more difficult antagonist than when it is extreme and menacing. The West knows how to unite when it is faced with danger. It does not know how to do so when it is faced with a degree of compliance.

An even more important reality is that this show of moderation - by the Soviet Union in Europe, and by Communist China in Asia - is a change in strategy, not a change in purpose. The world still is in the grip of a power rivalry. The control of Germany and Japan still is the great prize, and what happens in these two countries will shape the future of international life for a long time to come. Communist strategy to gain control of these prizes ~~now~~ is not now a strategy of seizure. It is one of placation, of creating good will, of making defensive build-ups seem unnecessary.

Another reality that now comes into view is that ratification of the German treaties does not in fact make Germany a member of the Western defense system, and if we thought it did we were taken in by our own words. The treaties are ratified all right, but Germany is not armed. And if the Soviet Union can prevent it Germany will never be armed, or at least armed as a part of NATO. Before Germany can be armed an entirely new phase must be passed through, the phase of negotiating for the unification of Germany, and failing to achieve it.

Instead of elation over the ratification of the treaties, the Western Allies are now concentrating on this new phase. The news today is that a draft of a note to the Soviet Union has been completed by diplomats of the Allies and the West German Republic, and will be laid before the Western foreign ministers this week end. This note invites the Soviet Union to meet this summer to discuss German unification. It should be said that it is not written with the idea that the Soviet Union is ready to negotiate sincerely to unify Germany. It is written in the opposite belief. It is an attempt to put Moscow on the defensive. It is described as an effort to get back the initiative which Moscow has seized with the negotiations of an Austrian treaty.

The West knows, of course, that Moscow has proclaimed that it will not discuss the future of Germany if the German treaties are ratified. It is trying to make Moscow eat these words. It assumes that Moscow will have to back down and cannot refuse to meet and talk about unification. So far so good. A minor Western victory looks possible.

But suppose the Russians do sit down and talk, what then? Moscow is expected to be preparing to propose a deal by which it recognizes the Bonn government in return for the Western Powers recognizing East Germany. This process of mutual recognition will be put forward as a basis which makes unification easier to obtain, not harder. Already many Germans are softening toward this proposition.

But if the West recognizes East Germany, it gives the Communist regime an important part in drafting the terms of unification, and in administering any elections to be held. The West, of course, will insist on genuinely free elections. But if the East German communists have a hand in controlling them, they can hardly be free according to Western standards. Dr. Adenauer has always insisted that the East German regime cannot be recognized. But it is a paradox that this week, when Dr. Adenauer's policy has finally triumphed, his persuasiveness is already on the wane. The majority of Germans want unification more than they want anything else. They certainly want it more than they want to have an army that is incorporated in NATO. And the fact that Austria now looks forward to a future as a neutral state, uncommitted to either rival in the struggle for power, gives a good many Germans a similar aspiration.

The West knows this is a danger. But it figures that the Soviet Union will not pay the price of German unification if it means withdrawal from East Germany and a weakening of Soviet power all along the Iron Curtain.

That may be so, but it is not certain. At any rate, the coming conference - if it comes - can hardly be called negotiating from strength.

In matters of diplomacy, time, patience and perserverance are qualities essential to all statesmen. Yet, ~~there are times when, even possessed of these traits, our diplomats despair.~~ Darwin Kingsley once remarked that "there are no limitations in what you can do except the limitations in your own mind as to what you can not do." Whether or not one is inclined to regard this as "practical" advice, Frank Vanderlip surely was right in concluding:"Nothing is settled until it is settled right."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 3, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Admiral Radford says: "There is no question that a Communist buildup is going on on the Chinese mainland." The chairman of the joint chiefs of staff conferred with the President for almost an hour. Assistant Secretary of State Robertson who made the trip to Formosa with Radford, attended the meeting. After it was over the two men offered few details. Reporters asked if we plan to send Marines to Formosa. Radford said: "We are not sending any Marines." Reporters asked whether we plan to send any troops to Formosa. Radford said:"We probably will do what we have to do in the future."

In Viet Nam today, a general of a religious sect supporting Premier Diem was killed in action. Earlier, four of this general's batallions..perhaps 24-hundred men..had decided to join the premier in the fight against a rebelious group. Government forces are still tracking down the last group of rebels outside Saigon.

On Formosa, the Nationalist Foreign Office denies a local press report that the Nationalist Foreign Minister had hinted that China might agree to a cease-fire in Formosa Strait.

In Vienna tonight, it is reported that the Army has ordered all occupation forces to be ready to start withdrawing shortly..after an Austrian peace treaty is signed. But today, the ambassadors trying to settle this, ran into trouble. The Russians evidently went their own repatriation teams to be permitted to enter the country in unlimited numbers. They would arrange wholesale deportation of refugees who have fled from Iron Curtain countries..perhaps as many as 36-thousand persons. The western powers want to permit Austria to have a larger army than the Russians..who would limit it to 53-thousand men.

In Washington today, the United States and Turkey signed the first international agreement for co-operative research in the peaceful use of atomic energy. The President said : "This may be a historic day."

Mr. Eisenhower conferred today with 29 key members of Congress on his foreign aid program. Later, Senate Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas said the Administration plans to give nearly a billion dollars worth of new military aid to Korea, Indo China and the Chinese on Formosa. Johnson described the meeting as "helpful and hopeful."

Senate ahd House conferees today agreed on an eight point eight per cent average increase for the government's 500-thousand postal workers. This would cost an estimated 178-million dollars a year. The President has indicated he would now approve a raise of more than seven point six per cent.

The National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis says it has shipped more than six million "first shot" doses of Salk anti-polio vaccine. It has contracted for 18-million cubic centimeteres to provide first and second shots for 9 million school children.

Republican Senator Ives of New York says the limited supply of the vaccine constitutes a national emergency that demands immediate imposition of federal controls and priorities. Ives and ten other Senators have introduced a bill to compel the Welfare Department to set up a control program without delay.

Here in New York, the World-Telegram and Sun says it has learned from a top pharmaseautical source that the vaccine is pouring steadily into offices of many New York doctors.. but not a drop has been made available to the city's school children.

Great Britain has postponed its vaccination tests until American experts determine why some children, innocculated with the vaccine, have been stricken with polio.

Harold Stassen says a Senate investigation has disclosed an effort to "play favoritism" in awarding a grain storage contract for Pakistan. Stasses, the outgoing foreign aid chief, says he has barred those involved from another chance to bid on the job.

Frank B. Cliffe, vice president of the H. J. Heinz Company, told ahe chamber of Commerce today that the guaranteed annual wave is "a beautiful rose" but it has thorns that can scratch.

United States Steel today chose Roger M. Blough, a corporate lawyer, to be chairman and chief executive officer of the corporation. He succeeds Benjamin Fairless who has retired. Blough is 51...vice chairman of the board since 1952.

In Washington today, Indiana's Republican Governor, Craig, said Indiana's Republican Senator Jenner has made "neaurotic" complaints about the Administration's foreign policy. Jenner replied that Governor Craig is a "monkey". Each said the other was embarrassing Indiana.

The deposit of ratifications of the treaties that incorporate the Federal German Republic in the Eastern defense family, is to take place day after tomorrow. Anyone able to remember vividly what was said about these treaties when they were in danger of defeat would expect the final completion of the ratification to ring out as an historic event of great importance.

Now, one should be able to say, the West has arrived at the point it set out to react; now Germany is in truth a member of the free world, now the West is correspondingly strengthened, and now can go on to negotiate from strength for a world of peace. Now it is able to seize on any proof of good faith from the Soviet Union and get along with negotiations. And since the Soviet Union has come up with a demonstration of good faith in negotiating an Austrian treaty, what could be more propitious? The news from Austria, where the talks about a treaty are making remarkable progress, is better than anyone dreamed would be possible a few weeks ago.

But something unpredictable has happened. The elation should be registered in the capitals of the free world is strangely absent. And some hard realities are now coming into view. One of these is, that when the Soviet Union turns moderate it becomes a far more difficult antagonist than when it is extreme and menacing. The West knows how to unite when it is faced with danger. It does not know how to do so when it is faced with a degree of compliance.

And even more important reality is that this show of moderation - by the SovietUnion in Europe, and by Communist China in Asia - is a change in strategy, not a change in purpose. The world still is in the grip of a power rivalry. The control of Germany and Japan still is the great prize, and what happens in these two countries will shape the future of international life for a long time to come. Communist strategy to gain control of these prizes is not now a strategy of seizure. It is one of placation, of creating good will, of making defensive build-ups seem unnecessary.

Another reality that now comes into view is that ratification of the German treaties does not in fact make Germany a member of the Western defense system, and if we thought it tid we were taken in by our own words. The treaties are ratified all right, but Germany is not armed. And if the Soviet Union can prevent it, Germany will never be armed, or at lease armed as a part of NATO. Before Germany can be armed an entirely new phase must be passed through, the phase of negotiations for the unification of Germany, and failing to achieve it.

Instead of elation over the ratification of the treaties, the Western Allies are now concentrating on this new phase. The news today is that a draft of note to the Soviet Union has been completed by diplomats of the Allies and the West German Republic, and well be laid before the Western foreign ministers this week end. This note invites the Soviet Union to meet this summer to discuss German unification. It should be said that it is not written with the idea that the Soviet Union is ready to negotiate sincerely to unify Germany. It is written in the opposite belief. It is an attempt to put Moscow on the defensive. It is described as an effort to get back the initiative which Moscow has seized with the negotiations of an Austrian treaty

The West knows, of course, that Moscow has proclaimed that it will not discuss the future of Germany if the German treaties are ratified. It is trying to make Moscow eat these words. It assumes that Moscow will have to back down and cannot refuse to meet and talk about unification. So far so good. A minor Western victory looks possible.

But suppose the Russians do sit down and talk, what then? Moscow is expected to be preparing to propose a deal by which it recognizes the Bonn government in return for the Western Powers recognizing East Germany. This process of mutual recognition will be put forward as a basis which makes unification easier to obtain, not harder. Already many Germans are softening toward this proposition.

But if the West recognizes East Germany, it gives the Communist regime an important part in drafting the terms of unification, and in administering any elections to be held. The West, of course, will insist on genuinely free elections. But if the East German communists have a hand in controlling them, they can hardly be free according to Western standards. Dr. Adenauer has always insisted that the East German regime cannot be recognized. But it is a paradox that this week, when Dr. Adneauer's policy has finally triumphed, his persuasiveness is already on the wane. The majority of Germans want unification more than they want anything else. They certainly want it more than they want to have an army that is incorporated in NATO. And the fact that Austria now looks forward to a future as a neautral state, uncommitted to either rival in the struggle for power, gives a good many Germans a similar aspiration.

The West knows this is a danger. But it figures that the Soviet Union will not pay the price of German unification if it means withdrawal from East Germany and a weakening of Soviet power all along the Iron Curtain. That may be so, but it is not certain. At any rate, the coming conference - if it comes - can hardly be called negotiating from strength.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON : COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In matters of diplomacy, time, patience and perseverance are qualities essential to all statesmen. Darwin Kingsley once remarked that "there are no limitations in what you can do except the limitations in your own mind as to what you can not do." Whether or not one is inclined to regard this as "practical" advice, Frank Vanderlip surely was right in concluding:"Nothing is settled until it is settled right."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Wednesday May 4, 1955

This is the news:

The President said today that no child will be deprived of the Salk anti-polio vaccine because of innability to pay. Mr. Eisenhower told reporters: before any youngsters suffer because their parents could not pay for the vaccine, he would consider having the federal government buy all of the available supply for free distribution through the states. The President still favors the voluntary plan of distribution despite some Congressional demands for compulsory federal controls. And he is confident that the Welfare Department's plan to provide the vaccine for all youngsters between the ages of five and nine by August first--will work.

The Public Health Service Reported today that the supplies of the vaccine have fallen nearly seven million doses behind estimates of a week ago. So far ten-and-a-half million doses have been approved for distribution. Another four million are being held back for more data.

Mr. Eisenhower was asked today about Mrs. Eisenhower's illness. The President said he thought this was a legitimate question. He said Mrs. Eisenhower is in good health despite a long battle with a virus infection. Her general health in the last two years has been better than the NORMAL average of her health over the past ten years. The President said his wife has an allergy to some of the medicines usually prescribed in virus attacks. And while she is not as robust and strong as some people, the President said Mrs. Eisenhower is a good healthy person.

On the matter of Formosa the President said: We've taken a sort of wait-and-see position with respect to talks with Red China...He has heard no suggestion that we establish a permanent military base on Formosa.. If the Communists should attack the off-shore islands of Quemoy and Matsu, the President said he would try to decide whether the attack was aimed exclusively at those islands or ultimately at Formosa itself. He pointed out that while the Communists have made it clear they are out to re-take Formosa they have not announced any intentions to conquer Quemoy and Matsu.

In answer to questions the President also told reporters: the Administration's flexible farm program is good legislation...It needs more time to prove itself. He emphatically favors a plan to create a new military manpower reserve...he never was consulted during the war on any post-war matters; therefore had nothing to do with the Yalta conference.

Nationalist China's Ambassador to Washington predicted today that in any talks with the United States, Red China will insist that we clear out of the Formosa area. ~~Dr. Wellington Koo said Quemoy and Matsu are "of secondary importance and even insignificance" to the Communists. And he fears the Communists have no intention to seek a peaceful settlement of the Formosa problem except on their own terms.~~

Today, Communist Mig fighters challenged Nationalist ~~plane~~ planes in the Matsu area for the first time. There ~~were~~ was no damage to the Nationalist planes.

In West Germany, the Constiutional Court ruled that the French-German agreement on the Saar is constiutional. And in West Germany tomorrow, as soon as the British and French deposit their treaties ratifying the Paris agreements, the West Germans will become an independent nation.

The ~~Soviet~~ COMMUNIST PARTY paper Pravda today severly criticized a wide range of Soviet government and ~~Soviet~~ party organizations: everything from the production of electric power, to potatoes. And ~~mm~~ the censors permit American reporters to cable that western observers in Moscow consider this "interesting and significant." That's because most of the farm production drive that was criticized has been sparked by Kruschchev, the first secretary of the Communist party.

In Vienna today, the Russians agreed to abandon their demand to include an article on refugee repatriation in the Austrian peace treaty. Informed sources say good progress was made at today's meeting of the Big Four ambassadors.

In Washington, the President's trade program survived its first floor tests. Republican Senator Malone's substitute plan was shouted down by a voice vote. Indications are that no drastic changes will be made.

Former President Hoover told the United States Chamber of Commerce that the federal budget "could be balanced overnight" if the views of his Commission on Government Organization are adopted in full. And Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia said the balance could be achieved in the year beginning July first through a four per cent cut in the budget proposed by the President.

Democratic governors meeting in Washington charged today that the Eisenhower Administration is guilty of complacency towards unemployment.... and neglect and indifference towards farmers. Michigan's governor Williams said dairy farmers in his state are "losing their shirts." New York's Governor Harriman said Republicans are talking about good businness "but its good business for Big Business." Mississippi's Governor White said that because of restrictions on cotton production "chaotic conditions have been brought about in the the farm life" of his state.

And a Birmingham jury today acquitted [redacted] Former Prosecuting Attorney Ferrell of the murder of a crime fighter in Pheonix City, Alabama. It took the jury 13 hours to decide that Ferrell was not guilty of the murder last June of A.L. Patterson, the Democratic nominee for attorney general who had vowed to rid the city of ~~[illegible]~~ racketeering.

Edward R. Murrow: May 4, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The crisis in South Vietnam is getting worse. Some seven hundred local and regional officials from all parts of the country came to Saigon today, trying to decide whether to oust Emperor Bao Dai, or whether just to oblige him to yield his powers to Premier Diem. They could decide to set up a constitutional monarchy with Bao Dai as merely a figurehead ruler. Bao Dai, who is still on the French Riviera, today asked Diem to disavow all action taken by what he termed "a seditious minority which is far from representing our people, and risks being carried away by the Communists." By which he apparently means the meeting in Saigon today.

In this confused situation a spokesman for our State Department said it's not true that we favor the establishment of a constitutional monarchy in free Vietnam. He said it's up to the Vietnamese to resolve their own problems and decide their own form of government. Nevertheless, Secretary of State Dulles is apparently still determined to keep Diem in office.

The French and Bao Dai claim that Premier Diem's so-called "revolutionary committee" has been infiltrated by the Communists. American authorities say privately that this is not true. So we have a four-cornered situation - Premier Diem and his supporters, Emperor Bao Dai, the French and the Americans. Apparently no two of the four can agree as to what should be done.

Today on the Riviera, Bao Dai conferred with Diem's brother in an effort to find a way out of the crisis, but nothing was settled. It is reasonably clear that the forces that want freedom in South Vietnam are disorganized, and that the only well-organized revolutionary apparatus in the country is the Communist-led Viet Minh. Premier Diem may fear that the Communists ~~may~~ will take over from the inside, for he continues to plead for Bao Dai's support.

My colleague David Schoenbrun has spent an hour-and-a-half with Bao Dai on the Riviera during the last two days. He reports that Bao Dai is not personally hostile to Diem, and wants to find a compromise acceptable to all parties, including the United States and France. The absent ~~Emperor~~ CHIEF OF STATE is not bitter that American policy prefers Diem to himself. He feels that the United States gave support to Diem hastily, put too much reliance on one man. Schoenbrun reports that Bao Dai insists on the importance of his royal position, which he says is the only juridical and moral answer to the Communist Ho Chi Minh's claim to be the rightful president of all Vietnam. He claims that Premier Diem has no mandate ~~upon~~ FROM the people. Bao Dai feels that as the sovereign he should not descend into the political arena, and involve himself in conflict with Diem. He wants to remain above the storm as the supreme arbiter. Bao Dai says he is trying to find a formula which will avoid facing Mr. Dulles with a choice between Diem and Bao Dai. But he wants at the same time to cut the ground from under the revolutionary committee, which he thinks represents just as grave a danger to Diem and the American interests as to Bao Dai and the French. It might be observed that the Riviera is not the ideal place for the cutting of such ground, but that's what Bao Dai says he's trying to do. # He is hoping for something like a high Council of State, limited to five or six top Vietnamese personalities, including Premier Diem. These men would then try to order the revolutionary committee to disband, offering amnesty and positions of power to those members who would rally to the new Council. The Council would then call on Bao Dai to come home, telling him he must transfer his absolute powers to the Council in order to create a constitutional monarchy. As Bao Dai sees it, this would be a fine solution for all concerned. # The United States wouldn't have to choose between Diem and Bao Dai. ~~Diem's~~ face would be saved, since he would remain as Premier until the change had been effected. His opponents would be satisfied, since Diem would no longer be a one-man ruler with supreme powers. Bao Dai would remain as the figurehead emperor, but he would be relieved of running his country's affairs, which he hasn't been doing anyway.

If Diem should proclaim a republic and ask for recognition, the French have threatened to pull out their troops and wash their hands of the whole mess. If this happens we will inherit the mess, will face the choice whether we will send in our own troops - whether we will take care of eight hundred thousand anti-communist refugees from the North, who are now being cared for by French forces - or whether we will abandon them to their fate. Unless some formula can be found to resolve this four-cornered conflict, Vietnam will be lost, and another considerable strain will have been put upon the Western Alliance.

The political situation in Vietnam is complicated by a number of factors, not the least of which is a struggle for power from within. And in this instance, at least, action and not words will be required. Of course, C.C. Colton pointed out a long time ago that "all too often we pay statesmen for what they say instead of what they do." But in the end, it's pretty much as Napoleon Bonaparte concluded: "The greatest orator in the world, he said, is success."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 4, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The President said today that no child will be deprived of the Salk anti-polio vaccine because of innability to pay. Mr. Fisenhower told reporters: before any youngsters suffer because their parents could not pay for the vaccine, he would consider having the federal government but all of the available supply for free distribution through the states. The President still favors the voluntary plan of distribution despite some Congressional demands for compulsory federal controls. And he is confident that the Welfare Department's plan to provide the vaccine for all youngsters between the ages of five and nine by August first --will work.

The Public Health Service Reported today that the supplies of the vaccine have fallen nearly seven million doses behind estimates of a week ago. So far ten-and-a-half million doses have been approved for distribution. Another four million are being held back for more data.

Mr. Eisenhower was asked today about Mrs. Eisenhower's illness. The President said he thought this was a legitimate question. He said Mrs. Eisenhower is in good health despite a long battle with a virus infection. Her general health in the last two years has been better than the general average of her health over the past ten years. The President said his wife has an allergy to some of the medicines usually prescribed in virus attacks. And while she is not as robust ans strong as some people, the President said Mrs. Eisenhower is a good healthy person.

On the matter of Formosa the President said: We've taken a sort of wait-and-see position with respect to talks with Red China..He has heard no suggestion that we establish a permanent military base on Formosa..If the Communists should attack the off-shore islands of Quemoy and Matsu, the President said we would try to decide whether the attack was aimed exclusively at those islands or ultimately at Formosa itself. H e pointed out that while the Communists have made it clear they are out to re-take Formosa they have not announced any intentions to conquer Quemoy and Matsu.

In answer to questions the President also told reporters: The Administration's flexible farm program is good legislation...It needs more time to prove itself..He emphatically favors a plan to create a new military manpower reserve...he never was consulted during the war on any post-war matters; therefore had nothing to do with the Yalta conference.

Nationalist China's Ambassador to Washington predicted today that in any talks with the United States, Red China will insist that we clear out of the Formosa area.

Today, Communist Mig fighters challenged Nationalist planes in the Matsu area for the first time. There was no damage to the Nationalist planes.

In West Germany, the Constitutional Court ruled that the French-German agreement on the Saar is constitutional. And in West Germany tomorrow, as soon as the British and French deposit their treaties ratifying the Paris agreements, th West Germans will become an independent nation.

The Communist Party paper, "Pravda", today severly criticized a wide range of Soviet government and party organizations: everything from the production of electric power to potatoes. And the censors permit American reporters to cable that western observers in Moscow consider this "interesting and significant." That's because most of the farm production drive that was criticized has been sparked by Kruschev, the first secretary of the Communist Party.

In Vienna today, the Russians agreed to abandon their demand to include an article on refugee repatriation in the Austrian peace treaty. Informed sources say good progress was made at today's meeting of the Big Four ambassadors.

In Washington, the President's trade program survived its first floor tests. Republican Senator Malone's substitute plan was shouted down by a voice vote. Indications are that no drastic changes will be made.

Former President Hovover told the United States Chamber of Commerce that the federal budget "could be balanced overnight" if the views of his Commission of Government Organization are adopted in full. And Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia said the balance could be achieved in the year beginning July first through a four per cent cut in the budget proposed by the President.

Democratic governors meeting in Washington charged today that the Eisenhower Adminiatration is guilty ofcomplacency towards unemployment...and neglect and indifference toward farmers. Michigan's governor Williams said dairy farmers in his state are "losing their shirts." New York's Governor Harriman said Republicans are talking about good business "but its good business for Big Business." Mississippi's Governor White said that because of restrictions on cotton production "chaotic conditions have been brought about in the farm life" of his state.

And a Birmingham jury today acquitted Former Prosecuting Attorney Ferrell of the murder of a crime fighter in Phoenix City, Alabama. It took the jury 13 hours to decide that Ferrell was not guilty of the murder last June of A. L. Patterson, the Democratic nominee for attorney general who had vowed to rid the city of racketeering.

The crisis in South Vietnam is getting worse. Some seven hundred local and regional officials from all parts of the country came to Saigon today, trying to decide whether to oust Emperor Bao Dai, or whether just to oblige him to yield his pweers to Premier Diem. They could decide to set up a constitutional monarchy with Bao Dai as merely a figurehead ruler. Bao Dai, who is still on the French Reviera, today asked Diem to disavow all action taken by what he termed "a seditious minority which is far from representing our people, and risks being carried away by the Communists." By which he apparently means the meeting in Saigon today.

In this confused situation a spokesman for our State Department said it's not true that we favor the establishemnt of a constititional monarchy in free Vietnam. He said it's up to the Vietnamese to resolve their own problems and decide theor own form of government. Nevertheless, Secretary of State Dulles is apparently still determined to keep Diem in office.

The French and Bao Dai claim that Premier Diem's so called "revolutionary committee" has been infiltrated by the communists. American authorities say privately that this is not true. So we have a four cornered situation Premier Diem and his supporters, Emperor Bai Dai, the French and the Americans. Apparently no two of the four can agree as to what should be done.

Today on the Riviera, Bao Dai conferred with Diem's brother, in an effort to find a way out of the crisis, but nothing was settled. It is reasonably clear that the forces that want freedom in South Vietnam are disorganized, and that the only well-organized revolutionary apparatus in the country is the Communist-led Viet Minh. Premier Diem may fear that the Communists will take over from the inside, for he continues to plead for Bao-Dai's support.

My colleague David Schoenbrun has spend an hour-and-a-half with Bao Dai on the Riviera during the last two days. He reports that Bao-Dai is not personally hostile to Diem, and wants to find a compromise acceptable to all parties, including the United States and France. The absent Chief of State is not bitter that American policy prefers Deim to himself. He feels that the United States gave support to Diem hastily, put too much reliance on one man. Schoenbrun reports that Bao Dai insists on the importance of his royal position, which he says is the only juridical and moral answer to the Communist Ho Chi Minh's claim to be the rightful president of all Vietnam. He claims that Premier Diem has no mandate from the people. Bao Dai feels that as the soverign, he should not descend into the political arena, and involve himself in conflict with Diem. He wants to remain above the storm as the supreme arbiter. Bao Dai says he is trying to find a formula which willavoid facing Mr. Dulles with a choice between Diem and Bao Dai. But he wants at the same time to cut the ground from under the revolutionary committee, which he things represents just as grave a danger to Diem and the American interests as Bao Dai and the French. It might be observed that the Riviera is not the idealplace for the cutting of such ground, but that's what Bao Dai says he's trying to do.

He is hoping for something like a high Council of State, limited to five or six top Vietnamese personalities, including Premier Diem. These men would then try to order the revolutionary committee to disband, offering amnesty and positions of power to those members who would rally to the new council. The council would then call on Bao Dai to come home, telling him he must transfer his absolute powers to the Council in order to create a constitutional monarchy. As Bao Dai sees it, this would be a fine solution for all concerned.

The United States wouldn't have to choose between Diem and Bao Dai. Diem's face would be saved, since he would remain as Premier until the change had been effected. His opponents sould be satisfied, since Diem would no longer be a one-man ruler with supreme powers. Bao Dai would remain as the figurehead emperor, but he would be relieved of running his country's affairs, which he hasn't been doing anyway.

If Diem should proclaim a republic and ask for recognition, the French have threatened to pull out their troops and wash their hands of the whole mess. If this happens we will inherit the mess, will face the choice whether we will send in our own troops - whether we will take care of eight hundred thousand anti-Communist refugees from the North, who are now being cared for by the French forces - or whether we will abandon them to their fate. Unless some formula can be found to resolve this four-cornered conflict, Vietnam will be lost, and another considerable strain will have been put upon the Western Alliance.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The political situation of Vietnam is complicated by a number of factors, not the least of which is a struggle for power from within. And in this instance, at least, action and not words will be required. Of course, C.C. Colton pointed out a long time ago that "all too often we pay statesmen for what they say instead of what they do." But in the end, it's pretty much as Napoleon Bonaparte concluded: "The greatest orator in the world," he said, "is success."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday, May 5, 1955

This is the news:

The West German Republic today became a soverign state. And Chancellor Adenauer's government, representing 50 million Germans, made it clear that the end of ten years of allied occupation is clouded only by the fact that 18-million Germans in the Soviet zone are still not free. [We'll have a report from Germany in a few minutes.]

The Moscow radio says today's historic event means "the Bonn revenge seekers now have received permission to re-arm."

And Secretary of State Dulles says: today marks the death knell of Russia's attempt to keep West Germany out of the west European defense system. He feels that West Germany's entry into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization "brings nearer the unification of Germany"... although he did not explain this. Dulles points out that Soviet policy towards Germany has failed.. they must now find a new policy and put the best face they can on the old one to cover up its failure.

In Vienna today, the four ambassadors working out an Austrian peace treaty again report good progress. But the western delegates and the Russians are split over the future of American and British-developed oil fields which are now under Soviet control in East Austria.

Viet Nam's chief of state, Bao Dai, made it known today that he will leave his Riviera villa tomorrow for Paris. He intends to make a personal appeal to the western powers to maintain his status as chief of state. In Saigon today, two Congresses moved to strip Bao Dai of all his powers. A four-thousand-man "National Congress" (declared) by acclamation that Bao Dai's rule has ended. And a congress of 700 local and provincial councilors and tribal chiefs demanded that the chief of (STATE'S) powers be given to Premier Diem who is supported by the United States. This group would leave it to the National Assembly to depose Bao Dai. Both congresses called for national elections within four to six months to chose a national assembly (AND) set up a workable government.

The Chinese Communists today carried out one of their heaviest shellings of the year against the Quemoys. The Nationalists say that Red artillery fired 150 rounds on little Quemoy from Amoy..which is four miles away.

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles (TOLD) the Senate Foreign Relations Committee he finds "a certain sense of encouragement" in the general world situation. He says its based on "a series of small but perhaps significant signs." He feels that "the time may be nearing when those who have been seeking the conquest of freedom will in fact put (THEIR) foreign relations on a more tolerable basis." Mr. Dulles also told the Senators that he sees no early end to our mutual security program of grants and loans to friendly nations. He thinks we will have a program of this type "for a considerable length of time." And even if the program is halted suddenly, Mr. Dulles says it will take about two years for the pipelines to dry up..to deliver the tanks and guns and military aid orders but not yet off the assembly line. The Secretary says (THE) price we are paying for the aid program is "reasonable when measured in terms of attainable results."

Dag Hammershuld, the secretary-general of the United Nations, said today that he feels a peace "challenge in the air." And he disclosed that new negotiations have been started with the Chinese Communists on the release of American flyers jailed as spies. He would not disclose any details.

The Public Health Service reports eight new cases of polio among persons innoculated with the Salk vaccine. That makes a total of 41 confirmed cases. In all, the states reported a total of 147 new polio cases last week...20 per cent more than were listed for the same week in 1954. The National Foundation For Infantile Paralysis today authorized the immediate shipment of more than a million shots of THE vaccine to 12 states, Alaska, the Panama Canal Zone and certain Indian reservations. Until today no vaccine had gone to these areas for the school children's innoculation program. Two states... New York and Washington..have asked the Foundation to delay their shipments.

The House today voted for a return of the Truman policy of supporting basic farm crops at 90 per cent of the parity price. The vote was 206 to 201. This victory of House democrats may not be a permanent one. Its uncertain that the Senate will consider any farm legislation this year. And even if the Congress decided to abandon the present system of flexible supports the President would probably veto the bill.

The long-delayed atomic explosion test in Nevada was carried out today. But there are no reports yet on what happened to "Survival City".. the civil defense test town.

In Washington administration officials said the President's proposed atomic-powered merchant ship can be built in two years..at a cost of 30 to 35 million dollars. But Republican Representative Cole of New York thinks it would be "a phantom ship and a waste of money." And Chairman Price of an atomic energy subcommittee, thinks it might be better for the Administration to give the idea more thought.

The Defense Department discloses that the McDonnel Aircraft Corporation of St. Louis has now built an aircraft that can be converted in flight from a helicopter to an airplane and back to a helicopter again.

And seven western states today had a air raid alert.. by mistake. The air force blames it on a delay in properly identifying American bombers flying in from the Pacific.

And now, from West Germany, a recorded report by my colleague Dick Hottelet:

(runs 4;45..cue: Now back ERM in NY)

In Washington today the Senate voted unanimously to give all ex-presidents a 22-thousand 500dollar pension..with special office space.. a staff of assistants and free mailing privileges.

The bill also provides a pension of 10-thousand dollars a year for the widows of presidents.

For those who might argue tonite that West Germany should not have been granted sovereignity, these words from Thomas Macauley would seem appropriate:"Many politicians lay it down as a self-evident proposition, he said, that no people ought to be free until they are fit to use their freedom. But this maxim is worthy of the fool in the old story who had resolved not to go into the water till he had learned to swim."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, May 5, 1955
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: ..... And, now, from West Germany a recorded report by my colleague, Dick Hottelet.

HOTTELET: West Germany today received its sovereignty soberly and without elation. This is not the German Fourth of July. It is more like graduation day. Joy is well-tempered by the thoughts of the problems and responsibilities that lie ahead. The word "historic" tends to be overworked, but this has been an historic day in the real sense of the word. The ceremonies began this morning at ten o'clock with a meeting of the allied High Commission. This body has been the supreme authority in West Germany since September 1949. It has ruled under anoccupation statute and its authority stems from the unconditional surrender of Germany ten years ago. Today, the allied High Commission met for the last time and issued a brief proclamation, revoking the occupation statute and abolishing itself. That was all there was to it, just a small group of men in dark suits or striped pants in a conference room of what has now become the American Embassy.

When themeeting was finished both the actors and the audience quietly disbanded. No German spectators had come to watch them drive up, none were there when they left. At noon the same changed to Chancellor Adenauer's office. Again, the only people present were high officials and correspondents. The Chancellor and the newly-converted British and French Ambassadors sat down at two little tables under a crystal chandelier in the middle of the big Cabinet room. From two minutes to twelve until three minutes after twelve the sound of history was the scratching of pens and the whirring of cameras. The bound volumes of two of the Paris treaties were handed across the table. Germany and France exchanged letters on the Saar. At this NX moment West Germany became a sovereign state and the occupation forces became its guests. The moment passed,the actors again quietly rose and walked out.

Thenext act opened in Parliament, down the street, and here for the first time there was more than formal ceremony. Chancellor Adenauer had planned to appear before the Bundestag himself and announce German sovereignty, but Under the Bundestag rules a statement by the Chancellor may be followed by debate and the Social Democrats were waiting for a chance to attack him and his policy and particularly this occasion, so, the President of the Bundestag, Hermann Gerstenmaier, made the announcement - the Federal Republic of Germany is now sovereign. He was applauded only from the Government benches and then he went on to express thoughts that were really in everyone's minds today. Even though the occupation was not oppressive, he said, we are conscious of the meaning ofthis hour. We must remember that the Bundestag now assumes responsibility morepressing and direct. We must do everything to achieve reunification. We are united in this hour with all Germans in hope and prayer that the hour of freedom may strike for all Germany in a peaceful world.

And Socialist opposition leader, Erich Ollenauer, followed to say that today was no cause to celebrate, that NATO and the treaties seriously limit German freedom of action. He said that unity must remain the primary goal of German policy. The Government had not called upon the people to celebrate this day, but little observances were held in federal offices. Flags were raised on Government buildings and at his own small ceremony Chancellor Adenauer read a proclamation to the German people. In it he declared there is only place for us in the world, at the side of the free peoples. Our goal is a free and united Germany in a free and united Europe. A small brass band oompahed its way through thenational anthem, a platoon of border police, thirty strong, presented arms, and that was that. Outside the main gate stood a hundred and fifty curious spectators, some of whom did not know what was going on.

This evening, the new Ambassadors presented their credentials to President Theodor Heuss, except for the American. Although the United States has worked for this day with all its might for the past five years,the Senate did not get around to confirming the appointment of James Bryant Conant. All he presented tonight was his good wishes. They are no unimportant. Maybe they're worth more than credentials to those Germans who have fought (?) over this historic date. For them, it is less the end of an era than the beginning of one, a new era with all the old problems and all the old dangers (? ? ?) except more urgent.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The West German Republic today became a soverign state. And Chancellor Adenauer's government, representing 50 million Germans, made it clear that the end of ten years of allied occupation is clouded only by the fact that 18-million Germans in the Soviet zone are still not free. We'll have a report from Germany in a few minutes.

The Moscow radio says today's historic event means "the Bonn revenge seekers now have received permission to re-arm."

And Secretary of State Dulles says: today marks the death knell of Russia's attempt to keep West Germany out of the west European defense system. He feels that West Germay's entry into the North Atlantic treaty Organization "brings nearer the unification of Germany"...although he did not explain this. Dulles points out that Soviet policy towards Germany has failed..they must now fine a new policy and put the best face they can on the old one to cover up its failure.

In Vienna today, the four ambassadors working out an Austrian peace treaty again report good progress. But the western delegates and the Russians are split over the future of American and British developed oil fields which are now under Soviet control in East Austria.

Vietnam's chief of state Bao Dai, made it known today that he will leave his Riviera villa tomorrow for Paris. He intends to make a personal appeal to the Western powers to maintain his status as chief of state. In Saigon today, two Congressms moved to strip Bao Dai of all his powers. A four thousand-man "National Congress" declared by acclamation that Bao Dai's rule has ended. And a congress of 700 local and provincial councilors and tribal chiefs demanded that the chief of state's powers be given to Premier Diem who is supported by the United States. This group would leave it to the National Assembly to depose Bao Dai. Both congresses called for national elections within four to six months to chose a national assembly and set up a workable government.

The Chinese Communists today carried out one of their heaviest shellings of the year against the Quemoys. The Nationalists say that Red artillery fired 150 rounds on the little Quemoy from Amoy..which is four miles away.

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee he finds "a certain sense of encouragement in the general world situation. He says it's based on "a series of small but but perhaps significant signs." He feels that"the time may be nearing when those who have been seeking the conquest of freedom will in fact put their foreign relations in a more tolerable basis." Mr. Dulles also told the Senators that he sees no early end to our mutual security program of grants and loans to friendly nations. He thinks we will have a program of this type "for a considerable length of time." And even if the program is halted suddenly, Mr. Dulles says it will take about two years for the pipelines to try up ..to deliver the tanks and guns and military aid ordered but not yet off the assembly line. The Secretary says the price we are paying for the aid program is "reasonable when measured in terms of attainable results."

Dag Hammerskjold, the secretary-general of the United Nations, said today that he feels a peace "challenge in the air." And he discloses that new negotiations have been started with the Chinese Communists on the release of American flyers jailed as spies. He would not disclose any details.

The Public Health Service reports eight new cases of polio among persons innoculated with the Salk vaccine. That makes a total of 41 confirmed cases.

In all, the states reported a total of 147 new polio cases last week..20 per cent more than were listed for the same week in 1954. The National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis today authorized the immediate shipments of more than a million shots of the vaccine to 12 states, Alaska, the Panama Canal Zone and certain Indian reservations. Until today no vaccine had gone to these areas for the school children's innoculation program. Two states..New York and Washington..have asked the Foundation to delay their shipments.

The House today voted for a return of the Truman policy of supporting basic farm crops at 90 per cent of parity price. The vote was 206 to 201. This victory of House Democrats may not be a permanent one. Its uncertain that the Senate will consider any farm legislation this year. And even if the Congress decided to abandon the present system of flexibe supports the President would probably veto the bill.

The long delayed atomic explosion test in Nevada was carried out today. But there are no reports yet on what happened to "Survival City"..the civil defense test town.

In Washington administration officials said the President's proposed atomic - powered merchant ship can be built in two years...at a cost of 10 to 35 million dollars. But Republican Representative Cole of New York thinks it would be "a phantom ship and a waste of money." And Chairman Price of an atomic energy subcommittee, thinks it might be better for the Administration to give the idea more thought.

The Defense Department discloses that the McDonnel Aircraft Corporation of St. Louis has now build an aircraft than can be converted in flight from a helicopter to an airplane and back to a helicotter again.

And seven western states today had an air raid alert..by mistake. The air force blames it on a delay improperly identifying American bombers flying in from the Pacific.

And now, from West Germany, a recorded report by my colleague, Dick Hottelet.

HOTTELET: West Germany today received its soverignty soberly and without elation. This is not the German Fourth of July. It is more like a graduation day. Joy is well-tempered by the thoughts of the problems and responsibilities that lie ahead. The word "historic" tends to be overworked, but this has been an historic day in the real sense of the word. The ceremonies began this morning at ten o'clock with a meeting of the allied High Commission. This body has been the supreme authority in West Germany since September 1949. It has ruled under an occupation statute and its authority stems from the unconditional surrender of Germany ten years ago. Today, the allied High Commission met for the last time and issued a brief proclamation, revoking the occupation statute and abolishing itself. That was all there was to it, just a small group of men in dark suits or striped pants in a conference room of what has now become the American Embassy.

When the meeting was finished both the actors and audience quietly disbanded. No German spectators had come to watch them drive up, none were there when they left. At noon the scene changed to Chancellor Adenauer's office. Again, the only people present were high officials and correspondents. The Chancellor and the newly-converted British and French Ambassadors sat down at two little tables under a crystal chandelier in the middle of the big Cabinet room. From two minutes to twelve until three minutes after twelve the sound of history was the scratching of pens and the whirring of cameras. The bound volumes of two of the Paris treaties were handed across the table. Germany and France exchanged letters on the Saar. At this moment West Germany became a soverign state and the occupation forces became its guests. The moment passed, and the actors again quietly rose and walked out.

The next act opened in Parliament down the street, and here for the first time there was more than formal ceremony. Chancellor Adenauer had planned to appear before the Bundestag himself and announce German soveright, but under Bundestag rules a statement by the Chancellor may be followed by debate and the Social Democrats were waiting for a chance to attack him and his policy and particularly this occasion, so, the President of the Bundestag, Herman Gerstenmaier, made the announcement - the Federal Republic of Germany is now soverign. He was applauded only from the government benches and then he went on to express thoughts what were really in everyone's minds today. Even though the occupation was not oppressive, he said, we are conscious of the meaning of this hour. We must remember that the Bundestag now assumes responsibility more pressing and direct. We must do everything to achieve reunification. We are united in this hour with all Germany in hope and prayer that the hour of freedom may strike for all Germany in a peaceful world.

And Socialist opposition leader, Erlich Ollenauer, followed to say that today was no cause to celebrate, that NATO and the treaties seriously limit German freedom of action. He said that unity must remain the primary goal of German policy. The Government had not called upon the people to celebrate this day, but little observances were held of federal offices. Flags were raised on Government buildings and at his own small ceremony Chancellor Adenauer reada proclamation to the German people. In it he declared there is only peace for us in the world, at the side of the free peoples. Our goal is a free and united Germany in a free and united Europe. A small brass band oompahed its way through the national anthem, a platoon of border police, thirty strong, presented arms, and that was that. Outside the main gate stood a hundred and fifty curious spectators, some of whom did not know what was going on.

This evening, the new Ambassadors presented their credentials to President Theodor Heuss, except for the American. Although the United States has worked for this day with all its might for the past five years, the Senate did not get around to confirming the appointment of James Bryant Conant. All he presented tonight was his good wishes. They are not unimportant. Maybe they're worth more than credentials to those Germans who have fought over this historic date. For them, it is less the end of an era than the beginning of one, a new era with all the old problems and all the old dangers except more urgent.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In Washington today the Senate voted unanimously to give all ex-presidents a 22-thousand 500 dollar pension..with special office space..a staff of assistants and free mailing privileges.

The bill also provides a pension of 10-thousand dollars a year for the widows of presidents.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: For those who might argue tonight that West Germany should not have been granted soverignty, these words from Thomas Macauley would seem apporpriate:"Many politicians lay it down as a self-evident proposition, he said, that no people ought to be free until they are fit to use their freedom." But this maxim is worthy of the fool in the old story who had resolved not to go into the water until he had learned to swim."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Friday May 6, 1955

This is the news:

The government has stopped approving any anti-polio vaccine. But Surgeon General Scheele told a House committee this does not mean that the vaccine is under suspicion. He's confident it's excellent. The government merely wants to be certain that it is using every conceivable safeguard. And so all approval has been withheld while a group of scientists, meeting in Washington this week, decides what to do next. Dr. Sheele is confident that government inspections will be [redacted] resumed in a few days. He stresses that there is no cause for alarm. Innoculations should proceed with supplies already cleared. Dr. Scheele says that despite 44 cases of polio reported among children who have had their first "shot" there is no cause for alarm when one remembers that from four to six million youngsters have had the first shot. [redacted] Dr. Scheele says none of the 44 children who have polio is known to be ill because of the vaccine. The manufacturing of the vaccine is continuing. New production will be held in storage until the government decides whether more thorough tests should be made [redacted] before it is released.

Dr. Salk, one of the scientists attending the Washington conference, says the group is studying all aspects of the problem created by the withdrawal of the Cutter vaccine. He urged studies "on all aspects of this problem" from the beginning.

The government reported today that employment rose by a record one and a quarter million jobs from early March to early April. And the number of jobless in the country decreased by 200-thousand persons to under 3-million.

Germany today officially became the 15th member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. And Secretary of State Dulles, before flying to Paris, said: "A new Europe, united, free and secure" is assured with Germany's entrance into NATO. Mr. Dulles said that if the talks now under way on an Austrian treaty end successfully, he'll fly to Vienna from Paris to sign that document.

The ambassadors negotiating the Austrian treaty report that they have made considerable progress this week. And as they recessed until Monday, the British [redacted] made it clear that they fully expect an agreement from the Russians..that all of their doubts have been dissipated. The extent of the concessions made by the Russians is said to exceed anything the British expected.

The State Department made it known today, that we have great sympathy for ANY Nationalist course in south Viet Nam, "which is free and effective." We are still supporting Premier Diem. Although the State department spokesman would not interpret this, other officials says its designed to imply that we are ready to support Diem, if he renounces Bao Dai, the chief of state, and sets up a Republic.

~~Dispatches from Saigon quoted a high government informant as saying that Viet Nam will be proclaimed a Republic in its assured of the backing of Washington, London and Paris.~~

The Chinese Nationalists say they have now PLANTED mines in waters close to Red China..to halt any invasion moves directed against the Nationalist-held off-shore islands...and to choke off shipping to the port of Foochow.

Foreign correspondents on Formosa have registered complaints with the Nationalist government, and the American Military Assistance Group. The correspondents say they don't have a minimum working relationship with the Americans. And they say, the Chinese are withholding from them virtually all information.

In Washington, John B. Hollister, named by the President to be the new foreign aid chief, conferred with Mr. Eisenhower and then told reporters: the mutual security program must continue for peace and security reasons.

Out in Survival City, Nevada, the experts are now evaluating the effects of yesterday's atomic explosion. Harold Goodwin, the atomic test chief of the Civil Defense Administration, says the results show that all residents of the town, within one mile of the explosion, probably would have been killed by falling debris and radiation. Goodwin says that farther out, the primary injuries would have been ruptured ear drums caused by the force of the explosion. There was a good deal of evidence that outside the one mile ring, survival would have been possible for families living in the right kind of house with the right kind of shelter.

In the 54-day-old strike against the Lousiville and Nashville railroad, one striker is dead in Tennessee and another seriously wounded in Kentucky. The striking ten non-operating railroad unions have withdrawn their offer to arbitrate the 14-state dispute because of the shootings.

Edward R. Murrow: May 6, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The meeting of the NATO ministers in Paris tomorrow brings the foreign secretaries of the fifteen NATO governments together, just as a page is turned in contemporary history. The West German Republic is now a NATO member, and in so becoming, a long season of danger and anxiety has come to an end. Now a new page in history waits to be written. It is not likely to bear much resemblance to the one that has been turned. It begins with this Paris meeting. Here an important question has to be faced, even if it can't be answered at once. It is the question: where do we go from here?

Secretary Dulles, testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday, put his finger on what is new in the present situation. There is an air of expectancy in the world, he said, and "the time may be nearing when those who have been seeking the conquest of freedom will in fact put their foreign relations on a more tolerable basis." He thought that Soviet willingness to sign an Austrian treaty "may be indicative of a change of mood which may extend to other areas." Mr. Dulles recognized that the Communists may be engaged in no more than a temporary retreat, but he said he was encouraged because their tactics suggest "that they realize that the free world is in fact strong, and that they have given up some of the courses they once selected."

Obviously this is a situation that calls for a co-ordinated Western strategy. And at the NATO meeting a new experiment may be tried in managing a coalition. This will be to give all its members more to say about the policies of the great powers that have been dominating it. The idea is that since all members are obligated to help each other, they should be consulted about policies that might involve them in heavy sacrifices. At the forthcoming Paris meeting an attempt is to be made to agree on an outline of a common Western attitude. This means an attitude not only about European affairs, but affairs in the Middle and Far East. The aim is to develop NATO into something more than a defensive alliance, by giving it a guiding doctrine or political philosophy.

No great formal change could come from such an experiment. It doesn't mean, for instance, that the little nations in NATO would expect to exercise a veto on the policies of the big ones. But they want a chance to discuss them, and that means a chance to criticize them. The Big Three still would be the Big Three, and each of them still would keep the right to run its own foreign policy. But Western solidarity is now becoming a factor of supreme importance. In the negotiations with the Communists that lie ahead, Western solidarity may prove to be the decisive factor. The Communists know that if they can divide the West, they can out-maneuver the West. And if the West is to remain united, there will have to be greater mutual understanding than exists at present. And this understanding has to embrace the regions outside Europe, since whatever happens anywhere, can end by requiring action in Europe, too.

Secretary Dulles, in presenting his version of the new state of affairs, was arguing for a continuance of foreign aid, and he even said that it had been the foreign aid program that had brought about the change of the Communist attitude. What he appeared to be saying was that the Communists were being awed by Western power into making one-sided concessions.

It will be a surprise if he finds that other NATO foreign ministers are ready to accept such a description. Most Europeans believe that the world is coming into a season of tight and tough negotiations, and while they are confident that the Communists have decided to make some concessions, they are just as sure that concessions will have to be made by the West. The general European view is that the cold war has reached a point of great danger, but also a point where tensions can be reduced by negotiations. But negotiations presuppose a willingness on both sides to yield something.

The cold war hasn't been a unilateral affair. Both sides have fought it with ardor. And if it is to be abated, both sides would have to contribute something.

But this is not the way Washington is presenting the new state of affairs. For example, the offer of Chou En-lai to negotiate with the United States is being treated as something that can be dealt with by a mere exchange of notes. That would be a convenient way of leaving the Nationalists out of the discussion. But most Asians are sure that Chou En-lai will not settle for anything that does not give him, at the very least, the demilitarization of the offshore islands. And most Europeans, while seeing we have a case for keeping Formosa in friendly hands and defending it against aggression, believe the Communists have a right to the offshore islands. And if our Allies speak out at the Paris meeting, they are more likely to say this than to quote what Mr. Dulles told the Foreign Relations Committee.

No one can expect Washington to lay its cards on the table at this stage. It probably isn't sure as yet what cards it cares to play. It is early in the game - if it can be called a game - and a government has the right to feel its way. But it does not prepare for the tests ahead if the public is led to expect tensions to be relaxed simply by the Communists making concessions without any quid pro quo. That millenium has not arrived.

Tomorrow marks the 81st running of the most colorful of all horse races - the Kentucky Derby. For husbands betting on the outcome, these words from the Englishman John Ray would seem appropriate: "It's a good horse that never stumbles and a good wife that never grumbles." And if you don't happen to pick the winner and are looking for a quick explanation, Thomas Jefferson can back up your claim that "victory and defeat are each of the same price."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 6, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The government has stopped approving any anti-polio vaccine. But Surgeon General Scheeley told a House committee this does not mean that the vaccine is under suspicion. He's confident its excellent. The government merely wants to be certain that it is using every conceivable safeguard. And so, all approval has been withheld while a group of scientists, meeting in Washington this week, decides what to do next. Dr. Scheeley is confident that government inspections will be resumed in a few days. He stresses there is no cause for alarm. Innoculations should proceed with supplies already cleared. Dr. Scheeley says that despite 44 cases of polio reported among children who have had their first "shot" there is no cause for alarm when one remembers that from four to six million youngsters have had the first shot. Dr. Scheeley says none of the 44 children who have polio is known to be ill because of the vaccine. The manufacturing of the vaccine is continuing. New production will be held in storage until the government decides whetheer more thorough tests should be made before it is released.

Dr. Salk, one of the scientists attending the Washington conference, says the group is studying all aspects of the problem created by the withdrawal of the Cutter vaccine. He urged sutdies "on all aspects" of this problem" from the beginning.

The government reported today that employment rose by a record one and a quarter million jobs from early March to early April, And the number of jobless in the country decreased by 200-thousand persons to under 3 million,

Germany today officially became the 15th member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. And Secretary of State Dulles, before flying to Paris, said: "A new Europe, united, free and secure" is assured with Germany's entrance into NATO. Mr. Dulles said that if the talks now under way on an Austrian treaty and successfully, he'll fly to Vienna from Paris to sign that document.

The ambassadors negotiating the Austrian treaty report that they have made considerable progress this week. And as they recessed until Monday, the British made it clear that they fully expect an agreement from the Russians.. that all of their doubts have been dissipated. The extent of the concessions made by the Russians is said to exceed anything the British expected.

The State Department made it known today that we have great sympathy for any Nationalist course in south VietNam, "which is free and effective." We are still supporting Premier Dien. Although the State department spokesman would not interpret this, other officials say it is designed to imply that we are ready to support Diem if he renounced Bao Dai, the chief of state, and sets up a Republic.

The Chinese Nationalists say thay have now planted mines in waters close to Red China..to halt any invasion moves directed against the Nationalist - helf off-shore islands...and to choke off shipping to the port of Foochow.

Foreign correspondents on Formosa have registered complaints with the Nationalist government and the American Military Assistance Group. The correspondents say they don't have a minimum working relationship with the Americans. And they say the Chinese are withholding from them virtually all information.

In Washington, John B. Holisster, named th the President to be the new foreign aid chief, conferred with Mr. Eisenhower and then told reporters: the mutual security program must continue for peace and security reasons.

Out in Survival City, Nevada, the experts are now evaluating the effects of yesterday'a atomic explosion. Harold Goodwin, the atomic test chief of the Civil Defense Administration, says the results show that all residents of the town, within one mile of the explosion, probably would have been killed by falling debris and radiation. Goodwin says that farther out, the primary injuries would have been ruptured ear drums caused by the force of the explosion. There was a good deal of evidence that outside the one mile ring, survival would have been possible for families living in the right kind of house with the right kind of shelter.

In the 54-day-old strike against the Louisville and Nashville railroad, one striker is dead in Tennessee and another seriously wounded in Kentucky. the striking ten non-operating railroad unions have withdrawn their offer to arbitrate the 14 - state dispute because of the shootings.

The meeting of the NATO ministers in Paris tomorrow brings the foreign secretaries of the fifteen NATO governments together, just as a page is turned in contemporary history. The West German Republic is now a NATO member, and in so becoming, a long season of danger and anxiety has come to an end. Now a new page in history waits to be written. It is not likely to bear much resemblence to the one that has been turned. It begins with this Paris meeting. Here an important question has to be faced, even if it can't be answered at once. It is the question: where do we go from here?

Secretary Dulles, testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday, put his finger on what is new in the present situation.

There is an air of expectancy in the world, he said, and "the time may be nearing when those who have been seeking the conquest of freedom will in fact put their foreign relations on a more tolerable basis." He thought that Soviet willingness to sign an Austrian treaty "may be indicative of a change of mood which may extend to other areas." Mr. Dulles recognised that the Communists may be engaged in no more than a temporary retreat, but he said he was encouraged because their tactics suggest "that they realize that the free world is in fact strong, and that they have given up some of the courses they once selected."

Obviously this is a situation that calls for a co-ordinated Western strategy. And at the NATO meeting a new experiment may be tried in managing a coalition. This will be to give all its members more tosay about the policies of the great powers that have been dominating it. The idea is that since all members are obliged to help each other, they should be consulted about policies that might involve them in heavy sacrifices. At the forthcoming Paris meeting an attempt is to be made to agree on an outline of a common Western attitude This means an attitude not only about European affairs, but affairs in the Middle and Far East. The aim is to develop NATO into something more than a defensive alliance, by giving it a guiding doctrine or political philosophy.

No great formal change could come from such an experiment. It doesn't mean, for instance, that the little nations in NATO would expect to exercise a veto on the policies of the big ones. But they want a change to discuss them, and that means a chance to criticize them. The Big Three still would be the Big Three, and each of them still would keep the right to run its own foreign policy. But Western solidarity is now becoming a factor of supreme importance. In the negotiations with the Communists that lie ahead, Western solidarity may prove to be the decisive factor. The Communists know that if they can divide the West, they can out-maneuver the West, And if the West is to remain united, there will have to be greater mutual understanding than exists at present. And this understanding has to embrace the regions outside Europe, since whatever happens anywhere, can end by requiring action in Europe, too.

Secretary Dulles, in presenting his version of the new state of affairs was arguing for a continuance of foreign aid, and he even said that it had been the foreign aid program that had brought about the change of the Communist attitude. What he appeared to be saying was that the Communists were being awed by Western power into making one-sided concessions.

It will be a surprise if he finds that other NATO foreign ministers are ready to accept such a description. Most Europeans believe that the world is coming into a season of tight and tough negotiations, and while they are confident that the Communists have decided to make some concessions, they are just as sure that concessions will have to me made by the West. The general European view is that the cold war has reached a point of great danger, but also a point where tensions can be reduced by negotiations. But negotiations presuppose a willingness on both sides to yield something. The cold war hasn't been a unilateral affair. Both sides have fought it with ardor. And if it is to be abated, both sides would have to contribute something.

But this is not the way Washington is presenting the new state of affairs. For example, the offer of Chou en Lai to negotiate with the United States is being treated as something that can be dealt with by a mere exchange of notes. That would be a convenient way of leaving the Nationalists out of the discussion. But most Asians are sure that Chou En-Lai will not settle for anything that does not give him, at the very least, the demilitarization of the offshore islands. And most Europeans, while seeing we have a case for keeping Formosa in friendly hands and defending it against aggression, believe the Communists have a right to the offshore islands. And if our Allies speak out at the Paris meeting, they are more likely to say this than to quote what Mr. Dulles told the Foreign Relations Committee.

No one can expect Washington to lay its cards on the table at this stage. It probably isn't sure as yet what cards it cares to play. It is early in the game - if it can be called a game - and a government has the right to feel its way. But it does not prepare for the tests ahead if the public is led to expect tensions to be relaxed simply by the Communists making concessions without any quid pro quo. That millenium has not arrived.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Tomorrow marks the 81st running of the most colorful of all horse races - the Kentucky Derby. For husbands betting on the outcome, these words from the Englishman John Ray would seem appropriate: "It's a good horse that never stumbles and a good wife that never grumbles." And if you don't happen to pick the winner and are looking for a qqick explanation, Thomas Jefferson can back up your claim that "victory and defeat are each of the same price."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday May 9 1955

This is the news:

West Germany, with its 50 million people, today was admitted to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. And at the NATO meeting in Paris the western powers decided to ask Russia to attend a Big Four conference..at which the heads of state would decide whether they could ease the tensions in Europe and the Far East. My colleague David Schoenbrun has been covering these, and other developments, so we asked him to record this report from Paris:

(tape runs 5:40

Return cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow in NY"

[redacted]

At the NATO meeting today Secretary of State Dulles told the other foreign ministers that the most spectacular change in Soviet foreign policy this year has been Russia's willingness to complete an Austrian treaty. But he reminded the ministers that the Soviet Union's basic policies remain unchanged..there should be no relaxation of western vigilance. Mr. Dulles said the reason for the Soviet switch on Austria can be found in the West's decision to adopt the Paris agreements. And he said another important Soviet development is the Kremlin's EMPHASIS on heavy industries..since Marshal Bulganin succeeded former Premier Malenkov.

British Prime Minister Eden, starting a campaign tour of England and South Wales, said today he hopes the Western powers will soon have constructive talks with the Russians. He said the British government has worked patiently and successfully for peace.

Chinese Nationalist Premier O.K. Yui said on Formosa today that his government will fight to keep the Quemoy and Matsu islands and will retreat no more. He says this decision is final and is not subject to change through the suggestion, persuasion or pressure of friendly powers.

In Washington, Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, told THE Senate Foreign Relations committee that we are taking a calculated risk in the Far East..with the size of our military forces. But, he said, naval and air reinforcements can be rushed in very quickly--if necessary. Democratic Senator Mansfield of Montana contended that we "may be playing a dangerous game" by reducing the size of our forces in the Far East to such an extent that we have to depend on our allies..the Chinese Nationalists and South Korea. Admiral Radford defended the military aid program. He called it part and parcel of our defense program. And he said:"It would be a dangerous misconception to assume that our superiority in modern weapons has reduced our need for allies."

The Defense Department announced today that within a few days we are going to set-off an underwater atomic explosion. It will take place in the Pacific, several hundred miles from our west coast in an area "completely clear of fishing grounds and shipping lanes." The purpose of this explosion is to obtain information to help develop defenses against submarine attack.

Dr. Ralph E. Lapp, an atomic scientist and author, charged today that "excessive" government secrecy caused "a year of paralysis" in civil defense preparations to meet the peril of radioactive dust. He says it took the Atomic Energy Commission almost one year after the March 1, 1954 test at Bikini to reveal "some facts" about radioactive fall-out. Dr. Lapp adds:"The federal government has given no consistent or adequate reason for its failure to inform the people about the dangers of fall-out."

The House today approved an average eight point eight per cent pay increase for postal workers. The bill goes to the Senate for a vote on Wednesday. The President has indicated he will veto any increase beyond the seven point six per cent that he proposed. And Postmaster General Summerfield says he cannot in good conscience recommend that the President sign the bill.

Dr. Jonas E. Salk said today he is certain that the concept of his anti-polio vaccine is "sound." In a statement released by his laboratory at the University of Pittsburgh, Dr. Salk said "I have extended my responsibility as far as I can", in helping to obtain large-scale production of the vaccine. He said the responsibility now belongs to "those agencies involved." He feels the United States Public Health Service decision to hold up the polio vaccine innoculation program "expresses its desire to do all in its power to assure the continuous flow of safe and effective vaccine." He says the Public Health Service has the ultimate responsibility "in matters of this kind that have gone beyond the research stage."

[redacted]

Chairman Magnuson of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee will start an investigation next week of what he calls "the muddled [redacted] confusion" surrounding the vaccine.....And the White House says the President is being kept informed of developments but has not yet received the detailed report which Welfare Secretary Hobby is preparing for him.....[redacted]

In Chicago today, Sewell Avery has resigned as chairman of Montgomery Ward and Co..He will be replaced by John A. Barr, who has been with the company since 1932. Barr is 47 years old.

The prolonged strike against the Lousiville and Nashville Railroad ended today with both sides agreeing to submit all issues to arbitration.

And here in New York, 40 workmen were injured and DNR is believed trapped, in the collapse of a section of a new Coliseum under construction at Columbus Circle.

The C.I.O. auto workers today asked its 465- thousand Ford AND GENERAL MOTORS workers to authorize a strike if negotiations over the union's demands for a guaranteed annual wage break down.

What my colleague in Paris, David Schoenbrun, seems to be suggesting is that the French people are now hoping for the best, but still anticipating the worst. Appropriately, Joanna Baillie remarked some 2-hundred years ago: "The brave man is not he who feels no fear - for that were stupid and irrational. The brave man is he who bravely dares the danger nature shrinks from."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, May 9, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

ANNC'R: (C O M M E R C I A L)

And now, here is Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the News:

West Germany, with its fifty million people, today was admitted to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. And at the NATO meeting in Paris, the Western powers decided to ask Russia to attend a Big Four conference at which the heads of state would decide whether they could ease the tensions in Europe and the Far East. My colleague David Schoenbrun has been covering these and other developments, so we asked him to record this report from Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: A German flag was raised here in Paris today, ten years after it was torn down by Allied armies. The gold, red, and black stripes of the Federal Republic fly side by side with the blue, white, and red tricolor of France as the two countries join forces officially in their first military alliance in history as partners in the Atlantic pact. The foreign ministers of fourteen nations gave a standing ovation to their new colleague, Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, who, almost single-handed, thru six dangerous years had brought his country into this democratic alliance. Adenauer has governed a major power longer than any other statesman in this postwar decade, and the diplomats of the Atlantic Alliance paid a personal tribute to him today. They also congratulated themselves on the strengthening of the alliance by the addition of German power. It is a matter of great satisfaction here in Paris that Russia apparently has swallowed the bitter pill. Far from breaking off relations with the West, as the Soviets threatened only a few weeks ago, the opposite has happened. The Russians have agreed to meet with the foreign ministers of France, Britain and America in Vienna this coming Saturday; and the next day they plan to sign a treaty of peace with Austria. The Western world has been trying to get that peace treaty for eight years, without success. When we were weak, the Russians would not deal with us. Now that we are stronger, they have given way - at least, that's the way Mr. Dulles reads today's event; and not only Mr. Dulles, but most of the ministers and observers here in Paris tonite.

Rarely has there been such optimism at an international conference. Rarely has this reporter heard the word "peace" used so frequently. They're even looking far beyond Vienna tonite, talking instead about the relative merits of Swiss cities for an even more important Big Four meeting, a conference of the chiefs of government planned for July, the first real cold-war peace conference.

The United States delegation had come here under instructions to oppose a meeting at the summit. We favored a prior meeting at the foreign ministers' level to handle the long negotiations. Presidents and Prime Ministers cannot stay out of their countries long enough for a real conference; that's what they have secretaries of state for - at least, that's what Mr. Dulles explained to the French and to the British. But the British were insistent. They promised their people to seek a meeting at the top - and national elections in Britain are only two weeks away. A compromise was put forward today. It suggests a meeting of the chiefs of government, limited to, say, one week and to broad general principles, after which the foreign ministers could take over the detailed negotiations. Mr. Dulles agreed to put this proposal up to the President, and he cabled Mr. Eisenhower immediately. There is great optimism here in Paris that the President will agree - and then there will be rejoicing in Europe that will make today's ceremony look like a village sewing bee.

And that's exactly what the most responsible men here tonite fear. They're just as worried about undue optimism as they ~~are~~ were about undue pessimism in the past; for, altho there's no discounting real progress in the alliance and a real decreased threat of war, there's also no discounting the difficulties that are still ahead. Diplomats here believe that the Russians have not accepted defeat, that they've only changed their tactics. Germany is not yet rearmed. The Germans, above all, want to reunify their country, and they might be tempted by a Russian offer. Above all, the unity of the Western powers in Europe is matched by their equally strong disunity on Asian affairs, notably on Formosa and Indochina. There's been no meeting of the minds between the French and the Americans on the crisis in Vietnam. Mr. Dulles insists that we must support what he calls the legal government of South Vietnam and its Premier, Mr. Ngo Dinh Diem, who is described as honest, nationalist, competent and anti-Communist.

Mr. Dulles has not yet agreed even to receive ex-Emperor Bao Dai for a private talk, even tho Bao Dai is the legal Chief of State, still recognized by America as such. The French are willing to go along with Mr. Diem with us, but only if he broadens his Cabinet and stops his attacks on them, which they fear may lead to an armed clash or endanger the lives of Europeans in Saigon. They refuse flatly to grant Diem's demands for absolute powers. Bao Dai told this reporter in an interview last week, "I'm ready to give up my powers, but not to any other one man. Do you Americans want to substitute a dictator for an emperor," he asked.

Meanwhile the crisis rages in South Vietnam. Diem appears to be in control of the capital but not of the surrounding countryside. Vietminh agents have infiltrated the mushrooming revolutionary committees - and that's just how the Communists began to take over the country back up in the Red River Delta in 1945. A compromise plan has been put forward by Bao Dai, calling for a council of state that would convene the Constituent Assembly. But the United States delegation is not interested in hearing this plan. So far, Mr. Dulles has been intransigent. We have been burnt too often by supporting allies in colonial areas and we have no use for corrupt emperors, the Americans say.

Tomorrow the Big Three will meet again in what may be a last attempt to break this deadlock and to avoid an almost certain catastrophe in Vietnam. If some unity of views is not found, then the Communists may have all Vietnam within a year and the entire position in Southeast Asia will begin to crumble.

This is David Schoenbrun recording in Paris. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 9, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

West Germany, with its fifty million people, today was admitted to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. And at the NATO meeting in Paris, the Western powers decided to ask Russia to attend a Big Four conference at which the heads of state would decide whether they could ease the tensions in Europe and the Far East. My colleague, David Schoenbrun has been covering these and other developments, so we asked him to record this report from Paris.

SCHOENBRUN: A German flag was raised here in Paris today, ten years after it was torn down by Allied armies. The bold, red, and black stripes of the Federal Republic fly side by side with the blue, white and red tricolor of France as the two countries join forces officially in their first military alliance. in history as partners in the Atlantic pact. The foreign ministers of fourteen nations gave a standing ovation to their new colleague, Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, who, almost single-handed, through six dangerous years had brought his country into this democratic alliance. Adenauer has governed a major power longer than any other statesman in this post war decade, and the diplomats of the Atlantic Alliance paid a personal tribute to him today. They also congratulated themselves on the strengthening of the alliance by the addition of German power. It is a matter of great satisfaction here in Paris, that Russia apparently has swallowed the bitter pill. Far from breaking off relations with the West, as the Soviets threatened only a few weeks ago, the opposite has happened. The Russians have agreed to meet with the foreign ministers of France, Britain and America in Vienna this coming Saturday; and the next day they plan to sign a treaty of peace with Austria. The Western world has been trying to get that peace treaty for eight years, without success. When we were weak, the Russians would not deal with us. Now that we are stronger, they have given way - at least, that's the way Mr. Dulles reads today today's event; and not only Mr. Dulles, but most of the ministers and observers here in Paris tonight.

Rarely has there been such optimism at an international conferenc. Rarely has this reporter heard the word "peace" used so frequently. They're even looking far beyond Vienna tonight, talking instead about the relative merits of Swiss cities for an even more important Big Four meeting, a conference of the chiefs of government planned for July, the first real cold-war peace conference.

The United States delegation had come here under instructions to oppose a meeting at the summit. We favored a prior meeting at the foreign minister's level to handle the long negotiations. Presidents and Prime Ministers cannot stay out of their countries long enough for a real conference; that's what they have secretaries of state for - at least, that's what Mr. Dulles explained to the French and the British. But the British were insistent. They promised their people to seek a meeting at the top - and national elections in Britain are only two weeks away. A compromise was put forward today. It suggests a meeting of the chiefs of government, limited to, say, one week and to broad general principles, after which the foreign ministers could take over the detailed negotiations, Mr. Dulles agreed to put this proposal up to the President, and he cabled Mr. Eisenhower immediately. There is great optimism here in Paris that the President will agree ant then there will be rejoicing in Europe that w ll mak today's ceremony look lik a village sewing bee.

And that's exactly what the most responsible men here tonight fear. They're just as worried about undue optimism as they were about undue pessimism in the past; for, although there's no discounting real progress in the alliance and a real decreased threat of war, there's also no discounting the difficulties that are still ahead. Diplomats here believe that the Russians have not accepted defeat, that they've only changed their tactics. Germany is not yet rearmed. The Germans, above all, want to reunify their country, and they might be tempted by a Russian offer. Above all, the unity of the Western powers in Europe is matched by their equally strong disunity on Asian affairs, notably on Formo a and Indochina. There's been no meeting of the minds between the French and the Americans on the crisis in Vietnam. Mr. Dulles insists that we must support what he calls the legal government of South Vietnam and its Premier, Mr. Ngo Dinh Diem, who is described as honest, nationalist, competent and anti-Communist.

Mr. Dulles has not yet agreed even to receive ex-Emperor Bao Dai for a private talk, even though Bao Dai is the legal Chief of State, still recognized by America as such. The French are willing to go along with Mr. Diem with us, but only if he broadens his Cabinet and stops his attacks on them, which they fear may lead to an armed clash or endanger the lives of Europeans in Saigon. They refuse flatly to grant Diem's demands for absolute powers. Bao Dao told this reporter in an interivew last week, "I'm ready to give up my powers, but not to any other one man. Do you Americans want to substitute a dictator for an emperor, " he asked.

Meanwhile the crisis rages in South Vietnam. Diem appears to be in control of the captial but not of the surrounding country side. Vietminh agents have infiltrated the mushrooming revolutionary committees - and that's just how the Communists began to take over the country back up in the Red River Delta in 1945. A compromise plan has been put forward by Bao Dai , calling for a council of state that would convene the consitiuent Assembly. But the United States delegation is not interested in hearing this plan. So far, Mr. Dulles has been intransigent. We have been burnt too often by supporting allies in colonial areas and we have no use for corrupt emperors, the Americans say.

Tomorrow the Big Three will meet again in what may be a last attempt to break this deadlock and to avoid an almost certain catasprophy in Vietnam. If some unity of views is not found, then the Communists may have all Vietnam within a year and the entire position in Southeast Asia will begin to crumble.

This is David Schoenbrun recording in Paris. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

At the NATO meeting today Secretary of State Dulles told the other foreign ministers that the most spectatular change in Soviet foreign policy this year has been Russia's willingness to complete an Austrian treaty. But he reminded the ministers that the Soviet Union's basic policies remain unchanged..there should be no relaxation of western vigilance. Mr. Dulles said the reasons for the Soviet switch on Austria can be found in the West's decision to adopt the Paris agreements. And he said another important Soviet development is the Kremlin's emphasis on heavy intustries..since Marshal Bulganin succeeded former Premier Malenkov.

British Prime Minister Eden, starting a campaign tour of England and South Wales, said today he hopes the Western powers will soon have constructive talks with the Russians. He said the British government has worked patiently and successfully for peace.

Chinese Nationalist Premier O.K. Yui said on Formosa today that his government will fight to keep the Quemoy and Matsu islands and will retreat no more. He says this decision is final and is not subject to change through the suggestion, persuasion or pressure of friendly powers.

In Washington, Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, told the Senate Foreign Relations committee that we are taking a calculated risk in the Far East..with the size of our military forces. But, he said, naval and air reinforcements can be rushed in very quickly -- if necessary. Democratic Senator Mansfield of Montana contended that we "may be playing a dangerous game" by reducing the size of our forces in the Far East to such an extent that we have to depend on our allies..the Chinese Nationalists and South Korea. Admiral Radford defended the military aid program. He called it part and pardel of our defense program. And he said:"It would be a dangerous misconception to assume that our superiority in modern weapons has reduced our need for allies."

The Defense Department announced today that within a few days we are going to set-off an underwater atomic explosion. It will take place in the Pacific, several hundred miles from our west coast in an area "completely clear of fishing grounds and shipping lanes. The purpose of this explosion is to obtain information to help develop defenses against submarine attack .

Dr. Ralph E. Lapp, an atomic scientist and author, charged today that "excessive" government secrecy caused "a year of paralysis in civil defense preparation to meet the peril of radioactive dust. He says it took the Atomic Energy Commission almost one year after the March 1, 1954 test at Bikini to reveal "some facts" about radioactive fall-out. Dr Lapp adds: "The federal government has given no consistent or adequate reason for its failure to inform the people about the dangers of fall-out."

The House today approved an aferage eight point eight per cent pay increase for postal workrer. The bill goes to the Senate for a vote on Wednesday.. The Presidnnt has indicated he will veto any increase beyond the seven point six per cent that he proposed. And Postmaster General Summerfield says he cannot in good conscience recommend that the President sign the bill.

Dr. Jonas E. Salk said today he is certain that the concept of his anti-polio vaccine is "sound." In a statement released by his laboratory at the University of Pittsburgh, Dr. Salk said "I have extended my responsibility as far as I can" in helping to obtain large-scale production of the vaccine. He said the responsibility now belongs to "those agencies involved." He feels the United States Public Health Service decision to hold up the polio vaccine innoculation program "expresses its desire to do all in its power to assure the continuous flow of safe and effective vaccine." He says the Public Health Service has the ultimate responsibility "in matters of this kind that have gone beyond the research stage."

Chairman Manguson of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee will start an investigation next week of what he calls "The muddled confusion" surrounding the vaccine...and the White House says the President is being kept informed of developments but has not yet received the detailed report which Welfare Secretary Hobb is preparing for him.

In Chicago today, Sewell Avery has resigned as chairman of Montgomery Ward and Company ...He will be replaced by John A. Barr, who has been with the company since 1932. Barr is 47 years old.

The prolonged strike against the Louisville and Nashville Railroad ended today with both sides agreeing to submit all issues to arbitartion.

Tnd here in New York, 40 workmen were injured and one is believed trapped in the collapse of a section of a new Coliseum under construction at Columbus Circle.

The C.I.O. suto workers today asked its 465 thousand Ford and General Motors workers to authorize a strike if negotiations over the union's demands for a guaranteed annual wage break down.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: What my colleague in Paris, David Schoenbrun, seems to be suggesting is that the French people are now hoping for the best, but still anticipating the worst. Appropriately, Joanna Baille remarked some 2-hundred years ago: "The brave man is not he who feels no fear - that that were stupid and irrational. The brave man is he who bravely dares the danger nature shrinks from."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday - may 10

TO Ed murrow N.Y.C.

This is the news:

The President, Prime Minister Eden and French Premier Faure have invited Soviet Premier Bulganin to discuss "removing the sources of conflict" between East and West. The invitation, made public tonight, says: the West recognizes a solution to these problems will take time and patience...they will not be solved in a single meeting, [redacted] nor in a hasty manner.. The plan is this: the foreign ministers of the Four powers would meet.. BRIEFLY. [redacted] Then the chiefs of state would meet..at a time and place not yet decided but probably in Sweden or Switzerland in July. At this meeting the President and the Prime Ministers would try to formulate "the issues to be worked on." Their foreign ministers would join the conference. And all would agree on "methods, organs and participants" to carry on the future work. The West sees this all as a series of meetings... "progressive [redacted]n statges" to try to solve mutual problems... The meeting of the chiefs of state would be for "a limited time."

The Russians are expected to accept the invitation. There is nO answer yet because Bulganin, his foreign minister Molotov, and other top aides are now in Warsaw, setting up a unified military command of East European Communist nations.. as an answer to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

In Paris today, Secretary of State Dulles told the NATO leaders that the Chinese Communist buildup of airpower, on the mainland opposite Formosa, may shift the balance of air-power in this area, within a few weeks. Mr. Dulles said that up to now the balance has been in our favor. [redacted] Now, he says, the Red buildup is "so great", as to threaten to give them control of the air, over Formosa strait.

Today American Sabrejets battled Communist Migs..over the Yellow Sea...off the coast of North Korea. The air Force says: eight of our Sabres were attacked by 12 to 16 Migs. We destroyed two, probably shot down one, lost none of our own planes. The Chinese Communist radio puts out another version of the fight..with the customary claim that we were over Chinese territory..that we suffered losses..that we are guilty of "a grave military provocation." The Air Force says its report is the authentic story.

In Viet Nam, Premier Diem has named a new government to set up the first general elections. And in New York, the prime minister of Thailand says "World war three is inevitable."

Defense Secretary Wilson said here in Washington today that the people of every country "hope and pray their leaders will be smart enough to avoid war." He told reporters he's a reasonable optomist and believes the world is " making progress toward a more peaceful existence."

Labor Secretary Mitchell told Republican women meeting here that American workers are "better off than ever before." He says:they have more protection, more earnings and more opportunities than at any other time in our history. Micthell says: unemployment is down..wages are at an all-time high.. and long-overdue improvements have been made in working standards.

Undersecretary of Commerce Williams today quoted Treasury Secretary Humphrey as saying: if the economy continues good, "it looked as if the fiscal 1957 budget might be in balance, with an accompanying reduction in taxes."

Assistant Defense Secretary Hensel told a Senate committe today that if our military aid spending prevents only one local war--like Korea.."the money cost is well worthwhile." Hensel says we've spent about 11-billion dollars for military aid to our allies in the last five and a-half years. He says we must continue to spend large sums of money for a substantial period.

Welfare Secretary Hobby said today that "a great deal of new information" about the Salk anti-polio vaccine has been uncovered by scientists. She says its only prudent to pass this along to manufacturers in the interest of additional safety. Mrs Hobby indicated--in an address to Republican women--that federal public health officials will start distributing this information to vaccine manufacturers in a series of plant inspections that start tomorrow.

The House of Representatives today defeated a bill to grant statehood to Alaska and Hawaii. By a vote of 218 to 170 the House sent the bill back to committee. In the past the House approved seperate bills to admit Hawaii to statehood on three occassions. Once it approved a bill for Alaska.

MR. V K KRISHNA MENON OF INDIA HAS FINALLY ARRIVED IN COMMUNIST CHINA AFTER MAKING AN INVOLUNTARY 2,000 MILE DETOUR THAT TOOK HIM TO MANILA AND TOKYO BEFORE HIS PLANE COULD SET HIM DOWN S[redacted] IN HONGKONG. HE LEFT IMMEDIATELY BY CAR FOR THE FRONTIER TODAY. HE IS ON A PEACE JOURNEY, AND GOES TO PEIPING AT THE INVITATION OF THE RED PREMIER CHOU EN-LAI.

SOMEHOW A 2,000 MILE DETOUR CANT BE CALLED INCONGRUOUS, FOR THE PEACE NEGOTIATIONS ON WHICH MR. MENON IS TO CONSULT WITH CHOU EN-LAI, ARE NEITHER SIMPLE NOR DIRECT. IT MAY BE USEFUL TO LOOK AT THEM FOR A MOMENT, JUST TO BE REMINDED THAT ANY HIGH-LEVEL NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN EAST AND WEST ON ISSUES OF SUBSTANCE ARE SURE TO BE COMPLEX AND INDIRECT.

IN PARIS WHERE THE FOREIGN MINISTERS OF THE NATO GOVERNMENTS ARE ASSEMBLED, A SWELLING NOTE OF ELATION SOUNDS THROUGH MOST OF THE NEWS REPORTS. IT HAS BEEN HEIGHTENED BY THE DECISION OF PRESIDENT EISENHOWER TO ATTEND A FOUR POWER CONFERENCE OF CHIEFS OF STATE. THE SOVIET UNION, AFTER HOLDING BACK NEARLY TEN YEARS ON AN AUSTRIAN TREATY, NOW APPEARS TO BE READY TO COMPLETE THE TREATY. THIS IS WHAT MAKES HIGH-LEVEL TALKS POSSIBLE. IT IS INEVITABLE THAT HIGH HOPES SHOULD BE AROUSED. BUT IT SHOULD BE JUST AS INEVITABLE THAT CAUTION SHOULD TEMPER THESE HOPES.

IT NOW UNDENIABLY SERVES SOVIET INTERESTS TO HOLD THESE TALKS, AND THEYARE ONLY POSSIBLE IF THE MEN IN THE KREMLIN BELIEVE SO. PUT IT THIS WAY, THEY ARE NOT GOING INTO SUCH TALKS OUT OF CONTRITION. THEY EXPECT TO GET MORE OUT OF THEM THAN THEY HAVE TO CONCEDE. AND AS I SUGGESTED, IT MAY HELP APPRAISE THE DIFFICULTIES IN EUROPE TO GLANCE FOR A MOMENT AT THE DIFFICULTIES OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH COMMUNIST CHINA. FOR THE QUESTION OF A CEASE FIRE AND FORMOSA IS NOT HARDER TO SOLVE THAN THE UNIFICATION OF GERMANY AND CONTROLLED DISARMAMENT, WHICH ARE THE BIG ITEMS ON THE AGENDA IN EUROPE.

KRISHNA MENON HAS BEEN THE FOREMOST OUTSIDE CONSULTANT ON FORMOSA NEGOTIATIONS FOR SOME TIME. ~~AS INDIAS DELEGATE AT THE UN-~~

~~ITED NATIONS, HE VISITED P~~

XXXX ~~AT THE UNA~~

ITED NAT

XXXXXX

(2)

~~SOME TIME~~. AS INDIAS DELEGATE AT THE UN-ITED NATIONS, HE VISITED PRESIDENT EISENHOWER AND SECRETARY DULLES BEFORE GOING TO THE BANDUNG CONFERENCE.
THEN AT BANDUNG HE WENT INTO PROLONGED TALKS WITH CHOU EN-LAI. PRIME MINISTER NEHRU OF INDIA ALSO SAW CHOU FREQUENTLY AT BANDUNG, AND THE STRATEGY OF THE INDIANS AS WELL AS OF THE CHINESE WAS TO CAP THE CLIMAX OF A WEEK OF CONCILIATORY CHINESE MANEUVERS WITH A PUBLIC OFFER TO NEGOTIATE WITH THE UNITED STATES FOR A PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT OF ASIAN DIFFERENCES, FORMOSA INCLUDED.

THE OFFER WHEN MADE WAS AT FIRST HIGH-HATTED BY THE STATE DEPARTMENT LATER IT WAS RESPECTFULLY AND CAUTIOUSLY ACKNOWLEDGED BY PRESIDENT EISENHOWER AND SECRETARY DULLES. BUT SINCE THEN NOTHING HAS HAPPENED THAT THE PUBLIC KNOWS ABOUT TO PROMOTE NEGOTIATIONS. NATIONALIST CHINA HAS MINED THE WATERS AROUND THE COASTAL ISLANDS, AND HAS ENGAGED IN ACCUSTOMED SMALL SCALE ACTION THERE, AS HAVE THE COMMUNISTS. AND THERE HAS BEEN A CLASH OF PLANES OF THE U S AIRFORCE ON KOREA WITH MIG,S OF UNCERTAIN IDENTITY.
THAT IS, FIRE HAS DEFINITELY NOT CEASED.

IN THEORY, THE UNITED STATES IS INQUIRING INTO WHAT CHOU EN-LAI MEANS BY HIS OFFER TO NEGOTIATE .

NOW KRISHNA MENON HOPES TO BECOME THE INTERMEDIARY OF FIRST RANK. HOW DOES HE LOOK UPON HIS MISSION? HE TOLD NEWSMEN IN TOKYO AND HONGKONG THAT HE HAS NO MISSION, AND ALSO HAS NO PROGRAM. HE BELIEVES THAT TO GET TOGETHER, COMMUNIST CHINA AND THE UNITED STATES NEED NOT RETREAT FROM THE STANDS THEY ALREADY HAVE TAKEN. CHINA NEED NOT RENOUNCE ITS CLAIMS TO HAVE FORMOSA ULTIMATELY, AND THE UNITED STATES NEED NOT ABANDON ITS INSISTENCE ON NATIONALIST CHINA BEING AN EQUAL NEGOTIATOR ON SUBJECTS AFFECTING ITS FUTURE. WASHINGTON, OF COURSE, DOESNT RECOGNIZE PEIPINGS CLAIM TO FORMOSA, AND CHOU REFUSES TO SIT DOWN WITH CHIANG. BUT THAT DOESNT STUMP KRISHNA MENON. HE THINKS BOTH PARTIES CAN NEGOTIATE WITHIN THESE LIMITS.

THEN WHAT ABOUT THE COASTAL ISLANDS. NOTHING IS BEING SAID ABOUT THEM THESE DAYS, EITHER BY PEIPING OR WASHINGTON. YET EVERYONE WHO KNOWS THE PEIPING POLICY IS SURE THERE CAN BE NO CEASE-FIRE WITHOUT THE EFFECTIVE AND PERMANENT DEMILITARIZATION OF THE COASTAL ISLANDS. ONCE THEY CEASE TO BE BASES FOR CHIANG KAI-SJEKS WAR WITH THE CHINESE COMMUNISTS, AND TO BE NATIONALIST STEPPING STONES TO THE MAINLAND,

THE VERY NATURE OF THE NATIONALIST CAUSE IS CHANGED. IT WOULD AMOUNT TO THE END OF THE CHINESE CIVIL WAR, AND A DEFACTO SURRENDER BY CHIANG.

FOR THE UNITED STATES, LESS IRKSOME WORDS FOR IT, WOULD BE A MAJOR DISENGAGEMENT. SOME JOURNALISTS IN WASHINGTON BELIEVE SUCH A DISENGAGEMENT ALREADY HAS BEEN DECIDED ON IN PRINCIPLE, AND WILL COME IN DUE COURSE . BUT CHIANG IS NOT PREPARED TO GIVE UP THE ISLANDS AND HIS ROLE IN THE FAR EAST.

SO A SETTLEMENT OF THE FORMOSA ISSUE LIES A LONG WAY AHEAD, AT THE VERY BEST, AND THIS IS WHAT KRISHNA MENON REALIZES. ALL HE WANTS NOW IS THAT WASHINGTON AND PEIPING FIND SOME WAY OF CONTINUING TO DEAL WITH EACH OTHER. IF THEY DO, THEN IN TIME A SETTLEMENT MIGHT BE WORKED OUT.

NOW TO LOOK AT THE EUROPEAN SITUATION AGAIN. IN ONE RESPECT IT

THE EFFECTIVE AND PERMANENT DEMILITARIZATION OF THE COASTAL ISLANDS. ONCE THEY CEASE TO BE BASES FOR CHIANG KAI-SJEKS WAR WITH THE CHINESE COMMUNISTS, AND TO BE NATIONALIST STEPPING STONES TO THE MAINLAND,

THE VERY NATURE OF THE NATIONALIST CAUSE IS CHANGED. IT WOULD AMOUNT TO THE END OF THE CHINESE CIVIL WAR, AND A DEFACTO SURRENDER BY CHIANG.

FOR THE UNITED STATES, LESS IRKSOME WORDS FOR IT, WOULD BE A MAJOR DISENGAGEMENT. SOME JOURNALISTS IN WASHINGTON BELIEVE SUCH A DISENGAGEMENT ALREADY HAS BEEN DECIDED ON IN PRINCIPLE, AND WILL COME IN DUE COURSE . BUT CHIANG IS NOT PREPARED TO GIVE UP THE ISLANDS AND HIS ROLE IN THE FAR EAST.

SO A SETTLEMENT OF THE FORMOSA ISSUE LIES A LONG WAY AHEAD, AT THE VERY BEST, AND THIS IS WHAT KRISHNA MENON REALIZES. ALL HE WANTS NOW IS THAT WASHINGTON AND PEIPING FIND SOME WAY OF CONTINUING TO DEAL WITH EACH OTHER. IF THEY DO, THEN IN TIME A SETTLEMENT MIGHT BE WORKED OUT.

NOW TO LOOK AT THE EUROPEAN SITUATION AGAIN. IN ONE RESPECT IT IS SIMILAR. ANY SETTLEMENT THE KREMLIN IS WILLING TO ACCEPT, MUST KEEP GERMANY FROM BECOMING AN ARMED PARTNER OF NATO. BUT IF THE WEST GIVES UP ON THIS, IT WOULD BE MAKING A FATEFUL RETREAT, EVEN IF THE KREMLIN PAID A CONSIDERABLE PRICE FOR IT. TO SAY THIS IS NOT TO DISPARAGE ALL OPTIMISM OVER THE PROSPECT OF HIGH LEVEL TALKS. IT IS BETTER TO BE TALKING ABOUT ENDING THE COLD WAR THAN TO WAGE COLD WAR WITHOUT ASKING HOW TO END IT. BUT IF A LONG PULL IS NECESSARY TO END IT, IT IS ESSENTIAL THAT TOO MUCH MUST NOT BE EXPECTED TOO SOON.

ENDIT.

Much of our lifetime has been consumed in the seemingly endless search for a lasting and just peace...Any step in this direction,however small,must be regarded as progress....

Thomas Fuller once advised wisely..."When our hopes tend to break,let our patience hold"...As Edmund Burke concluded long ago, " In the end,patience will achieve more than force. "

Good Night and Good luck...

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The President, Prime Minister Eden and French Premier Faure have invited Soviet Premier Bulganin to discuss "removing the sources of conflict" between east and West. The invitation, made public tonight, says: The west recognizes a solution to these problems will take time and patience...they will not be solved in a single meeting not in a hasty manner...the plan is this: The foreign ministers of the Four powers would meet briefly. Then the chiefs of state would meet...at a time and place not yet decided but probably in Sweeden or Switzerland in July. At this meeting the President and the Prime Minister would try to formulate "the issues to be worked on" Their foreign ministers would join the conference. And all would agree on "methods, organs and participants" to carry on the future work. The west sees this all as a series of meetings..."progressive stages" to try to solve mutural problmss. The meeting of the chiefs of state would be for "a limited time."

The Russians are expected to accept the invitation. There is no answer yet because Bulganin, his foreign minister, Molotov, and other top aides are now in Warsaw setting up a unified military command of East European Communist nations..as an answer to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

In Paris today, Secretary of State Dulles told the NATO leaders that the Chinese Communist buildup of airpower, on the mainland opposite Formoas, may shift the balance of air power in this area within a few weeks. Mr. Dulles said that up to now the balance has been in our favor. Now, he says, the Red buildup is "so great" as to threaten to give them control of the air over Formosa Strait.

Today American Sabrejets battled Communist Migs over the Yellow Sea.. off the coast of North Korea. The Air Force says: eight of our Sabres were attacked by 12 to 16 Migs. We destroyed two, probably shot down one, lost none of our own planes. The Chinese Communist radio puts out another version of thefight..with the customary claim that we were over Chinese territory.. that we suffered losses..that we are guilty of "a grave military provocation." The Air Force says its report is the authentic story. In Viet Nam, Premier Diem has named a new government to set up the first general elections. And in New York, the Prime minister of Thailand says "World War three is inevitable."

Defense Secretary Wilson said here in Washington today that the people of every country "hope and pray their leaders will be smart enough to avoid war." He told reporters he's a reasonable optimist and believes the world is "making progress toward a more peaceful existence."

Labor Secretary Mitchell told Republican women meeting here that American workers are "better off than ever before." He says :they have more protection, more earnings and more opportunities than at any other time in our history. Mitchell says: unemployment is down..wages are at an all-time high..and long-overdue improvements have been made in working standards.

Undersecretary of Commerce Williams today quoted Treasury Secretary Humphrey as saying: if the economy continues good, "it looks as if the fiscal 1957 budget might be in balance, with an accompanying reduction in taxes."

Assistant Defense Secretary Hensel told a Senate committee today that if our military aid spending prevents only one local war-like Korea.."the money cost is well worthwhile". Hensel says we've spent about 11-billion dollars for military aid to our allies in the last five-and-a-half years. He says we must continue to spend large sums of money for a subatantial period.

Welfare Secretary Hobby said today that "a great deal of new information" about the Salk anti-polio vaccine has been uncovered by scientists. She says it is only prudent to pass this along to manufacturers in the interest of additional safety. Mrs. Hobby indicated -- in an address to Republican women -- that federal public health officials will start distributing this information to vaccine manufacturers in a series of plant inspections that start tomorrow.

The House of Representatives today defeated a bill to grant statehood to Alaska and Hawaii. By a vote of 218 to 190 the House sent the bill back to committee. In the past, the House approved separate bills to admit Hawaii to statehood on three occasions. Once it approved a bill for Alaska.

Mr. Krishna Menon of India has finally arrived in Communist China after making an involuntary 2,000 mile detour that took him to Manilla and Tokyo before his plane could set him down in Hongkong. He left immediately by car for the frontier today. He is on a peace journey, and goes to Peiping at the invitation of the Red Premier Chou en Lai.

Somehow a 2,000 mile detour can't be called incongruous, for the peace negotiations on which Mr. Menon is to consult with Chou en-Lai are neither simple nor direct. It may be useful to look at them for a moment, just to be reminded that any high-level negotiations between east and west on issues of substance are sure to be complex and indirect.

In Paris where the foreign ministers of the NATO governments are assembled, a swelling note of elation sounds through most of the news reports. It has been heightened by the decision of President Eisenhower to attend a four power conference of chief of state. The soviet Union, after holding back nearly ten years on an Austrian treaty, now appears to be ready to complete the treaty. This is what makes high-level talks possible. It is inevitable that high hopes should be aroused. But it should be just as inevitable that caution should temper these hopes.

It is now undeniably serves Soviet interests to hold these talks and they are only possible if the men in the Kremlin believe so. Put it this way, they are not going into such talks out of contrition. They expect to get more out of them then they have to concede. And as I suggested, it may help appraise the difficulties in Europe to glance for a moment at the difficulties of negotiations with Communist China. For the question of a cease fire and Formosa is not harder to solve than the unification of Germany and controlled disarmament, which are the big items on the agenda in Europe.

Krishna Menon has been the foremost outside consultant on Formosa negotiations for some time. Ad India's delegate to the United Nations, he visited President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles before going to the Bandung Conference.

Then at Bandung, he went into prolonged talks with Chou en-Lai. Prime Minister Nehru of India also saw Chou frequently at Bandung, and the strategy of the Indians as well as of the Chinese was to cap the climax of a week of conciliatory Chinese maneuvers with a public offer to negotiate with the United States for a peaceful settlement of Asian differences, Formosa included.

The offer when made was at first high-hatted by the State Department, later it was respectfully and cautiously acknowledged by President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles. But since then nothing has happened that the public knows about to promote negotiations. Nationalist China has mined the waters around the coastal islands, and has engaged in accustomed small scale action there, as have the Communists. And there has been a clash of planes of the U.S. Air Force an Korea with Migs of uncertain identity.

That is, fire has definitely not ceased. In theory, the United States in inquiring into what Chou en-Lai means by his offer to negotiate.

Now Krishna Menon hopes to become the intermediary of first rank. How does he look upon his mission? He told newsmen in Tokyo and Hongkong that he has no mission, and also has no program. He believes that to get together Communist China and the United States need not retreat from the stands they already have taken. China need not renounce its claims to have Formosa ultimately, and the United States need not abandon its insistence on Nationalist China being an equal negotiator on subjects affecting its future. Washington, of course, doesn't recognize Peiping's claim to Formosa and Chou refuses to sit down with Chiang. But that doesn't stump Krishna Menon. He thinks both parties can negotiate within these limits.

Then what about the coastal islands. Nothing is being said about them these days either by Peiping or Washington. Yet everyone who knows the Peiping policy is ure there can be no cease fire without the effective permanent demilitarization of the coastal islands. Once they cease to be bases for Chiang Kai Sheks war with the Chinese Communists, and to be Nationalist stepping stones to the mainland, the very nature of the Nationalise cause is changed. It would amount to the end of the Chinese Civil War, and a defacto surrender by Chiang.

For the United States, less irksome words for it would ~~be major~~ disengagement. Some jorunalists in Washington believe such a disengagement already has been decided on in principle and will come in due course. But Chiang is not prepared to give up the islands and his role in the Far East.

So a settlement of the Formosa issue lies a long was ahead at the very best, and this is what Krishna Menon realizes. All he wants now is that Washington and Peiping find some way of cintinuing to deal with each other. If they do, then in time a settlement might be worked out.

Now to look at the European situation again. In one respect it is similar. Any settlement the Kremlin is willing to accept must keep Germany from becoming an armed partner of NATO. But if the West gives up on this it would be making a careful retreat, even if the Kremlin paid a considerable price for it. To say this is not to disparage all optimism over the prospect of high level talks. It is better to be talking about ending the cold war than to wage cold war without asking how to end it. But if a long pull is necessary to end it, it is essential that too much must not be expected too soon.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Much of our lifetime has been consumed in the seemingly endless search for a lasting and just peace..Any step in this direction, however small, must be regarded as progress. Thomas Fuller once advised wisely..."When our hopes tend to break, let our patience hold." As Edmund Burke concluded long ago, "In the end, patience will achieve more than force."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Wednesday May 11, 1955

This is the news:

The State Department says an attack by Chinese Communist Jets on American planes off Korea yesterday was "unwarranted and illegal." We have told General Taylor, the United Nations commander in Korea, to protest to the military armistice commission in Korea. Eight of our Sabrejets were attacked by 12 to 16 Communist planes. We shot down two and probably a third.

In Washington today the President explained to reporters his views on the proposed Four power meeting of chiefs of state. He thinks such a meeting should last about three days...he thinks it could profitably cover all world problems, including the Far East. He says the whole thing now is in the exploratory stage...The foreign ministers will discuss it in Vienna over the week-end. Mr. Eisenhower made it clear that he feels there has been a growing sentiment throughout the world for a meeting "at the summit" that would accomplish something. He feels its important now to clarify the issues. He cautions that it will not be possible to turn the world around in a few days or weeks. As the President sees it, the Big Power meeting would define or clarify issues..not deal with specific solutions. And it would be a way of testing Russia's sincerity about wanting to relieve world tensions.

Mr. Eisenhower also was asked a number of questions about the anti-polio vaccine situation. Mr. Eisenhower said he believes "implicitly that the Salk vaccine "will, within a measurable time, really eliminate polio in this country." Then, reminding the reporters that he was not a scientist, the president said: government scientists probably released the vaccine too soon because of heavy public pressuure. He said the scientists may have "shortcut a little bit." But he had no criticism of this action. Mr. Eisenhower says there was great pressure to release the vaccine quickly. Some of the exhuastive tests through which a vaccine normally goes were shortcut.

A number of Democrats today criticized Welfare Secretary Hobby. Vanik of Ohio charged she was hasty in licensing the vaccine and "should be held accountable." Spence of Kentucky said he doubts she will appear to testify before his committee. Bolling of Missouri called for an end to the constant heckling of Surgeon General Scheele. He suggests Mrs. Hobby had "DUCKED her responsibilities."

[redacted]

At his news conference today the President offered his thanks to Republican Senator Margaret Chase Smith of Maine. She had expressed the hope that he would seek re-election. But Mr. Eisenhower said he had no idea where Mrs. Smith got the impression that he will not run again.

And in Kansas City, Roy Roberts, editor of the Kansas City Star, and an original Eisenhower for president booster, wrote today that the President might not run. Roberts says Mr. Eisenhower would not run "just to save the party..he doesn't owe it that much." But Roberts feels he would run if he feels his "prestige, experience and leadership is essential at the time in world affairs."

In Paris today the 15 nations of the North Atlantic Treaty alliance called for a truce in the Far East and a Big Four agreement on European problems to end the threat of another world war. They warn that more fighting in Asia "will clearly endanger the peace of the world." And they suggested to the Big Four that the reunification of Germany and a general disarmament agreement should be their main tasks at the proposed "meeting at the summit."

The western allies are having trouble with the Russians in Vienna. The Russians are now refusing to put into the Austrian treaty, the economic concessions Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov gave Austrian Chancellor Rabb, at their Moscow conference last month. This could delay the scheduled Sunday signing. And American sources reveal that Secretary of State Dulles will not go to Vienna until the negotiating ambassadors have reached complete agreement.

In Poland, where Russia and her satellites are holding a security conference, Soviet Premier Bulganin said his country wants an end to the cold war. He said he'll carefully study the western proposal for talks among the chiefs of state. This information was given out by a Communist spokesman. No western reporters are allowed to attend THE Communist meeting.

In Washington, the Congress has completed action on a bill to raise the pay of 500-thousand postal workers, by an average of eight point eight per cent. There are indications that the President may veto the bill, which would cost the government 178 million dollars a year.

The House appropriations committee disclosed today it is investigating what Democratic Representative Mahon of Texas calls "excessively high profits" on big defense contracts. He says the taxpayer has been "losing his shirt" on non-competitive military buying in which the seller is guaranteed a "very proftable return."

~~The atom-powered submarine Nautilus returned unexpectedly to its makers yesterday in Connecticut today after developing what is described as a small leak.~~

And the State Department says we have agreed to permit an official delegation of Soviet farmers to visit American farm areas. Some American farmers, in return, will visit Russian farms this summer. The Russians will come here as an official delegation; so it will not be necessary to fingerprint them. This requirement caused a postponment of a previously planned trip.

6

The C.I.O. steelworkers said today they will ask the basic steel industry for "a substantial wage increase". And they want to negotiate with the six biggest companies at the same time.

Edward R. Murrow: May 11, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The Soviet disarmament proposal published today is Move Number Three in the current East-West competition. Chou En-lai took the lead at Bandung. The West got it back in Paris by uniting, with some huffing and puffing, for a Big Four conference at the highest level. Now the Soviet Union has produced a shrewdly-drafted disarmament proposal in an effort to win back the initiative.

One can call this rivalry an unexpected blessing. It may not of itself promise anything, but if the two great camps are so eager to demonstrate that it is peace they want, it ought to make the chance of getting peace that much better.

The Soviet Union, being a totalitarian state, is run by a handful of men who make the public opinion in their country. They don't have to inform or obey it. That gives them a decided edge in conducting foreign affairs. The disarmament proposal is a case in point. It could be timed perfectly to recapture the initiative. The West's top-level conference still would be the more important event. But when the Big Four meet, they will have to talk about disarmament, and the Soviet proposal will get the first consideration. The press of the world will have to analyze it; the foreign offices will have to weigh it; the experts will have to probe it, for any obscure and fateful meanings. This is going to find the democracies at a disadvantage. So far they have received little education in the principles or the intricacies of disarmament. And in the West, public opinion has to be obeyed.

The Eisenhower and Truman administrations have treated disarmament as a highly technical subject beyond the public's grasp. The original Baruch proposal for atomic control did have a decided public relations value, so did the Acheson proposals for total disarmament made in Paris three years ago. But disarmament hadn't seemed like a practical subject. And the State Department suffered from an inability to make up its own mind about what it wanted. So now we are caught unprepared. Disarmament still may not be practical, but as an idea it is one of the decisive forces in the cold war.

The Soviet disarmament proposal goes a long way to meet the program embodied in British and French proposals and further developed by the United States. It accepts the West's figures for the maximum size of armed forces of the five Great Powers, to be reached in two cuts, one next year, the other the year after. The United States, Soviet Union and Communist China each would have one, to one-and-a-half million men, the British and French each 650,000. It calls for the ultimate prohibition of atomic weapons and weapons of mass destruction, to go into effect in the second stage of the program; that is, after some genuine reduction in armed forces has ~~gone~~ occurred, ~~into effect~~. It provides for permanent international inspection, both of atomic and conventional disarmament, and goes much further in defining this than Moscow has offered before. But this is not to be enforcible control by an international agency, with powers. Enforcement would remain with the Security Council of the United Nations and would be subject to the veto. That's one catch.

A new feature of the proposal calls for the abandonment of all military, naval and air bases on territories of other countries. And a concession is offered to possessors of atomic weapons during stage one of disarmament. While they must forego their use in warfare, they are authorized to use them against aggression. Here, however, the catch is that aggression would have to be so designated by the Security Council, where the veto would be in force.

Under the Soviet proposal the Soviet Union and Communist China would have armed forces up to three million strong, and the United States, Britain and France would have two million, three hundred thousand. And any Western advantage in nuclear weapons would be swept away by the total abolition of such weapons. Since enforcement would remain with the Security Council, subject to veto, there would be no enforcement if one of the Communist powers violated the agreement. As the plan stands, it is a bid for Communist military supremacy in a world deprived of atomic weapons, where genuine enforcement would exist only on paper.

But if this is unacceptable, the West must share some of the blame. It is the West that proposed the size of armies now accepted, agreed to the ultimate abolition of atomic weapons, and so far has failed to insist on the creation of an independent enforcement agency with adequate powers. If the West now discovers it must have more realistic enforcement, the Soviet Union can ~~legitimately complain~~ contend that it has simply gone along with what the West proposed.

In many respects the Soviet proposal contains substantial concessions, perhaps as significant as the Soviet willingness to complete an Austrian treaty. Maybe the time has come for a searching discussion of disarmament, here and everywhere, to learn how far we really would have to go to get ~~XXXX~~ some measure of the real thing.

There are those who maintain that in the struggle for power between the East and West, a show of force can and will be avoided. But Seneca, ~~wise in the ways of the world,~~ long ago remarked that "no one with safety can long expose himself to danger. Whom disaster often passes by, she finds at last." Of course, Randle Cotgrave had a reasonable solution when he said:"He that fears danger in time, seldom feels it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 11, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The State Department says an attack by Chinese Communist Jets on American planes off Korea yesterday was "unwarranted and illegal." We have told General Taylor, the United Nations commander in Korea, to protest to the military armistice commission in Korea. Eight of our Sabrejets were attacked by 12 to 16 Communist planes. We shot down two and probably a third.

In Washington today the President explained to reporters his views on the proposed Four Power meeting of chiefs of state. He thinks such a meeting should last about three days...he thinks such a meeting should last about three days...he thinks it could profitably cover all world problems, including the Far East...He says the whole thing now in in the exploratory stage. The foreign ministers will discuss it in Vienna over the week-end. Mr. Eisenhower made it clear that he feels there has been a growing sentiment throughout the world for a meeting "at the summit" that would accomplish something. He feels it is important now to clarify the issues. He cuations that it will not be possible to turn the world around in a few days or weeks. As the President sees it, the Big Power meeting would define or clarify issues...not deal with specific solutions. And it would be a way of testing Russia's sincerity about wanting to relieve world tensions.

Mr. Eisenhower also was asked a number of questions about the anti-polio vaccine situation. Mr. Eisenhower said he believes "implicitly that the Salk vaccine "will, within a measurable time, really eliminate polio in this country country." Then, reminding the reporters that he was not a scientist, the President said: government scientists probably released the vaccine too soon because of heavy public pressure. He said the scientists may have "shortcut a a little bit." But he had no criticism of this action. Mr. Eisenhower says there was great pressure to release the vaccine quickly. Some of the exhaustive tests through which a vaccine normally goes were shortcut.

A number of Democrats today criticized Welfare Secretary Hobby. Vanik of Ohio charged whe was hasty in licensing the vaccine and "should be held accountable." Spence of Kentucky said he doubts she will appear to testify before his committee. Bolling of Missouri called for an end to the constant heckling of Surgeon General Scheele. He suggests Mrs. Hobby had ducked her responsibilities.

At his news conference today the President offered his thanks to Republican Senator Margaret Chase Smith of Maine. She had expressed the hope that he would seek re-election. But Mr. Eisenhower said he had no idea where Mrs. Smith got the impression that he will not run again.

And in Kansas City, Roy Roberts, editor of the Kansas City Star, and an original Eisenhower for President booster, wrote today that the President might not run. Roberts says Mr. Eisenhower would not run "just to save the party..he doesn't owe it that much." But Roberts feels he would run if he feels his "prestige, experience and leadership is essential at ahe time in world affairs."

In Paris today the 14 nations of the North Atlantic Treaty alliance called for a truce in the Far East and a big Four agreement on European problems. to end the threat of another world war. They warn that more fighting in Asia "will clearly endanger the peace of the world" And they suggested to the Big Four that the reunification of Germany and a general disarmament agreement should be their main tasks at the proposed "meeting at the summit."

The Western allies are having trouble with the Russians in Vienna. The Russians are now refusing to put into the Austrian treaty the economic concessions Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov gave Austrian Chancellor Raab at their Moscow conference last month. This could delay the scheduled Sunday signing. And American sources reveal that Secretary of State Dulles will not to to Vienna until the negotiating ambassadors have reached complete agreement.

In Poland, where Russia and her satellites are holding a security conference, Soviet Premier Bulganin said his country wants an end to the cold war. He said he'll carefully study the western proposal for talks among the chiefs of state. This information was given out by the Communist spokesman. No western reporters are allowed to attend the Communist meeting.

In Washington, the Congress has completed action on a bill to raise the pay of 500-thousand postal workers by an average of eight point eight per cent. There are indications that the President may veto the bill which would cost the government 178 million dollars a year.

The House appropriations committee discolosed today it is investigating what Democratic Representative Mahon of Texas calls "excessively high profits" on big defense contracts. He says the taxpayer has been "losing his shirt" on non-competitive military buying in which the seller is guaranteed a "very profitable return."

And the State Department says he have agreed to permit an official delegation of Soviet farmers to visit American farm areas. Some American farmers, in return, will visit Russian farms this summer. The Russians will come here as an official delegation; so it will not be necessary to fingerprint them. This requirement caused a postponment of a previously planned trip.

The C.I.O. steelworkers said today they will ask the basic steel industry for "a substantial wage increase". And they want to negotiate with the six biggest companies at the same time.

The Sovite disarmament proposal published today is Move Number Three in the current East-West competition. Chou En-Lai took the lead at Bandung. The West got it back in Paris by uniting, with some guffing and puffing, for a Big Four conference at the highest level. Now the Soviet Union has produced a shrewdly-drafted disarmenent proposal in an effert to win back the initiative.

One can call this rivalry an unexpected blessing. It may not of itself promise anything, but if the two great camps are so eager to demonstrate that it is peace they want, tt ought to make the change of getting peace that much better.

The Soviet Union, being a totalitarian state, is run by a handful of men who make the public opinion in their country. They don't have to inform or obey it. That gives them a decided edge in conducting foreign affairs. The disarmentnt proposal is a case in point. It could be timed perfectly to recapture the initiative. The West's top-level conference still would be the more important event. But when the Big Four meet they will have to talk about disarmement, and the Soviet proposal will get the first consideration. The press of the world will have to analyze it; the foreign offices will have to weigh it; the experts will have to probe it, for any obscure and fateful meaning. This is going to find the democracies at a disadvantage. So far they have recieved little education in the principles or the intricacies of disarmement. And in the West, public opinion had to be obeyed.

The Eisenhower and Truman administrations have treated disarmement as a highly technical subject beyond the public's grasp. The original Baruch porposal for an atomic control did have a decided public relations value, so did the Acheson proposals for total disarmament back in Paris three years ago. But disarmement hadn't seemed like a practical subject. And the State Department suffered from an inability to make up its own mind about what it wanted. So now we are caught unprepared. Disarmement still may not be practical , but as an idea it is one of the cecisive forces in the cold war.

The Soviet disarmement proposal goes a long way to meet the program embodied in British and French proposals and further developed by the United States. It accepts the West's figures for the maximum size of armed forces of five great powers, to be reached in two cuts, one next year, the other the year after. The United States, Soviet Union, and Communist China each would have one, to one-and-a-half million men, the British and French each 650, 000. It calls for the ultimate prohibition of atomic weapons and weapons of mass destruction, to go into effect in the second stage of the program; that is, after some genuine reduction in armed forces has occurred. It provides for permanent international inspection, both of aromic and conventional disarmament, and goes much further in defining this than Moscow has offered before. But this is not to be enforcible control by an international agency with powers. Enforcement ould remain with the Security Council of the United Nations and would be subject to the veto. That's one catch.

A new feature of the proposal calls for the abandonment of all military naval, and air bases on territories of other countries. And a concession is offered to possessors of atomic weapons during stage one of disarmement. While they must forego their use in warfare, they are authorized to use them against aggression. Here, however, the catch is that aggression would have to be so designated by the Security Council, where the veto bould be in force.

Under the Soviet proposal the Soviet Union and Communist Chief would have armed forces up to three million strong, and the United States, Britain and France would have two million, three hundred thousand. And any Western advantage in nuclear weapons would be swept away by the total abolitoon of such eeapons. Since enforcement would remain with the Security Council, subject to veto, there would be no enforcement if one of the Communist violated the agreement. As the plan stands, it is a bid for Communist military supremacy in a world deprived of atomic weapons, where genuine enforcement would exist only on paper.

But if this is unacceptable, the West must share some of the blame. It is the West that proposed the size of armies now accepted, agreed to the ultimate abolition of atomic weapons, and so far has failed to insist on the creation af an independent enforcement agency with adequate powers. If the West now discovers it must have more realistic enforcement, the Soviet Union can content that it has simply gone along with what the West proposed.

In many respects the Soviet proposal contains substantial concessions, perhaps as significant as the Soviet willingness to complete an Austrian treaty. Maybe the time has come for a searching discussion of disarmement, here and everywhere, to learn how far we really would have to go to get some measure of the real thing.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with hhe Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There are those who maintain that in the struggle for power between the East and West, a show of force can and will be avoided. But Seneca, long ago remarked that "no one with safety can long expose himself to danger. Whom disaster often passes by, she finds at last." Of course, Randle Cotgrave had a reasonable solution when he said: "He that fears danger in time, seldom feels it."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Swing May 11

The Soviet disarmament proposal published today is Move Number Three in a current East-West competition, one of a welcome nature since it is competition to keep the initiative in the search for peace. Chou En-lai took the lead at Bandung. The West got it back in Paris by uniting, with some huffing and puffing, for a Big Four conference at the highest level. Now the Soviet Union has produced a shrewdly-drafted disarmament proposal to win back the peace initiative ~~that supports Moscow's claim to recognition as an eager seeker for peace~~.

¶ One can call this rivalry an unexpected blessing. It may not of itself promise anything, but if the two great camps are so eager to demonstrate that it is peace they want, it ought to make the chance of getting peace that much better.

¶ The Soviet Union, being a totalitarian state, is run by a handful of men who make the public opinion in their country and don't have to inform ir or obey it. That gives them a decided edge in conducting foreign affairs. The disarmament proposal is a case in point. It could be timed perfectly to recapture the peace initiative in the search for peace. The West's top-level conference would be still the more important event. But when the Big Four meet they will have to talk about disarmament, and ~~now~~ the Soviet proposal will get the first consideration. The press of the world will have to analyze it, the foreign offices will have to weigh it, the experts will have to probe it for any obscure and fateful meanings. This is going to find the democracies at a disadvantage. So far they have received little edication in the principles or the inricacies of disarmament. And in the West, public opinion has to be obeyed.

¶ The Eisenhower and Truman administrations have treated disarmament as a highly technical subject beyond the public's grasp. The original Baruch proposal for atomic control did have a decided ~~had public-relations~~ value, ~~as~~ so did the Acheson proposals for total disarmament made in Paris three years ago. But disarmament ~~people in this country have not been able to acquire much knowledge of what is involved in disarmament. It~~ hasnt ~~hadn't~~ seemed like a practical subject. And the State Department suffered from an inability to make up its own mind about what it wanted. So now we are caught unprepared. Disarmament still may not be practical, but as an idea it is one of the ~~[illegible]~~ decisive forces in the cold war.

¶ The Soviet disarmament proposal ~~was made by Jakob Malik in the UN disarmament talks in London, and then promptly leaked. [illegible] publication in Moscow. It~~ goes a long to meet the program embodied in British and French proposals and further developed by the United States. It accepts the West's figures for the maximum size of armed forces of the Five Great Powers, to be reached in two cuts, one next year, the other the year after. The United States, Soviet Union and Communist China each would have one, to one-and-a-half million men, the British and French each 650,000. It calls for the ultimate prohibition of atomic weapons and weapons of mass destruction, to go into effect in the second stage of the program, that is, after some genuine reduction in armed forces has gone into effect. It provides for permanent international inspection, both of atomic and conventional disarmament, and goes much further in defining this than Moscow has offered before. But this is not to be enforcible control by an international agency with powers. Enforcement would remain with the Security Council of the United Nations and would be subject to the veto.

A new feature of the proposal calls for the abandonment of all military, naval and air bases on territories of other countries. And a concession is offered to possessors of atomic weapons during stage one of disarmament. While they must forego their use in warfare, they are authorized to use them against aggression. Here, however, the catch is that aggression would have to be so designated by the Security Council, where the veto would be in force.

By the Soviet proposal the Soviet Union and Communist China would have armed forces mm up to three million strong, and the United States, Britain and France would have two million three-hundred thousand. And any Western advantage in nuclear weapons would be swept away by the total abolition of such weapons. Since enforcement would remain with the Security Council, subject to veto, there would be no enforcement if one of the Communist powers violated the agreement. As the plan stands, it is a bid for Communist military supremacy in a world deprived of atomic weapons where genuine enforcement would exist only on paper.

But if this is unacceptable, the West must share some of the blame, ~~for keeping to make it so~~ It is the West that proposed the size of armies now accepted, agreed to the utlimate abolition of atomic weapons, and so far has failed to insist on the creation of an independent enforcement agency with adequate powers. If the West now discovers it must have more realistic enforcement, the Soviet Union can legitimately complain that it has simply gone along with what the West proposed.

In many respects the Soviet proposal contains substantial concessions, perhaps no less significant than the Soviet willingness to complete an Austrian treaty. ~~But~~ ~~An~~ An expert on disarmament told this reporter that probably not a single senator would vote for what the Soviet proposes. ~~He~~ But he added in the same breath that very few would vote for the latest Western proposals either, if they understood them. Maybe the time has come for a searching discussion of disarmament, here and everywhere, ~~and~~ to learn how far we really have to go to get the real thing.

Thursday May 12, 1955

This is the news:

The Big Four today agreed on a peace treaty for Austria. Its expected to be signed by the foreign ministers, in Vienna, on Sunday. Then, Austria will be free again, for the first time in 17 years...following German, then Four-power occupation. Ninety days after the treaty is ratified the 70-thousand occupation troops of the Four Powers will be withdrawn..after ten years. And this is expected to be completed by the end of the year. An official communique says "full agreement has been reached on all articles of the treaty draft."

In London today, British Disarmament Delegate Anthony Nutting says Russia and the West have now reached agreement on two of the three major principles of disarmament. They agree on reducing mass armies..and banning nuclear bombs. But they do not yet agree on effective controls to see that no one cheats on disarmament agreements.

Prime Minister Eden said today that if progress is made in the proposed talks with Russia he hopes to cut the two-year draft period for British youths. In another campaign speech last night former Prime Minister Atlee called for a shorter service by DRAFTEES.

Democratic Senator George says we have nothing to lose by taking a vigorous part in the proposed meeting of the Big Four chiefs of state. The Senator says we can only SUFFER "if we assume that those who represent us will go to sleep on the job."

Secretary of State Dulles is reported to believe that the biggest American achievement at the North Atlantic Treaty meeting in Paris was putting across our foreign policy for the Far East. And authoritative sources say America will discuss Far Eastern questions at the proposed Big Four meeting. But we will not agree to permit Red China to attend.

Today, in Warsaw, a delegate from Communist China pledged to fight alongside the Soviet Union and its European allies if war starts in Europe. At the same time the Chinese spokesman said he's convinced world peace can be preserved.

Secretary Dulles and French Premier Faure today reached complete agreement on the Indo-China problem. And in Haiphong, French coloniliasm came to an end . French troops pulled out of North Viet Nam as Ho Chi Minh 's Communist forces marched in to take military control of the city.

On Formosa, the head of the Nationalist Chinese information bureau denies a charge by correspondents that there has been censorship of news on the island.

In Washington today, the House voted overwhelmingly to endorse the President's military manpower cuts. IN THE 31-and-a-half billion dollar defense bill. Democrats were sharply split on the issue with Chairman Vinson of the Armed Services Committee AND Chairman Cannon of Appropriations supporting the Administration. Other Democrats objected particularly to the manpower cut of 368-thousand men. Cannon told his colleagues that if war comes it will be decided so fast that the army and navy would not get into the fight. He said defense officials have testified in secret that it would take the army a year and the Navy two weeks to get into a war.

A spokesman for the Public Health Service says the agency hopes to be able to announce tomorrow the first findings of its inspection of the Salk anti-polio vaccine at the Parke-Davis laboratories in Detroit. And the Brotherhood of Locomotive Trainmen today called on the President to fire Welfare Secretary Hobby .."to restore public confidence in the anti-polio program."

George V. Allen, assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern Affairs, told Senators today: Moscow is stepping up is economic aid in south Asia partly because the Russians have seen the success of our aid program in that area.

Democratic Senator Douglas of Illinois charges that the government could lose almost five billion dollars in revenue under what he called "the corporation windfall" sections of the 1954 tax law. The Treasury Department is now asking repeal of these sections because their effect is much greater than anticipated. Yesterday, Treasury Secretary Humphrey said the revenue loss might run as high as one billion dollars.

The government today filed an anti-trust suit against six major publishing and advertising associations. They are charged with illegally channeling national advertising through about one thousand agencies. The American Newspaper Publishers Association says the suit is aimed at "satisfying someone's desire for public victory and an injunction against an ARM of the press."

Edward R. Murrow: May 12, 1955 7:45 p.m.

Before the four-power talks at the summit get under way, it is well to recall some recent history. A new era is opening. But it is opening because an old era is closing. The one that closed, brought about the enormous build-up of Western strength after the Korean aggression, and ended with West Germany joining the Western defense system. Before Germany was taken into NATO the Soviet Union issued a number of ominous threats. It said, threateningly, that it "would not tolerate" the rearming of Germany. It said that if the Paris accords were ratified it would refuse to negotiate over the unification of Germany. It said it would cancel its treaties of friendship with Britain and France, and would set up a unified command in its East-European satellites. Only two of the threats have been carried out. The treaties with Britain and France were terminated, which was just as well, since they had long since ceased to mean anything. And the unified command is being decreed in Warsaw this week, which is making no impression on the West because it had always assumed the satellites were already under unified Soviet command.

What should register in this hour, when the Soviet government has made two important peace offers, is that they arrived as soon as it was settled beyond recall that the Paris accords were going into effect. Therewith the Soviet Union rushed in with far-reaching proposals affecting Germany and disarmament. And before the question needs to be answered as to the value of these offers, it should be appreciated that Western steadfastness, unity and increased strength created the conditions in which offers on basic issues from the Soviet Union were forthcoming. Since the Truman days -- which were Acheson days, too -- the American doctrine has been to negotiate, but to do it from strength.

That is not saying that negotiations from strength are bound to amount to something. It is not saying that the Soviet government doesn't intend to win more than it yields by making these offers. All it is saying is that two offers already are in the hopper, and that is how they got there.

The top-level meeting of the Big Four is already being looked at suspiciously by some right-wing Republicans in this country. Senator Bridges in a major speech in the Senate yesterday admonished President Eisenhower to beware of "appeasement, compromise and weakness." Senator Knowland expressed skepticism about any four power meeting, on the ground that small states have to pay for them. He cited Munich, Yalta, and Geneva as proving his case. Several other Republicans showed their dislike of the talks, including Senator McCarthy.

But Western foreign offices have been carefully studying the Soviet offers, trying to discover how the Kremlin itself views the upcoming negotiations. They have received some definite impressions. In the draft of a resolution that accompanies the Soviet disarmament proposal, the Kremlin advocates ultimate withdrawal of all occupation forces from Germany, East and West, and goes on to drop in a significant proviso that the withdrawal by the four powers be "to their national frontiers." For the United States that means getting out of Europe. But for the Soviet Union it means getting out of the satellite countries, and this is something new, coming from Moscow.

It is linked with the insistence on the withdrawal of all nations from bases on the territories of others. And in these two proposals, some observers see the shape and form of the Soviet objective. What the Kremlin seems to want most is to get the American air-force out of its advanced bases, and our army out of Europe. And for this it appears to be willing to pay the price of withdrawing its own forces from the Odor-Neisse line back to Soviet territory. It should be mentioned that the Red Army, behind its own borders, can march again into Germany more easily than an American expeditionary force can cross the Atlantic. But it also should be noted that the Kremlin doesn't demand the dismantling of the forward bases, but only that they shouldn't be used by foreign forces. Obviously they could be re-occupied in an emergency.

This pulling back of advanced military forces is, of course, hedged about by many considerations, and is tied in with the Soviet disarmament proposals. But if world tensions are to be reduced it may be that the only progress to be expected is in some such mutual acceptance of a reduced strategic advantage. If that is all that the top-level talks will reach out for, there will be no joyous ceremonial ending of the cold war, no delirious crowds of celebrants, no televised scenes as the millenium is entered. At best, there will be a slightly improved climate, a little less distrust, and then the long, tedious troubled period of continuing negotiations.

The last time the top men of the Big Four met was at Potsdam. They set up the Council of Foreign Ministers, and charged it with filling in the details of the broad generalities agreed to at the summit. The machinery worked for a time, then collapsed when it tried to harmonize the differences over Germany. Now the machinery may be set up once more, to work for as long as events permit.

All in all, it is not an alluring outlook. But it may be wise to enter the new era soberly; appreciating not only what it can produce, but what it can't be expected to produce.

However pessimistic we might tend to be when it comes to something being accomplished at diplomatic conferences, we must not allow ourselves to despair. For, as Sophocles once [redacted] (said:) "It is hope alone which maintains most of mankind." Clare Boothe put it another way when she remarked: "There are no hopeless situations. There are only hopeless men."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Before the four-power talks at the summit get under way, ~~and attention centers on the Soviet offers to end the cold war~~, it is well to recall some recent history. A new era is opening. But it is opening because an old era is closing. The one that closed brought about the enormous build-up of Western strength after the Korean aggression and ended with West Germany joining the Western defense system. Before Germany was taken into NATO the Soviet Union issued a number of ominous threats. It said in utmost solemnity that it "would not tolerate" the rearming of Germany. It said that if the Paris accords were ~~passed and~~ ratified it would refuse to negotiate over the unification of Germany. It said it would cancel its treaties of friendship with Britain and France, and would set up a unified command in its East-European satellites. Only two of the threats have been carried out. The treaties with Britain and France were terminated, which was just as well since they ~~though that hardly caused a ripple in these countries since the treaties~~ had long before ceased to mean anything. And the unified command is being decreed in Warsaw this week, which is making ~~has made~~ no impression on the West because it had always assumed the satellites were de facto under unified Soviet command.

¶ What should register in this hour, when the Soviet government has made two important peace offers, is that they arrived as soon as ~~at the very moment~~ when it was settled beyond recall that the Paris accords were going into effect. Thereupon, ~~not be beaten. NATO only; West Germany was welcomed as a partner, and~~ the Soviet Union rushed in with farreaching proposals affecting Germany and disarmament. And before the question ~~can~~ needs to be answered as to the value of these offers, it should be ~~sufficiently~~ appreciated that Western steadfastness, unity and increased strength created the conditions in which ~~negotiations on~~ offers on basic issues ~~with~~ from the Soviet Union ~~be possible~~ were forthcoming. Since the Truman days--which were Acheson days, too--the American doctrine has been to negotiate, but ~~only~~ to do it from strength, ~~in the conviction that only negotiations from strength can amount to anything~~.

That is not saying that negotiations ~~that~~ from strength are bound to amount to something. It is not saying that the Soviet giverment doesn't intend to win more than it yields ~~in the negotiations~~ by making these offers. All it is saying is that two ~~Soviet~~ offers already are in the hopper, and that is how they got there.

The top-level meeting of the Big Four is already being looked at suspiciously by some right-wing Republicans in this country,

Senator Bridges in a major speech in the Senate yesterday admonished President Eisenhower to beware of "appeasement, compromise and weakness." Senator Knowland expressed skepticism about any four power meeting, on the ground that small states have to pay for them. He cited Munich, Yalta and Geneva as proving his case. Several other Republicans showed their dislike of the talks, including Senator McCarthy.

But Western foreign offices have been carefully studying the Soviet offers, trying to discover how the Kremlin itself see the upcoming negotiations. They have received some definite impressions. In the draft of a resilution that accompanies the Soviet disarmament proposal, the Kremlin advocates ultimate withdrawal of all occupation forces from Germany, East and West, and goes on to drop in a significant provise that the wihdrawal by the four powers be "to their national frontiers." For the United States that means getting out of Europe. But for the Soviet Union it means getting out of the satellite countries, and this is somehow new, coming from Moscow. It is linked with the insistence on the withdrawal of all nations from bases on the territories of others. And in these two proposals, some observers see the shape and form of the Soviet objective. What the Kremlin seems to want most is to get the American air-force out of its advanced bases ~~from which the Soviet Union is open to immediate atomic attack~~. And for this it appears to be willing to pay the price of withdrawing its own forces from the Odor-Neisse line back to its ~~own~~ Soviet territory. It should be mentioned that the Red Army, behind its own borders, can march again into Germany more easily ~~than~~ than an American expeditionary force can ~~come~~ cross the Atlantic. But it also should be noted that the Kremlin ~~does~~ doesn't demand the dismantling of the forward basis but only that ~~foreign forces should not use them~~ They should not be used by foreign forces. Obviously they could be reoccupied in an emergency.

¶ This pulling back of advanced military forces is, of course, hedged about ~~by any number of issues~~ many considerations, and is tied in with the Soviet disarmament proposals. But if, ~~at the present time through negotiations~~, world tensions are to be reduced it may be that the only progress to be expected is in some such mutual acceptance of a reduced strategic advantage. If that is all that the top-level talks will reach out for, there will be no joyous ceremonial ending of the cold war, no delirious crowds of celebrants, no televised scenes as the millenium is entered. At best, there will be a slightly improved climate, a little less distrust, and then the long, tedious troubled period of continuing negotiations, where problem after problem is tackled without satisfaction to either side.

[redacted]

¶ The last time the top men of the Big Four met was at Potsdam, ~~when~~ They set up the Council of Foreign Ministers, and charged it with filling in the details of the broad generalities agreed to at the summit. The machinery worked for a time, then collapsed when it tried to harmonise the differences over Germany. Now the machinery may be set up once more, to work for as long as events permit.

¶ All in all, it is not an alluring outlook. But it may be wise to enter the new era ~~with sober appreciation~~ soberly appreciating not only what it can produce, but what it can't be expected to produce.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Big Four today agreed on a peace treaty for Austria. It is expected to be signed by the foreign ministers, in Vienna on Sunday. Then, Austria will be free again for the first time in 17 years...following German, then four-power occupation. Ninety days after the treaty is ratified the 70- thousand occupation troops of the Four Powers will be withdrawn ..after ten years. And this is expected to be completed by the end of the year. An official communique ways "full agreement has been reached on all articles of the treaty draft."

In London today, British Disarmament Delegate Anthony Nutting says Russia and the West have now reached agreement on two of the three major principles of disarmament. They agree on reducing mass armies..and banning nuclear bombs. But they do not yet agree on effective controls to see that no one cheats on disarmement agreements. Prime Minister Eden said today that if progress is made in the proposed talks with Russia he hopes to put the two-year draft period for British youths. In another campaign speech last night, former Prime Minister Atlee called for a shorter service by draftees.

Democratic Senator George says we have nothing to lose by taking a vigorous part in the proposed meeting of the Big Four chiefs of state. The Senator says we can only suffer "if we assume that those who represent us will go to sleep on the job."

Secretary of State Dulles is reported to believe that the biggest American achievement at the North Atlantic Treaty meeting in Paris was putting across our foreign policy for the Far East. And authoritative sources say America will discuss Far Eastern questions at the proposed Big Four meeting

But we will not agree to permit Red China to attend.

Today, in Warsaw, a delegate from Communist China pledged to fight along side the Soviet Union and its European allies if war starts in Europe. At the same time the Chinese spokesman said he's convinced world peace can be preserved.

Secretary Dulles and French Premier Favre today reached complete agreement on the Indo-China problem. And in Haiphong, French colonialism came to an end. French troops pulled out of North Viet Nam as Ho Chi Minh's Communist forees marched in to take military control of the city.

On Formosa, the head of the Nationalist Chinese information bureau denies a charge by correspondents that ther has been cessorship of news on the island.

In Washington today, the House voted overwhelmingly to endores the President's military manpower cuts in the 31-and-a-half billion dollar defense bill. Democrats were sharply split on the issue with Chair an Vinson of the armed Services committee and Chairman Cannon of Appropreations supporting the Administration. Other Democrats objected particularly ot the manpower cut of 368 - thousand men. Cannon told his colleagues that if war comes it will be decided so fast that the army and navy would not get into the fi ht. He said defense officials have testified in secret that it would take the army a year and the Navy too weeks to get into a war.

A spokesman for the Public Health Service says the agency hopes to be able to announce tomorrow the first findings of its inspection of the Salk anti-polio vaccine at the Parke-Davis laboratories in Detroit. And the Brotherhood of Locomotive Trainmen today called on the President to fire Welfare Secretary Hobby .."to restore public confidence in the anti-polio program"

George V. Allen, assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs, told Senators today: Moscow is stepping up its economic aid in South Asis partly because the Russians have seen the success of our aid program in that ares.

Democratic Senator Douglas of Illinois charges that the government could lose almost five billion dollars in revenue under what he called "the corporation windfall" sections of the 1954 tax law. The Treasury department is now asking repeal of these sections because their effect is much greater than anticipated. Yesterday, Treasury Secretary Humphrey said the revenue loss might rus an haig as one billion dollars.

The government today filed an anti-trust suit against six major publishing and advertising associations. They are charged with illegally channeling advertising through about one thousand agencies. The American Newspaper Publishers Association says the suit is aimed at "satisfying someone's desire for public victory and an injunction against an arm of the press."

Before the four-power talks at the summit get underway, it is well to recall some recent history. An new era is opening. But it is opening because an old era is closing. The one that closed brought about the enormous build-up of Western strength after the Korean aggression and ended with West Germany joining the Western defense system. Berore ermany was taken into NATO the Soviet Union issued a number of ominous threats. Is said threateningly that it "would not tolerate" the rearming of Germany. It said that if the Paris accords were ratified it would refuse to negotiate over the unification of Germany. It said it would cancel its treaties of friendhhip with Britain and Frnnce, and would set up a unified command in its ast-European satellites. Only two of the threats have been carried out. The treaties with Britain and France were terminated, which was just as well, since they had long ceased to mean anything. And the unified command is being decreed in Warsaw this week, which is making no impression on the West because it had always assumed the satellites were already under unified Soviet command.

What should register in this hour, when the Soviet government has made two important peace offers, is that they arrived as soon as it was settled beyond recall that the Paris accords were going into effect. Therewith the Soviet Union rushed in with far-reaching proposals affecting Germany and disarmament. And before the question needs to be answered as to the value of these offers, it should be appreciated that Western steadfastness, unity and increased strength created the conditions in which offers on basic issues from the Soviet Union were forthcoming. Since the Truman days -- which were Acheson days, too -- the American doctrine has been to negotiate, but to do it from strength.

That is not saying that negotiations from strength are bound to amount to something. It is not saying that the Soviet governmetnt doesn't intend to win more than it yeilds by making these offers. All it is saying is, that two offers already are in the hopper, and that is how they got there.

The top-level meeting of the Big Four is already being looked at suspiciously by some right-wing Republicans in this country. Senator Bridges in a major speech in the Senate yesterday admonished President Eisenhower to be aware of "apeasement, compromise and weakness." Senator Knowland expressed skepticism about any four power meeting, on the ground that small states have to pay for them. He cited Munich, Yalta, and Geneva as proving his case. Several other Republicans showed their dislike of the talks, including Senator McCarthy.

But Western foreign offices have been carefully studying the Soviet offers trying to discover how the Kremlin itself views the upcoming negotiations. They have received some difinite impressions. In the draft of a resolution that accompanies the Soviet disarmement proposal, the Kremlin advocates ul-ultimate withdrawal of all occupation forces from Germany, East and West, and goes on to drop in a significant proviso that the withdrawal by the four powers be "to their national frontiers." For the United States that means getting out of Europe. But for the Soviet Union it means getting out of the satellite countries, and this is something new, coming from Moscow.

It is linked with the insistence on the withdrawal of all nations from bases on the territories of others. And in these two proposals, some observers see the shape and form of the Soviet objective. What the Kremlin seems to want most is to get the American air force out of its advanced bases, and our army out of Europe. And for this it appears to be willing to pay the price of withdrawing its own forces from the Odor-Neisse line back to Soviet territory. Is should be mentioned that the Red Army, behind its own borders can march again into Germany more easily than an American expeditionary force can cross the Atlantic. But it also should be noted that the Kremlin doesn't demand the dismantling of the forward bases, but only that they shouldn't be used by foreign forces. Obviously they could be reopcupied in an emergency.

This pulling back of advanced military forces is, of course, hedged about by many considerations, and is tied in with the Soviet disarmament proposals. But if world tensions are to be reduced it may be that the only progress to be expected is in some such mutual acceptance of a reduced strategic advantage. If that is all that top level talks will reach out for, there will be no joyous ceremonial ending of the cold war, no delirious crowds of celebrants, no televised scenes as the millenium is entered. At best, there will be a slightly improved climate, a little less distrust, and then the long tedious troubled period of continuing negotiations.

The last time the top men of the Big Four met was at Potsdam. They set up the Council of Foreign Ministers, and charged it with filling in the details of the broad generalities agreed to at the summit. The machinery worked for a time, then collapsed when it tried to harmonize the differences over Germany. Now the machinery may be set up onee more, to work for as long as events permit.

All in all, it is not an alluring outlook. But it may be wise to enter the new era soberly; appreciating not only what it can produce, but what it can't be expected to produce.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Now here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: However pessimistic we might tend to be when it comes to something being accomplished at diplomatic conferences, we must not allow ourselves to despair. For as Sophocles once said: "It is hope alone which maintains most of mankind. Clare Boothe put it another way when whe remarked: "There are no hopeless situations. There are only hopeless men."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Friday, May 13, 1955

This is the news:

The government today started releasing some Salk anti-polio vaccine. It cleared enough to innoculate about one million children. All of the vaccine released today was made by Parke, Davis and Company in Detroit. Actually the government, after a re-check, approved four and a quarter million shots. But about three-fourths of this already has been used to VACCINATE first and second graders.

Surgeon General Leonard Scheele who made this announcement told a House committee earlier in the day: "There is still every reason to believe that enough vaccine will be available to vaccinate the children in the most susceptible age groups before the heights of the polio season." [This usually runs from mid-August to the middle of September.] Dr. Scheele also said: nothing has developed in the study of the situation to threaten the ultimate success of the vaccine program...He feels federal controls over the distribution of the vaccine might delay rather than speed-up the mass innoculations. And again--as he did last week--Dr. Scheele told the Representatives: "The vaccine cannot be expected to prevent all paralytic polio."

The President today named General Maxwell D. Taylor to be the new army chief of staff. He will succeed General Mathew B. Ridgeway who has decided to retire after 38 years of service. General Ridgeway reached the retirement age of 60 at the end of March but the President approved his continuing in office. General Taylor is now commander in the Far East. He participated in some of the big battles of World War Two..was 8th army commander in Korea and then became commander in chief of all American and allied forces in the Far East. In a book written by General Eisenhower after world war two, he said of General Taylor:"The risks he ran were greater than I asked any other agent or [redacted] emissary to undertake during the war."

The Western Powers today made public their proposal for a fool-proof disarmament plan. In answer to the Russian release of their plan the western powers reveal that we are insisting on an international control agency with unrestricted powers of inspection. We want this control agency to have the right to be stationed permanently in the countries that agree to the disarmament plan. We want the agency to have the unrestricted right to go into and out of each member country. There would be free travel within each country with "unrestricted access to all installations and facilities." In addition, the international agency would have unrestricted use of all communication facilities, that they need to carry out their work. In the past the Russians have opposed giving the international inspectors full rights to visit all plants.

Secretary of State Dulles today flew from Paris to Vienna to gather with the other foreign ministers, to sign the Austrian peace treaty. We'll hear a direct report from Vienna in a few minutes.

In Poland, the Communists and their satellite countries have approved a military alliance, to operate under a unified commander..who has not yet been named publicly.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer today told his cabinet, he is quitting as foreign minister..so that he can concentrate on developing a Democratic german army.

And the Moscow censors permit American correspondents there, to tell us that foreign observers believe, the Russians may soon announce a plan to reunify Germany, in exchange for an iron-clad guarantee of German neutrality.

Communist troops today took over Haiphong in North Indo-China and immediately cut all air and telegraphic communications with the free world.

French Premier Faure says France, the United States and Great Britain will do everything possible to support South Viet Nam's Premier Diem.

In Singapore today there were new riots in a BUS strike. Yesterday American Correspondent Gene Symonds was killed by the rioters. Reports from Singapore say that Symonds, who covered the Korean war with distinction for the United Press, was permitted to lie in a street unattanded for a half hour after he was attacked by the rioters. The State Department says is it "greatly grieved and shocked" by Gene Symonds' death, AND HAS ordered an investigation.

Thirteen Asian countries meeting in India have turned down an American plan to put aid to Asia on a regional basis. The Asian nations prefer the present direct aid "strengthened as far as possible."

In Washington, Secretary of Agriculture Benson has proposed a rigid control program for the 1956 wheat crop. The growers will vote on this June 25.

Spokesmen for the Americanm Veterans Committee and Americans for Democratic Action today urged a Senate committee not to take any action on an Administration bill to let the government bar potential spies and sabateours from defense plants and those related to defense.

Assistant Attorney General Barnes says the Justice Department is studying anti-trust aspects of newspaper mergers which leave one paper in possession of the field.

My colleague Richard C. Hottelet, who normally covers West Germany, is now in Vienna for the final steps in the Austrian peace treaty. I've asked him to record this report for you:

-1934-

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, May 13, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... My colleague Richard C. Hottelet, who normally covers West Germany, is now in Vienna. He's there for the final steps in the Austrian peace treaty - and I've asked him to record this report for you.

HOTTELET: The Austrian state treaty has been concluded ... (unintelligible) The formal signature will take place on Sunday noon. And even the cynics seem to feel that nothing will now go wrong. After seventeen years of occupation, first by the Nazis, then by the Allies, Austria will again be independent. It's been a rough road. In 1943, the Allied powers agreed that Austria should not be treated as part of Hitler's Germany, but as a friendly, liberated state. It was to be occupied only until its final status was fixed by its liberators. That has taken ten full years. The West has pressed and worked on Austria's settlement. Literally hundreds of meetings were held to draft a treaty, but time and again the Russians pulled back or made openly impossible demands. Early on, they hooked the Austrian problem to Trieste; later to Germany. The Russians purported to fear a new Anschluss - and they also held out for more money. But all these Soviet conditions were pretexts. Moscow simply did not want a treaty for Austria.

Suddenly, this last February the Moscow line changed. Molotov let it be known that things were different; the Kremlin began to retreat from positions that it had been jealously guarding only a few weeks before. With a sweeping gesture it surrendered vast economic claims: oil fields and shipping lines which it could easily have kept.

In the last two weeks the Russians have again betrayed this eagerness to have a treaty. Here in Vienna they did not try to make things easy, exactly, but American Ambassador Llewellyn Thompson sensed that the Soviets were willing to back down, and he extracted one concession after another. He is given much of the credit. But, where in former times the Russians would have let the conference run on the rocks, this time they were willing to fight a rearguard action and then give in. The result is a treaty far better for Austria and the West than would have been thought possible even six months ago.

The people of Austria are delighted, of course. Sunday will be a national day of rejoicing. The church bells will be rung, flags will fly, there will be music in the streets of Vienna. The little republic is dusting off all the gold and glitter of imperial centuries for the signing of the treaty. The ceremony will be held in the Belvedere Palace. A gala reception will follow Sunday nite in the huge Palace of Schoenbrunn. The Emperor's own china and silverware will grace the Foreign Minister's banquet table. But the joy of the Austrians, great tho it be, is incidental. The signing of their treaty is only an episode in a continuing political struggle. The next chapter of that struggle opens right here.

Tomorrow nite the four foreign ministers will meet at dinner with their closest advisors to discuss the meeting at the summit, the meeting of the four heads of government. Chances are, nothing will be decided in Vienna. Mr. Dulles is due to fly back to Washington Sunday nite, and Mr. Molotov is leaving at the same time. There's not much opportunity there for much negotiation. All both sides seem to want is a general impression: Is the meeting of the great Big Four worthwhile? When should it be held and where? The guessing here in Vienna is that both sides will agree to hold the meeting, that they will roughly fix July as the time and some small neutral city as the place, not a capital or a big conference city, rather some place like Lugano or Lausanne, in Switzerland.

When the foreign ministers leave Vienna they will have accomplished a great deal. But one important question remains unanswered. No one has yet found out why the Russians changed their line and accepted the Austrian treaty. In Moscow, six weeks ago, Soviet Prime Minister Bulganin apparently gave a high Austrian official one explanation. He is supposed to have said that Russia held onto to Austria in the first place in order to prevent German rearmament. Now that the Paris treaties are in force, there is no longer any reason to stay in Austria. Another explanation is that Moscow now wants to create a neutral belt between the Western European Union and its own ~~xxx~~ satellite bloc, and is therefore glad to have a neutral Austria. Still another theory is this: As long as Russia held off on Austria, it stood accused of bad faith and world criticism pointed squarely to Moscow. In the long run this political disadvantage outweighed the dwindling material advantage of the occupation. In giving up Austrua now, Russia gets rid of a political liability and clears the way for fresh action. Soviet ...(unintelligible) ... may indicate that this action will follow soon. However, in retreating from Austria the Russians have given the West a taste of success. Their next encounter in the cold war should, therefore, be doubly thoughtful.

This is Richard C. Hottelet in Vienna. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

-30-

VANISHING ...

~~DROVE TO AN OFFICERS~~' CLUB FOR A COCKTAIL ...

~~PHOOP~~

One more news item; The Russians announced tonight that

UP100

~~BULLETIN~~

~~MOSCOW [redacted] MAY [redacted]~~--SOVIET PREMIER [redacted]I BULGANIN AND COMMUNIST PARTY SECRETARY [redacted] KHRUSHCHEV WILL PERSONALLY HEAD A "PEACE MISSION" TO YUGOSLAVIA AT THE END OF THIS MONTH. [redacted]

Today is Friday the 13th. And there are undoubtedly some who... being superstitious...might regard a day such as this as unlucky. But it was Plautus who concluded many years ago that "it's the way a Man uses luck that brings him eminence and makes us all pronounce him wise." To achieve this end, Oliver Wendell Holmes advised:"Be firm. One constant element in luck is genuine solid old Teutonic luck."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 13, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The government today started releasing some Salk Anti-polio vaccine. It cleared enough to innoculate about one million children. All of the vaccine release today was made by Parke, Davis and Company in Detroit. Actually the government, after a re-check, approved four and a quarter million shots. But about three-fourths of this already ahd been used to vaccinate first and second graders.

Surgeon General Leonard Scheele who made this announcement told a House committee earlier in the day:"There is still every reason to believe that enough vaccine will be available to vaccinate the children in the most susceptible age groups before the height of the polio season." This usually runs from mid August to the middle of September. Dr. Scheele also said: nothing has developed in the study of the situation to threaten the ultimate success of the vaccine program. He feels federal controls over the distribution of the vaccine might delay rather than speed up the mass innoculations. And again-- as he did last week -- Dr. Scheele told the Representatives: "The vaccine cannot be expected to prevent all paralytic polio.

The President today named General Maxwell D. Taylor to be the new army chief of staff. He will succeed General Mathew B. Ridgeway who has deceded to retire after 33 years of service. General Ridgeway reached the retirement age of 60 at the end of March but the President approved his continuing in Office. General Taylor is now commander in the Far East. He participated in some of the big battles of World War Two...was 8th army commander in Korea. and them became commander in chief of all American and allied forces in the Far East. In a book written by General Eisenhower after World War II, he said of General Taylor: "The risks he ran were greater than I asked any other agent or emmisary to undertake during the war."

The Western Powers today made public their proposal for a fool-proof disarmament plan. In answer to the Russian release of their plan the western powers reveal that we are insisting on an international control agency with unrestricted powers of inspection. We want this control agency to have the right to be stationed permanently in the countries that agree to the disarmament plan. We want the agency to have the unrestricted right to go into and out of each member country. There would be free travel within each country with "unrestricted access to all installations and facilities." In addition, the international agency would have unrestricted use of all communication facilities that they need to carry out their work. In the past the Russians have opposed giving the international inspectors full rights to visit all plants.

Secretary of State Dulles today flew from Paris to Vienna to gather with the other foreign ministers to sign the Austrian peace treaty. We'll hear a direct report from Vienna in a few minutes.

In Poland, the Communists and their satellite countries have approved a military alliance to operate under a unified commander..who has not yet been named publicly.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer today told his cabinet he is quitting as foreign minister..so that he can concentrate on developing a Democratic German army.

And the Moscow censors permit American correspondents there to tell us that foreign observers believe the Russians may soon announce a plan to reunify Germany in exchange for an iron-clad guarantee of German neautrality.

Communist troops today took over Haipong in North Indo-China and immediately cut all air and telegraphic communications with the free world.

French Premier Faure says France, the United States and Great Britain will do everything possible to support South Viet Nam's Premier Diem.

In Singapore today there were new riots in a bus strike. Yesterday American Correspondent Gene Symonds wis killed by the rioters. Reports from Singapore say that Symonds, who covered the Korean war with distinction for the United Press was permitted to lie in a street unattended for half an hour after he was attacked by the rioters. The State Departments says it is "greatly grieved and shocked" by Gene Symonds' death and has ordered an investigation.

Thirteen Asian countries meeting in India have turned down an American plan to put aid to Asia on a regional basis. The Asian nations prefer the present direct aid "strengthened as afr as possible."

In Washington, Secretary of Agriculture Benson has proposed a rigid control program for the 1956 wheat crop. The growers will voteon this June 25.

Spokesmen for the American Veterans Committee and Americans for Democratic Action today urged a Senate committee not to take any action on an Administration bill to let the government bar potential spies and sabateurs from defense plants and those related to defense.

Assistant Attorney General Barnes says the Justice Department is studying anti-trust aspects of the newspaper mergers which leave one paper in possission of the field.

My colleague Richard C. Hottelet, who normally covers West Germany, is now is Vienna for the final steps in the Austrian peace treaty. I've asked him to record this report for you.

HOTTELET: The Austrien state treaty has been concluded (uninteligible) ..The formal signature will take place on Sunday noon. And even the cynics seem to feel strongly that nothing will now go wrong. After seventeen years of occupation, first by the Nazis, then by the Allies, Austria will again be independent. It's been a rough road. In 1943, the Allied powers agreed that Austria should not be treated as part of Hitler's Germany, but as a friendly, liberated state. It was to be occupied only until its final status was fixed by its liberators. That has taken ten full years. The West has pressed and worked on Austria's settlement. Literally hundreds of meetings were held to draft a treaty, but time and again the Russians pulled back or made openly impossible demands. Early on, they hooked the Austrian problems to Triest; later to Germany. The Russians purported to fear a new Anachuuss - and they also held out for more money. But all these Soviet conditions were pretexts. Moscow simply did not want a treaty for Austria.

Suddenly, this last February the Moscow line changed Molotov let it be known that things were different; the Kremlin began to retreat from positions that it had been jealously guarding only a few weeks before. With 2 sweeping gestures it surrendered vast economic claims; oil fields and shipping lines which it could easlly have kept.

In the last two weeks the Russians have again betrayed this eagerness to have a treaty. Here in Vienna they did not try to make things easy, exactly, but American Ambassador Llewellyn Thompson sensed that the Soviets were willing to back down, and he extracted one concession after another. He is given much of the credit. But, where in former times the Russians would have let the conference run on the rocks, this time they were willing to fight a rearguard action and then give in. The result is a treaty far better for Austria and the West than would have been thought possible even six months ago.

The people of Austria are delighted, of course. Sunday will be a national day of rejoicing. The cuurch bells will be rung, flags will fly, there will music in the streets of Vienna. The little republic is dusting off all the gold and glitter if imperial centuries for the signing of the treaty. The ceremony will be held in The Belvedere Palace. A gala reception will follow Sunday night in the huge Palace of Scheonbrunn. The Emperor's own china and silverware will grace the Foreign Minister's banquet table. But the joy of the Austrians, great though it be, is indidental. The signing of their treaty is only an episode in a continuing political struggle. The next chapter of that struggle opens right here. Tomorrow night the four foreign ministers Will meet at dinner with their closest advisors to discuss the meeting at the summit, the meeting of the four heads of government. Chances are, nothing will be deciced in Vienna. Mr. Dulles is due to fly back to Washington Sunday night and Mr. Molotov is leaving at the same time. There's not much opportunity there for much negotiation. All both sides seem to want is a general impression: Is the meeting of the Big Four worthwhile? When should it be held and where? The guessing here in Vienna is that both sides will agree to hold the meeting, that they will roughly fix July as the time and some small neautral city as the place, not a capital or a big conference city, rather some place like Lugano or Lausanne, in Switzerland.

When the foreign ministers leave Vienna they will have accomplished a great deal. But one important question remains unanswered. No one has yet found out why the Russians changed their line and accepted the Austrian treaty. In Moscow, six weeks ago, Soviet Prime Minister Bulganin apparently give a high Austrian official one explanation. He is supposed to have said that Russia held onto Austria in the first place in order to prevent German rearmament. Now that the Paris treaties are in force, there is no longer any reason to stay in Austria. Another explanation is that Moscow now wants to create a neautral belt between the Western European Union and its own satellite bloc, and is therefore glad to have a neautral Austria. Still another theory is this: as long as Russia held off on Austria, it stood accused of bad faith and world criticism pointed squarely at Moscow. In the long run this political disadvantage outweighed the dwindling material advantage of the occupation. In giving up Austria now, Russia gets rid of a political liability and clears the way for fresh action. Soviet... (unintelligible)...may indicate that this action will follow soon. However, in retreating from Austria the Russians heve given the West a taste of success. Their next encounter in the cold war should, therefore, be doubly thoughtful (?).

This is Richard C. Hottelet in Vienna. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: One more news item; the Russians announced tonight that Soviet Premier Bulganin and Communist Party Secretary Khurschef will personally head a "peace mission" to Yugoslavia at the end of this month.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Today is Friday the 13th. And there are undoubtedly some who.. being superstitious...might regard a day such as this as unlucky But it was Plautus who concluded many years ago, "it's the way a man uses his luck that brings him eminence and makes us all pronounce him wise." To achieve this end, Oliver Wendell Holmes advised "Be firm. One constant element in luck is tenuine old Teutonic luck."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday, may 16, 1955

Good Evening.

President Eisenhower has asked Congress to appropriate 28-million dollars - the money to be used for the purchase of Salk Polio vaccine for those who might otherwise be unable to afford it. Mr. Eisenhower also requested an additional fund of two million dollars. This money would be used to hire more government personnel to be directly associated with the administering of the vaccine. The extra help would be assigned two tasks: more extensive checking on the safety of the vaccine...and more extensive checking of black market operations.

The Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, Senator Magnuson of Washington, told newsmen today that he's convinced that there's been a "considerable" black market in the Salk vaccine already. He said his Committee is ready to take whatever legal action might be necessary to assure an equitable distribution of the vaccine.

Two other Democratic Senators - Morse of Oregon and Lehman of New York - were openly (critical) today of the way in which the government so far has been handling the release of the vaccine. Morse, in calling for immediate government controls, (SAID) the administration of the vaccine program by Secretary of Welfare, Mrs. Hobby, has been "thoroughly incompetent."

For her own part, Mrs. Hobby, who had issued a report suggesting substantially what the President asked for, said she was convinced that only a voluntary system of distributing the Salk vaccine will work. "There is no other way. she said, of getting the job done as effectively and fairly." Mrs. Hobby, in her report, made a point of noting that producing the Salk vaccine is such an involved and complicated process that only six manufacturers in the country could be persuaded to undertake it. Nonetheless, she said, if all goes well, by the first of August, 94 per cent of all children in the one to nine age group... (the most vulnerable)...will have had the two basic shots.

The Surgeon General, Doctor Leonard Scheele, acknowledged that the vaccine program is "not moving as rapidly as we'd like it to." He said he was hopeful, however, that the situation will steadily improve.

Secretary of State Dulles, back in this country after a series of important political conferences abroad, reported to the President on the signing of the Austrian Peace Treaty and then talked to the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Newsmen standing outside the Committee Room heard several bursts of applause. But Chairman Richards - a Democrat from South Carolina - would say only that the Committee liked [redacted] "some of Mr. Dulles' attitudes and frankness." The Secretary said earlier that he sees "some promise of constructive accomplishment" in the proposed Big Four Meeting to be held this summer. [redacted]

He will give a report to the country on radio and television tomorrow night.

In Britain, Sir Winston Churchill, in his first active speech of the election campaign said that "new faces in the Kremlin may mean renewed hope for those who wish to dwell in peace." Mr. Churchill said that a group in the Kremlin backed by "powerful forces" may now be actively directing Russian foreign policy in such a way that co-existence between East and West will eventually be a fact. Some correspondents speculated in the British Press tonight that Mr. Churchill was trying to suggest that possibly Marshal Zhukov was taking a firm hand in directing policies aimed at avoiding a general, all-out war.

Britain's Foreign Secretary MacMillan, like Secretary Dulles, had high praise for the achievements of the past week when he arrived back in London. He said "a great deal has been done" to show that the West's policy of "peace through strength" is beginning to bear fruit. But he warned that "there are anxious and difficult times ahead"---said the "breaking of the icejam itself" opens up new problems which will require the same combination of firmness and patience exercised in the past.

Meanwhile, jubilant Austrians were celebrating their newly regained freedom---the restoration of their sovereignty for the first time since it was annexed by Hitler's Germany in 1938.

Austria's Chancellor Raab told a news conference that he regards the signing of the Austrian treaty as "a lessening of the cold war and a step toward world peace." He said it indicates that pending world problems can be solved---or, at least, that the Big-4 powers can sit at the same table. And, said the Chancellor, it may have opened the door somewhat for a solution on Germany.

As he spoke, trouble arose on this question. The West German government protested the "unexpected" way the question of German property had been settled in the new treaty. The treaty specified that former German property in Austria cannot be returned except if it is individual property worth less than 10-thousand dollars. This means German owners can get back none of the great oil fields or industrial plants which the Russians seized as "German assets" in 1945. Undoubtedly, it will take further talks to settle the issue.

Diplomatic sources in Vienna say that Western experts are ready to shape up their answer to Russia's bid to keep Germany neutral as the price of unification. They have agreed that their unification plan will be based on gradual disarmament for Communist and non-Communist countries of Europe, and that they will oppose any solution at the projected four-power talks which would force neutrality on Germany.

Our Ambassador to West Germany---James Conant---told the Germans today that we will reject any German settlement based on the continued division of Germany. He said unification will be one of the problems up for discussion at any Big-4 talks, and he promised that preparations for those talks will be made in closest cooperation with the Bonn government.

In Indochina, Vietnam's absentee Chief of State, Bao Dai, lost his imperial [redacted] guard today and his crown lands were transferred formally to control of Premier Di-em's government. In compliance with their request, the guardsmen were transferred to the national army. Bao Dai actually gave up the crown lands to a French administrator some time ago and they were signed over to the Vietnamese government. Today---amid calls of "down with Bao Dai" and "long live Premier Di-em"---saw the ceremonial observance of the transfer and the end of the last bit of French administration.

Further news out of Singapore on those riots last week which killed four persons, including Gene Symonds---an American newsman. W. A. Goode, Singapore's Chief Secretary, denounced a leftist Malayan party "and their covert Communist supporters and backseat drivers" for the industrial unrest that led to the rioting. He won approval of a motion to return emergency powers to police to declare a curfew in Singapore.

At home, Democratic Representative [redacted] Bonner---Chairman of the House Merchant Marine committee---has called for construction of a "practical" atomic-powered merchant ship in addition to the one proposed by President Eisenhower for a world tour. Bonner called the President's ship an "international sideshow, carnival or [redacted] Mississippi River showboat." Bonner says his idea is to build one which would be economically feasible and "actually carry some freight."

A federal court jury convicted turnabout witness Marie Natvig of lying under oath in a Federal Communications Commission hearing. The charges grew out of Mrs. Natvig's testimony concerning [redacted] publisher-broadcaster Edward Lamb.

The Supreme Court met today, but most noteworthy was action it didn't take. It will be a year tomorrow since the Court handed down its historic ruling on segregation in public schools. And a good sized growd was on hand today, expecting the Justices to have something to say about when and how it intends to have that decision put into practice. But, in the one hour and three minutes that that Court sat, not one word on the segregation issue was mentioned. Apparently the Court is not yet ready to make its announcement.

C. Collingwood
16 May 1955

THINK PIECE FOR MURROW

Ed Murrow, as we said earlier, is in Washington today on one of his expeditions to the seat of our government -- which is one of the reasons his programs are so consistently well-informed, well-thought out, and in tune with the great developments of our times.

This is a wonderful time to be in Washington... the grass is green, the flowers are in bloom, and the canoes are coming out on the Potomac above the Francis Scott Key Bridge. The civil servants work in their shirtsleeves these days, but it isn't so hot you have to turn the air conditioner on. The heat that sits on Washington in the summer like a physical presence is still just a premonition. Every breeze is a zephyr, even the breeze that blows down from capitol hill toward the White House.

And right at this particular moment, not only is the physical climate balmy, but the meteorology of international affairs, on which so much of Washington's well-being depends, that is also unusually spring-like and comfortable. Make no mistake about it, the forthcoming Big Four conference, the conclusion of the Austrian treaty and other manifestations of the new look in the present intense diplomatic activity have considerably mitigated the wintry blasts of the long, bleak season of East-West tension... No official bearing the weight of responsibility in the eyes of history is going to go out on a limb with carefree public speculation about the beneficial consequences which flow -- they have to be cautious... They should be... What was it John Foster Dulles said as he returned today ... . that he sees "some prospect of constructive accomplishment" in the Big Four meeting now being planned.... That's about all they'll say out loud... But President Eisenhower's confession of a vague feeling that things are on the way up is a lot more strongly felt than you'll get responsible officials to admit out loud.

Not that the men who sit in the big buildings in Washington this spring are so naive as to think that all the world's problems are going to disappear automatically just because four men sit down around the table and talk about them for a few days. They know better. They know well enough that the things which divide the Western world from the Communist world are too fundamental and too deep and too complex to be solved by anything but a long, slow, and arduous process.... But there is a feeling that because of our strength and their difficulties, the Russians may be willing to take steps which would minimize the danger of worst coming to worst -- of war itself. And you'd be surprised how just that suspicion makes the prospect from Washington look so much more pleasant this Spring.

Of course, those who have that suspicion may be wrong, but even if they are, and even if the Russians turn out to be as inflexible and intransigeant as ever, the international climate is such that our people think we can go into a conference room with the Russians without incurring too much risk. The point is that the Western position is stable enough so that we can afford an inconclusive meeting, if it should turn out to be that.... And there are serious grounds for believing that the Russians need a relaxation of tension as much as we do...

As usual Sir Winston Churchill put it better than anyone else. Of course, the idea of a meeting at the summit is an old favorite of his and one can imagine that he is a little chagrinned that its finally going to come off after he has laid down the reins of authority.... But anyway, in an election speech today, Churchill said: " We have a new scene. [redacted] New men are masters in the Kremlin... It is by no means certain, he said, that there is not another new look on other faces with more powerful forces behind them which may still be most beneficial to the overwhelming masses of people all over the world who wish to dwell in peace with one another."

55

Thus Churchill, and that is the still-cautiously expressed hope on which the West's participation in a Big Four conference is based.

And this hope, as much as the sunshine and the kind promise of Spring, makes Washington a much more comfortable capital these days.

This is C.C. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today —

Bert first Bob Dixon

64

The search for something that resembles a durable peace goes on... as it has through most of history. Harry S. Truman once remarked that "there can be no greater service to mankind and no nobler mission than devotion to world peace." This being so, the problem then becomes: how to achieve it. And to this, W.O. Carver suggested:"The good will that conditions peace must be positive and active. Men of goodwill must be the agents of peace."

And now, as Ed Murrow would say, Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 16, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD: Good Evening.

President Eisenhower has asked Congress to appropriate 28-million dollars - the money to be used for the purchase of Salk Polio vaccine for those who might otherwise be unable to afford it. Mr. Eisenhower also requested an additional fund of two million dollars. This money would be used to hire more government personnel to be directly associated with the administering of the vaccine. The extra help would be assigned two tasks: more extensive checking on the safety of the vaccine...and more extensive checking of black market operations.

The Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, Senator Magnuson of Washington, told newsmen today hat he isconvinced that there's been a "considerable black market in the Salk vaccine already, He said his Committtee is ready to take whatever legal action might be necessary to assure an equitable distribution of the vaccine.

Two other Democratic Senators - Morse of Oregon and Lehman of New York - were openly critical today of the way in which the government so far has been handling the release of the vaccine. Morse, in calling for immediate government controls, said the administration of the vaccine program by Secretary of Welfare, Mrs. Hovvy, has been "throrouhly incompetent."

For her own part, Mrs. Hobby, who had issued a report suggesting substantially what the President asked for, said whe was convinced that only a voluntary system of distributing the Salk vaccine will work. "There is no other way, she said, of getting the job done as effectively and fairly." Mrs. Hobby, in her report, made a point of noting that producing the Salk vaccine is such an involved and complicated process that only six manufacturers in the country could be persuaded to undertake it. Nonetheless, she said, if all goes well, by the first of August, 94 per cent of all children in the one to nine age group (the most vulnerable)..will have had the two basic shots."

The Surgeon General, Doctor Leonard Scheele, acknowledged that the vaccine program is "not moving as rapidly as we'd like it to." He said he was hopeful, however, that the situation will steadily improve.

Secretary of State Dulles, back in this country after a series of important political conferences abroad, reported to the President on the signing of the Austrian Peace Treaty and then talked to the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Newsmen standing outside the Committee Room heard several bursts of applause. But Chairman Richards - a Democrat from South Carolina - would say only that the Committee liked "some of Mr. Dulles's attitudes and frankness." The Secretary said earlier that he sees "some promise of constructive accomplishment" in the proposed Big Four Meeting to be held this summer. He will give a report to the country on radio and television tomorrow night.

In Britain, Sir Winston Churchill, in his first active speech of the election campaign, said that "new faces in the Kremlin may mean renewed hope for those who wish to dwell in peace." Mr. Churchill said that a group of the Kremlin backed by "powerful forces" may now be actively directing Russian Foreign policy in such a way that co-existence between East and West will eventually be a fact. Some correspondents speculated in the British Press tonight that Mr. Churchill was trying to suggest that possibly Marshal Zhukov was taking a firm hand in directing policies aimed at avoiding a general, all-out war.

Britain's Foreign Secretary MacMillan, like Secretary Dulles, had high praise for the achievements of the past week when he arrived back in London. He said "a great deal has been done" to show that the West's policy of "peace through strength" is beginning to bear fruit. But he warned that "there are anxious and difficult times ahead" --said the breaking of the icejam itself opens up new problems which will require the same combination of firmness and patience exercised in the past.

Meanwhile, jubilant Austrians were celebrating their newly regained freedom--the restoration of their soverignty for the first time since it was annexed by Hitler's Germany in 1938.

Austria's Chancellor Raab told a news conference that he regards the signing of the Austrian treaty as "a lessening of the cold war and a step toward world peace." He said it indicates that pending world problems can be solved -- or, at least, that the Big-4 powers can sit at the same table. And, said the Chancellor, it may have opened the door somewhat for a solution on Germany.

As he spoke, trouble arose on this question. The West German government protested the "unexpected way the question of German property had been settled in the new treaty. The treaty specified that former German property in Austria cannot be returned except if it is individual property worth less than 10-thousand dollars. This means German owners can get back none of the great oil fields or industrials which the Russians seized as "German assets" in 1945. Undoubtedly, it will take further talks to settle the issue.

Diplomatic sources in Vienna say that Western Experts are ready to shape up their answer to Russia's bid to keep Germany neautral as the price of unification. They have agreed that their unification plan will be based on gradual disarmament for Communist and non-Communist countries of Europe, and that they will oppose any solution at the projected four-power talks which would force neautrality on Germany.

Our Ambassador to West Germany --James Conant --told the Germans today that we will reject any German settlement based on the continued division of Germany. He said unification will be one of the problems up for discussion at any Big-4 talks, and he promised that preparations for thost talks will be made in closest cooperation with the Bonn government.

In Indochina, Vietnam's absentee Chief of State, Bao Dai, lost his imperial guard today and his crown lands were transferred formally to contorl of Premier Diem's government. In compliance with their request, the guardsmen were transferred to the national army. Bao Dai actually gave up the crown lands to a French administrator some time ago and they were signed over to the Vietnamese government. Today -- amid calls of "down with Bao Dai" and "long live Premier Diem" --saw the ceremonial observance of the transfer and the end of the last bit of French administration.

Further news out of Singapore on those riots last week which killed four persons, including Gene Symonds -- an American newsman. W. A. Goods, Singapore's Chief Secretary, denounced a leftist Malayan party "and their covert Communist supporters and backseat drivers" for the industrial unrest that led to the rioting. He won approval of a motion to return emergency powers to police to declare a curfew in Singapore.

At home, Democratic Representative Bonner -- Chairman of the House Merchant Marine committee --has called for construction of a "practical" atomic-powered merchant ship in addition to the one proposed by President Eisenhower for a world tour. Bonner called the President's ship an "international sideshow, carnival or Mississippi River showboat." Bonner says his idea is to build one which would be economically feasible and "actually carry some freight."

A federal court jury convicted turnabout witness Marie Natvig of lying under oath in a Federal Communications Commission hearing. The charges grew out of Mrs. Natvig's testimony concerning publisher --broadcaster Edward Lamb.

The Supreme Court met today, but most noteworthy was action it didn't take. It will be a year tomorrow since the Court handed down its historic ruling on segregation in public schools. And a good sized crowd was on hand today, expecting the Justices to have something to say about when and how it intends to have the decision put into practice. But, in the one hour and three minutes that the court sat, not one word on the segregation issue was mentioned. Apparently the court is not yet ready to make its announcement.

Ed Murrow, as we said earlier, is in Washington today on one of his expeditions to the seat of our government --which is one of the reasons his programs are so consistently well-informed, well-thought out, and in tune with the great developments of our times.

This is a wonderful time to be in Washington..the grass is green, the flowers are in bloom, and the canoes are coming out on the Potomac above the Francis Scott Key Bridge. The civil servants work in their shirtsleeves these days, but it isn't so hot you have to turn the air conditioner on. The heat that sits on Washington in the summer like a physical presence is still just a premonition. Every breeze is a zephyr, even the breeze that blows down from capitol hill toward the White House.

And right at this pa ticular moment, not only is the physical climate balmy, but the meterology of international affairs, on which so much of Washington's well-bring depends, that is also unusually spring-like and comfortable. Make no mistake about it, the forthcoming Big Four Conference, that conclusion of the Austrian treaty and other manifestations of the new look in the present intense diplomatic activity have considerably mitigated the wintry blasts of the long, bleak season of East-West tension. No official wearing the weight of responsibility in the eyes of history is going to go out on a limb with carefree public speculation about the beneficial consequences which might flow --they have to be cautious..they should be .. What was it John Foster Dulles said as he returned today...that he sees "some prospect of constructive accomplishment" in the Big Four meeting now being planned...that's about all they'll say out loud..but President Eisenhower's confession of a vague feeling that thi gs are on the way up is a lot more strongly felt than you'll get responsible officials to admit out loud.

Not that the men who sit in the big buildings in Washington this spring are so naive as to think that all the world's problems are going to dis appear automatically just because four men sit down around the table and talk about them for a few days. They know better. They know well enough that the things which divide the Western world from the Communist world are too fundamental and too deep and too complex to be solved by anything but a long, slow, and arduous process..But there is a feeling that because of our strength and their difficulties, the Russians may be willing to take steps which would minimize the danger of worst coming to worst -- of war itself. And you'd be surprised how just that suspicion makes the prospect from Washington look so much more pleasant this Spring.

Of course, those who have that suspicion may be wrong, but even if they are, and even if the Russians turn out to be as inflexible and intransigeant as ever, the international climate is such that our people think we can go into a conference room with the Russians without incurring too much risk. The point is that the Western position is stable enough so that we can afford an inconclusive meeting, if it should turn out to be that..And there are serious grounds for believing that the Russians need a relaxation of tension as much as we do.

As usual Sir Winston Churchill put it better than anyone else. Of course the idea of a meeting at the summit is an old favorite of his and one can imagine that he is a little chagrinned that its finally going to come off after he has laid down the reins of authority ..But anyway, in an election speech today, Churchill said: "We have a new scene. New men are masters in the Kremlin. It is by no means certain, he said, that there is not another new look on other faces with more powerful forces behind them which way still be most beneficial to the overwhelming masses of people all over the world who wish to dwell in peace with one another."

Thus Churchill, and that is the still-cautiously expressed hope on which the West's participation in a Big Four conference is based. And this hope, as much as the sunshine and the kind promise of Spring, makes a Washington a much more comfortable capital these days.

This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

COLLINGWOOD: The search for something that resembles a durable peace goes on as it has through most of history. Harry S. Truman once remarked that "there can be no greater service to mankind and no nobler mission than devotion to world peace." This being so, the problem ofen becomes: how to achieve it. And to this, W.O. Carver suggested: "The good will that conditions peace must be positive and active. Men of goodwill must be agents of peace."

And now, as Ed Murrow would say, Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday May 17 1955

This is the news:

Just fifteen minutes ago, Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles made a foreign policy report to the American people. Mr. Dulles described step by step the negotiations with West Germany and Austria. And he said these two events, among others, could mark a turning point in history. Western Civilization, Mr. Dulles remarked, may have a "new lease on life." The Secretary spoke from President Eisenhower's office in the White House. He was introduced by the President who frequently joined in the discussion with Mr. Dulles. The Secretary [redacted] then turned to another subject and we've recorded that portion which began this way:

TAPE RUNS Approx 6:30

COMES AT APPROX 7:46:20

RETURN CUE: ".....such a brilliant report on a very significant two weeks."

(1)

Adlai Stevenson arrived in Boston today---back from a four-week trip to Africa. Commenting on a projected Big-four conference, he told a news conference that we "should explore every opportunity to negotiate." But he added that it is "foolish optimism to assume that this is the beginning of a new era." As for the Austrian peace treaty, Stevenson said it probably was a "bait" by the Russians and that they probably would make a similar gesture to the Germans if they could be neutralized.

Asked whether he intends to be a Presidential candidate, Stevenson said he doesn't know whether he is needed or wanted.

Former President Harry Truman also had a word on the international situation. Addressing the Missouri legislature, Mr. Truman said he hopes future generations will learn something that will lead to peace. "We must look to the future" he said, "world peace or world destruction are the two alternatives. We have no others."

Mr. Truman also said we must help keep the United Nations going or face the prospect of a third world war "ten times more destructive than World War-2." And he said we must try to keep Russia in the UN---that "when we have the Russians before the world, we are in a better position to make them perform for peace."

(2)

Missouri's Democratic Senator Stuart Symington lashed out today at Defense Secretary Wilson---said he has underestimated Communist strength all along and failed to take steps necessary to obtain "adequate arms" for this country. He said the recent Defense Department disclosure that Russia has intercontinental bombers and other new planes, proves that Wilson was "dead wrong" when he said the Soviets "were building primarily a defensive air force." Symington says the United States and its allies may have lost control of the air to Russia. And he called for a Senate investigation of the relative strength of Russia and the free world military forces.

The Atomic Energy Commission announced that our Navy has successfully exploded a "small" underwater atomic weapon somewhere in the Pacific to test our defenses against Russia's rapidly growing submarine strength.

The State Department notified Russia today that we are ready to accept ten Soviet farm specialists as official visitors. The Department suggested mid-summer as "the most advantageous time" and said the Russians' tour would be concentrated in Iowa, which specializes in the corn-hog system in which Russia has expressed such interest. At the same time, the Department asked the Russian government to say how big an American delegation they are prepared to receive and at what time.

Western and Russian officials will get together in Berlin Friday to discuss the stiff road taxes which Communist East Germany has placed on trucks supplying allied West Berlin. It will mark the first formal four-power meeting of these officials since 1948 when Russia's Marshal Sokolovsky walked out of a meeting of the old Allied Control Council.

The United States and West Germany are negotiating an agreement on military aid to create West Germany's armed forces. Our Embassy says the American aid will follow the same pattern as that given to other members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

In the Far East, France has asked the United States to recall some American officials from South Indochina on the grounds they are obstructing joint moves to save the divided country from the Communists. It is reported that Secretary Dulles has invited the French to submit the names of any officials they believe are acting improperly, but that he has made no promise to recall anyone on the strength of that complaint.

Communist China's Premier Chou En-Lai has ruled out any Formosan cease-fire talks with the United States, implying that he will talk only about withdrawing American forces guarding Formosa. Chou told the National People's Congress in Peiping that "there is no war between China and the United States and so the question of the so-called cease-fire does not [redacted] arise."

Chinese Nationalist spokesmen say Chou's aim is to drive the United States from the Western Pacific.

At home, quick bi-partisan support for President Eisenhower's new polio vaccination program. Republican Smith of New Jersey and Democratic Senator Hill of Alabama, announced sponsorship of a bill to authorize the 28-million dollar appropriation which the President wants to make sure that no child goes without the vaccine because the parents cannot pay.

Meanwhile, Oregon's Democratic Senator Morse made a sharp attack in the Senate on Welfare Secretary Hobby's handling of the vaccine program. He demanded that she be removed from office for what he called her "gross incompetency" [redacted] in the program. Morse said she has been guilty of bad administration that comes close to immorality."

Ohio's Republican Senator George Bender retorted that the program ia "a fine system" which "works". And he praised both Mrs. Hobby and Surgeon General Leonard Scheele---said they "are protecting the people of the United States, particularly the children, in handling this matter in the most professional way."

In Phenixville, Pennsylvania, Owen J. Roberts---retired former Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court---died today at the age of 80.

Roberts, who earned the title of "the great dissenter," was named to the High Court in 1930 by former President Herbert Hoover. He retired in 1945.

The White House announced that President Eisenhower plans a six-day visit to Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine starting June 22nd. The plans are subject to possible chance, depending on international [redacted] developments.

The report given by Secretary of State Dulles tonite could probably be described as both factual and cautious. And this, as Seneca once pointed out, is as it should be. For, he said, "speech that deals with important truths should be unadorned and plain." But, perhaps the really important conclusion came from Confucius when he remarked:"It is man that makes truth great, not truth that makes man great."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, May 17, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: THIS IS THE NEWS:

Just fifteen minutes ago the Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, made a foreign policy report to the American people. Mr. Dulles described x step-by-step the negotiations with West Germany and Austria; and he said these two events, among others, could mark a turning point in history. Western civilization, Mr. Dulles remarked, may have a new lease on life. The Secretary spoke from President Eisenhower's office in the White House. He was introduced by the President, who frequently joined in the discussion with Mr. Dulles. The Secretary then turned to another subject, and we've recorded that portion, which began this way:

DULLES: Now, I'm going to turn to the thing that I know most people are most interested in, and I guess you have a special interest in, and that is ...

EISENHOWER: The four-power talks.

DULLES: The four-power talks. Because this time, if they come off, you'll be in them yourself. Now, as you said, Mr. President, in recalling what had happened, or what you said in your speech of April '53, that it's always been your resolution not to get yourself into any talks of that sort until and unless certain things happened, things that made, in a sense, untouchable (?) the solidity irreversible, the solidity of the West, the freedom of Western Germany as a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Council, and some deeds by the Soviet Union in replacement of just these vague words that they've been talking. Well, these things have happened and so you felt, as indeed did our allies and a great volume of world opinion feel, that the time had come perhaps for a further testing of the Soviet Union thru a meeting at the level of the heads of government.

Now, nobody knows better than you that such a meeting has dangers as well as opportunities, and the biggest danger of all is the danger that hopes will be raised so high that they can't possibly be realized, and then two things will happen - either there'll be an open disillusionment and a feeling of dismay on the part of the people and a feeling that after all nothing can be done and that the only alternative is war, because the last good chance will have been tried and failed; or then there's the possibility that, in an effort to avoid that danger, that the heads of government meeting there might arrive at sort of an appearance of agreement under ambiguous words where there was no real agreement. And that also would be ...

EISENHOWER: Foster, I don't believe that danger's quite as great as it was once, because my mail shows this, that the American people are really pretty well aware of what is going on; they realize this is merely a beginning and not an end, and I've taken tremendous hope and confidence from the tenor of the remarks I've seen in our newspapers and commentators and everybody else. I'm sure that there's a greater maturity than we would have expected several years ago.

DULLES: I do think the American people have become pretty sophisticated about it, that they're not easily going to be fooled, and I don't think they're going to get their expectations too high.

EISENHOWER: Yeah.

DULLES: There's perhaps a little more danger in some of the other countries than there is in the United States. But you and I worked out the form of invitation to this meeting in agreement with our allies in a way which I think makes it crystal clear that that danger will not be incurred. Because, as you recall, the definition of the purpose is that we'll meet to try to find new paths, a new approach, new procedures for solving some of these problems ...

EISENHOWER: That's right.

DULLES: ... and you will not attempt yourselves to solve them. Now, the heads of government, great as they are, are not going to be able to get together for three or four days and find a substantial solution for some of

of these problems that have defied solution for so many years or even for so many generations ...

EISENHOWER: Well, they couldn't even build Rome in one day.

DULLES: But, therefore, I think it's quite important to keep it clear, as the invitation did, that it's just for that purpose. Now, we weren't at all sure whether the Soviet would accept that limited meeting. But I had this dinner in Vienna Saturday nite, which was attended by the British and French foreign minister and also by Mr. Molotov, who is the Soviet Foreign Minister, and we sat around after dinner for several hours and talked about this whole business, the philosophy of the approach, the limited scope that the meeting would have and, as far as I could judge, the Soviet Union accepted it - at least they said they did and that would be on the record. There are other details we haven't worked out yet, but on the whole it looks as tho the kind of a meeting that you are willing to have will also be the kind of a meeting that they will be willing to have. And I think that will be a meeting which can be held safely, without running these great risks and which may open up a new opportunity.

Now, everybody wonders why the Soviet may be willing to change their practices. And I've thought about it quite a lot. Nobody can be sure. But I thought of this, Mr. President, that in every one of our well-ordered communities there are a lot of people who don't believe in their hearts in the rules and the laws that are there, but they find it more convenient to conform and not always be bucking these things. And, therefore, in any well-ordered community there are a lot of people who live up to the rules and the ordinances and so forth, even tho they don't perhaps believe in them very well themselves. And it may possibly be the case that the Soviet Union, after this experience of trying to buck everything, may be feeling that it may be more convenient for them to conform to some of the rules and practices of a civilized world community.

I don't think for a minute that they've got religion or been converted. But it just may be as a practical matter, at least, they may think that they can get along better by conforming to some of these rules and practices which normally govern a civilized community. And I think that is a possibility which is at least worth exploring and that this meeting will give a further chance to explore it, and it may at least set up new processes in a ... for a solution of some of these great problems, problems like the unification of Germany, the problem of levels of armament, the problem of atomic weapons, the problem of the satellite countries, the problem created by the international communism, which is such a pest all around the world. If we can begin to think about how those problems can be solved, put a new spirit and a new purpose into their solution, then I think that something of good can come out of this meeting. And I just do feel that we can face the future with new confidence, because these policies that we've adhered to which have involved sacrifice, been supported by the American people on a bipartisan basis, they're beginning to pay off. And I think if we stick to those policies, we're going to be all right. The danger is if we relax and think, "Well, these policies have served their purpose, therefore let's switch to something different." The proper thing is that these policies have worked; therefore, let's stick to them. If we do that, then I think we can face the future with new confidence.

EISENHOWER: In a word, we will stay strong and we'll stay vigilant, but we're not going to extinguish the hope that a new dawn may be coming, even if the sun rises very, very slowly. Thank you very much, Foster; it's been a real privilege to hear such a brilliant report on a very significant two weeks.

-30-

Ediphone trans./ES

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 18, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Just fifteen minutes ago, Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles made a foreign policy report to the American people. Mr. Dulles described step by step the negotiations with West Germany and Austria. And he said these two events, among others, could mark a turning point in history. Western Civilization, Mr. Dulles remarked, may have a "new lease on life." The Secretary spoke from President's Eisenhower's office in the White House. He was introduced by the President who frequently joined in the discussion with Mr. Dulles. The secretary then turned to another subject and we've recorded that portion which began this way:

DULLES: Now, I'm going to turn to the thing that I know most people are most interested in, and I guess you have a special interest in, and that is....

EISENHOWER: The four-power talks.

DULLES: The four-power talks. Because this time, if they come off, you'll be in them yourself. Now, as you said, Mr. President, in recalling what had happened, or what you said in your speech of April '53, that it's always been your resolution not to get your self into any talks of that sort until and unless certain things happened, things that made, in a sense, untouchable the solitity irreversible, the solidity of the West, the freedom of Western Germany as a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Council, and some deeds by the Soviet Union in replacement of just these vague words that they've been talking. Well, these things have happened and so you feld, as indeed did our allies and a greaty volume of world opinion feel, that the time had come perhaps for a further testing of Soviet Union through a meeting at the level of the heads of government.

Now, nobody knows better than you that such a meeting has dangers as well as opportunities, and the biggest danger of all is the danger that hopes will be raised so high that they can't possible be realized, and then two things will happen - either there'll be an open disillusionment and a feeling of dismay on the part of the people and a feeling that after all nothing can be cone and that the only alternative is war, because the last good change will have been tried and failed; or then there's the possibility that in an effort to avoid that danger, that the heads of government meeting there might arrive at sort of an apparent of agreement under ambiguous words where there was no real agreement. And that also would be...

EISENHOWER: Foster, I don't believe that danger's quite as great as it was once, because my mail shows this, that the American people are really pretty well aware of what is going on; they realize this is merely a beginning and not an end, and I've taken tremendous hope and confidence from the tenor of the remarks I've seen in our newspapers and commentators and everybody else. I'm sure there's a greater maturity than we would have expected several years ago.

DULLES: I do think the American people have become pretty sophisticated about it, that they're not easily going to be fooled, and I don't think they're going to get their expectations too high.

EISENHOWER: Yeah.

DULLES: There's perhaps a little more danger in some of the other countries than there is in the United States. But you and I worked out the form of invitation to this meeting in agreement with our allies in a way which I think makes it crystal clear that that danger will not be incurred. Because as you recall, the definition of the purpose is that we'll meet to try to find new paths, a new approach, new procedures for solving some of these problems.

EISENHOWER: That's right.

DULLES: ...and you will not attempt yourselves to solve them. Now, the heads of government, great as they are, are not going to be able to get together for three or four days and find a substantial solution for some of these problems that have defied solution for so many years or even for so many generations....

EISENHOWER: Well, they couldn't even build Rome in one day.

DULLES: But, therefore, I think it's quite important to keep it clear, as the invitation did, that it's just for that purpose. Now, we weren't at all sure whether the Soviet would accept that limited meeting. But I had this dinner in Vienna Saturday night which was attended by the British and French foreign minister and also by Mr. Molotov, who is the Soviet Foreign Minister, and we sat around after dinner for several hours and talked about this whole business, the philosophy of the approach, the limited scope that the meeting would have and, as far as I could judge, the Soviet Union accepted it - at least they said they did and that would be on the record. There are other details we haven't worked out yet, but on the whole it looks as though the kind of a meeting that you are willing to have will also be the kind of a meeting which can be held safely, without running these great risks and which may open up a new opportunity.

Now, everybody wonders why the Soviet may be willing to change their practices. And I've thought about it quite a lot. Nobody can be sure. But I thought of this, Mr. President, that in everyone of our well- ordered communities there are a lot of people who don't believe in their hearts in the rules and the laws that are there, but they find it more convenient to conform and not always be bucking these things. And, therefore, in any well-ordered community there are a lot of people who live up to the rules and the ordinances and so forth, even though they don't perhaps beleive in them very will themselves. And it may possibly be the case that the Soviet Union, after this experience of trying to buck everything, may be feeling that it may be more convenient for them to conform to some of the rules and practices of a civilized world community.

I don't think for a minute that they've got religion or been converted. But it just may be as a practical matter, at least, they may think that they can get along better by conforming to some of these rules and practices which normally govern a civilized community. And I think that is a possibility which is at least worth exploring and that this meeting will give a further chance to explore it, and it may at least set up new processes in a .... for a solution of some of these great problems, problems like the unification of Germany, the problem of levels of armament, the problem of atomic weapons, the problem of levels of armament, the pro lem of atomic weapons, the problem of satellite countries, the problem created by the international Communism which is such a pest all around the world. If we can begin to think about how those problems can be solved, put a new spirit and a new purpose into their solution, then I thin that something of good can come out of this meeting. And I just do feel that we can face the uture with new confidence, because these policies that we've adhered to which have infolved sacrifice, been supported by the American people on a bipartisan basis, they're beginning to pay off. And I think if we stick to those policies, we're going to be all right. The danger is if we relax and think, "well, these policies have served their purpose, therefore let's switch to something different." The proper thing is that these policies have worked; therefore, let's stick to them. If we do that, then I think we can face the future with new confidence.

EISENHOWER: In a word, we will stay strong and we'll stay vigilant, but we're not going to extinguish the hope that a new dawn may be coming, even in the sun rises very, very slowly. Thank you very much Foster; it's been a real privilege to hear such a brilliant report on a very significant two weeks.

MURROW: Adlai Stevenson arrived in Boston today --back from a four week trip to Africa. Commenting on a projected Big-four conference, he told a news conference that we "should explore every opportunity to negotiate". But he added that it is "foolish optimism to assume that this is the beginning of a new era." As for the Austrian peace treaty, Stevenson said it probably was a "bait" by the Russians and that they probably would make a similar gesture to the Germans if they could be neautralized.

Asked whether he intends to be a Presidential candidate, Stevenson said he doesn't know whether he is needed or wanted.

Former President Harry Truman also had a word on the international situation. Addressing the Missouri legislature, Mr. Truman said he hopes future generations will learn something that will lead to peace. "We must look to the future" he said, "world peace or world destruction are the two alternatives. We have no others."

Mr. Truman also said he must help keep the United Nations going or face thr prospect of a third world war "ten times more destructive than World War-2". And he said we must try to keep Russia in the U.N.---that "when we have the Russians before the world, we are in a better position to make them perform for peace."

Missouri's Democratic Senator Stuart Syimgton lashed o t today at Defense Secretary Wilson -- said he has underestimated Communist strength all along and failed to take steps necessary to obtain "adequate arms" for this country. He said the recent Defense Department disclosure that Russia has intercontin ental bombers and other new planes, proves that Wilson was "dead wrong" when he said the Soviets "were building primarily a defensive air force." Symington says the United States and its allies may have lost control of the air to Russia. And he called for a Senate investigation of the relative strength of Russia and the free world military forces.

The Atomic Energy Commission announced that our Navy has successfully exploded a "small" underwater atomic weapon somewhere in the Pacific to test our defenses against Russia's rapidly growing submarine strength.

The State Department notified Russia today that we are ready to accept ten Soviet farm specialists as official visitors. The Department suggested mid-summer as "the most advantageous time" and said the Russians' tour would be concentrated in Iowa, which specializes in the corm-hog system in which Russia has expressed such interest. At the same time, the Department asked he Russian government to say how big an American delegation they are prepared to receive and at what time.

Western and Russian officials will get together in Berlin Friday to discuss the stiff road taxes which Communist East Germany has placed on trucks supplying allies West Berlin. It will mark the first formal four-power. meeting of these officials since 1948 when Russia's Marshal Sokolovsky walked out of a meeting of the old Allied Control Council.

The United States and West Germany are negotiating and agreement on military aid to create West Germany's armed forces. Our Embassy says the Amercian aid will follow the same pattern as that given to other members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

In the Far East, France has asked the United States to recall some American officials from South Indochina on the grounds they are obstructing joint moves to save the divided country from the Communists. It is reported that Secretary Dulles has invited the French to submit the names of any officials they believe are acting improperly, but that he has made no promise to recall anyone on the strength of that complaint.

Communist China's Premier Chou En-lai has ruled out any Formosan Cease-fire talks with the United States, implying that he will talk only about withdrawing American forces guarding Formosa. Chou told the National People's Congress in Peiping that "there is no war between China and the United States and so the question of the so-called cease-fire does not arise."

Chinese Nationalist spokesmen say Chou's aim is to drive the United States from the Western Pacific.

At home, quick-bi-partisan support for President Eisenhower's new polio vaccination program. Republican Smith of New Jersey and Democratic Senator Hill of Alabama, announced sponsorship of a bill to authorize the 28-million dollar appropriation which the President wants to make sure that no child goes without vaccine because the parents cannot pay.

Meanwhile, Oregon's Democratic Senator Morse made a sharp attack in the Senate on Welfare Secretary Hobby's handling of the vaccine program. He demanded that she be removed from office for what he called her "gross incompetency" in the program. Morse said she has been guilty of bad administration that comes close to immorality."

Ohio's Republican Senator George Bender reported that the program is a "fine system"which"works". And he praised both Mrs. Hobby and Surgeon General Leonard Scheele --said they "are protecting the people of the United States, particularly the children, in handling this matter in the most professional way."

In Phoenixville, Pennsylvania, Owen J. Roberts --retired former Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court -- died today at the age of 80. Roberts, who earned the title of "the great dissenter" was named to the High Court in 1930 by former President herbert Hoover. He retired in 1945.

The White House announced that President Eisenhower pland a six day visit to Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine starting June 22nd. The plans are subject to possible change, depending on international developments.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON : COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The report given by Secretary of State Dulles tonight could probably be described as both factual and cautious. And this, as Seneca once pointed out, as as it should be. For, he said, "speech that deals with important truths should be unadorned and plain." But, perhaps the really important conclusion came from Confucious when he remarked: "It is man that makes truth great , not truth that makes man great."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Wednesday May 18 1955

This is the news:

As a precautionary step, the government tonight ordered no further shipments this week of the Salk polio vaccine from manufacturing plants. A spokesman for the Public Health Service said that an inspection team which had visited the Wyeth Laboratories in Marietta, Pennsylvania has asked the company to furnish additional information on its safety tests. And until these reports come in, the government has decided to temporarily stop further shipments of the vaccine. The Public Health Service says it wants to "take another look-see at what it describes as a very confused picture." It wants more tests and more data before any new vaccine is made available.

But Jack Russell, Public Information Officer at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare says that it would be wrong to conclude that on the basis of tonight's developments there is anything wrong with the Salk vaccine. He said the Wyeth Laboratory records have not reached the Surgeon General's office. And until they do, it would simply be an added safety measure to hold up not only that company's shipments, but others as well.

The Surgeon General, Leonard Scheele, acknowledged earlier in the day that four and a quarter million polio shots have still not been cleared for use. He indicated if more vaccine is not released reasonably soon, the overall immunization program might have to be temporarily suspended.

The President, at his news conference, said he disagreed with Senator Wayne Morses contention that the Secretary of Heath, Education and Welfare - Mrs. Hobby - had done a bad job of [redacted] administring the vaccine and should be fired. Mr. Eisenhower said this simply was not true...that Mrs. Hobby had done a "magnificient job"...and that in the immediate excitement we are forgetting the great contribution the scientists have made to bring us this (GREAT) boon.

The President said it may be that Mrs. Hobby will resign he post due to the illness of her husband. If this happened, he said he would regret it greatly.

President Eisenhower, at his news conference, also commented on other matters. For one thing, he rejected a statement by Democratic Senator Symington that we may have lost control of the air to Russia. That is just not true, he said, even though the Russians may exceed our estimates from time to time in certain fields. The President also scoffed at the idea that the United States could have "lost in a twinkling" its great technical excellence and development of its air power.

Meanwhile, Democratic Senator Russell of Georgia said he will ask for an investigation of the reports that Russian jet bombers and missiles threaten our air superiority.

And Trevor Gardner---Assistant Air Force Secretary---told a Senate committee that "we are making progress" in the fields of intercontinental ballistic missiles and nuclear-propelled bombers." But he apparently referred to Russia when he spoke of our opponent whose accomplishments in the field of air weapons in the past 10-years are a phenomenon of military history.

Getting back to our air power, four Air Force f-84 Thunderjets completed a record, nonstop flight of almost five-thousand miles from Tokyo to Newcastle, Australia. The planes---fighter-bombers capable of carrying the atom bomb---refueled three times in the air, spanned the sea, the equator and two seasons in 12-hours, 2-minutes.

President Eisenhower also had something to say today on the proposed Big-4 conference. He said it might do some good in our search for peace. And especially if he can sit down at that conference and talk with his long-time friend---Russia's Defense Minister, Marshal Zhukov. Mr. Eisenhower also rejected some Congressional contentions that he might fall into an appeasement trap at the conference---said he just does not believe the American people think any such thing.

[redacted]

Around Congress, the House defeated an attempt to alter the President's new military reserve program, designed to increase the reserves four times, to just under 3-million men, by 1960. By a standing vote, the House beat down an amendment by North Carolina's Democratic Representative Barden, which would allow college students to fulfill their military obligation by attending three months' summer encampments for each of their four school years. The Pentagon is said to feel that the amendment would wreck the administration's bill.

5

Defense Secretary Wilson today set up a committee of Pentagon officials, retired Generals and Admirals, to write a code of conduct for American military personnel captured and put under torture by Communists. The group is to recommend ways for training military people to defend themselves against brainwashing and other physical and mental torture if they [redacted] are captured.

The projected Big-4 talks had repercussions in West Germany today. Chancellor Adenauer called home his Ambassadors to Washington, London and Paris for urgent consultation on big power political moves. ~~A Foreign Office official said, "the Chancellor feels that the time has arrived when the nation's leading diplomatic representatives must receive a report on the exact line of German policy concerning possible neutrality offers by the Russians and the possibility of an agreement on German unification at a [redacted] Big-4 conference."~~

When Soviet foreign policy showed signs of shifting after the death of Stalin, the first convincing proof of it came from a change in the attitude toward Yugoslavia. It was in the release of certain satellite political leaders, who had been imprisoned for friendliness to Tito. What the Kremlin was saying for publication didn't necessarily prove anything. But the turn-about in Yugoslavia was unmistakable. It amounted to an open confession of error unique in our times. Of course it wasn't being done out of remorse. The Kremlin wanted something so badly it was willing to pay even this humiliating price to get it.

This policy will come to some sort of a culmination in the visit of Khruschev and Bulganin to Belgrade. And with this visit the world will get a clearer view of what the Kremlin is after. It is after it, not only in Belgrade, but in Europe. It wants a chain of neutral states in the heart of Europe, and hopes to induce Tito, who lately has come to prize himself as one of the world's outstanding neutrals, to detach himself completely from any military ties with the West. This fits into the intense campaign to assure the neutrality of Germany, for which the Kremlin is expected to offer almost any price in the way of unifying Germany. There is no secret about the Kremlin wanting the neutrality of Germany, for Foreign Minister Molotov proclaimed the fact with undiplomatic frankness, in making a speech on the signing of the Austrian treaty.

When the Kremlin first broached the visit to Belgrade, Tito laid down three conditions, according to a report reaching my colleague Alexander Kendrick in London. First, was the signing of an Austrian treaty; second, was the holding of a big four meeting; and third, was that Tito be permitted to make new arrangements with Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria. What he had in mind was that these satellite countries should become neutral, too. He dreams of a neutral Balkan federation of which he would be the head, a position of power he has long wanted.

If by chance Tito should make any progress in getting neutrality for the three satellites, the Western powers might be expected to bless him, even if it meant the end of his pact with Greece and Turkey. That pact has been optimistically regarded as an extension of NATO, through its link with Greece and Turkey. But Tito has looked on it as no more than insurance against Soviet aggression against himself. Lately, Tito has frowned on the idea of moving closer to NATO. Turkish Prime Minister Menderes visited Belgrade last week hoping to interest Tito in such a move. He signally failed. Tito did not go back on his undertakings in the pact with Greece and Turkey, but it became clear to Mr. Menderes that it wouldn't be strengthened. That will not make any difference to the Turks, but a greater interest in neutralism is expected in Greece, where the Papagos opposition may now gain strength.

It would be most awkward for the Kremlin to encourage the formation of a neutral bloc including Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria. Under the terms of the Warsaw agreements setting up an Eastern NATO, the Soviet Union has just won the right to keep troops stationed in these countries, even after the Austrian treaty is ratified. So if Tito asks for this in return for his own complete neutrality, the price would seem to be impossible. But nowadays impossible is not a scientific word. The visit of Khruschev and Bulganin to Belgrade would have appeared impossible not so long ago.

President Eisenhower said at his press conference that the idea seemed to be developing of a neutralized belt of countries in Eastern Europe between Russia and the West, and that he did not slam the door on the possibility of such an arrangement. He did not mention a unified and neutral Germany as being included in such an arrangement. But this is what is being most discussed the world over.

It may be unwise to accept or reject the idea of a neutral and unified Germany offhand. But to this reporter, certain generalizations about it seem true. As long as the East and West are rivals for power, a neutral area between them becomes a field of consistent and certainly dangerous competition. If a unified Germany should be kept unarmed, that leaves a power vacuum in the heart of Europe, which might well prove to be a permanent invitation to violence, explosion and invasion. If, on the other hand, a unified Germany should be armed, it would be able to decide, or at least influence, the future of Europe by selling itself to one side or the other. That is a position of power few would like to entrust to an armed Germany.

The present division of Germany is really a symbol of the division of the world, and it wouldn't end the division of the world just to unite Germany. The real danger is the world division, and the unification of Germany might make it even more dangerous.

But German unification is a compelling theme, and for a host of people today, outside Germany as well as in it, neutrality doesn't seem too high a price to pay for it. A unified and disarmed Germany, if it existed in a disarmed world with enforceable disarmament, would obviously be a symbol of a new era. That, however, has not yet come into view.

The search for some sort of lasting peace goes on....much as it has throughout history. The problem is not only to find peace, but to secure it without compromising our basic way of life. E.H. Chapin once put it pretty well when he said:"There are interests by the sacrifice of which peace is too dearly purchased. One should never be at peace to the shame of his own soul."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 18, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

As a precautionary step, the government tonight ordered no further shipments this week of the Salk polio vaccine from manufacturing plants. A spokesman for the Public Health Service said that an inspection team which had visited the Wyeth Laboratories in Marietta, Pennsylvania has asked the company to furnish additional information on its safety tests. And until these reports come in, the government has decided to temporarily stop further shipments of the vaccine. The Public Healty Service says it wants to "take another look-see at that it describes as a very confused picture." It wants more tests and more data before any new vaccine is made available.

But Jack Russell, Public Information Officer at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, says that it would be wrong to conclude that on the basis of tonight's developments there is anything wrong with the Salk vaccine He said the Wyeth Laboratory records have not reached the Surgeon General's office. And until they do, it would simply be an added safety measure to hold up not only that company's shipment's, but others as well.

The Surgeon General, Leonard Scheele, acknowledged earlier in the day that four and a quarter million polio shots have still not been cleared for use. He indicated if more vaccine is not realeased reasonably soon, the overall immunization program might not have to be temporarily suspended.

The Presddent, at his news conference, said he disagreed with Senator Wayne Morse's contention that Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, Mrs. Hobby - had done a bad job of administering the vaccine and should be fired. Mr. Eisenhower said this simply was not true....that Mrs. Hobby has done a "magnificent job"..and that in the immediate excitement we are forgetting the great contribution the scientists have made to bring us this great boon. The President said it may be that Mrs. Hobby will resign her post due to the illness of her husband. If this happened, he said he would regret it greatly.

President Eisenhower, at his news conference also commented on other matters. For one thing, he rejected a statement by Democratic Senator Symington that we may have lost control of the air to Russia. That is just not true, he said, even though the Russians may exceed our estimates from time to time in certain fields. The President also scoffed at the idea that the United States could have "lost in a twinkling" its great technical excellence and developement of its air power.

Meanwhile, Democratic Senator Russell of Georgia said he will ask for an investigation of the reports that Russia jet bombers and missiles threaten our air superiority.

And Trevor Gardner --Assistant Air Force Secretary -- told a Senate committee that "we are making progress" in the fields of intercontinental ballistic missiles and nuclear - propelled bombers." But he apparently referred to Russia when he spoke of our opponent whose accomplismments in the field of air weapons in the past 10-years are a phenomenon of military history.

Getting back to our air power, four Air Force f-84 Thunderjets completed a record, nonstop flight of almost five-thousand miles from Tokyo to Newcastle Australia. The planes --fighter-bombers, capable of carrying the atom bomb-- refuled three times in the air, spanned the sea, the equator and two seasons in 12 hours, 2 minutes.

President Eisenhower also has something to say today on the proposed Big-4 conference. He said it might do some good in our search for peace. And especially if he can sit down at that conference and talk with his long-time friend -- Rusia's Defense Minister, Marshal Zhukov. Mr. Eisenhower also rejected some Congressional contentions that he might fall into an appearement trap at the conference --said he just does not believe the American people think any such thing.

Around Congress, the House defeated an attempt to alter the President's new military reserve program, designed to increase the reserves four times, to just under 3-million man, by 1960. By a standing vote, the House beat down an amendment by North Crrolina's Democratic Representative Barden, which would allow college students to fulfill their military obligations by attending three months summer encampments for each of their four school years. The Pentagon is said to feel that the amendment would wreck the administration's bill.

Defense Secretary Wilson today set up a committee of Pentagon Officials, retired Generals and Admirals, to write a code of conduct for American Military personnell captured and put under torture by Communists. The group is to recommend ways for training military people to defend themselves against brainwashing and other physical and mental torture if they are captured.

The projected Big-4 talks has repercussions in West Germany today. Chancellor Adenauer called home his ambassodors to Washington, London and Paris for urgent consultation on big power political moves.

When Soviet foreign policy showed signs of shifting after the death of Stalin, the first convincing proof of it came arom a change in the attitude toward Yugoslavia. It was in the release of certain satellite political leaders, who had been imprisoned for friendliness to Tito. What the Kremlin was saying for publication didn't necessarily prove anything. But the turn-about in Yugoslavia was unmistakable. It amounced to an open confession of error unique in our times. Of course it wasn't being done out of remorse. The Kremlin wanted something so badly it was willing to pay even this humiliating price to get it.

This policy will come to some sort of a combination in the visit of Khruschev and Bulganin to Belgrade. And with this visit, the world will get a clearer view of what the Kremlin is after. It is after it, not only in Belgrade, but in Europe. It wants a chain of neautral states in the heart of Europe, and hopes to induce Tito, who lately has come to price himself as one of the world's outstanding neautrals, to detach himself completely from any military ties with the est. This fits into the intense campaign to assure the neautrality of Germany, for which the Kremlin is expected to offer almost any price in the way of unifying Germany. There is no secret about the Kremlin wanting the neautrality of Germany, for Foreign Minister Molotov proclaimed the fact with undiplomatic frankness, in making a speech on the signing of the Austrian treaty.

When the Kremlin first broached the visit to Belgrade, Tito laid down three conditions, according to a report reaching my colleague Alexander Kendrick in London. First, was the signing of an Austrian treaty; second, was the holding of a big four meeting; and third, was that Tito be permitted to make new arrangements with Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria. What he had in mind was that these satellite countries should become neautral, too. He dreams of a neautral Balkan federation of which he would be the head, a position of power he has long wanted.

If by chance Tito should make any progress in getting neautrality for the three satellites, the Western powers might be expected to bless him, even if it meant the end of his pact with Greece and Turkey. But Tito has looked on it as no more than insurance against Soviet aggression against himself. Lately Tito has frowned on the idea of a moving closer to NATO. Turkish Prime Minister Menderes visited Belgrade last week hoping to interest Tito in such a move. He signally failed. Tito did not go back on his undertakings in the pact with Greece and Turkey, but it became clear to Mr. Menderas that it would' nt be strengthened. That will not make any difference to the Turks, but a greater interest in neautralism is expected in Greece, where the Papagos opposition may now gain strength.

It would be most awkward for the Kremlin to encourage the formation of a neautral bloc including Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria. Under the terms of the Warsaw agreements setting up an Eastern NATO, the Soviet Union has just won the right to keep troops stationed in these countries, even after the Austrian treaty is ratified. So if Tito asks for this in return for his own complete neautrality, the price would seem to be impossible. But nowadays impossible is not a scientific word. The visit of Khruschev and Bulganin to Belgrade would have appeared impossible not to long ago.

President Eisenhower said at his press conference that the idea seemed to be developing of a neautralized belt of coun ries in Eastern Europe between Russia and the West, and that he did not slam the door on the possibility of such an arrangement. He did not mention a unified and neautral Germany as being included in such an arrangement. But this is what is being mose discussed the worl over.

It may be unwise to accept or reject the idea of a neautral and unified Germany offhand. But to this reporter, certain generlizations about it seem true. As long as the East and West are rivals for power, a neautral area between them becomes a field of consistent and ceratinly dangerous competition. If a unified Germany should be kept unarmed, ahat leaves a power vacuum in the heart of Europe, which might well prove to be a permanent invitation to violence, explosion and invasion. If on the other hand, a unified Germany should be armed, it would be able to decide, or at least influence, the future of Europe by selling itself to one side of the other. That is a position off power few would like to entrust to an armed Germany.

The present division of Germany is really a symbol of the divisions of the world, and it wouldn't end the division of the world just to unite Germany. The real danger is the world division, and the unification of Germany might make it even more dangerous.

But German unification is a compllling theme, and for a host of people today, outside Germany as well as in it, neautrality doesn't seem too high a price to pay for it. A unified and disarmed Germany, if it existed in a dis armed world with enforceable disarmement, would obviously be a symbol of a new era. That, however, has not yet come into view.

Thes is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The search for some sort of a lasting peace goes on..much of it has throughout history. The problem is not only to find peace, but to secure it without compromising our basic way of life. E. H. Chapin once put it pretty well when he said: "There are interests by the sacrifice of which peace is too dearly purchased. One should never be at peace to the shame of his own soul."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday, May 19, 1955 (1)

This is the news:

The Public Health Service made known today that it will not authorize any more shipment of Salk vaccine until at least next week./And one manufacturer - the Eli Lilly Company of Indianapolis - indicated that it might be even longer before additional supplies of the anti-polio shots are made available./Senator Humphrey of Minnesota expressed the opinion of some of his colleagues when he said that the Public Health Service is arousing "grave public concern."/Humphrey said that in handling the vaccine program so far, the Public Health officials have been engaged in an "in and out, up and down policy."/The Senator also told newsmen that he has reason to believe that the vaccine now being manufactured is not made up of precisely the same elements contained in the vaccine used in last year's field tests. #

Here in New York today, the first innoculations for schoolchildren got under way./But slightly less than 30 per cent of those eligible for the Salk shot failed to show up. A city medical spokesman said an important factor in this figure was the "confused national situation."

In an entirely different area there was also some confusion today. Shortly after Air Force Chief of Staff, General Twinning had publically rebuked one of his generals for comparing favorably the Russian Air Force to ours, the General in question denied he had ever made such a remark. Twinning had said that Brigadier General Burgess, attached to the Intillegence Division, did not tell the truth in Detroit last night when he addressed an American Legion Group and told it: "We are underestimating the Russians...their Air Force is currently as good as ours, possibly better." But Burgess is now reported to have told a Senate subcommittee later in the day that he was "misquoted and never used the words attributed to him."

General Curtis Le May, the boss of the Strategic Air Command, testified before another Congressional Committee, asking for more urgent construction of housing units for military personnel. Le May said it was entirely possible that in the event of an attack on this country, some of our planes would not get into the air because their crews lived too far from air bases.

Also on the subject of preparedness, General Gruenther, commander of the Nato armies, told the Conference of Mayors in New York: "Russia's campaign of sweetness and light is propaganda...it is designed to keep German military ~~[illegible]~~ strength from being an asset to the West... and is further aimed at forcing us to give up possible use of the atom bomb."

The Senate Armed Services Committee reported today that if a bomb were dropped on this country we would be unprepared. Plans for the evacuation of target areas are inadequate and, says the committee, we are unprepared medically for an attack. The Committee urged the President to assume "personal responsibility" for developing an adequate Civil Defense Program.

(4)

Legislative action in Washington today centered around the President's veto of the Postal Pay bill which would have given a half-million postal workers an average 8.8-percent pay raise. The President based his action on two points---one, that the bill discriminates against some postal workers and two, that it would add to the taxpayer's burden by "substantially" increasing the postal deficit.

The big test now will come next Tuesday when the Senate will vote on whether to override the veto. The consensus appears to be that Mr. Eisenhower's action will stand up.

The [redacted]

The anti-segregation issue was responsible today for shelving, temporarily at least, the President's plan to strengthen the nation's military reserves. The House voted to put aside consideration of the bill for the time being after defeating an attempt by Georgia's Demoncratic Representative Vinson to knock out of the bill two anti-segregation amendments.

(5)

Former President Herbert Hoover said in a New York speech tonight that his commission on organization of the Executive branch of the government has recommended steps to save the taxpayers six billion dollars so far. Beyond that, he said, there would be returned to the Treasury about seven billion dollars which could be provided otherwise. [redacted]

In Paris, the French government has approved a 285-million dollar research program to make France a major atomic power, capable of building nuclear weapons and atomic powered ships and planes.

The French also [redacted] had to take further action in one of their North African trouble-spots. They are sending another 100-thousand men to Algeria to try to stamp out spreading attacks of Arab nationalists. [redacted]

(6)

[redacted]

[redacted] General Hammarskjold suggested that [redacted] Foreign Ministers [redacted] at the [redacted] session in San Francisco [redacted] ground work for the later meeting of the [redacted]

and [redacted]

In New York today, CBS President Dr. Frank Stanton came out strongly against the idea of pay-television. He said CBS opposes it because it would highjack the American public into paying for the privilege of looking at its own television sets. Television, he said, would no longer belong to all the people all the time, and that television could not long remain half free and half fee.

Summing up CBS' reasons for opposing pay-television, Dr. Stanton said pay-television would impose an unnecessary burden of billions of dollars on the American public---that it would charge the public for the popular programs it now enjoys free---that it would become a discriminatory service, available in large part to only those who could afford to pay---and it would endanger the scope and quality of nationwide news and public service programming.

(7)

In Washington today, some 900-of the x nation's youngsters gathered to compete in the annual National Spelling Bee. The best speller turned out to be a 13-year old from Granite City, Missouri. But, for the story of how it went, we hear from CBS reporter George Herman who was on the scene. Tell us about it George.

7:52:05

HERMAN SPOT RUNS FIVE MINUTES.

RETURN CUE: "ED, IT WAS QUITE A DAY IN WASHINGTON."

Gentlemen

As must always be the case in any contest, there can be but one winner. Thus it was with the Spelling Bee Today. For those who lost, Mark Twain once had some sympathetic advice. He said:"I don't give a cane for a man that can spell a word only one way." And perhaps Disraeli, a long time ago, echoed some of the losers' sentiments when he said:"I will sit down now, but the time will come when you will hear me again."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

George Herman

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Public Health Service made known today that it will not authorize any more shipment of Salk vaccine until at least next week. And one manufacturer - the Eli Lilly Company of Indianapolis - indicated that it might be even longer before additional supplies of anti-polio shots are made available. Senator Humphrey of Minnesota expressed the opinion of some of his colleagues when he said that the Public Health Service is arousing "grave public concern." Humphrey said that in handling the vaccine program so far, Public Health officials have been engaged in an "in and out, up and down policy." The Senator also told newsmen that he has reason to believe that the vaccine now being manufactured is not made up of precisely the same elements contained in the vaccine used in last year's field tests.

Here in New York today, the first innoculations for schoolchildren got under way. But slightly less than 30 percent of those elegible for the Salk shot failed to show up. A city medical spokesman said an important factor in this figure was the "confused national situation."

In an entirely different area there was also some confusion today. Shortly after Air Force Chief of Staff, General Twining had publically rebuked one of his generals for comparing favorably the Russian Air Force to ours, the General in question denied he had ever made such a remark. Twinning had said that Brigadier General Burgess, attached to the Intelligence Division, did not tell thr truth in Detroit last night when he addressed an American Legion Group and told it: "We are underistimating the Russias ..their Air Force is currently as good as ours, possibly better. " But Burgess is now reported to have told a Senate subcommittee later in the day that he was "misquoted and never used the words attributed to him."

General Curtis LeMay, the boss of the Strategic Air Command, testified before another Congressional Committee, asking for more urgent conctruction of housing units for military personnel. LeMay said it was entirely possible that in the event of an attack on this country, some of our planes would not get into the air because their crews life too far from air bases.

Also on the subject of preparedness, General Gruenther, commander of the NATO armies, told the Conference of Mayors in New York: "Russia's campaign of sweetness and light is propaganda..it is designed to keep German military strength from being an asset to the West. And is further aimed at forcing us to give up possible use of the atom bomb."

The Senate Armed Services Committee reported today that if a bomb were dropped on this country we would be unprepared. Plans for the evacuation of target areas are inadequate and, says the committee, we are upprepared medically for an attack ! The Committee urged the President to assume "personal responsibility" for developing an adequate Civil Defense Program.

Legislative action in Washington today centered around the President's veto of the Postal Pay bill which would have given a half-million postal workers an average of 8.8 percent pay increase. The President based his action on two points -- one, that bill discriminates against some postal workers and two, that it would add to the taxpayer's burden by "substantially" increasing the postal deficit.

The big test now will come next Tuesday when the Senate will vote on whether to override the veto. The concensus appears to be that Mr. Eisenhower's action will stand up.

The anti-segregation issue was responsible today for shelving, temporarily at least, the President's plan to strengthen the nation's military reserves. The House voted to put aside consideration of the bill for the time being after defeating an attempt by Georgia's Democratic Representative

Vinson to knock out th the bill two anti-segregation amendments.

Former President Herbert Hoover said in a New York speech tonight that his commission on organization of the Executive branch of the goverhment has recommended steps to save the taxpayers six billion dollars so far. Beyond that, he said, there would be returned to the Treasury about seven billion dollars which could be provided otherwise.

In Paris, the French government has approved a 285 million dollar research program to make France a major atomic power, capable of building nuclear weapons and atomic powered ships and planes.

The French also had to take further action in one of their North African trouble spots. They are sending another 100-thousand men to Algeria to try to stamp out spreading attacks of Arab Nationalists.

In New York today, CBS President Dr. Frank Stanton came out strongly against the idea of pay-television. He said CBS opposes it because it would highjack the American public into paying for the privilege of looking at its own television sets. Television, he said, would no longer belong to all the people, all the time, and that television could not long remain half free and half fee.

Summing up CBS's reasons for opposing any pay-television, Dr. Stanton said pay-television would impose an unnecessary burden of billions of dollars on the American public --that it would charge the public for the popular programs it not enjoys free --that it would become a discriminatory service, available in large part to only those who could afford to pay -- and it would endanger the scope and quality of nationwide news and public service programming.

In Washington today, some 900 of the nation's youngsters gathered to compete in the annual National Spelling Bee. The best speller turned out to be a 13-year-old from Granite City, Missouri. But, for the story of how it went, we hear from CBS reporter George Herman who was on the scene. Tell us about it George.

HRRMAN: Well, Ed, there was a lot of food for thought in this contest and not simply in the form of new words and spellings learned by perspiring elderly newsmen following their papers' entrants. For instance, why are there always more girl winners than boys and most of them the kind of freckled-faced, snub-nosed girls who made things so tough for us when we were young? I asked one of the boy contestants that after he's lost out and he said because girls spell better, which hurt us both. Another thing, what about the influence of television on American youth and its reading habits? These children today spell far more words than they were exepcted to or were supposed to be able to spell, and pronouncer Elliman had to reach into his side pocket for his special killer-diller list of several hundred extra tough words like "abecedarian", meaning one who's learning his letters, a beginning.

Here, for instance, is part of the final spell-down between Miss Jean Copeland, eleven years old, of Prescott, Arizona, and Miss Sandra Schlauss, thirteen, of Granite City.

First, Jean gets a word meaning one who is always curious about what's going on.

ELLIMAN: All rightee! Yours is "quidnunc."

SPEAKER: Junst a minute! You've missed one.

ELLIMAN: I know! I...(inaudible)

SPEAKER: Sorry

ELLIMAN: "Quidnunc", meaning one who is curious about everything that's going on; a gossip is an old quidnunc, from the latin, "Quidnunc".

COPELAND: Q-U-I-D-N-U-N-C

ELLIMAN: All right! And yours is "verisimilitudinous," "versimilitudinous", verisimilitude, having the appearance of a reality, adjective; versimilitudinous.

SCHLAUSS: V-E-R-I-S-I-M-I-L-I-T-U-D-I-N-O-U-S (applause)

ELLIMAN: All right! Yours is a French..we get from the French "boucle", woven so as to have a curled or a knotty appearance. "Boucle"

COPELAND: Boucle...B-O-U-C-L-E.

ELLIMAN: Right! Any yours is "baccaloureat", decree of bachelor is the baccalaureat degree.

SCHLAUSS: B-A-C-C-A-L-A-U-R-E-A-T-E (applause)

ELLIMAN: All right! Yours is a plant adopted for growth under surf conditiions, seashore, - "cumaphyte", "cumaphyte"

COPELAND:(?) Cumaphyte C-U-M-O-P-H-Y-T-E?

"LLIMAN: "Cumaphyte!" Mmmmm.

STRAUSS: C-U-M-E-PhH-I-T-E?

ELLIMAN; What?

SPEAKER Spell it!

ELLIMAN: It's C-U-M-A-P-H-Y-T-E! So we go on to another one. All right! This means dignity, estate, jurisdiction, of the abbot, the having the dignity or a term of office or jurisdiction of an abbot.."abbacy". "Abbacy"

COPELAND: (?) Abbacy (?)

ELLIMAN: Mmmm. "Abbacy."

COPELAND: A-B-B-O-S-Y

ELLIMAN:"Abbacy!"

COPELAND: A-B-B-A-C-Y

ELLIMAN: All right! And the next one has to do with the science of shell fish for studying shell fish - "crustaceology," "crustaceology".

COPELAND: C-R-U-S-T-A-C-E-O-L-O-G-Y (applause)

ELLIMAN: THE WINNER!! (applause)

HERMAN: The winner, Sandy Schlauss, by the way, is a tall, slender, and very graceful girl. Her hair is as sandy as her nick-name and she just glowed when she won. It did this old abecadarian's heart tood and all I can cay to a fellow quidnunc in New York is - it was quite a day in Washington.

MURROW: Thank you, George Herman. This is Ed Murrow in New York. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixnn.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: As must always be the case in any contest, there can be but one winner. Thus it was with the Spelling Bee Today. For those who lost, Mark Twain once had some sympathetic advice. He said: "I don't care much for a man that can spell a word only one way. " And perhaps Disraeli, a long time ago, echoed some of the losers' sentiments when he said: "I will sit down now, but the time will come when you will hear me again."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Friday May 20, 1955

This is the news:

~~And on this~~ On, the eve of Armed Forces Day, we have been told again by three ~~two~~ responsible Air Force officers: Russia's air power has already reached the point of "grave concern." General Twining, Chief of Staff for the Air Force, said in Los Angeles that Russia's long-range jet heavy bomber is the most immediate reason for concern. On top of this, said Twining, the Russians are now building a "great" bomber force capable of delivering nuclear weapons. And, he noted, it may be necessary for us to soon step up production of similar type planes.

In Pittsburgh, the Air Force Vice Chief of Staff, General White, said the Russians now have more scientists at work in their country than we do here and are ~~[illegible]~~ quickly catching up to us in total number of engineers as well. The General acknowledged that advanced Russian methods have now permitted the Russians to get planes and other weapons out of the planning stage and into production faster than we can here at home. Significantly, General White said:" It is dangerous complacency for Americans to habitually believe that they will win every technical battle. As a matter of fact, he said, comparisons of scientific manpower, technical effort and weapon production show how foolhardy it would be to assume that we will automatically keep the lead."

In Boston, the head of the Air Force Research Development Program - General Thomas Power - not only added his voice to those of his Fellow Officers — He even went further...that is, until he was ordered to tone down his remarks (FROM AN ADVANCED TEXT) General Power had intended to say in his talk today that Russia has the "world's largest combat air force." He changed that to: "a large air force." General Power was also going to say:"The Russians have resources in manpower and materiel we could not possibly match." He changed that to:"impressive resources in manpower and materiel." The General wanted to say:" Russia's bombers are comparable to our B-47s and 52s." He changed the word "comparable" to "similar." But in any event, General Power did say one thing in his speech exactly as it was written originally:"in addition to the cold war and hot war, there is now the slide rule war - the race to maintain technological superiority."

About the only encouraging news to come from a military man today came from the head of the Nato forces, General Gruenther, here in New York. He says "the Russian air force is quite a long way behind ours in long-range bombers." Gruenther said too that even if the Russians should try an attack on Europe and over-run it, he's convinced they could never knock out the United States.

Incidentally, the man responsible for the defense of this country in the event of attack, General Le May, issued no statement to newsmen. ~~But possibly he'll have something to say tonight when we visit with him on Person to Person later tonight on television.~~

A group of top medical experts met behind closed doors in Washington today and agreed on recommendations for eliminating some of the confusion in the polio vaccination program. They were studying, for one thing, the possibility of reducing the dosage for inoculations in order to stretch scarce supplies of the Salk vaccine. They were also considering the wisdom of suspending vaccinations entirely during the peak of the polio season this summer. The latter, because some doctors believe that [redacted] inoculations during the height of the season might precipitate the disease.

The Public Health Service says shipments of vaccine for immunization of first and second graders are not scheduled to be resumed until at least next week. A spokesman says it will take that long for the government to complete its new clearance procedures.

There were strong words aimed at the Communists in New York and Vienna today. In New York, Senate Republican leader Knowland told the conference of Mayors that the "Communist world is out to wreck" collective security through its recent peace moves. He said Russian proposals to ease tension and for disarmament were intended to bring about the dismantling of our overseas bases and to give the Chinese Communists control of Formosa and other islands off the Chinese coast.

~~In Vienna, AFL President George Meany addressed the opening session of the world congress of free trade unions. He denounced Communism and dictatorship "of every brand", and he said that the final signing of the Austrian peace treaty showed the world that the forces of freedom and peace can only advance from positions of strength. But he reminded the delegates that you have to defeat Communist infiltration and subversion at home before you can stop Communist invasion and slavery from abroad.~~

In Berlin, Russia's Ambassador, G. M. Pushkin flatly rejected a Western appeal for Soviet help in getting Communist East Germany to reduce the exhorbitant highway taxes they have imposed on truck traffic to West Berlin. The Western Ambassadors proposed that the four occupying powers appoint German experts to study the problem and recommend a solution. But Pushkin again claimed that the tax matter is the sole responsibility of the East German government and that only the Germans can settle it.

In Indochina, South [redacted] point in his drive to lessen French i[redacted] country, [redacted] good to withdraw her troops from Sai[redacted] deputy [redacted] eventually the entire [redacted] of 75 thousand troops will be shifted from the big Southern cities to [redacted] on three coastal embarkation points.

The [redacted] General Paul Ely [redacted] requested [redacted] growth of [redacted] policy [redacted]

In Buenas Aires, the culmination of the long controversy between Argentina's Roman Catholics and the government of Juan Peron. The Argentine Senate [redacted] passed unanimously a House-approved resolution to set up the process for amending the constitution to separate church and state. The Chamber of Deputies approved a Senate bill to cancel the tax exemption of churches and religious organizations. A[redacted] Peron's su[redacted] ls.

My colleague, Dan Schor, has been spending the past couple of weeks on an inspection tour of Refugee Camps in Germany and Austria. And I've asked him to record for us some of his impressions.....

Return cue: This is Dan Schor in Frankfurt.

(Tape runs 5:50)

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, May 20, 1955
7:45-8:00 p.m.

MURROW: My colleague, Dan Schorr, has been spending the past couple of weeks on an inspection tour of refugee camps in Germany and Austria. I've asked him to record for us some of his impressions.

SCHORR: It takes a strong stomach to take the concentrated misery that huddles in the squalid huts, the dingy barracks, the squatter colonies. At the German screening center of Valga (?), near Nurnberg, there are six hundred refused refugee status. They're marooned without any legal existence at all. At Lansut (?), southern Bavaria, in a one-time army barracks with crumbling walls several families share a single room, the living space of each marked by a tattered blanket. The Austrian festival town of Salzburg is unfestively ringed on the outskirts by refugee camps, including an unofficial shanty town along a railway siding where disease festers and life slowly oozes away. In contrast, there is Glaukenbaum (?) run by the U. S. SKP (escapee-?) program, a model camp with a library and recreation hall, but even here there are no smiling faces. A reasonably comfortable present doesn't make up for "no future."

The hundreds of thousands of refugees of German origin expelled from neighboring countries are mostly being absorbed or emigrating. It's the quarter-million foreigners, the Russians, Bulgarians, Poles, Jugoslavs, who are the real problem. Thousands don't want to settle down so close to the Iron Curtain or have no chance to and there's little hope so far for emigration. These are the forgotten people of Europe, but they won't be forgotten for long for something new is stirring, something we cannot ignore if we're to avoid a disaster in psychological warfare. That something is a turning of their eyes back to the countries they've fled from, a feeling born of hopelessness now being exploited by an all-out Communist repatriation campaign. It started quietly several months ago, a handful of letters from Poland and Czechoslovakia inviting refugees to come home, promising forgiveness and jobs. It began to grow, - leaflets, pamphlets, mail, from East Berlin and Vienna. In the past few weeks that drive has reached its peak, amnesties for refugees proclaimed in Hungary and Czechoslovakia, propaganda literature literally pouring into camps from satellite states and now even from Soviet Russia. Many envelopes come with exact names and addresses, a frightening sign that someone in the camps has been compiling catalogs for the Communists.

Repatriation organizations are being set up, apparently well financed. I havebefore me the latest issue of a mimeographed newspaper of a Czech repatriation organization. It opens with an idyllic description of the homeland in springtime, then gets down to the business of how to organize cells in the camps; no one to know than two other persons. The time of the homeward trek, it says, is almost at hand. The peak of this repatriation campaign was apparently timed for the signing of the Austrian peace treaty. Austria has been indifferent, if not hostile, to the exiles, but with the allied forces here the refugees felt relatively safe, but when the allies are gone what then? Austria, as a signer of the Geneva Refugee Convention, is pledged not to expel refugees but there are always ways to get around that. Under Austrianlaw any foreigner sentenced to jail is also subject to possible expulsion. Chances are that the U. S. escapee program won't be able to continue in its present form in a neutral Austria, so as Austria celebrated her independence there was no cheer in the refugee camps. At Helbrun (?) Barracks, in Salzburg, an aging Ukrainian leaped from a second-story window in a suicide attempt. This is the moment the Communists have chosen to open allthe stops in their repatriation campaign aimed at despairing exiles. So far, only a handful have responded. Those who do go back are immediately used for radio broadcasts denouncing the west, saying that in a democratic country there is no paradise, only concentration camps. Western officials fear that as despair increases the homeward movement will also increase and that the homecoming exiles will spread disillusionment with the west among the satellite countries. The answer is to provide them with the hope of emigration that first sent them through the Iron Curtain.

The operation of the American Refugee Relief Act is stepping up but not fast enough to meet the need. In June, for the first time, there will be enough emigrants to charter a refugee ship from Bremerhaven to New York, a thousand of them, but even working at full speed all present emigration programs are only part of theanswer for after the refugees have been culled and chosen there'll still be the "rejects," an estimated eighty thousand barred under present law for reasons of health, police records, in some cases trifling, because of security as interpreted under strict rules that resolve all doubts against the refugees. The question now is whether we can afford to be so finicky for every refugee left behind in a camp is now a potential redefector, a man who may go home to say democracy is a myth, that western life holds only misery. In the months to come we may find ourselves engaged in a race against despair, a race to be won not only for humanitarian causes but because of our interest in the Cold War.

This is Daniel Schorr in Frankfurt.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

Tomorrow is Armed Forces Day - an appropriate time for all of us to keep in mind that there are many nameless men below the rank of General who also are guarding our safety. George Cortelyou once remarked:"The greatest asset of any nation is the spirit of its people. And the greatest danger that can menace any nation is the breakdown of that spirit - the will to win and the courage to work."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

monday - may 23 - 1955

(1)

The polio issue is undergoing more study in Washington, as top scientists try to clear up some of the confusion surrounding the inoculation program.

The experts met today at the National Institutes of Health to work on the technical problems involved in testing vaccine for safety before additional supplies are released. They will meet again tomorrow with representatives of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. They are trying to decide whether any changes need be made in standards governing the manufacutre and testing of the vaccine, and what this means in terms of supply for the rest of the Summer. NO DECISIONS will be ANNOUCED UNTIL TOMORROW - AT THE EARLIEST.

[redacted]

The President of the National Foundation, Basil O'Connor, spoke out on the issue today. He said in New York that while the Foundation had charge of the program, there was intelligence, courage, intellectual integrity and no politics connected with it. Since then, he said, the Foundation itself has had some trouble keeping informed. He said "supply and demand, politics and economic factors of competition" have figured in the controversy over the vaccine. But he added that nothing that has been said affects the safety of the vaccine.

Senate Democrats in Washington put on new pressure to have the administration say just how our air power stacks up against that of Russia. Missouri's Senator Symington said Russia is moving up on us in offensive air power and moving ahead in defensive air power and production. Senate Democratic leader Johnson called on the administration to give us a clarification as to what is the true story. He scolded the Pentagon for what he described as confusing and conflicting statements about the relative air strength of this country and Russia.

7 In Los Angeles, under-Secretary of State Herbert Hoover, Jr., gave the first official government reaction to the recent Formosan peace bids by the Chinese Communists. He told the World Affairs Council that we welcome Chou En-Lai's statement that his government may be willing to renounce war and accept peaceful processes in relation to the Formosa area. We would like to hope, he said, that the proposal is genuine and not just propaganda. At any rate, we intend to find out.

The Russian Communist party newspaper, Pravda, has delivered a new blast at Western motives in planning the projected Big-4 conference. It accuses the West of quibbling about the site and duration of the conference. And it charges the United States with making "unreasonable" demands, [redacted]

Britain's Prime Minister Eden said tonight that he thinks the Russians will officially accept the invitation to the meeting. [redacted]

[redacted]

At home, the Supreme Court threw out contempt of Congress convictions of two top officials of the left-wing United Electrical Workers union and of the General Manager of the Communist paper, Daily Worker. The Court said the men had validly invoked the Fifth Amendment during Congressional investigations.

Senator McCarthy made a sharp attack tonight on President Eisenhower and the President's brother Milton. He referred to Milton Eisenhower as a left-winger and said he regards him as "the unofficial President of the United States"--- said he is "more than an influence on the President." McCarthy also said he cannot support the President for re-election next year unless, as he put it, "the President does something about the prisoner of war situation."

With the British elections only three days away, the Conservatives think they see a new reason for optimism in the growing unrest among British workers. Five major ports are now tied up as a result of a jurisdictional dock strike. And the prospect of a nationwide railroad strike before Election Day is another factor Conversative Party leaders feel will swing the uncommitted middle class vote their way. As for the Laborites...well, as you heard a few minutes ago, Ed Murrow is in London now for the elections and recorded an interview with Laborite Herbert Morrison.....

TAPE RUNS 7:11 COMES AT 7:49:45

RETURN CUE: "This is Ed Murrow recording from London"

And this is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. But first, Bob Dixon.

FOOTNOTE

The Smithsonian Institution has just published the autobiography of Sitting Bull. This is less ~~than~~ of a literary event than you might think since this is the fourth of the chief's autobiographies to turn up. Incidentally, Sitting Bull couldn't write, so he drew his memoirs -- an improvement on some autobiographies one has read. Sitting Bull, it turns out wasn't even at the Battle of the Little Big Horn... He was back at camp making medicine... But look what happened to Custer!

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD.... SEE YOU TOMORROW

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, May 23, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... With the British elections only three days away now, the Conservatives there think they see a new reason for optimism in the growing unrest among British workers. Five major ports are now tied up as a result of a jurisdictional dock strike. And the prospect of a nation-wide railroad strike Before Election Day is another factor Conservative party leaders feel will swing the uncommitted middle-class vote their way. As for the Laborites - well, as you heard a few minutes ago, Ed Murrow is in London now for the elections, and he recorded an interview with Laborite Herbert Morrison.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON!

Mr. Herbert Morrison is the No. 2 man in the Labor party. He was Home Secretary all during the coalition Government during the war and was Foreign Secretary in the last Labor Government. He can properly be called one of the principal tacticians of the whole Labor party when it comes to politics.

Mr. Morrison, could we start by doing a sort of primer? What changes will be made in domestic policy if the Labor party comes to power?

MORRISON: The big difference between us and the Conservatives is on this issue: Whether the nation thru Government and Parliament has the right to supervise its economic affairs. In that is included not only economic planning -- that is to say, seeing that first things come first, that (?) there's priorities to stimulate the export trade and so on -- but there's the control of monopolies, the stopping of restrictive practices promoted by trade associations, which, for example, stop people selling things at lower price than the trade associations fix. And there is the restoration of the public ownership that the Government has interfered with in transport and iron and steel and some other extensions of the principle of public ownership.

MURROW: You would renationalize both road transport and steel if you come to power?

MORRISON: Yes. Yes, we believe that's right. Especially as in the case of transport - we need a coordinated system between road and rail, instead of them cutting each other's throats. And on iron and steel, altho it was denationalized by the Government partly to promote competition or Conservative freedom, as they call it, ... (unintelligible) ... for iron and steel and its erection -- all of them exactly the same to the last eight pence. So that's how Conservative freedom goes!

MURROW: Herbert, how deep is the division in the Labor party? We hear a lot about that in the States these days.

MORRISON: Oh, it's not so bad as all that. There are in some cases some difference of background, difference of temperament, but in the election we've all been pulling together; and if our Government were returned, well, we'd have much the same experience as we had in '45 to '51, when responsibility and power brought about, stimulated the unity of the party. When you're in opposition, things get a little bit looser; but when you're in power, well, you've got to face up to power.

MURROW: Are you troubled by the predictions being made by the public opinion polls?

MORRISON: Not too much. I certainly, myself, prefer my own hunch about what the British people are thinking. And in any case, as I said on Saturday, some of them are being handled as hard news, rather than as speculation, because they don't cover the whole electorate; they only cover a small sample of it. And one point out, or two points out might make the difference of thirty, fifty or sixty parliamentary seats.

MURROW: Well, you've fought a great many elections in this country. Would you say that this one is apathetic, that the electorate is not very excited?

MORRISON: I would say that that was so, but I think the last four or five days it's livened up and there is much greater interest now.

MURROW: Well now, could we turn to foreign policy for a moment, which, of course, interests Americans a great deal more than the domestic issues?

MORRISON: Yes.

MURROW: What changes would be made in Britain's foreign policy if Labor comes to power?

MORRISON: Well, there's a good many things upon which we're in agreement. We should, I think, be more determined than the Conservatives to promote the four-power talks at the summit, as it is now called. You see, undoubtedly Churchill was keen about it. He believed in it. And we get the House of Commons to agree to it, in respect to the hydrogen bomb and other outstanding issues of foreign policy. But Mr. Eden, Sir Anthony Eden was not keen about it. Indeed, it was indicated in a parliamentary answer. So we should push on with that, in the hope that something would come out of it. You can't be sure. There may be difficulties on it. Well, then there's the point about the hydrogen bomb. We've agreed to its manufacture, but we're apprehensive, from the opinions expressed by some of the scientists, not all of them, as to what the effects of the experiments of the explosions is going to have by radiation on the atmosphere and upon humanity. So we'd like an international agreement that there should be a meeting of scientists of the nations to thresh this out. Meantime the experiments should stop; and then hope that out of it would come international agreement to stop the experiments, unless, of course, it were shown that no harm is being done.

MURROW: Well, you would press a little harder than the Conservatives for the admission of Communist China to the U.N., would you not?

MORRISON: Probably. They agree with it in principle. You see, they've accepted a good deal of our foreign policy, tho they were often critical of it at the time, especially towards the later months of the Labor Government. And so, there's a good many things upon which the defense of Mr. Eden has been, "I am following Labor policies - so what are you grumbling at?", which is a very nice compliment. But we argued for the admission of Communist China and I indeed have argued it in the United States of America. Didn't receive a very enthusiastic response, but I always think the great thing about the United States is that it can change its mind - which indeed it's done about the four-power talks.

MURROW: Yes, it has, indeed! I noticed, Herbert Morrison, that some of your colleagues have been saying that the Conservative party is too closely tied to the American kite. Would you say that that reflects a considerable opinion within the party?

MORRISON: There is some opinion to that effect; and of course there is some British opinion, apart from all parties -- I mean, irrespective of parties -- of criticism of the United States. I wouldn't go so far as to call most of it anti-Americanism; nor do I think it's any more serious than what there is of anti-British feeling or feeling critical of Britain in the United States. I think on this business of anti-Britishism on the one hand and anti-Americanism on the other, if you like to use those rather hard terms, it is that they are about fifty-fifty; they cancel each other out. And we are no worse than you are in that respect.

MURROW: Well, I know from covering past elections with you that you're rather chary of making predictions, but what would you say about the probable outcome on Thursday?

MORRISON: I don't know. (?) Or what I say to my people: I never will predict. If you say you're going to win the race, you may slack your people off; and if you say you're going to lose, you may dispirit them. Anyway, what's the point of it? I always say to my people: "Do your best; work hard; deserve victory - and then leave the returning officer to do his worst."

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, Herbert Morrison for sitting and chatting with me here in London.

MORRISON: Very nice to see you, Ed, over here once more.

MURROW: Thank you very much!

This is Ed Murrow recording from London! (Ed.trans/ES)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 23, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD:Good Evening.

The polio issue is undergoing more study in Washington, as top scientists try to clear up some of the confusion surrounding the inoculation program.

The experts met today at the National Institutes of Health to work on the technical problems involved in testing vaccine for safety before additional supplies are released. They will meet again tomorrow with representatives of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. They are trying to decide whether any changes need to be made in standards governing the manufacture and testing of the vaccine, and what this means in terms of supply for the rest of the Summer. No decisions will be announced until tomorrow - at the earliest. The President of the National Foundation, Basil O'Connor, spoke out on the issue today. He said in New York that while the Foundation had charge of the program, there was intelligence, courage, intellectual integrity and no politics connected with it. Since then, he said, the Foundation itself has had some trouble in keeping informed. He said "supply and demand, politica and economic factors of competition" have figured in the controversy over the vaccine. But he added that nothing that has been said affects the safety of the vaccine.

Senate Democrats in Washington put on new pressures to have the administration say just how our air power stacks up against that of Russia. Missouri's Senator Symington said Russia is moving up on us in offensive air powers and moving ahead in defensive air power and production. Senate Democratic leader Johnson called on the administration to give us a clarification as to what is the true story. He scolded the Pentagon for what he described as confusing and conflicting statements about the relative air strength of this country and Russia.

In Los Angeles, under-Secretary of State Herbert Hoover, Jr., gave the first official government reaction to the recent Formosan peace bids by the Chinese Communists. He told the World Affairs Council that we welcome Chou En-Lai's statement that his government may be willing to renounce war and accept peaceful processes in relation to the Formosa area. We would like to hope, he said, that the proposal is genuine and not just propaganda. At any rate, we intend to find out.

The Russian Communist party newspaper, Pravda, has delivered a new blast at Western motives in planning the projected Big-4 conference. It accuses the West of quibbling about the site and duration of the conference. And it charges tha United States with making "unreasonable" demands. Britain's Prime Minister Eden said tonight that he thinks the Russians will officially accept the invitation to the meeting.

At home, the Supreme Court threw out contempt of Congress convictions of two top officials of the left-wing United Electrical Wor ers Union and of the General Manager of the Communist paper, Daily Worker. The Court said the men had validly invoked the Fifth Amendment during Congressional investigations.

Senator McCarthy made a sharp attack tonight on President Eisenhower and the President's brother, Milton. He referred to Milton Eisenhower as a left-winger and said he regards him as "the unofficial President of the United States"-said he is"more than an influence on the President". McCarthy also said he cannot support he President for re-election next year unless, as he put it, "the President does something about the prisoner of war situation."

With the British elections only three days away, the Conservatives think they see a new reason for optimism in the growing unrest among British workers. Five major ports are now tied up as a result of a juricdictional dock strike. And the prospect of a nationwide railroad strike before Election Day is another factor Conservative Party Leaders feel will swing the uncommitted middle class vote their way. As for the Laborites..well, as you heard a few minutes ago, Ed Murrow is in London now for the elections and recorded an interview with Laborite Herbert Morrison.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON

Mr. Herbert Morrison is the Number Two man in the Labor Party. He was Home Secretary all during the coalition Government during the war and was Foreign Secretary in the last Labor Government. He can properly be called one of the principle tacticians of the whole Labor party when it comes to politics.

Mr. Morrison, could we start by doing a sort of primer? What changes will be made in domestic policy if the Labor Party comes to power?

MORRISON: The big difference between us and the Conservatives is an this issue: Whether the nation through government and Parliament has the right to supervise its economic affairs. In that is included not only economic planning -- that is to say, seeing that first things come first,..but that there're priorities to stimulate the export trade and so on -- but there's the control of monopolies, the stopping of restrictive practices promoted by trade associations, which, for example, stop people selling things at lower prices than the trade associations fix. And there is the restoration of the public ownership that the Government has interfered with in transport and iron and steel and some other extensions of the principle of public ownership.

MURROW: You would renationalize both road transport and steel if you come to power?

MORRISON: Yes. Yes, we believe that's right. Especially as in the case of transport - we need a coordinated system between road and rail, instaad of them cutting each other's throats. And on iron and steel, although it was denationalized by the Government partly to promote competition or Conservative freedom, as they call it..(unintelligible) for iron and steel, and its erection -- all of them exactly the same to the last eight pence. So that's how Conservative freedom goes!

MURROW: Herbert, how deep is the division in the Labor Party? We hear a lot about that in the States these days.

MORRISON: Oh, it's not so bad as all that. There are in some cases some differences of background, differences of temperment, but in the election we've all been pulling together; and if our government were returned, well, we'd have much the same experience as we had in '45 an '51, when responsibility and power brought about, stimulated the unity of the party. When you're in opposition, things get a little bit looser; but when you're in power, well, you've got to face up to power.

MURROW : And you troubled by the predictions being made b the public opinion polls?

MORRISON: Not too much. I certainly, myself, prefer my own hunch about what the British people are thinking. And in any case, as I said on Saturday, some of them are being handled as hard news, rather than as speculation, because they don't cover the whole electorate; they only cover a small sample of it. And one point out, or two points out might make the difference of thirty fifty or sixty parliamentary seats.

MURROW: Well, you've fought a great many elections in this country. Would you say that this one is apathetic, that the electorate is not very excited?

MORRISON: I would say that was so, but I think the last four or five days it's livened up and there is much greater interest now.

MURROW: Well now, could we turn to foreign policy for a moment, which, of course, interests Americans a great deal more than the domestic issues?

MORRISON: Yes.

MURROW: What changes would be made in Britain's foreign policy if Labor came to power?

MORRISON: Well, there's a good many things upon which we're in agreement. We should, I think, be more determined than the Conservatives to promote the four-power talks at the summit, as it is now called. You see, undoubtedly Churchill was keen about it. He believed in it. And we got the House of Commons to agree to it, in respect to the hydrogen bomb and other outstanding issues of foreign policy. But Mr. Eden, Sir Anthony Eden, was not keen about it. Indeed, it was indicated in a parliamentary answer. So we should push on that, in the hope that something would come out of it. You can't be sure. There may be difficulties on it. Well, then there's the point about the hydrogen bomb. We've agreed to its manufacture, but we're apprehensive, from the opinions expressed by some of the scientists, not all of them, as to what the effects of the experimen s of the explosions is going to have by radiation on the atmosphere and upon humanity. So we'd like an international agreement that there should ba a meeting of scientists of the nations to thresh this out. Meantime the experiments should stop; and then hope that out of it would come international agreement to stop the experemints, unless, of course, it were shown that no harm is being done.

MURROW: Well, you would press a little harder than the Conservatives for the admission of Communist China to the U.N., would you not?

MORRISON: Probably. They agree with it in principle. You see, thay've accepted a good deal of our foreign policy, though they were often critical of it at the time, especially towards the later months of the Labor government. And so, there's a good many things upon which the defense of Mr. Eden has been "I am following Labor policies - so what are you grumbling at?" , which is a very nice compliment. But we argued for the admission of Communist China and I indeed have argued it in the United States of America. Didn't receive a very enthusiastic response, but I always think the great thing about the United States is that it can change its mine - which indeed it's done about the four-power talks.

MURROW: Yes, it has, indeed! I noticed, Herbert Morrison, that some of your colleagues have been saying that the Conservative Party is too closely tied to the American kite. Would you say that that reflects a considerable opioion within the party?

MORRISON: There is some opinion to that effect; and of course there is some British opinion, apart from all parties -- I mean, irrespective of parties-- of criticism of the United States. I wouldn't go so far as to call most of it anti-Americanism; nor do I think it's any more serious than what there is of anti-British feeling or feeling critical of Britain in the United States. I think of this business of anti-Britishism on one hand and anti-Americanism on the other, if you like to use those rather hard terms, it is that they are about fifty-fifty; they cancel each other out. And we are no worse than you are in that respect.

MURROW: Well, I know from covering past elections with you that you're rather chary of making predictions, but what would you say about the probably outcome on Thursday?

MORRISON: I don't know. Or what I say to my people: I never will predict. If you say you're going to win the race, you may slack your people off; and if you say you're going to lose, you may disspirit them. Anyway, what's the point of it? I always say to my people: "Do your best; work hard; deserve victory - and then leave the returning officer to do his worst."

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, Herbert Morrison for sitting and chatting with me here in London.

MORRISON: Very nice to see you, Ed, over here once more.

MURROW. Thank you very much. This is Ed Murrow, recording from London.

COLLINGWOO : And this is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. But first, Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

COLLINGWOOD: The Smithsonian Institution has just published the autobiography of Sitting Bull. This is less of a literaty event than you might think since this is the fourth of the chief's autobiographies to turm up. Incidentally, Sitting Bull couldn't write, so he drew his memoirs -- an improvement on some autobiographies one has read. Sitting Bull, it turns out wasn't even at the Battle of the Little Big Horn...He was back at camp maket medicine...But look what happened to Custer!

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Tuesday May 24 1955 (1)

Good evening.

The United States Public Health Service reported tonight: polio vaccine produced by all manufacturers appears to be safe...with the exception of two lots of vaccine made by the Cutter Laboratories in California. The announcement is based on a series of exhaustive safety tests still going on. These tests showed that since the innoculation program got under way roughly six million school children have been given the Salk vaccine. Of the six million involved, 88 have developed infantile paralysis. Of these 88 cases, sixty cases have been traced to the Cutter Company's vaccine. Doctor Leonard Schelee, the Surgeon General, told newsmen there is "strong presumptive evidence" ~~in the conclusion reached~~ of a cause and effect relationship between the Cutter vaccine and certain cases of polio. He warned however, that at the moment, definite proof of the incidence of polio as related to injections of the Cutter vaccine can not be ~~proved~~ shown. (It will be one month Friday that all Cutter vaccine was ordered withdrawn from use.)

Doctor Schelee said he hoped a further statement could be made before the week is over. He did not indicate however, how long it might be before the mass innoculation program is resumed.

1-A

The man who developed the vaccine, Doctor Jonas Salk, said as far as he was concerned, "everything's fine." But the President of the National Foundation of Infantile Paralysis - Basil O'Connor - who had urged the release of the Cutter report, said he would not and could not withdraw his statement of yesterday that politics is involved in the vaccine program.

The Senate today upheld President Eisenhower's veto of the postal pay bill carrying an average 8.8 [redacted]-percent pay raise for half a million postal workers. Those trying to override the veto fell eight votes short of the required two-thirds majority. Thus, the postal pay bill is dead.

There were more statements in Washington on the question of [redacted] whether we have air superiority over Russia. Defense Secretary Wilson told a news conference flatly that we are maintaining a "military capability superior" to that of Russia. And Assistant Air Secretary Roger Lewis insisted that we have " "superiority" in terms of planes that can do the job, and that in such planes there is "qualitative as well as quantitative superiority."

[redacted]

Secretary of State Dulles told a news conference today that President Eisenhower has flatly rejected a Russian proposal for making Germany a neutral barrier between the free and Communist worlds. Dulles said that goes not only for West Germany, but also for a unified Germany as well. He said that with the President's authorization, he notified the West German Ambassador of our position last Friday.

Dulles said our position is that, while it is alright to talk about neutrality for a small country like Austria, such a policy has no application to a country of the character of Germany with its 70-million industrious people, strategic position and power resources. And he emphasized that in the case of Austria, this is an armed neutrality and not a military vacuum.

In [redacted] themselves today [redacted] at Germany is a co[redacted]ation which is not [redacted] threat [redacted]

The Democratic standard-bearer, Adlai Stevenson, placed strong emphasis on arms control in a Philadelphia speech. He said that should be at "the very core" of our diplomacy. He called for a "crashing effort" to control the hydrogen-bomb and to assure permanent peace. Describing the differences between [redacted] ourselves and the Communists as great and terrifying, Stevenson said these differences must be resolved---not in the old arena where war was one of the weapons, but in a new arena, under new rules, in a new spirit. He said there are significant and hopeful signs this fateful Spring that Russia's stubborn [redacted] attitude on arms control may be changing "and the opportunity may be at hand to boldly tackle once again this great unfinished business." But Stevenson reminded that we must continue to preserve and to build our alliances, to help free nations gain strength and to develop our own armed strength.

Britain's Prime Minister, Anthony Eden today predicted victory for the Conservatives in Thursday's general election. Some political analysts think the Conservative majority in the House of Commons will go over a hundred. And with public interest in the election lagging, bookmakers are now making the Conservatives a 7 to 1 betting favorite with little money involved so far. Ed Murrow who's in London and last night gave us the Labor side of the election story, tonite has recorded for us, the opposite viewpoint.

TAPE RUNS 6:47 COMES AT 7:50:10

RETURN CUE: This is Ed Murrow recording in London.

And this is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the day's news. But first, Bob Dixon.

Footnote

Speaking to the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters today, President Eisenhower said he thought radio and television news analysts should be able to present proper opinion with regard to news. He said he finds it easy to separate the news columns and the editorial columns of a paper and thinks radio and television should develop a similar yardstick. This reporter, carefully labelling his view as opinion, finds the point well taken.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD.... SEE YOU TOMORROW

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - CHARLES COLLINGWOOD

Tuesday, May 24, 1955
7:45-8:00 p.m.

COLLINGWOOD: Britain Prime Minister, Anthony Eden, today predicted victory for the Conservatives in Thursday's general election. Some political analysts think the Conservative majority in the House of Commons will go over a hundred. Bookmakers are now making the Conservatives a 7-1 betting favorite with little money involved so far. Ed Murrow, who's in London, and last night gave us the Labor side of the election story, tonight has recorded for us the opposite viewpoint.

MURROW: This is London! Mr. R. A. Butler, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the present Conservative Government and even his enemies agree that he has the best mind in the Conservative Government. He is the man who produced the industrial charter which contributed so much to the last victory by the Conservative Party.

RAB, I suggest that we start by a sort of primer as to the issues involved in this campaign. What would you say are the principal issues dividing the Conservative and the Labor Party on domestic matters?

BUTLER: Well, on domestic matters the chief issue is whether we are going forward with what we call our expansionist policies or whether we're going back to some form of control and restriction. You see, expansionist liberty side we freed most of our markets, whether you take the agricultural field or in the metals or the other big markets like the cotton market, and that means freeing and going back to a system rather like we had before, and, of course, they feel that this is a bit too free in order to insure what they call fair shares for all. I think that's fairly put.

MURROW: And what other issues divide the two Parties on the domestic front?

BUTLER: Well, there's the question of nationalization. We feel that nationalization is wholly wrong. It's not been successful where it's been tried and the idea of putting the steel industry back to nationalization, when it's produced in a record twenty-and-a-half-millon tons this year, seems to us madness to rehatch like that. The same way that it's going to put back the road transport, the same way they're going to deal with machine tools, but we want exports, you see, and we don't want these things messed up at the present time.

MURROW: Tell me this. Are you encouraged by the fact that the public opinion polls now give the edge to the Conservatives?

BUTLER: Oh, yes, I think we are shooting well away. (?) Of course, there's what spurt they'll make at the end.

MURROW: And you don't expect any very considerable ... when you feel that presently you're ahead and you'll stay there until tomorrow night?

BUTLER: I said provided that we get ... we (barely audible-indistinct) everybody. You can never be sure, you know. A violent election is not always in our favor.

MURROW: Isn't it true that if the Government increases its majority in this election it will be the first time that that has happened in fifty or sixty years?

BUTLER: Yes,but remember this, that we have won the bi-elections for the first time in fifty or sixty years and that's been a feature of our rule which is giving us encouragement for winning the election.

MURROW: What about the stories I've heard in the short time I've been here that the electorate is apathetic?

BUTLER: Well, I think the electorate's a bit silent, but I don't think it's apathetic. It's concerned about several things there. We haven't gone on to the overseas front yet, but it's concerned about whether we can keep the (?) benefits going, which we have introduced, - better wages, better pension benefits, bigger housing. They say - can this last? And I think it can under our double policy. This has been an encouragement.

MURROW: Well, now, let's go over to the foreign front for a moment. What are the basic issues dividing the two Parties in the realm of foreign affairs?

BUTLER: Well, I should say that we have no doubt that we shall only get peace through absolute strength and unity and we, therefore, must be absolutely sure of including Western Germany and, of course, your great country, the United States of America ... we must have absolute unity otherwise there is no hope of a peaceful talk. They've been a bit divided, you see, about the future of Germany. I am not referring to their leaders, who've taken the same line as we have, but they've been a bit divided and they've been a bit divided about these new arms.

MURROW: Well, now, I understand that the Labor Party is now in the process of issuing a statement, which is going to suggest that there should be a moratorium on further experiments with both hydrogen and atomic bombs until a group of international scientists meet at the summit and decide how much danger there is from atomic fall-out.

BUTLER: Well, that's all very well. We should like to see a check in the progress of these new arms. We'd like to see all that sort of thing, but the question is whether the Russians will agree. You take our initiative at the disarmament conference ... you see, we've tried out most of these ideas at the disarmament conference and we haven't had agreement from the Russians.

MURROW: Let me put you another question, which you may not want to answer because it impinges a little bit on American foreign policy, but if Labor comes to power would you expect a greater divergent of ... divergence of British and American policy in regard to the Far East, Formosa particularly?

BUTLER: Well, it's rather difficult for me in the foreign field to, when I'm talking to you and you're asking me questions from overseas, take too political a line. You understand that?

MURROW: Yes!

BUTLER: But I think that the Socialist opposition underestimates our own anxiety to get moderation in the Far East, that is, the Conservatives' anxiety. We don't want to sell anything or give up any principle. We really don't see that the Formosa Strait need be a subject for a third world war.

MURROW: Well, is it true, and this follows from your answer, I think, is it true as a friend of mine told me in London this morning that in this whole election, on both domestic and foreign affairs, that the middle-of-the-road is pretty crowded, that there isn't as great a divergence between Labor and Conservatives as there has been in the past, and that may be one reason why there is the apparent apathy?

BUTLER: Well, I think in foreign affairs there's always a tendency for all men of patriotism to take much the same sort of line. It's a difference of emphasis. I should say there was a distinct difference of emphasis in our case on strength, but on the homefront I think there is a difference because I believe that this small island, the center of our immense Commonwealth, can only succeed if we stand and open up and free the energies of man, and they can't get out of theirminds this idea of the necessity for control, but it's more a difference on the home than the foreign.

MURROW: Do your ideas of non-control go as far as the convertibility of sterling?

BUTLER: Well, we laid down some conditions for that. You've just made a bit of an advance yourselves today in freeing trade through your famous new bill in the House of Representatives, and so that's an advance. We've also said we want to be stronger internally so we've got a good many conditions to fulfill before we get to that.

MURROW: Do you ever engage in the practice of making predictions about elections, Mr. Butler?

BUTLER: I'm not such a fool! (laughter) But I think we're going to win. I am confident but not a prophet! (laughter)

MURROW: Well, thank you very much, indeed, "Rab" Butler, for sitting here in your country home and chatting with us about the forthcoming election.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London.

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

COLLINGWOOD: Good Evening.

The United States Public Health Service reported tonight: polio vaccine produced by all manufacturere appears to be safe..with the exception of two lots of vaccine made by the Cutter Laboratories in California. The announce - ment is based on aseries of exhaustive safety tests still going on. These tests showed that since the innoculation program got under way roughly six million school children have been given the Salk vaccine. Of the six million involved, 88 have developed infantile paralysis. Of these 88 cases, sixty cases have been traced to the Cutter Company's vaccine. Dr. Leonard Scheele, the Surgeon General, told newsmen there is "strong presumtive evidence" of a cause and effect relationship between the Cutter vaccine and certain cases of polio. He warned however, that at the moment, definite proof of the incidence of polio as related to injections of the Cutter vaccine can not be shown. (It will be one month Friday that all Cutter vaccine was ordered withdrawn from use.)

Doctor Scheele said he hoped a further statement could be made before the week is over. He did not indicate however, how long it might be before the mass innoculation program is resumed.

The man who developed the vaccine, Doctor Jonal Salk, said as far as he was concerned, "everything's fine ". But the President of the National Foundation of Infantile Paralysis - Basil O'Connor - w o had urged the release of the Cutter report, said he would not and could not withdraw his statement of yesterday that politics is involved in the vaccine program.

The Senate today upheld President's Eisenhower's veto of the postal pay bill carrying an average 8.8 percent pay raise for half a million postal workers workers.

Those trying to override the veto fell eight votes short of the required two-thirds majority. Thus, the postal pay bill is dead.

There were more statements in Washington on the question of whether we have air superiority over Russia. Defense Secretary Wilson told a news conference flatly that we are maintaining a "military capability superior" to that of Russia. And Assistant Air Secretary Roger Lewis insisted that we have "superiority" in terms of planes that can do the job, and that in such planes there is qualitative as well as quanitative superiority."

Secretary of State Dulles told a news conference today that President Eisenhower has flatly rejected a Russian proposal for making Germany a neautral barrier between the free and Communist worlds. Dulles said that goes not only for West Germany, but also for a unified Germany as well. He said that with the President's authorization, he notified the West German Ambassador of our position last Friday.

Dulles said our position is that , while it is alright to talk about neautrality for a small countrys like Austria, such a policy has no application to a country of the character of Germany with its 70-million industrious people, strategic position and power resources. And he emphasized that in the case of Austria, this is th armed neautrality and not a military vacuum.

The 1952 Democratic standard-bearer, Adlai Stevenson, placed strong emphasis on arms control in a Philadelphia speech. He said that should be at "the very core" of our iplomacy. He called for a "crashing effort" to control the hydrogen - bomb and to assure permanent peace. Describing the differences between ourselves and the Communists as great and terrifying, Stevenson said these differences must be resolved -- not in the old arena where war was one of the weapons, but in a new arena, under new rules, in a new spirit. He said there are significant and hoeofulssigns this fateful Spring that Russia's stubborn attitude on arms control may be changing "and the opportunity may be at hand to boldly tackle once again this great unfinishedbusiness." But Stevenson reminded that we must continue to preserve and to build our alliances, to help free nations gain strength and to develop our own armed strength.

Britain's Prime Minister, Anthony Eden today predicted victory for the conservatives on Thursday's general election. Some political analysts thing the Conservative majority in the House of Commons will go over a hundred. And with public interest in the election lagging, bookmakers are now making the Conservatives a 7 to 1 betting favorite with little money involved so far. Ed Murrow, who is in London and last night gave us the Labor side of the election story, tonight has recorded for us the opposite viewpoint.

MURROW: This is London. Mr. R. A. Butler, Chancellor of the Exchecquer, in present Conservative Government and even his enemies agree that he has the best mind in the Conservative Government. He is the man who produced the inuustrial charter which contributed so much to the last victory oy the Conservative Party.

RAB, I suggest that we start by a sort of primer as to the issues involved in this campaign. What would you say are the principal issues dividing the Conservative and the Labor Party on domestic matters?

BUTLER: Well, on domestic matters the chief issue is whether we are going forward with what we call our expansionist policess or whether we're going back to some form of control and restriction. You see, expansionist liberty side we freed most of our markets, whether you take the agricultural field or in metals or the other big markets like the cotton market, and that means freeing and going back to a system rather like we had before, and, of course, they feel that this is a bit too free in order to insure what they call fair shares for all. I think that's fairly put.

MURROW: And what other i sues divide the two Parties on the domestic front?

BUTLER: Well, there's the question of nationalization. We feel that nationalization is wholly wrong. It's not been successful where it's been tried. and the idea of putting the steel industry back to nationalization, when it's produced in a record twenty-and-a-half - million tons this year, seems to us madness ro rehatch like that. The same way that it's going to put back the road transport, the same way they're going to deal with machine tools, but we want exports, you see, and we don't want want these things messed up at the present time.

MURROW: Tell me this, Are you encouraged by the fact that the public opinion polls now give the edge to the Conservatives?

BUTLER: Oh, yes, I think we are shooting well away. Of course, there's what spurt they'll get at the end.

MURROW: And you don't expect any very considerable...when you feel that presently you're ahead and you'll stay there until tomorrow night?

BUTLER: I said provided that we get...we (indistinct) everybody. You can never be sure, you know. A violent election is not always in our favor.

MURROW: Isn't it true that the Government increases its majority in this election it will be the first time that that has happened in fifty or sixty years?

BUTLER: Yes, but remember this, that we have won the bi-elections for the first time in fifty or sixty years and that's been a feature of our rule which is giving us encouragement for winning the election.

MURROW: What about the stories I've heard in the short time I've been here that the electorate is apathetic?

BUTLER: Well, I think the electorate's a bit silent, but I don't think it's apathetic. It's concerned about several things there. We haven't gone on to the overseas front yet, but it's concerned about whether we can keep the benefits going, which we have introduced, - better wages, better pension benefits, bigger housing. They say - can this last? And I think it can under our double policy. This has been an encouragement.

MURROW: Well, now, let's go over to the foreign front for a moment. What are the basic issues dividing the two parties in the realm of foreign affairs?

BUTLER: Well, I should say that we have no doubt that we shall only get peace through absolute strength and unity and we, therefore, must be absolutely sure of including Western Germany and, of course, your great country, the United States of America...we must have absolute unity otherwise there is no hope of a peaceful talk. They've been a bit divided, you see, about the future of Germany. I am not referring to their leaders, who've taken the same line as we have, but they've been a bit divided and they've been a bit divided about these new arms.

MURROW: Well, now, I understand that the Labor Party is now in the process of issuing a statement, which is going to suggest that there should be a moratorium on furt er experiments with both hydrogen and atomic bombs until a group of international scientists meet at the summit and decide how much danger there is from atomic flll-out.

BUTLER: Well, that's all very well. We should like to see a check in the progress of these new arsm. We'd like to see all that sort of thing, but the question is whether the Russians w ll agree. You take our initiative at the disarmament conference...you see, we've tired out most of these ideas at the disarmement conference and we haven't had agreement from the Russians.

MURROW: Let me put you another question, which you may not want to answer because it impinges a little bit on Amerinan foreign policy, but if Labor comes to power would you expect a greater divergent of...divergence of British and American policy in regard to the Far East, Formosa particularly?

BUTLER: Well, It's rather difficult for me in the foreign field to, when I'm talking to you and you're asking me que tions from overseas, take too political a line. You understand that?

MURROW: YES.

BUTLER: But I think that the Socialist opposition underestimates our own anxiety to get moderation in the Far East, that is, the Conservatives' anxiety. We don't want to sell anything or give up any principle. We really don't see that the Formosa Strait need be a subject for a third world war.

MURROW: Well, is it true, and this follows from your answer, I think, is it true as a friend of mine told me in London this morning that in this whole election, on both domestic and foreign affairs, that the middle-of-the - road is pretty crowded, that there isn's as great a divergence between Labor and Conservatives as there has been in the past, and that may be one reason why there is the apparent apathy.

BUTLER: Well, I think in foreign affairs there's always a tendency for all men of patriotism to make much the same sort of line. It's a difference of emphasis I should say there was a distinct difference of emphasis in our case on strength, but on the homefront I think there is a difference because I believe that this small island, this senter of our immense Commonwealth, can only succeed if we stand and open up and free the emergies of man, and they can't get out of their minds this idea of the necessity for control. but it's more a difference on the home than the foreign.

MURROW: Do your ideas fo non-control go as far as the convertibility of sterling?

BUTLER: Well, we laid down some conditions for that. You've just made a bit of an advance yourselves today in freeing trade through your famous new bill in the House of Representatives, and so that's an advance. We've also said we want to be stronger internally so we've got a good many conditions to fulfill before we do that.

MURROW: Do you ever engage in the practice of making predictions about elections, Mr. Butler?

BUTLER : I'm not such a fool! (laughter) But I think we're going to win . I am confident but not a prophet!)laughter)

MURROW: Well, thank you very much, indeed, "Rab" Butler, for sitting here in your country home and chatting with us about the forthcoming elections.

This is Ed Murrow recording in London.

COLLINGWOOD: And this is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the day's new . But first, Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

COLLINGWOOD: Speaking to the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters today, President Eisenhower said he thought radio and television news analysts should be able to present proper opinion with regard to news. He said he finds it easy to separate the news columns and the editorial columns of a paper and thinks radio and television should develop a similar yardstick. This reporter, carefully labelling his view as opinion, finds both points well taken.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

Wed - May 25, 1955

(1)

Good evening.

Doctor Robert Cutter, whose California firm had two lots of its Salk polio vaccine declared "unsafe" just a month ago Friday, said tonight that the vaccine had passed "the most rigid government tests." He also noted that it had been prepared "strictly in accordance with methods stipulated by the man who developed the vaccine, Dr. Jonas Salk. Dr. Cutter said he hoped it would eventually turn out that those who got vaccine from Cutter and still developed polio, probably would have gotten it anyway. But, said Cutter, somewhat significantly:"If it does develop that some got polio from our vaccine, it will not be due to carelessness or incompetence. But rather will show the necessity for more delicate testing procedures than those which have already been devised."

G[redacted]

The new vaccine standards announced by the government earlier in the day IT NOW DEVELOPS are not acceptable to at least one of the six firms which produce the Salk vaccine. The executive Vice President of the Parke-Davis Company says there are a "lot of points that need to be cleared up" before the new manufacturing and testing regulations can be followed. He indicated that the other companies making the vaccine feel much the same way, though there was no comment from anyone other than Parke Davis. What the new requirements are have not been made known.

Government [redacted]

It was announced, however, that the government has set up a Commission which will "advise"..."review"..."evaluate"...and "recommend" on all aspects of of the vaccine - from its manufacture through its general distribution. The Surgeon General, Dr. Leonard Schelee, says he regards the establishment of this panel as "the first step in getting the vaccinations under way again." The basic function of the group will be to "advise" the Director of the National Institutes of Health...who in turn will make "recommendations" to the Surgeon General...who in turn will make the final decisions. The group will be headed by Dr. James Shannon of the National Institutes of Health. Among those on the panel are Dr. Salk - the man who developed the polio vaccine; and Dr. Thomas Francis, Junior - the man who directed last year's field tests.

In another aspect of the problem, New York's Democratic Representative Klein said he had heard that a "very, very prominent politician in California (he would not give his name or inititals) had been instrumental in getting the Cutter Laboratories licensed to make the vaccine. But (ROSWELL) Perkins, Assistant Secretary of Welfare says "this is absolutely false."

(4)

President Eisenhower has completed the reshuffle of his military high-command. Today, he nominated Rear Admiral Arleigh Burke to succeed Admiral Carney as Chief of Naval Operations on August 31st. He also named Admiral Arthur Radford to another two-year term as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and General Twining to a second two-year term as Air Force Chief of Staff.

The White House denied that the controversy with Carney over the Formosa situation had anything to do with failure to reappoint him, but the fact remains that Carney is still below the retirement age. Also, in picking Burke to replace him, the President went way down the Navy's list of line Admirals. Burke is number 93 on that list.

In Congress, the Senate rejected the President's 100-billion dollar highway program by a vote of 60 to 31. It then went into an overtime night session to work for passage of a substitute offered by Tennessee's Democratic Senator Gore.

The Senate Post Office committee approved a new postal pay bill carrying an average raise of about 8-percent for half-a-million postal workers.

Secretary of State Dulles went before the House Foreign Affairs committee to urge passage of the administration's 3½-billion dollar foreign aid bill. He said he is encouraged by what he called the "striking reversal" of Soviet tactics in Europe, adding that the Russians may be about to "adopt more tolerable policies." But he cautioned against interpreting this "reversal" as "indicating that the danger is over." ~~If we took such a view, he said, the strength of the free world would "quickly disintegrate" -- that~~ "too often he said men have been lured to their doom by mistaking a false dawn for the real dawn." ~~And he also pointed out that the Soviet shifts could be a "show of sweet reasonableness to bring the free nations to a sense of security so that they will abandon measures which have so far enabled them to help each other preserve their freedom."~~

5

Dulles ~~He~~ did say that Soviet tactics "suggest that they realize" that the free world is strong and that they (the Russians) have to give up some of the courses they once selected.

In New York, Bernard Baruch warned against "wishful thinking" concerning Russia's latest disarmament proposals. He said any disarmament agreement which does not establish the authority to enforce it would be incalculably dangerous.

On the projected Big-4 talks, French Premier Pinay said in Paris that President Eisenhower had accepted July 18th to 21st as the dates for the meeting and that the West proposed Lausanne, Switzerland as the site. The White House said this is only one of the times and places under consideration. And Secretary Dulles called the Paris reports, "extremely premature and inaccurate." He said the Western powers have not agreed among themselves, much less with Russia on definite arrangements.

Russian authorities have indicated that they will not even send a formal reply to the Western invitation to the conference until after the British elections. ~~The elections will decide whether Britain will be represented by~~ Anthony Eden or Clement Attlee.

~~In Germany,~~ Chancellor Adenauer talked today with his Ambassadors ~~to the Western~~ capitals---trying to plan ~~a counter-offensive against any possible Russian~~ attempt to neutralize Germany as the price for reunification. ~~Adenauer is said to be worried that such an idea is~~ gaining ground.

Incidentally, the Kremlin sent birthday greetings today to Yugoslavia's Marshal Tito for the first time in seven years. Tito celebrated his 63rd birthday only 24-hours before the arrival in Belgrade of top Russian brass for talks which the Russians say are aimed at "normalization" of relations which were broken off in 1948. ~~Belgrade is under a heavy security guard as it prepares for that momentous visit.~~

The three-week election campaign in Britain has come to an end. And tomorrow the voting takes place. Edward R. Murrow who is in Britain this week, has recorded some off-hand impressions for us. And of course tomorrow night will beport on the outcome. Let's listen now to Ed Murrow.....

TAPE RUNS 5:35 Comes at 7:51:20

Return cue: "Good Nite and Good Luck!"

This is Charles Collingwopd. I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the day's news. But first, Bob Dixon.

FOOTNOTE

Here, in its entirety, is an item cabled from London today by Reuters, the British news agency. Police today raced in a patrol car to an East London hospital to investigate reports that a stork had perched on the roof of the maternity section of the hospital. They discovered/that the bird was not a stork but a heron..... Well, maybe it isn't true what they say about storks after all.

says Reuters crisply,

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD .... SEE YOU TOMORROW

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, May 25, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

COLLINGWOOD: ... The three-week election campaign in Britain has come to an end. Tomorrow the voting takes place, and, of course, tomorrow nite Ed Murrow will report on the outcome. Let's listen now to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON!

Phil Drake won the Derby - paid a hundred to eight! The Queen was there, loudly cheered. There was sunshine. The Chelsea Flower Show is so beautiful, it might lead you to believe that England has the finest climate in the world. A lady brought suit against a man for calling her a tramp, and the judge threw it out.

Most people over here are preparing for the long Whitsun week-end. There is a cartoon in a paper in Scotland showing one housewife saying to another, "I shall vote for this chap Apathy." The election is tomorrow. The weather forecast is favorable. And it has been one of the most unusual political campaigns in fifty years. The word for it is "demure". The language employed by both sides has been restrained, the issues rather obscure. It seems almost as tho both parties have decided to paraphrase Noel Coward by saying, "Let's don't be beastly to each other."

Unless the pollsters and the experts are wrong, Sir Anthony Eden's Conservative party will win. If it doesn't, it will be an upset equal to the one that occurred in our country in 1948, when Mr. Dewey didn't win, or the one that happened here in 1945, when Winston Churchill was thrown out of office. The Conservatives are warning against over-confidence, and certain sections of the Labor party press are urging that all party members vote not for victory but to keep the Conservative majority from being too big.

The country is prosperous. There is no overriding demand for a change. But experienced reporters who have been travelling the country say they can't find very many people who have decided to vote differently from the way they did last time. So the election may be closer than the prophets indicate.

What has happened in Britain in the last ten years is that the Labor party created the so-called Welfare State, and then rather ran out of steam and ran out of a program. The Conservatives then came in, adopted and solidified most of the aspects of the Welfare State. And the position now is that the two parties are jostling each other rather gently in an effort to occupy the middle of the road. No one appears to be very excited about Labor's promise to renationalize the iron and steel industry and long-range truck transport. No one appears to be very impressed by the Conservative claim that a Labor victory will mean the reimposition of rationing and control.

The Labor charge that the Conservative Government is too closely tied to the United States, with the implication that we are reckless and irresponsible and may land Britain in a war which she would not survive, this argument doesn't appear to have carried much waight, particularly in view of the fact that American policy in recent months, as viewed from here even by our critics, does not appear to have been reckless or irresponsible. There is, of course, no doubt that Mr. Eisenhower's willingness to participate in a Big-Four meeting helped the Conservatives, but it's difficult to say how much it helped.

It is not easy for the pollsters and the experts to determine how Britain will vote, for it is their practice to hoard their vote, frequently not even telling their neighbors their choice. At least three things have worked against the Labor party's chances. The first is the relative prosperity of the country; the second, the rezoning that has taken place in certain constituencies since the last election; and the third is the spectacle of disunity presented by the Labor party in its split with Aneurin Bevan and the Left-wing of the party. It is possible in this country for a party to win a numerical majority of the total vote and still fail to win the election. This is because the vote is for the individual candidate, and in some constituencies a huge majority may be built up for one side or the other without affecting the distribution of seats in the new Parliament.

This election is likely to be determined by two considerations, and both are to this reporter rather inscrutable. The first is the vote of the housewife, which is to say, whether she will vote Conservative and face the prospect of a free market and perhaps rising prices, or vote Labor and the possibility at least of the reimposition of certain controls. The second consideration is, I think, the real mystery. It hasn't been talked about very much, at least openly. It is the hydrogen bomb. These people who live amongst the scars of old-fashioned bombs are very likely to give their vote to that party which they think will handle the new-fangled and awesome explosive with the greatest care, tenderness and restraint. This is a subtle thing, difficult to measure even in private conversation, but it is, I think, the big intangible and may well determine the outcome of the election.

This has been a rather silent but responsible political campaign, a fitting prelude to the responsibility that will descend upon whichever party forms the new government.

This is Ed Murrow recording in London.

Good Night and Good Luck!

-30-

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 25, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

COLLINGWOOD: Good evening.

Doctor Robert Cutter, whose California firm had two lots of its Salk polio vaccine declared "unsafe" just a month ago Friday, said tonight that the vaccine had passed "the most rigid government tests." He also noted that it had been prepared "strictly in accordance with methods stipulated by the man who developed the vaccine, Dr. Jonas Salk. Dr. Cutter said he hoped it would eventually turn out that those who got vaccine from Cutter and still developed polio, probably would have gotten it anyway. But, said Cutter, somewhat significantly;" If it does develop that some got polio from our vaccine, it will not be due to carelessness or incompetence. But rather will show the necessity for more delicate testing procedures than those which have already been devised."

The new vaccine standards announced by the government earlier in the day it now develops are not acceptable to at least one of the six firms which produce the Salk vaccine. The executive Vice President of the Parke-Davis Company says there are a "lot of points that need to be cleared up" before the new manufacturing and testing regulations can be followed." He indicated that the other companies making the vaccine feel much the same way, though there was no comment from anyone other than Parke Davis. What the new requirements are have not been made known. It was announced, however, that the government has set up a Commission which will "advise" .."review" ..."evaluate".. and recommend" on all aspects of the vaccine - from its manufacture through its general distribution. The Surgeon General, Dr. Leonard Schelee, says he regards the estalbishemnt of this panel as "the first step in getting the vaccinations under way again". The basic function of the group will be to "advise" the Director of the National Institutes of Health..who in turn will make "recommendations" to the Surgeon General..who in turn will make the final decisions. The group will be headed by Dr. James Shannon of the National Intitiute of Health. Among those on the panel are Dr. Salk- the man who developed the polio vaccine; and Dr. Thomas Francis, Junior - the man who directed last year's tabulation field tests.

In another aspect of the problem, New York's Democratic Representative Klein said he had heard that a "very,very prominint politician in California (he would not give his name or initials) had been instrumental in getting the Cutter Laboratories licensed to make the vaccine. But Roswell Perkins, Assistant Secretary of Welfare says "this is absolutely false."

President Eisenhower has completed the reshuffle of his military high-command. Today, he nominated Rear Admiral Arleigh Burke to succeed Admiral Carney as Chief of Naval Operations on August 31st. He also named Admiral Arthur Radford to another two-year term as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and General Twining to a second two-yea term as Air Froce Chief fo Staff.

The White House denied the controversy with Carney over the Formosa situation had anything to do with failure to reappoint him, but the fact remains that Carney is still below the retirement age. Also, in picking Burke to replace him, the President went way down the Navy's list of line Admirals . Burke is number 93 on that list.

In Congress, the Senate rejected the President's 100-billion dollar highway program by a vote of 60 to 31. It then went into an overtime night session to work for passage of a substitute offered by Tennessee's Democratic Senator Gore.

The Senate Post Office committee approved a new postal pay bill carrying an average raise of about 8 percent for half-a-million postal workers.

Secretary of State Dulles went before the House Foreign Affairs committee to urge passage of the administration's 3½ - billion dollar foreign ahd bill. He said he is encouraged by what he called the "striking reversal" of Soviet tactics in Europe, adding that the Russians may be about to "adopt more tolerable policies." But he cautioned against interpreting this "reversal" as "indicating that the danger is over." "Too often", he said, "men have been lured to their doom by mistaking a false dawn for the real dawn."

Dulles did say that Soviet tactics "suggest that they realize" that the free world is strong and that they (the Russians) have to give up some of the courses they once selected.

In New York, Bernard Baruch warned against "wishful thinking" concerning Russia's latest disarmement proposals. He said any disarmement agreement which does not establish the authority to enforce it would be incaluuably dangerous.

On the projected Big-4 talks, French Fremier Pinay said in Paris that President Eisenhower had accepted July 18th to 21st as the dates for the meeting and that the West proposed Laussanne, Switzrrland as the cite. The White House said this is onl one of the times and places under consideration. And Secretary Dulles called the Paris reports, "extremely premature and inaccurate." He said the western powers have not agreed among themselves, much less with Russia on definite arrangements.

Russian authorities have indicated that they will not even send a formal reply to the Weste n invitation to the conference until after the British elections.

Incidentally, the Kremlin sent birthday greetings today to Yugoslavia's Marshal Tito for the first time in seven years. Tito celebrated his 63rd birthday only 24-hours before the arrival in Belgrade of top Russian brass for talks which the Russians say are aimed at "normalization" of relations which broken off in 1948.

The three week election campaign in Britain has come to an end. And tomorrow the voting takes place. Edward R. Murrow who is in Britain this week, has recorded some off-hand impressions for us. and of course tomorrow night will report tha the outcome. Let's listen now to Ed Murrow.

MURROW: THIS IS LONDON

Phil Drake won the Derby - paid a hundred to eight! The Queen was there, loudly cheered. There was sunshine. The Chelsea Flower Show is so beautiful, it might lead you to believe that England has the finest climate in the world. A lady brought suit against a man for calling her a tramp, and the judge threw it out.

Most people over here are preparing for the long Whitsun week end. There is a cartoon in a paper in Scotland showing one house-wife saying to another, "I shall vote for this chap Apathy." The election is tomorrow. The weather forecast is favorable. And it has been one of the most unusual political campaigns in fifty years. The word for it is "demure". The language employed by both sides has been restrained, the issues rather obscure. It seems almost as though both parties have decided to paraphrase Noel Coward by saying, "Let's don't be beastly to each other."

Unless the pollsters and the experts are wrong, Sir Anthony Eden's Conservative party will win. If it doesn't, it will be an upset equal to the one that occured in our country in 1948, when Mr. Dewey didn't win, or the one that happened here in 1945 when Winston Churchill was thrown out of office. The Conservatives are warning against over-confidence, and certain sections of the Labor party press are urging that all party members vote not for victory but to keep the Conservati majority from being too big.

The country is prosperous. There is no overriding demand for a change. But experienced reporters who have been travelling the country say they can't find very many people who have decided to vote differently from the way they did last time. So the election may be closer than the prophets indicate.

What has happened in Britain in the last ten years is that the Labor Party created the so-called Welfare State, and then rather ran out of steam and ran out of a program. The Concervatives then came in, adopted and solidified most of the aspects of the Welfare State. And the position now is that the two parties are jostling each other rather gently in an effort to occupy the middle of the road. No one appears to be very excited about Labor's promise to renationalize the iron and steel industry and long-range truck transport. No one appears to be very impressed by the Conservative claim that a Labor victory will mean the reimposition of rationing and control.

The Labor charge that the Conservative Government is too closely tied to the United States, with the implication that we are reckless and irresponsible and may land Britain in a war which she would not survive, this argument doesn't appear to have carried much weight, particularly in view of the fact that American policy in recent months, as viewed from here even by our critics, does not appear to have been reckless or irresponsible. There is, of course, no doubt that Mr. Eisenhower's willingness to participate in a Big-Four meeting helped the Conservatives, but it's difficult to say how much it helped.

It is not easy for the pollsters and the experts to determine how Britain will vote, for it is their practice to hoard their vote, frequently not even telling their neighbors their choice. At least three things have worked against the Labor Party's chances. The first is the relative prosperity of the country; the second, the reasoning that has taken place in certain constituenci s since the last election; and the third is the spectacle of disunity presented by the Labor Party in its split with Aneurin Bevan and the Left-wing of the party. It is possible in this country for a party to win a numerical majority of the total vote and still fail to win the election. This is because the vote is for the individual candidate, and in some sonstituencies a huge majority may be built up for one side or the other without affecting the distribution of seats in the new Parliament.

This election is likely to be determined by two considerations, and both are to this reporter rather inscrutable. The first is the vote of the Housewife, which is to say, whether she will vote Conservative and face the prospect of a free market and perhaps rising prices, or vote Labor and the possibility at least of the reimposition of certain controls. The second conisderation is, I think, the real mystery. It hasn't been talked about very much, at least openly. It is the hydrogen bomb. These people who live amongst the scars of old-fashioned bombs are very likely to give their vote to that party which they think will handle the new-fangled and awesome explosive with the greatest care, tenderness and restraint. This is a subtile thing, difficult to measure even in private conversation, but it is, I think, the big intangible and may well determine the outcome of the election.

This has been a rather silent but responsible political campaign, a fitting prelude to the responsibility that will descend upon whichever party forms the new government.

This is Ed Murrow recording in London. Good Night and Good Luck.

CC: This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the day's news. But first, Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

COLLINGWOOD: Here, it its entirety, is an item cabled from London today by Reuters, the British news agency. Police today raced in a patrol car to an East London hospital to investigate reports that a stork had perched on the room of the maternity section of the hospital. They discovered, says Reuters crisply, that the bird was not a stork but a heron..Well, maybe it isn't true what they say about storks after all.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD...SEE YOU TOMORROW.

1

IF MURROW OK

Thursday - May 26, 1955

Good evening.

The big news story tonite comes from Britain which is having its first general election since 1951. Edward R. Murrow, as you know, has been reporting the developments leading up to election day. And now, from London, let's see what the picture looks like.....

IF MURROW NG

(After second try...)

We're still hopeful that the signal from London will clear up in time for us to get a report from Mr. Murrow. And if it does, we'll switch right back. The first returns reaching us...less than 10 per cent of the vote has been counted so far...show the Conservatives making a net gain of one seat. The Conservatives had a majority of 17 seats in the House of Commons at the time the election was called.

(4A)

Voting is off about five per cent over 1951 - the last time the British had a general election. This is usually a sign that the Laborites are running behind -- they do best when the vote is big. Some political analysts in Britain have already predicted a "near landslide for the Conservative Party." So far, no one has indicated that the picture looks encouraging for the Labor Party.

A delegation of top men from the Kremlin arrived in Yugoslavia today on their mission to try to woo Marshal Tito back into the family. Communist party boss, Nikita Khrushchev, headed the delegation and started the ball rolling at the Belgrade airport. There, he said the 1948 break between Tito and the Kremlin was due to a "misinterpretation" traced to "enemies of the people." He said Moscow's present leaders are sorry for the break and that relations between the two countries must be re-established on a basis of trust and confidence.

In Moscow, Foreign Minister Molotov called in the Western Ambassadors and handed them notes, accepting formally the invitation to a top-level Big-4 conference. The notes said the meeting should work toward "the lessening of international tension and the strengthening of confidence among nations." it suggested Vienna as the site and said the four-powers should negotiate the time.

While agreeing to the conference, the Russian note struck out at the United States---said the Americans are doing everything possible to wreck the meeting even before it starts. It said American officials have gone so far as to mention the necessity of interference in the internal affairs of other states, making attacks on the East European Communist states, which are defending the freedom of their people. This, an apparent reference to Secretary

Dulles' statement that the conference might set up some new processes toward a solution of problems such as reunification of Germany, limitation of armamanet, atomic weapons, and the problem of the satellite countries.

The notes to Britain and France contained some paragraphs which the one to Washington did not. They appealed for support against American views, saying that Russia does not think Britain and France see eye-to-eye with American declarations.

A French Foreign Office spokesman said this attack on the United States was "unfortunate", but that at least, Russia did not close the door on a conference.

The British said they will begin talks with the United States and France at once on the Russian acceptance, and the United States welcomed the Russian agreement and pledged to work for "peace, freedom and justice."

General Alfred Gruenther---the Supreme Commander of NATO---made his first visit to West Germany today since that nation was admitted to the organization. In Bonn, he said Western superiority in long-range airpower would defeat any Soviet aggression in Europe now. He said at the present time, we may not be able to defend all areas, but that when German rearmament is effective, "we shall be able to meet any all-out act of agression" and be able to defend much farther forward, meaning all of West Germany.

At home, the question of whether this country might be in danger of losing air supremacy to Russia brought an announcement of action by Air Force Secretary Harold Talbott. After giving the Senate Armed Services Committee a secret briefing, Talbott and other Air Force officials announced that the Air Force is increasing production of giant B-52 jet bombers by 35-percent to counter Russia's growing airpower challenge. Talbott said the "acceleration" is being made possible by "the establishment of a second production source at Wichita, Kansas." He said this will enable complete replacement of the obsolescent B-36 superbomber "well ahead of present schedule."

Committee Chairman Russell said Congress is ready to vote any funds necessary to carry this plane program to a successful conclusion.

President Eisenhower asked Congress today for 12½-million dollars to start construction of the world's first atomic-powered merchant ship, which he wants to sent on a round-the-world goodwill cruise.

In the polio situation, all but one of the manufacturers of Salk vaccine have agreed to go along with the government's new testing standards. Pitman-Moore Company of Zionsville, Indiana, is the only one which has not endorsed the standards. Meanwhile, the new clearance committee got down to the business of recommending just what vaccine is ready to be released so the nationwide inoculation program can be resumed.

In Detroit, the Ford Motor Company has made a counter-proposal to the CIO United Auto Workers' demand for a guaranteed annual wage. Ford offered its 140-thousand union employes an opportunity to buy stock now controlled by the company. The amount of stock a worker could buy in any one year would be equal to 10-percent of his gross annual pay, and Ford would pay one-half the cost of the stock purchased by the workers. There was no immediate reaction from the negotiators for the auto-workers.

In Washington, CBS President, Dr. Frank Stanton, came out for closer inspection of the relationship between television and its public. He told the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters that CBS is willing to underwrite the cost of a nationwide study of what the public wants and expects of television. Dr. Stanton said that, after CBS had set up the committee, CBS' connection with it would cease and it would be the committee's responsibility to select the areas and methods of its investigation. He said the committee would be made up of distinguished members of the public, representing the arts, religion, labor, industry, education, social and political scientists and television critics.

Tornadoes which hit Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri last night, continued today with the death toll rising to almost one-hundred. More than 700-have been injured and property damage is in the millions of dollars.

Fifteen persons were killed near San Angelo, Texas, when a big B-36 bomber plowed into the storm and crashed in flames.

INTO HOTTLET CABLE FOR EXTRA FILL

We were talking about the Russians and the Yugoslavs a few minutes ago. And now I'd like to read you a message from my colleague, Richard C. Hottelet in Belgrade -

PRE[redacted]RK

[redacted] SOVIET DELEGATION OPENED CONFERENCES ON MOST EMBARRASSING NOTE FOR YUGOSLAVS STOP INSTEAD STARTING OFF COYLY TRYING WOO BELGRADE BACK COMINFORM FOLD NIKITA KHRUSHCHEV THIS AFTERNOON HARDLY SET FOOT SOLID GROUND BEFORE EXTENDING LENGTHY DIRECT UNMISTAKEABLE APPEAL TITO RESUME OLD LOVE AFFAIR PARA CRASHING

P2

EFFECT SOVIET ACTION PARTICULARLY GREAT IN LIGHT ALL PRECEDING AND ATTENDANT CIRCUMSTANCES STOP WHEN MOSCOW FIRST BEGAN SERIOUSLY STRETCH FEELERS TOWARD BELGRADE LAST WINTER TITO REPLIED COOLLY STOP KREMLIN INVITED HIM COME MOSCOW STOP HE REFUSED STOP WHEN MOLOTOV HAMHANDEDLY

P3

REPEATED SOVIET OVERTURES FEBRUARY YUGOSLAV PRESS PINNED HIS EARS BACK AND SOVIET PRAVDA TOOK CRITICISM WITH UNUSUAL GOOD GRACE STOP WHEN RUSSIANS FINALLY SUGGESTED THEY TRAVEL BELGRADE TITO SET CERTAIN CONDITIONS TO PREVENT MEETING ALONE FROM COMPROMISING HIM IN EYES WESTERN WORLD STOP WAS TACITLY AGREED MOLOTOV WOULD STAY AWAY STOP WAS AGREED SOVIET LEADERS WOULD COME AS STATE REPEAT

P4

STATE DELEGATION DASH POT PARTY STOP AGREED CONFERENCE WOULD CENTER ON INTERNATIONAL POLITICS AND NOT IDEOLOGICAL PARTY MATTERS PARA IN MANY WAYS YUGOSLAVS LIKE VIRTVOUS WOMAN TRIED KEEP IMPORTUNAT WOOER AT ARMS LENGTH PRECLUDE EVEN APPAREANCE FAVORING HIS SUIT STOP TODAY YUGOSLAVS ORDERED LUKEWARM WELCOME DASH WITH FEWER FLAGS LESS

P5

POMP THAN THEY PROVIDED FOR EMPEROR HAILE SELASSIE OR TURKISH PRESIDENT MENDERES STOP RECEPTION AT AIRPORT WAS GIVEN DISTINCTLY WESTERN FLAVOR STOP YUGOSLAV CABINET APPEARED IN BLACK JACKETS STRIPED TROUSERS STOP TITO DROVE AWAY WITH KHRUSCHEV IN OPEN ROLLS ROYCE CONVERTIBLE FOLLOWED BY OLD GERMAN HORCH AND NEW CADILLAC CONVERTIBLES

P6

STOP REMAINDER CARS CONVOY CONSISTED PACKARDS BUICKS MERCEDES STOP YUGOSLAVS PROVIDED NOT SINGLE SOVIET ZIS OR ZIM LIMOUSINE DASH OF WHICH RUSSIANS HAD GIVEN THEM NUMBER IN COMINFORM HEYDAY PARA FURTHERMORE EVERYONE KNOWS CONFERENCE WILL START TOMORROW IN SAME ROOM WHEREIN YUGOSLAV COMMUNIST PARTY OKAYED TITOS FINAL BREAK COMINFORM

P7

1948 PARA DESPITE THIS CALCULATED RESERVE AND IGNORING PAST SEVEN YEARS DURING WHICH RUSSIANS LABELLED TITO FASCIST WARMONGER AND TRIED EVERYTHING BUT MILITARY INVASION OVERTHROW HIS REGIME KHRUSHCEV THIS AFTERNOON BOUNCED FROM TWO ENGINED ILYUSHIN TRANSPORT AND SHOOK HANDS TITO AS THOUGH WERE MEETING LONG LOST FRIEND STOP THEN COMMA

P8

FACING BELGRADE RADIO MIKES COMMA OSTENSIBLY EXPRESS FEW COURTEOUS ARRIVAL BANALITIES KHRUSHCHEV LAUNCHED INTO TEN MINUTE SPEECH GREAT POLITICAL IMPORTANCE STOP GIST HIS REMARKS WAS THAT COMINFORM BREAK WAS ALL BERIAS FAULT AND RUSSIA YUGOSLAVIA HAVE SO MUCH IN COMMON AS COMMUNIST NATIONS THAT OUGHT REESTABLISH OLD POLITICAL CULTURAL INTIMACY

P9

STOP ORDER UNDERSCORE THIS POINT KHRUSHCHEV REPEATED THAT COMMUNIST PARTIES BOTH COUNTRIES SHOULD REESTABLISH FULL CONFIDENCE UNDERSTANDING PARA WHILE KHRUSCHEV EMPHATICALLY READ SPEECH TITO STOOD BESIDE HIM WITH STONILY IMMOBILE FACE STOP WHEN KHRUSCHCHEV FINISHED TITO DID NOT REPLY DASH WHICH HE APPARENTLY NORMALLY DOES STOP INSTEAD QUICKLY WALKED KHRUSHCHEV

P10

OVER TO CAR AND DROVE OFF PARA FROM ALL APPEARANCES RUSSIANS TRYING COMPROMISE YUGOSLAVS DASH TRY REASSERT OLD INTIMACY ORDER ROUSE WESTERN SUSPICIONS STOP KHRUSHCHEV OBVIOUSLY NOT ONLY NOMINAL LEADER THIS DELEGATION BUT MOVING SPIRIT STOP PREMIER NICOLAI BULGANIN STOOD AROUND DURING WHOLE RECEPTION ABSENTMINDEDLY NOT SAYING WORD STOP MIKOYAN

P11.

STOOD TWITCHING GROUCHO MARX MOUSTACHE AND LOOKING SIDE TO SIDE PARA APPARENTLY RUSSIANS TRYING SWEEP YUGOSLAVS OFF FEET STOP MAY WELL FOLLOW THROUGH IN NEXT FEW DAYS WITH GLITTERING PROMISES POLITICAL MATERIAL ADVANTAGES RETURNING SOVIET FOLD STOP YUGOSLAVS BEEN MUCH MORE GEARED MEET SOVIET APPROACH WITH SHY EVASION AND ADMONITION

P12

BE NO MORE THAN FRIENDS STOP WILL INTERESTING SEE WHETHER THEY NOW SLAP RUSSIANS DOWN ORDER PERSUADE ONLOOKING WORLD THAT THEY STILL GOOD GRILS WHO WILL NOT RUN OFF WITH SMOOTH TALKING HIGH PRESSURE SAMOVAR SALESMAN ENDITEM HOTTELET

FOOTNOTE

It is no news to students of the American scene that the trade in Davy Crockett hats and accoutrements has become big business. The courts are now having to decide who gets the profit from all those coonskins and long rifles. There's the Walt Disney organisation, of course, but there's also a Baltimore firm which happened to register a Davy Crockett, Frontiersman label back in 1946.. The law may be complicated, but any kid can tell you, Davy belongs to everybody.

THIS IS CHARLES COLLINGWOOD.... SEE YOU TOMORROW

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - CHARLES COLLINGWOOD

Thursday, May 26, 1955
7:45-8:00 p.m.

COLLINGWOOD: Good evening! The big news story tonight comes from Britain, which is having its first general election since 1951. Edward R. Murrow, as you know, has been reporting the developments leading up to election day and now from London let's see what the picture looks like with Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is London! The apathy reported in connection with the British election was no myth. The national vote is off about 10% from previous elections. According to the latest reports we have here, the Conservatives have won 90 seats and the Labor Party 93. There are a total of six hundred and thirty seats in the House of Commons and when the Government was dissolved the Conservatives had a margin of 20 seats. So far, there have beennoupsets, no major political figures have lost. Sir Winston Churchill is back with a majority of about fifteen thousand; Sir Anthony Eden also is safely home. It would appear on the basis of the figures so far that the Conservatives did get out the vote and the Labor Party didn't. There has been a swing in the national figures of roughly 2% and the experts here are predicting that if this swing continues it may mean that the Conservatives will be in with a majority of perhaps as much as a hundred.

We have here, however, two experts and we'll consult with them in a moment. The gains and losses, as things stand now: the Conservatives have gained five seats and lost none. Labor has gained no seats and lost five.

Now, we have Mr. Henry Durant, who is the Director of the Gallup Poll in Britain, an organization that has had a remarkable record of accuracy here and, since one should always be flanked by two experts, when working in a foreign country, we have also Howard K. Smith, our European Director.

Mr. Durant, how do you figures look as of now?

DURANT: We said that the Conservatives, on the basis of the people who told us which way they were going to vote, would have a le adof 2%. It looks as though they're going to end up with a lead of about 3%, so that's not too bad at the moment.

MURROW: And do you accept this prognosis of a majority of a hundred seats for the Conservatives?

DURANT: Probably beslightly under one hundred. (Drowned out) I think to a hundred to make (drowned out) really very little difference.

MURROW: Howard Smith, it is true, isn't it, that the returns so far ... after all, we have figures here, the Conservatives 90 seats and Labor 93, that the marginal seats have not yet come in?

SMITH: Well, only about five have come in, Ed, and I think, as you mentioned a while ago, all five of those have gone to the Conservatives, which indicates very clearly this trend, this shift to the Right, that you were talking about.

MURROW: The principal one, the first one that came in, was Waterford (?), wasn't it?

SMITH: Yes!

MURROW: Mr. Durant, do you see any general pattern in the voting so far? Is what I said earlier true, namely, that the Cons ... that the Labor Party probably did not get out the vote?

DURANT: I think that's absolutely true, though, for instance, in the large and northern city of Manchester the drop in the turn-out was as much as 10%, which I believe is a record for this country, and it's fairly clear that this election is reproducing the pattern of prewar elections rather than those of 1945, 1950, and 1951, when the turn-outs were very high, indeed, but going back to what it looked like in 1935, for instance .....

SMITH: Mr. Durant, I've heard it said that this election would be decided not by the "don't-knows" who occupy a special column in your statistics but by the "don't-really-cares." Is that so?

DURANT: There's probably some truth in that. We found an amazing decrease in the number of people saying this general election is important or who say that it mattered to them which side won or who said: "Yes, definitely, I will go and vote." By all those three (drowned out) the interest in this election was considerably lower than (several words drowned out) election since the war.

MURROW: Then, the reason that Labor is leading by three seats at this moment, a little before twelve o'clock, or, before one o'clock ... thatclock is wrong, isn't it?

DURANT: Yes!

MURROW: That's right! The reason that Labor is leading by three seats now is that the early returns have come to a considerable extent from the industrial and the regions where Labor has power anyway?

DURANT: That's ... that's perfectly correct!

SMITH: I gather that Labor has to pick up a very substantial lead in these early results in order to win the election and, in fact, ...

DURANT: No!

SMITH: ..... is not picking up that substantial lead?

DURANT: Yes! The first result that came was an increased majority for the Conservatives and that has set them back quickly ... pretty safely for all the other results, although there have been one or two quite remarkable cases where the Labor candidate had actually increased their ... his proportion of the vote and that, which in British politics, is quite rare, that one constituency should go against the national trend.

SMITH: What does that? Is that your sex appeal or is there some special local reason?

DURANT: I don't know because it's a very rare occurrence, indeed, and yet it's happened on several occasions in this election. Why it should be so, I can't say.

MURROW: How near to a hundred would you put the Conservative majority as of now, Mr. Durant?

DURANT: If I have to name a figure I'd say one hundred, a nice round (drowned out by laughter).

MURROW: How do you account for the apparent apathy on the part of the Labor voters?

DURANT: Personally, I would say that that is largely to be explained by the fact that more Labor voters say there's no real difference between the Labor Party and the Conservative Party than the (drowned out) doesn't matter so much (drowned out) in that case.

MURROW: Well, Howard Smith, since we're forecasting, do you anticipate any substantial changes in British foreign policy if the Conservatives are returned to power?

SMITH: NO! In fact, I don't think there would have been any changes if Labor had returned to power. I largely agree with what Durant just said, that it's very hard to distinguish before the Left-Wing of the Tory Party, which runs the Tory Party now, and the Right-Wing of the Labor Party, which runs the Labor Party. They've both moved so far in opposite directions that they stand in x just about the same place.

MURROW: Then, it is true that they're sort of jostling each other gently in the middle of the road? Is that right?

SMITH: They would make a wonderful coalition government! (laughter) I wonder, Ed, ... I would like to ask Dr. Durant to what extent you think foreign affairs have had an influence on all this outcome?

DURANT: We found the maj ... more people saying that the Conservatives could handle foreign affairs well than say the people ... number of people saying the same thing about the Labor Party and also we found, I think for the first time, when we asked the voters what's the most urgent problem facing the Government they put foreign affairs before all other issues .....

MURROW: Mmm-hmm!

DURANT: ..... and let's say before any domestic issue, even high cost of living or anything like that.

MURROW: Then, if your prediction is right, of a majority of a hundred it means that the Labor charge, that the Conservatives were tied too closely to the tail of the American kite, didn't have very much influence?

DURANT: It doesn't seem to have been that at all.

SMITH: There's one factor that interests me a great deal, and I'm sure it's a very hard question to ad ... to answer, therefore, I want to put it to you. Do you think that the change of Prime Ministers in the Conservative Party had any effect on its popularity?

DURANT: That's very difficult to say. If I think back to 1938, however, I recall that the British public in our polls were expressing very great degree of approval of Anthony Eden and that has been maintained absolutely consistently over those seventeen, eighteen, years. Oddly enough, we have not found the same degree of approval of Sir Winston Churchill in spite of his war record, so it may be, but I'm being very cautious, it ... maybe it has had some effect.

SMITH: Mmm-hmm! Is this ... is this a reflection of the old story that democracies in times of bland peace don't like spectacular leaders?

DURANT: Probably that's the explanation.

MURROW: Well, thank you very much, Henry Durant, Director of the Gallup Poll in Britain, and Howard K. Smith, our chief European correspondent.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London.

Goodnight and good luck!

Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff (30)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

COLLINGWOOD: Good Evening! The big news story tonight comes from Britain, which is having its first general election since 1951. Edward R. Murrow, as you know, has been reporting the developments leading up to the election day and now from London let's see what the picture looks like with Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is London! The apathy reported in connection with the British election was no myth. The national vote is off about 10% from previous elections. According to the latest reports we have here, the Conservatives have won 90 seats and the Labor Party 93. There are a total of six hundred and thirty seats in the House of Commons and when the Government was dissolved the Conservatives had a margin of 20 seats. So far, there have been no upsets, no major political figures have lost. Sir Winston Churchill is back with a majority of about fifteen thousand; Sir Anthony Eden also is salfely home. It would appear on the basis of the figures so far that the Conservatives did get out the vote and the Labor Party didn't. There has been a swing in the National figures of roughly 2% and the experts here are predicting that if this swing continues it may mean that the Conservatives will be in with a majority of perhaps as much as a hundred.

We have here, however, two experts and we'll consult with them in a moment. The gains and losses, as things stand now; the Conservatives have gained five seats and lost none. Labor has gained no seats and lost five.

Now, we have Mr. Henry Durant, who is the Director of the Gallup Poll in Britain, an organization that has had a remarkable record of accuracy here and since one should always be flanked by two experts, when working in a foreign country, we have also Howard K. Smith, our European Director.

MURROW: Mr. Durant, how do your figures look as of now?

DURANT: We said that the Conservatives, on the basis of the people who told us which way they were going to vote, would have a lead of 2 %. It looks as though they're going to end up with a lead of about 3%, so that's not too bad at the moment.

MURROW: And do you accept this prognisis of a majority of a hundred seats for the conservatives?

DURANT: Probably be slightly under one hundred. (Drowned out) I think to a hundred to make (drowned out) really very little difference.

MURROW: Howard Smith, it is true, isn't it, that the returns so far...after all, we have figures here, the Conservatives 90 seats and Labor 93, that the marginal seats have not yet come in?

SMITH: Well, only about five have come in, Ed, and I think, as you mentioned a while ago, all five of those have gone to the Conservatives, which indicates very clearly this trend, this shift to the Right, that you were talking about.

MURROW. The principal one, the first one that came in, was Waterford, wasn't it?

SMITH: Yes!

MURROW: Mr. Durant, do you see any general pattern in the voting so far? Is what I said earlier true, namely, that the conservatives ..that the Labor Party probably did not get out the vote?

DURANT: I think that's absolutely true, though, for instance, in the large and northern city of Manchester the drop in the turn-out was as much as 10% which I believe is a record for this country, and it's fairly clear that this election is reproducing the pattern of prewar elections rahter than those of 1945, 1950 and 1951, when the turn-outs were very high, indeed, but going back to what it looked like in 1935, for instance...

SMITH: Mr. Durant, I've heard it said that this election would be dicided not by the "don't - knows" who occupy a special column in your statistics byt by the "Don't really - cares". Is that so?

DURANT: There's probably some truth in that. We found an amazing decrease in the number of people saying this general election is important or who say that it mattered to them which side won or who said: "Yes, definitely, I will go and vote." By all those three (drowned out) the interest in this election was considerably lower then (drowned out) election since the war.

MURROW: Then, the reason that Labor is leading by three seats at this moment a little before twelve o'clock, or, before one O'clock..that clock is wrong, isn't it?

DURANT: Yes!

MURROW: That's right! The reason that Labor is leading by three seats now is that the early returns have come to a considerable extent from the industrial and the regions where Labor has power anyway?

DURANT: That's...that's perfectly correct!

SMITH: I gather that Labor has to pick up a very substantial lead in these early results in order to win the election and, in fact.....

DURANT: No!

SMITH: ...is not picking up that substantial lead?

DURANT: Yes! The first result that came was an increased majority for the Conservatives and that has set them back quickly..pretty safely for all the other results, although there have been one or two quite remarkable cases where the Labor candidate had actually increased there...his proportion of the vote and that, which in British politics, is quite rare, that one constituency should go against the national trend.

SMITH: What does that? Is that your sex appeal of is there some special local reason?

DURANT: I don't know because it's a very rare occurence, indeed and yet it's happened on several occasions in this election. Why it should be so, I can't say.

MURROW: How near to a hundred would you put the Conservative majority as of now, Mr. Durant?

DURANT: If I have to name a figure I'd say one hundred, a nice round (drowned out by laughter.)

MURROW: How do you account for the apparent apathy on the part of the Labor voters.

DURANT: Personally, I would say that that is largely to be explained by the fact that more Labor voters say there's no real difference between the Labor Party and the Conservative Party that the (drowned out) doesn't matter so much (drowned out) in that case.

SMITH: NO! In fact, I don't think there would have been any changes if Labor had returned to power. I largely agree with what Durant just said, that it's very hard to distinguish before the Left-Wing of the Tory Party now, and the Right-Wing of the Labor Party, which runs the Labor Party. They've both moved so far in the opposite directions that they stand in just about the same place.

MURROW: Then, it is true that they're sort of jostling each other gently in the middle of the road? Is that right?

SMITH: They would make a wonderful coalition government! (laughter) I wonder Ed,..I would like to ask Mr. Durant to what extent you think foreign affairs have had an influence on all this outcome?

DURANT: We found the (drowned out) ...more people saying that the Conservatives could handle foreign affairs well than say the people..number of people saying the same thing about the Labor Party and also we found, I think for the first time, when we asked the voters what's the most urgent problem facing the Government they put foreign affairs before all other issues.

MURROW: Mmmmmmmm!

DURANT: ...and let's say before any domestic issue, even before high cost of living an anything like that.

MURROW: Then, if your prediction is right, of a majority of a hundred it means that the Labor charge, that the Conservatives were tied too closely to the tail of the American kite, didn't have very much influence?

DURANT: It doesn't seem to have been that at all.

SMITH: There's one factor that interests me a great deal, and I'm sure it's a very hard question to ad...to answer, therefore, I want it put it up to you. Do you think the change of Prime Ministers in the Conservative Party had any effect on its popularity?

DURANT: That's very difficult to say. If I think back to 1938, however, I recall that the British public in our polls were expressing very great degree of approval of Anthony Eden and that has been maintained absolutely consistently over those seventeen, eighteen, years. Oddly enough, we have not found the same degree of approval of Sir Winston Churchill in spite of his war record, so it may be, but I'm being very cautious, it..may be it has had some effect.

SMITH: Mmmmm! Is this a reflection of the old story that democracies in times of bland peace don't like spectacular leaders?

DURANT: Probably that's the explanation.

MURROW: Well, thank you very much, Henry Durant, Director of the Gallup Poll in Britain, and Howard K. Smith, our chief European correspondent.

This is Ed Murrow recording from London. Good Night and Good Luck.

COLLINGWOOD: And this is Charlss Collingwood in New York. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News, but now, here in Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

COLLINGWOOD: It is no news to students of the American scene that the trade in Davy Crockett hats and accoutrements has become big business. The courts are now having to decide who gets the profit from all those coon-skins and long rifles. There's the Walt Disney organization, of course, but there's also a Baltimore firm which happened to register a Davy Crockett Frontiersman label back in 1946. The maw may be complicated, but any kid can tell you, Davy belongs to everybody.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomrorrow.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW - CHARLES COLLINGWOOD

Friday, May 27, 1955
7:45-8:00 p.m.

COLLINGWOOD: Good evening! The British elections are over, the votes haven't all been counted, but one thing is certain -- the Conservatives have won and by a pretty substantial margin.

My colleague, Ed Murrow, who has beenin Britain all week reporting the election story has had an opportunity to put the results in some sort of perspective, so let's hear what he has to record.

* * * * * * * * * * *

In other news, West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer spoke out on the disarmament issue today; told his Lower House of Parliament that the time for disarmament was never better. He called on the United States to submit a new global plan at this summer's Big Four conference. By doing so, he said, the United States would remain faithful to President Eisenhower's call two years ago for controlled disarmament and use of a substantial percentage of the savings for world aid and reconstruction. The Parliament gave Adenauer a vote of confidence by rejecting a Socialist proposal to postpone arming West Germany as the newest member of NATO.

Incidentally, the United States made it plain to Russia that she can't get away with trying to blame us in advance should the Big Four talks fail. Rejecting the latest Russian charges to that effect, Administration officials said President Eisenhower is ready and anxious to put any honest Soviet proposals for easing tensions to a thorough test at the conference.

In Belgrade, Russia's Communist Party boss, Nikita Khrushchev, and other Kremlin officials began their talks with Yugoslav leaders in an effort to seal the seven-year break between them, but information leaking out of the secret talks indicated that they were not meeting with much success. For one thing, the Yugoslav officials label as "ridiculous" the Russian attempt to blame executed former Russian security chief Beria for the break between the two countries.

President Eisenhower sent a special message to Congress today, asking for ten changes in the refugee relief law to speed admission of immigrants and to reaffirm America's great tradition of sanctuary. The President said that persons permitted to enter the country under the program will make a fine contribution to the body of our citizens. Chief among the amendments he asked was that the law be liberalized to provide for admittance of orphans to this country on a worldwide basis. He also wants to waive the requirement for individual sponsorship for each refugee applicant and to lift health restrictions, which have banned some persons with tuberculosis. The President said that with proper safeguards and modern treatment available in this country such refugees could be admitted safely and cured.

The picture looked brighter today for resumption of the nationwide polio inoculation program. After an all-night meeting, the Government formally adopted new safety standards for the vaccine. Surgeon General Leonard Scheele said it was a real, wonderful step forward, but that we will ... (correction by speaker) he will go ahead only as safety permits. He said it appears certain that some vaccine may be released next week. The developer of the vaccine, Dr. Jonas Salk, had a reassuring word for parents of children who had received their first shots. He said it will not be necessary for them to start all over again because of the delay in getting the second shot. Welfare Secretary Hobby, answering recent charges, declared unreservedly that there has been no politics in the handling of the vaccine program.

President Eisenhower today nominated Richard Mack, of Coral Gables, Florida, to succeed Miss Frieda Hennock as a member of the Federal Communications Commission, starting July 1. There was no explanation as to why Miss Hennock was not named for a new term.

The President also took part in a ceremony in the White House rose garden today. He awarded the National Security Medal to J. Edgr Hoover for thirty-one years of brilliant leadership in the position of great responsibility as chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The President praised Hoover for devotion to the highest ideals of Federal law enforcement. The National Security Medal was created by former President Truman on his last day in office in January, 1953. The only other person to receive it is retired General Walter Bedell Smith for his work as Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

A Federal Tax Court Judge today ruled that William "Big Bill" Lias (?), West Virginia race track operator and onetime professional gambler, owes the Government more than two million dollars in back income taxes and penalties for the years 1942 to 1948. During Lias' trial in 1952 he had offered to settle the case for a million-and-a-half dollars. Later he offered to settle for a million two hundred thousand. Both offers were turned down.

Another business merger in the news. In Buffalo, stockholders in Remington-Rand approved a merger with the Sperry Corporation to form a new electronics company.

This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news, but, first, Bob Dixon.

DIXON: (Commercial)

That's my word for today and here's Charles Collingwood with his footnote to the day's news.

COLLINGWOOD: The population of the United States is growing at a record rate. At this moment there are a hundred and sixty-fivemillion three hundred thousand or three thousand three hundred of us. We hit the hundred and-sixty-five-million mark at seven-fifty-one and fifty-one seconds this morning and have been adding new souls at the rate of twelve a second ever since. Reflecting on the new problems all this causes, the Director of the Bureau of the Census observed: "I hope these facts will spur us on." Well, it hardly seems we need much spurring!

This is Charles Collingwood saying goodnight!

ANNOUNCER: (Commercial)
Ed.trans.-A.A.Cardiff This is the CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 27, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

COLLINGWOOD: Good evening! The British elections are over, the votes haven't all been counted, but one thing is certain: The Conservatives have won, and by a pretty substantial margin. My colleague, Ed Murrow, who has been in Britain all week reporting the election story, has had an opportunity to put the results in some sort of perspective. So, let's hear what he has to report.

MURROW: This is London! In the parlance of the racetrack, the Conservatives win it.. They will have a majority of about sixty-five in the House of Commons. There are a few results still to come. The Liberals increased their popular vote, but not their representation in the House of Commons, which remains at six. This figure is under the pre-election estimates, But it is what is called in this country, a working majority, which means that the Conservatives, barring unforseen developments, can govern for the next five years without too much worry about being upset by a vote of "no confidence", due to the fact that a few of their members are ill or absent. This was no landslide. The vote was smaller than usual. Only about seventy-six per cent of those qualified turned up to vote. The Conservatives won a victory and a headache. For the cabinet is meeting tonight - the new cabinet - trying to find a way to head off the railroad strike, scheduled to begin tomorrow at midnight.

Before attempting to assess what this election will mean to the two parties and to British foreign policy, it is worth noting that the Communists entered seventeen candidates; that their total vote was thirty-three thousand one hundred and forty-four; and that they failed to elect a single member to the House of Commons.

It would be very easy to complicate and confuse the reasons for this national result. It rained in certain areas between six and eight yesterday evening. The reasoning of constituencies operated against Labor, in certain areas, ans so on and so forth. But the fact is that the Conservatives campaigned on a platform of peace and prosperity. And they won. They presented familiar figures and familiear phrases. They offended the fewest number of people possible. They did not make extravagant promises. And the voters decided, as one Londoner put it to me today, "We decided to let Eden and his boys have a go. But we didn't give them a big enough majority so that they can go backwards or become reactionaries."

So far at this new government is concerned, it will reflect that phrase that has appeared so often on the television screens during the last twenty-four hours, as one constituency after another reported, the phrase was:"No change". This will not be a bold, adventerous or unorthodox administration. Things will be done, particularly in the field of foreign affairs, according to the book. British foreign policy will march more with the American foreign policy than it would have had Labor won. But it would be a mistake to assume that Sir Anthony Eden's government will unquestioningly or enthusiasticly follow the American lead, particularly in Asia. In domestic affairs, there will be no effort to repeal the health and welfare measures, introduced by the Labor government between 1945 and 1950. There will be no radical experiment in either domestic or foreign affairs. Sir Anthony and the men around him are cautious Conservatives. And the Labor Party still poses a sufficient threat, in the House of Commons, to make them 'liberal' Conservatives.

The effort will be to achieve tranquility, in a world that is anything but tranquil. And the effort to maintain industrial peace inside the country may tax the government severely if prices continue to rise.

The Labor Party, although its hard core remained faithful, and individual candidates of ability reversed or at least held off the Conservative swing, finds itself in a real crisis. Its present leader will be old before another election is held. The party is divided, and without challenging issues, which is one of the prinicpal reasons it lost this election.

Mr. Aneuran Bevan, the leader of the left-wing, and the ablest campaigner, in the party, conducted what might be called a "campaign within a campaign." But the success of his adherents was not sufficient to give him any early prospect of controlling the party.

The dilemma of the Labor Party can be easily stated. They came to power in 1945, on the sloga; "Fair shares for all." In the course of six years, they introduced socialist legislation in health, education and certain areas of industry. The Conservatives accepted and adopted those changes, in large meausre, and they have now beaten the Socialists at the polls. The Labor party, if it is to contend in the next elections, must have a new program and probably new leaders. There will be a fight within the Labor Party over both policy and personalities before the party is again able to give serious challenge to the Conservatives.

One reason for the Labor Party's defeat could be seen on the roads leading out of London late this afternoon. They were jammed as I have never seen them - even before the war - with automobiles heading for the country for the long Whitsun week-end; automobiles driven by their owners or at least those tho had made the first payment.

The British electorate is both mature and cynical. But it wasn't mad at anybody. Particularly, the Conservatives. And the leaders of the Labor Party were not able to arouse it. The two greatest arousers, Sir Winston Churchill and Aneruin Bevan, were not even heard or seen on radio or television.

The reporting of the election return on television was done with extraordinary skill, imagination and dispatch. And the general opinion of the weary watchers, those whose party won and those whose party lost, seems to be one of relief that the whole thing is over. After all, it might turn out to be a fine week-end. This is Ed Murrow recording from London. Good Night and Good Luck.

COLLINGWOOD: In other news, West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer spoke out on the disarmament issue today; told his Lower House of Parliament that the time for disarmament was never better. He called on the United States to submit a new global plan at this summer's Big Four Conference. By doing so, he said, the United States sould remain faithful to President Eisenhower's call two years ago forcontrolled disarmement and use af a substantial percentage of the savings for world aid and reconstruction. The Parliament gave Adenauer a vote of confidence by rejecting a Socialist proposal to postpone arming West Germany as the newest member of NATO.

Incidentally, the United States made it plain to Russia that she can't get away with trying to blame us in advance should the Big Four talks fail. Rejecting the latest Russian charges to that effect, Administration officials said President Eisenhower is ready and anxious to put any honest Soviet proposals for easing tensions to a thorough test at the conference.

In Belgrade, Russia's Communist Party boss, Nikita Khruschev, the other Kremlin officials began their talks with Jugoslav leaders in an effort to seal the seven-year break between them, but information leaking out of the secret talks indicated that they were not meeting with much success. For one thing, the Jugoslav officials label as "ridiculous" the Russian attempt to blame executed former Russian security chief Beria for the break between the two countries.

President Eisenhower sent a special message to Congress today, asking for ten changes in the refugee relief law to speed admission of immigrants and to reaffirm America's great tradition of sanctuary. The President said that persons permitted to enter the country under the program will make a fine contribution to the body of our citizens. Chief among the amendments he asked was that the law be liberalized to provide for admittance of orphans to this country on a world wide basis. e also wants to waive the requirement for individual sponsorship for each refugee applicant and to lift health restrictions, which have banned some persons with tuberculosis. The President said that with proper safeguards and modern treatment available in this country such refugees could be admitted safely and cured.

The picture looked brighter today for resumption of the nationwide polio inoculation program. After an all-night meeting, the Government formally adopted new safety standards for the vaccine. Surgeon General Leonard Scheele said it was a real, wonderful step forward, but that we will..he will go ahead only as safety permits. He said it appears certain that some vaccine may be released next week. The developer of the vaccine, Dr. Jonas Salk, had a reassuring word for parents of children who had received their first shots. He said it will not be necessary for them to start all over again because of the delay in getting the second shot. Welfare Secretary Hobby, answering recent charges, declared unreservedly that there has been no politics in the handling of the vaccine program.

President Eisinhower today nominated Richard Mack, of Coral Gables, Florida, to succeed Miss Frieda Hennock as a member of the Federal Communications Commission, starting July 1. There as no explnation as to why Miss Hennock was not named for a new term.

The President also took part in a ceremony in the White House rose garden today. He awarded the National Security Medal to J. Edgar Hoover for thirty one years of brilliant leadership in the position ofgreat responsibility as chief of the Federal Buerau of Investigation. The President praised Hoover for devotion to the highest ideals of Federal law enforcement. The National Security Medal was created by former President Truman on his last day in office in January, 1953. The only other person to receive it was retired General Walter Bedell Smith for his work as Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

A Federal Tax Court Judge today ruled that William "Big Bill" Lias, West Virginia race track operator and one time professional gambler, owes the government more than two million dollars in back income taxes and penalties for the years 1942 to 1948. During Lias's trial in 1952 he had offered to settle the case for a million-and-a-half dollars. Later he offered to settle for a million two hundred thousand. Both offers were turned down.

Another business merger in the news. In Buffalo, stockholders in Remington-Rand approved a merger with the Sperry Corporation to form a new electronics company.

This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the Day's News... But first, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON : COMMERCIAL

COLLINGWOOD: The population of the United States is growing at a record rate. At this moment there are a hundred and sixty-five million three hundred thousand or three thousand three hundred of us. We hit the hundred-and-sixty-five-million mark at seven-fifty-one and fifty-one seconds this morning and have been adding new souls at thr rate of twelve a second ever since. Reflecting on the new problems all this causes, the Director of the Bureau of the Census observed: "I hope these facts will spur us on." Well, it hardly seems we need much spurring. .

This is Charles Collingwood saying Goodnight.

Monday May 30, 1955

This is the news:

The Chinese Communists will release four imprisoned American flyers... probably tomorrow. Communist China's Premier Chou en Lai has informed the United Nations that the four men..all fighter pilots..are: Captain Harold Fisher of Iowa, Leiutenant Lyle W. Cameron and [redacted] Roland W. Parks of Nebraska and Lieutenant-Colonel Edwin Heller of Pennsylvania. The Communist note to Dag Hammershuld, the secretary general of the United Nations, indicates that eleven other American flyers held by the Chinese may be released soon. The first news that the four flyers would be released came from Krishna Mennon, India's top foreign affairs expert. Then came Chou en Lai's letter to Hammershuld saying the men will probably be in Hong Kong tomorrow. The United Nations Secretary general, who has been working on this problem for five months, says he's happy for the men and their families..he will not relax his efforts until the other eleven are set free.

The Communists announced that the four men, who have been in prison for more than two years, were tried last week on charges of "intruding" over Manchuria during the Korean war. A military tribunal convicted them and sentenced them to "deportation."

Henry Cabot Lodge, our ambassador to the United Nations, gives Dag Hammershuld great credit for today's development. And Secretary of State Dulles thanked Hammershuld and India's Prime Minister Nehru for their efforts in getting the release of the [redacted] men.

Soon after Peiping's announcement was made, the State Department made it known that we are permitting all Chinese students in this country who want to return home to do so. Most of them are now on their way.

In Yugoslavia today, Marshal Tito and the leaders of Russia have been conferring on a secluded Adriatic island. There is no word on what they are discussing. I'd like to review this strange meeting in a few minutes.

Vice President Nixon said at the Arlington National Cemetery today that "the whole world should realize that the United States and our allies will never block the road to peace." In a Memorial Day address he said that if the forthcoming Big Four meeting fails to promote the cause of peace the "blame will rest squarely on the Communist leaders. He also assured his audience that both the President and Secretary Dulles "know the Communists and will not be taken in by them." He said the "interests of the United States will not be compromised" at the proposed meeting. And Nixon said there is no greater tribute we could pay to the nation's war dead "than to find the road to peace."

The President today attended Memorial Day services at the Gettysburg National Cemetery..not far from his FARM. Mr. Eisenhower listened to a speech by Foreign Aid Chief Stassen..but The PRESIDENT did not speak and was not introduced to the crowd.

In Indianapolis, the annual 500-mile auto race was won by Bob Sweikert of Indianapolis. It was the bloodiest race in 25 years as Bill Vukovich, twice a winner in the past, was killed, and eight other persons hurt.

In Detroit today the C.I.O. auto workers challenged the Ford Motor Company to let its 140-thousand employes across the nation decide on a future contract. The union is demanding a guarenteed annual wage. The company offered what it calls "a partnership in prosperity plan." Now, the union suggests that an indepdenent agency poll the Ford workers and ask them whether they prefer Ford's stock purchase offer with "income stabilization and separation allowance" ..or the union's guaranteed annual wage plan. Ford officials are considering the union offer overnight. The union has approved of strike action anytime after midnight on Wednesday.

The American Medical Association says it has asked all of its members to co-operate in the voluntary government priority plan for anti-polio innoculations of children from five through nine. The A.M.A. says it has been assured that "technical problems relating to the safe manufacture of polio vaccine have been worked out."

In London today, Prime Minister Eden's government is reported to be considering asking Queen Elizabeth to declare a state of emergency in Britain...because of a crippling railway strike. Some 70-thousand railway engineers and firemen are on strike for higher pay. They've halted 80 per cent of all train traffic. The full impact of the strike is expected to be felt in a few hours when Britons return from a three-day Whitsun holiday to resume normal business.

And in the Middle East, Isreali and Arab forces have again fought a three-hour artillery duel in the tense Gaza area. An Isreali spokesman says two Isrealis were killed and six injured.

Edward R. Murrow: May 30, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

It is a temptation to over-emphasize the spectacular side of the meeting between the Kremlin leaders and Marshal Tito, and so lose sight of its meaning. When this correspondent was in London last week he found that the British were taking the wooing of Tito quite seriously. They considered it an even more significant evidence of changed Kremlin tactics than the signing of the Austrian treaty. They believed that it had cost the Soviet leaders more in humiliation than anything they had done since the war. They also believed it was bound to reduce Soviet influence and prestige in the satellite countries, at least to some extent. And they judged from this that the Soviet leaders were paying such a high price because they hoped to advance their campaign to induce the Germans, if and when united, to accept a neutral position in European affairs like Tito's. Tito's neutrality is not simon-pure. He is linked with Greece and Turkey in a Balkan alliance. But he is not a partner of NATO and has consistently declined to become one. That is, he is uncommitted in the East-West power struggle. And that, apparently, is what the Russians hope the Germans can be induced to do. That seems to be the best explanation for the extraordinary mission of repentance the Kremlin leaders are making.

But the visit is undeniably fantastic, and nobody would have dreamed it possible a short while ago. It has turned out to be even more fantastic than when it was first announced. For nobody could have foreseen so sweeping a confession of error, and so forthright a bid for ideological agreement as was made by Premier Bulganin in his opening speech in Belgrade. Nobody would have imagined that the Soviet Premier would try to get away with the lame explanation that the executed Beria was responsible for the blunder of ousting Tito from the Cominform. The falsehood was so blatant that the Jugoslava who had to listen to it were reported to have been embarrassed. It is the first time Beria's name has even been linked with the Tito story as a principal. It may be a considerable convenience for a despotic government to be able to blame its executed traitors for any policies that are found unsupportable. But the excommunication of Tito was an act of Stalin and was warmly endorsed by all his important collaborators. Molotov and Bulganin at the time were unscathing in their attacks on Tito. Molotov was considerably more vituperative than Bulganin, and that is understandably why he was left off the mission to Belgrade altogether.

The very ardor of the Kremlin's courtship would seem to put Marshal Tito in a handsome bargaining position. If the Kremlin is banking on making friends for the concept of neutrality in central Europe, it cannot afford to let the Jugoslav negotiations fail. In one particular, at any rate, Tito has been able to hold his ground under Soviet pressure. He has refused point-blank to discuss an ideological ~~rapprochement~~ agreement between the two countries. That is, he is not adopting the Soviet line that Russian communism and Jugoslav communism both derive from Marx and Lenin, and hence are capable of reconciliation. The Soviet Government wants to get Jugoslavia back into the Satellite family, and this would be the short way to bring it home.

Tito has insisted that the meeting with the Soviet leaders is between governments and deals only with government relations. When the discussions started, he was glum and even unfriendly. And he didn't unbend and cheer up until Khruschchev agreed that the talks be kept on the government level.

But it is possible to exaggerate Tito's bargaining advantage. He has economic needs that the Soviet Union can go far to relieve, and that the West has not shown an intention of meeting in full. For one thing, he wants to consolidate his $400,000,000 foreign debt so as to facilitate further purchases abroad. He has failed to obtain the help of the United States or the International Bank to this end. The satellite countries owe Jugoslavia about $200,000,000 for goods contracted for at the time of the break. If the Kremlin now should order the satellites to settle these claims, that would ease Jugoslavia's position.

The Jugoslavs are worried to be talking with the Russians under economic pressure. They see they are in a favorable position in one way, and in an unfavorable one in another way. They want to remain independent, but they might have to end by accepting economic help that would draw them into greater dependence on the Soviet Union. They feel sure they will not have to break their word about not weakening their ties with the West, but they are not sure they can keep it up, or that Western aid will remain sufficient for them to keep it up.

The talks now in progress on Tito's Adriatic resort island of Brioni presumably will decide on the economic price the Kremlin will pay to be able to announce at the end of this week that cordial relations have been restored with the Tito government. These cordial relations won't be bringing a prodigal son back into the family. Tito has demonstrated he is no prodigal son. But the Jugoslavs may find it will be hard to get others to believe that stronger ties with Moscow do not inevitably mean weaker ties with the West.

The meeting between Marshal Tito and Premier Bulganin has some strange undertones for ~~many who will be~~ those attempting to analyze the diplomatic maneuverings of Russia and Yugoslavia. Perhaps it's as Arthur Schnitzler once said that "the principal task of friendship is to foster one's friends' illusions." If this should be the case, then both sides would do well to follow Wilson Mizner's advice:"I respect faith, he said, but doubt is what gets you an education."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 30, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Chinese Communists will release four imprisoned American flyers... probably tomorrow. Communist China's Premier Chou en Lai. has informed the United Nations that the four men...all fighter pilots..are: Captain Harold Fisher of Iowa, Lieutenants Lyle W. Cameron and Roland W. Parks of Nebraska and Lieutenant-Colonel Edwin Heller of Pennsylvania. The Communist note to Dag Hammerskjold, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, indicates that eleven other American flyers held by the Chinese may be released soon. The first news that the four flyers would be released came from Krishna Mennon, India's top foreigh affairs expert. Then came Chou en Lai's letter to Hammerskjold saying tha men will probably be in HongKong tomorrow. The Uninted Nations Sectetary General, who has been working on this problem for five months, says he's happy for the men and their families..he will not relax his efforts until the other eleven are set free.

The Communists announced that the four men, who have been in prison for more than two years, were tried last week on charges of "intruding" over Manchuria during the Korean war. A military tribunal convicted them and sentenced them to "deportation."

Henry Cabot Lodge, our abbassador to the United Nations, gives Dag Hammerskjold great credit for today's development. And Secretary of State Dulles thanked Hammerskjold and India's Prime Minister Nehru for their efforts in getting the release of the men.

Soon after Peiping's announcement was made, the State Department made it known that we are permitting all Chinese students in this country who want to return home to do so. Most of them are now on their way.

In Yugoslavia today, Marshal Tito and the leaders of Russia have been conferring on a secluded Adriatic island. There is no word on what they are discussing. I'd like to review this strange meeting in a few minutes.

Vice President Nixon said said at the Arlington National Cemetery today that "the whole world should realize that the United States and our allies will never block the road to peace." In a Memorial Day address he said that if the forthcoming Big Four meeting fails to promote the cause of peace the "blame mill rest squarely on the Communist leaders. He also assured his audience that both the President and Secretary Dulles "know the Communists and will not be taken in by them." He said the "interests of the United States will not be compromised." at the proposed meeting. And Nixon said there is no greater tribute we could pay to the nation's war dead "than to find the road to peace."

The President today attended Memorial Day services at the Gettysburgh National Cemetery...not far from his farm. Mr. Eisenhower listened to a speech by Foreign Aid Chief Stassen..but the President did not speak and was not introduced to the crowd.

In Indianapolis, the annual 500-mile auto race was won by Bob Sweikert of Indianapolis, It was the booodiest race in 25 years as Bill Vukovich, twice a winner in the past, was killed and eight other persons hurt.

In Detroit today, the C.I.O. auto workers challenged the Ford Motor Company to let its 140-thousand employees across the nation decide on a future contract. The union is demanding a guaranteed annual wage. The company offered what it calls "a partnership in prosperity plan". Now, the union suggests that an independent agency poll the Ford workers and ask them whether they prefer Ford's stock purchase offer with "income stabilization and separation allowance",.or the union's guaranteed annual wage plan. Ford officials are considering the union offer overnight. The union has approved of strike action anytime after midnight Wednesday.

The American Medical Association says it has asked all of its members to co-operate in the voluntary government priority plan for anti-polio innoculations of children from five through nine. The A.M.A. says it has been assured that "technical problems relating to the safe manufacture of polio vaccine have been worked out."

In London today, Prime Minister Eden's government is reported to be considering asking Queen Elizabeth to declare a state of emergency in Britain.. because of a crippling railway strike. Some 7--thousand railway engineers and firemen are on strike for higher pay. They've halted 80 per cent of all train traffic. The full impact of the strike is expected to be felt in a few hours when Britons return from a three-day Whitsun holiday to resume normal business.

And in the Middle East, Israeli and Arab forces have again fought a three-hour artillery duel in the tense Gaza area. An Israeli spokesman says two Israelis were killed and six injured.

It is a temptation to over-emphasize the spectacular side of the meeting between the Kremlin leaders and Marshal Tito, and so lose sight of its meaning When this correspondent was in London last week he found that the British were taking the wooing of Tito quite seriously. They considered it an even more significant evidence of changed remlin tactics than the signing of the Austrian treaty. They believed that it had cost the Soviet leaders more in humiliation than anything they had done since the war. They also believed it was bound to reduce Soviet influence and prestige in the satellite countries, at least to some extent. And they judged from this that the Soviet leaders were paying such a high price because they hoped to advance their campaign to induce the German, if and when united, to accept a neautral position in European affairs like Tito's. Tito's neautrality is not simon-pure. He is linked with Greece and Turkey in a Balkan alliance. But he is not a partner of NATO and had consistently declined to become one. That is, he is uncommitted in the East-West power struggle. And that, apparently, is what the Russians hope the Germans can be induced to do. That seems to be the best explanation for the extraordinaty mission of repentance the Kremlin leaders are making.

But the visit is undeniably fantastic, and nobody would have dreamed it possible a short while ago. It has turned out to be even more fantastic than when it was first announced. For nobody could have foreseen so sweeping a confession of error, and so forthright a bid for ideological agreement as was made by Premier Bulganin in his opening speech in Belgrade. Nobody would have imagined that the Soviet Premier would try to get away with the lame explanation that the executed Beria was responsible for the blunder of ousting Tito from the Cominform. The flasehood was so blatent that the Jugoslavi who had to listen to it were reported to have been embarrassed. It is the first time Beria's name has even been linked with the Tito story as a principal. It may be a considerable convenience for a despotic government to be able to blame its executed traitors for any policies that are found unsupportable. But the excommunication of Tito was an act of Stalin and was warmly endorsed by all his important collaborators. Molotov and Bulganin at the time were scathing in their attacks on Tito. Molotov was considerably more vituperative than Bulganin, ant that is understandably why he was left off the mission to Belgrade altogether.

The very ardor of the Kremlin's courtship would seem to put Marshal Tito in a handsome bargaining position. If the Kremlin is banking on making friends for the concept of neautrality in central Europe, it cannot afford to let the Jugoslav negotiations fail. In one particular, at any rate, Tito has been able to hold hisground under Soviet pressure. He has refused point blank to disucss an ideological agreement between the two countries. That is he is not adopting the Soviet line that Russian Communism and Jugoslav

Communism both derive from Marx and Lenin, and hence are capable of reconciliation. The Soviet Government wants to get Jugoslavia back into the Satellite family, and this would be the short way to bring it home.

Tito has insisted that the meeting with the Soviet leaders is between governments and deals only with government relations. When the discussions started, he was glum and even unfriendly. And he didn't unbend and cheer up until Khruschev agreed that the talks be kept on the government level.

But it is possible to exaggerate Tito's bargaining advantage. He has economic needs that the Soviet Union can go far to relieve, and that the West has not shown an intention of meeting in full. For one thing, he wants to consolidate his $400,000,000 foreign debt so as to facilitate further purchases abroad. He has failed to obtain the help of the United States or the International Bank to this end. The satellite countries owe Jugoslavia about $200,000,000 for goods contracted for at the time of the break. If the Kremlin now should order the satellites to settle these claims, that would ease Jugoslavia's position.

The Jugoslavs are worried to be talking with the Russians under economic pressure. They see they are in a favorable position in one way, and in an unfavorable one in another way. They want to remain independent, but they might have to end by accepting economic help that would draw them into greater dependence on the Soviet Union. They feel sure they will not have to break their word about not weakening their ties with the West, but they are not sure they can keep it up, or that Western aid will remain sufficient for them to keep it up.

The talks now in progress on Tito's Adriatic resort island of Brioni presumably will decide on the economic price the Kremlin will pay to be able to announce at the end of this week that cordial relations have been restored with the Tito government. These cordial relations won't be bringing a prodigal son back into the family. Tito has demonstrated he is no prodigal son. But the Jugoslavs may find it will be hard to get others to believe that stronger ties with Moscow do not inevitably mean weaker ties with the West.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word For Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The meeting between Marshal Tito and Premier Bulbanin has some strange undertones for those attempting to analyze the diplomatic maneuverings of Russia and Jugoslavia. Perhaps it's as Arthur Schnitzler once said that "the principal task of friendship is to foster one's friends illusions." If this should be the case, then both sides would do well to follow Wilson Mizner's advice: "I respect faith," he said, but "doubt is what gets you an education."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday, May 31, 1955

This is the news:

The Supreme Court today told local officials and lower federal courts to end all racial segregation in public schools "as soon as practicable." A unanimous court did not fix a deadline for enforcing its original decision of almost a year ago. And it did not set-up any specific procedure. I'd like to discuss the opinion in a few minutes.

Four American fighter pilots are now flying to Hawaii from Hong Kong after being released by the Chinese Communists, following more than two years in prison. The four men seemed to be in satisfactory phyical condition. There is no evidence they have been brainwashed. Their spirits are high. And soon after they arrive in Hawaii they will be met by nine relatives who are flying to meet them from the United States.

United Nations sources indicate that its only a question of time before the Chinese Communists release eleven other American flyers still held as so-called "spies." Dag Hammershuld, the secretary general of the U.N., is understood to have pressed Premier Chou en Lai for the release of the remaining flyers.

Chinese Nationalist newspapers are warning the western world not to lower its guard..just because four Americans have been released from Communist prisons.

And the President told a White House news conference today that the Communists have implied that they released the men in an effort to relax tensions in the Far East. But the President said: the situation needs to be watched carefully. There must be no hit or miss conclusions on the intentions of the Communists.

The President also told reporters that the first phase of the anti-polio campaign "certainly" will be completed before the infantile paralysis season reaches its peak in August. "The first phase" refers to a double innoculation of all first and second graders. Mr. Eisenhower [redacted] told the reporters: enough Salk vaccine will be manufactured within the next 30 days to do the job...and [redacted] he has been assured by Surgeon General Schhel that within 60 days all first and second shots will be administered to youngsters in the highest priority group. The President called developments in the anti-polio campaign "both eventful and [redacted] encouraging."

One reporter asked Mr. Eisenhower how he likes politics. The President said: in the derogatory sense, he doesn't like it. But he's fascinated by the work of the presidency... any man possessing such authority and influence must find it fascinating in working toward a peaceful world. Its intriguing..even if at times fatiguing. Mr. Eisenhower also explained how Vice President Nixon was chosen by the Republicans in 1952. The President said he wrote out a list of five or six younger men he thought were doing a good job for the country. Nixon's name was on the list. He DID NOT SAY WHO FINALLY SELECTED NIXON.

Mr. Eisenhower said again: he doesn't expect any final agreement on any major differences at the proposed Big Four meeting.. Therefore he does not plan to take along Democratic Chairman George of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee..or other congressional leaders.

The President also announced that he will welcome delegates to the tenth anniversary meeting of the United Nations in San Fransisco on June 20th.

Senator George today called on the Senate to approve the Administration's three and a half billion dollar foreign aid bill. He said this would strengthen Mr. Eisenhower's hands at the proposed Big Four meeting.

The Hoover Commission recommended today that more money be spent in the nation's civilian and military research programs. The commission says the development of our military weapons is not sufficiently daring and imaginative. And it urges greater support for the National Institutes of Health.

There's no word from Detroit today..from either the Ford Motor Company or the C.I.O. auto workers..on the company's reaction to the union proposal to let all workers vote on different plans submitted by each side...to avert a strike.

An Associated Press tabulation shows that 368 persons were killed in holiday week-end traffic.. compared with the former record-high of 363 deaths in 1952.

In London, Prime Minister Eden's government has declared a state of emergency..and seized special powers to keep open the nation's railroad and sea lifelines. Great Britain's major cities are now experiencing their worst traffic jams.

In Yugoslavia, Soviet Russia's top men..[redacted] Kruschev and Premier Bulganin..are touring the northern part of the country. Marshal Tito is not accompanying them. But there is no explanation whether this is a deliberate slight to the Soviet visitors..or whether there is a good reason for Tito's action.

Edward R. Murrow: May 31, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The Supreme Court, in declining to set a deadline for the acceptance of its historic ruling that racial segregation in the public schools is unconstitutional, did so in recognition that local conditions have to be taken into account. It remanded the school cases to the courts that originally heard them, with instructions that they be guided by equitable principles in deciding whether defendants are making a "prompt and reasonable start toward compliance". It took pains to spell out the equitable principles and the kind of local conditions that are to be weighed. But it also took pains to spell out again that racial segregation in the schools is unconstitutional, and that all federal, state or local law requiring, or permitting, racial discrimination must yield to ~~the~~ that principle.

The court held that school authorities have the primary responsibility for elucidating, assessing and solving the local school problems that are involved. The local courts, it declared, "will have to consider whether the action of school authorities constitutes good-faith-implementation of the governing constitutional principles." It added that "it should go without saying that the validity of these constitutional principles cannot be allowed to yield simply because of disagreement with them."

So it is ~~time~~ for the defendants to make a start toward compliance, and only when such a start has been made can the courts find that additional time is necessary to carry out the ruling in an effective manner. "The burden rests upon the defendants" the ruling said, "to establish that such time is necessary in the public interest, and is consistent with good-faith-compliance at the earliest practicable date". And if a plan is put before the courts by a defendant, the court is to decide whether it is adequate, and it will keep its jurisdiction during the transition to a non-segregated school system.

The Supreme Court listed a number of local considerations that can be taken into account in granting time. They are "problems related to administration, arising from physical condition of school plant, the school transportation system, personnel and revision of school districts and attendance areas into compact units to achieve a system of determining admission to the public schools on a non-racial basis." The Supreme Court also recognized that revision of local laws and regulations may be necessary in solving these problems. During the arguments before the court it had been brought out that seventeen states at present have mandatory school segregation, and that segregation is permissive in four others.

Judging from the first responses to today's ruling, the Supreme Court has been - one might say - surprisingly successful in pleasing, or at least not greatly displeasing, the two sides of the segregation controversy. Florida's Attorney General Richard Irvin called the ruling "the best that could be hoped for", and "one that should allay the fears of those who foresaw dire results from the de-segregation ruling." Mr. Ervin had pleaded before the court for time in putting the ruling into effect. "This" he said today "is the decision we had hoped for." His office, he thought, along with other attorney generals, had secured "the very best decision under the circumstances."

In Georgia, Governor Griffin, who had been elected on a pledge to preserve segregated schools "come Hell or high water", said that the Supreme Court ruling would not affect his state since it had no suit before that court. "We shall continue to operate the schools as we always have" he said. His Attorney General Eugene Cook expressed the opinion that Georgia schools could not be affected until suits were filed in each of the state's 159 counties and each case was finally adjudicated. In addition, a constitutional amendment would have to be passed before taxes could be levied to support de-segregated schools.

Attorney General John Shepperd of Texas struck a defiant note in announcing his state would "exhaust every remedy" before complying with the ruling. But Governor Allen Shivers of Texas was pleased that the Supreme Court was leaving discretion to local authorities. "I think that is good" he said. "I have always advocated that these matters be handled by local agencies of government."

J.W. Calhoun, Georgia vice president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, called the decision heartening. "The language of both decisions is plain" he said, "and should be interpreted as a guide to justice, rather than a formula for evasion for those who advocate defiance of the United States Constitution. Dr. Rufus Clemens, president of Atlanta University, and the only negro on the Atlanta School Board, viewed the decision as offering "the people of the South an opportunity to work constructively together as law-abiding citizens motivated by good will and by faith in the religious principles upon which our great nation is built."

Marion Wright, president of the Southern Regional Conference, called the decision "wise, moderate and workable, in making generous allowance for the wide variety of conditions found in Southern communities. "Compliance with the ruling" he said, "is not merely a moral obligation. If we choose to make it so, it can be a great opportunity to enrich and benefit Southern life."

And the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People says its gratified by today's court decision..and confident that "the whole American people will support the decision to open up new avenues of democracy for all the children of our nation."

The Justices of the Supreme Court are well aware of the impact of their original segregation ruling for the nation's schools. And possibly because of this, today's action was somewhat tempered. But whatever the case, it's true, as Pope Pius the 12th once remarked: "Justice demands that legitimately constituted authority be respected and obeyed; that LAWS wisely made for the common good be conscientiously observed by all."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 31, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Supreme Court today told local officials and lower federal courts to end all racial segregation in public schools "as soon as practicable." A unanimous court did not fix a deadline for enforcing its original decision of almost a year ago. And it did not set-up any specific procedure. I'd like to discuss the opinion in a few minutes.

Four American fighter pilots are now flying to Hawaii from Hong Kong after being released by the Chinese Communists fol owing more than two years in prison. The four men seemed to be in satisfactory physical condition. There is no evidence they have been brainwashed. Their spirits are high. And soon after they arrive in Hawaii they will be met by nine relatives who are flying to meet them from the United States.

United Nations sources inticate that its only a question of time before the Chinese Communists release eleven other American flyers still held as so-called "spies." Dag Hammerskjold, the secretary general of the U.N. is understood to have pressed Premier Chou en Lai for the release of the remaining flyers.

Chinese Nationalist newspapers are warning the western world not to lower its guard..just because four Americans have been released from Communist prisons.

And the President told a White House news conference today that the Communists have implied that they released the men in an effort to relax the tension in the Far East. But the President said: the situation needs to be watched carefully. There must be no hit or miss conclusions on the intensions of the Communists.

The President also told reporters that the first phase of the anti-polio campaign "certainly" will be completed before the infantile paralysis season reaches its peak in August. "The first phase" refers to a double innoculation of all first and second graders. Mr. Eisenhower told the reporters: enough Salk vaccin will be manufacuuted within the next 30 days to do the job...and he has been assured by Surgeon General Scheley that within 60 days all first and second shots will be administered to youngsters in the highest priority group. The President called developemnts in the anti-polio campaign "both eventful and encouraging."

One reporter asked Mr. Eisenhower how he likes politics. The President said: in the deragatory sense, he doens't like it. But he's fascinated by the work of the presidency..any man posessing such authority and influence must find it fascinating in working toward a peaceful world. Its intriguing.. ..even if at times fatiguing. Mr. Eisenhower also explained how Vice President Nixon was chosen by the Republicans in 1952. The President said he wrote out a list of five or six younger men he thought were doing a good job for the country. Nixon's name was on the list. He did not say who finally selected Nixon.

Mr. Eisenhower said again: he doens't expect any final agreement on any major differences at the proposed Big Four meeting. Therefore he does not plan to take along Democratic Chairman Goerge of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee or other congressional leaders.

The President also announced that he will welcome delegates to the tenth anniversary meeting of the United Nations in San Francisco on June 20th.

Senator George today caled on the Senate to approve the Administration's three and a half billion dollar foreign aid bill. He said this would strengthen Mr. Eisenhower's hands at the proposed Big Four meeting.

The Hoover Commission recommended today that more money be spent in the nation's civilian and military research programs. The commission says the development of our military weapons is not sufficiently daring and imaginative. And it urges greater support for the National Insitutute of Health.

There's no word from Detroit today..from either the Ford Motor Company or the C.I.O. auto workers..on the company's reaction to the union proposal to let all workers vote on different plans submitted ty each side..to avert a strike.

An Associated Press tabulations shows that 368 persons were killed in holiday week-end traffic ..compared with the former record-high 363 deaths in 1952.

In London, Prime Minister Eden's government has declared a state of emergency..and seized special powers to keep open the nation's railroad and sea life lines. Great Britain's major cities are now experiencing their worst traffic jams.

In Jugoslavia, Soviet Russia's top men Kruschev and Premier Bulganin are touring the northern part of the country. Marshal Tito is not accompanying them. But there is no explanation whether this is s deliberate slight to the Soviet visitors ..or whether there is a good reason for Tito's action.

The Supreme Court, in declining to set a deadline for the acceptance of its historic ruling that racial segregation in the public schools is unconstitutional, did so in recognition that local conditions have to be taken into account. It remanded the school cases to the court that origionally heard them, with instructions that they be guided by equitable principles in deciding whether defendants are making a "Prompt and reasonable start toward compliance". It took pains to spell out the equitable principles and the kind of local conditions that are to be weighed. But it also took pains to spell out again that recial segretation in the schools is unconstitutional, and that all federal, state or local law requiring, or permitting, racial discrimination must yield to that principle.

The court held that school authorities have the primary responsibility for elucidating, assessing, and solving the local school problems that are involved. The localcourts, it declared, "will have to consider whether the action of school authorities constitutes a good faith-implementation of the governing constitutional principles." It added that "it should go without saying that the validity of these constitutional principles cannot be allowed to yield simply because of diagreeement with them."

So it is for the defendents to make a start toward compliance, and only when such a start has been made can the courts find that additional time is necessary to carry out the ruling in an effective manner. The burden rests upon the defendants" the ruling said, "to establish that such time is necessary in the public interest, and it consistent with good-faith-compliance at the earliest practicable date." And if a plan is put before the courts by a defendant, the court is to decide whether it is adequate, and it will keep its jurisdiction during the transition to a non-segra ated school system.

The Supreme Court listed a number of local considerations that can be taken into account in granting time. They are "problems related to administration, arising from physical condition of school plant, the school transportation system, personnel and revision of school districts and attendence areas into compact units to achieve a system of determining admission to the public schools on a non racial basis." The Supreme Court also recognizes that revision of local laws and regulations may be necessary iin solfing these problems. During the arguments before the court it had been brought o t that seventeen states at present have mandatory school segregation, and that segregation is permissive in four others.

Judging from the first responses to today's ruling, the Supreme Court has been - one might say - surprisingly successful in pleasing, or at least not greatly displeasing, the two sides of the segregation controversy.

Florida's Attorney General Richard Irvin called the ruling "the best that could be hoped for", and "one that should allay the fears of those who foresaw dire results from the de-segregation ruling." Mr. Irvin had pleaded before the court for time in putting the ruling into effect. "This " he said today "is the decision we had hoped for." His office, he thought, along with other attorney generals, had secured "the very best desision under the circumstances."

In Georgia, Governor Griffin, tho had been elected on a pledge to preserve segregated schools "come Hell or high water", said that the Supreme Court ruling would not affect his state since it had no suit before that court. "We shall continue to operate the schools as we always have" he said. His attorney General Eugene Cook expressed the opinion that Georgia schools could not be affected until suits were filed in each of the state's 159 counties and each case was finally adjudicated. In addition, a constitutional amendment would have to be passed before taxes could be levied to support de segretated schools.

Attorney General John Sheppeid of Texas struck a defiant note in announcing his state would "exhaust every remedy" before complying with the ruling. But Governor Allen Shivers of Texas was pleased that the Supreme Court was leaving discretion to local authorities. "I think that is good" he said. "I have always advocated that these matters by handled by local agencies of government."

J. W. Calhoun, Georgia vice president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, called the decision heartining. "The language of both decisions is plain" he said, "and should be interpreted as a guide to justice, rather than a formula for evasion for those who advocate defiance of the United States Constitution. Dr. Rufus Celmens, president of Atlanta University, and the only negro on the Atlanta School Board viewed the decision as offering "the people of the South an opportuinty to work constructively together as law-abiding citizens motivated by good will and by faith in the religious principles upon which our great nation is built."

Marion Wright, president of the Southern Regional Conference, called the decision "wise, moderate and workable, in making generous allowance for the wide variety of conditions found in Southern communities. "Complaince with the ruling" he said, "is not merely a moral obligation. If we choose to make it so, it can be a great opportuinty to enrich and benefit Southern life".

And the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people says it is gratified by today's court decision..and confident that "the whole American people will support the dicision to open up new avenues of democracy for all the children of our nat .

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word For Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Justices of the Supreme Court are well aware of the impact of their original segregation ruling for the nation's schools. And possibly because of this, today's action was somewhat tempered. But whatever the case it is true, as Pope Pius the 12th once remakred: "Justice demands that legitimately constitutied authority be respected and obeyed; that laws wisely made for the common good be conscienteiouly observed by all."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Wednesday June 1, 1955

This is the news:

The government today announced the release of 200-thousand SHOTS of anti-polio vaccine manufactured by Pitman-More Company and by Wyeth, Incorporated. The Public Health Service says THIS will permit the completion "of first vaccinations in a number of communities in which immunization programs were interrupted." The Public Health Service says from now on vaccine supplies will become progressively available under new standards of production and testing.

Republican Senator Knowland said today that compulsory federal control "might retard" rather than speed up a fair distribution of the vaccine. And the American Drug Manufacturers Association has expressed its industry's "admiration" for "the excellent manner" in which the Administration has handled the whole problem.

Four American fighter pilots who spent more than two years in Communist Chinese prison camps today landed at Honolulu. All four agreed "Its wonderful..just great." Tomorrow they will meet some of their relatives who are now being flown to Honolulu from the states.

India's United Nations Delegate Krishna Menon said in New Delhi

today that if [redacted] international relations continue to improve we must expect that more Americans--now held prisoners in Red China..will be released.

And the State Department has raised from 52 to 63 the number of Americans it believes to be held by the Chinese Reds. The new list adds eleven men.. six from the navy and five from the Coast Guard, who were lost in seperate planes off China in 1953. The Department says it has some reason to believe that all of these people are alive.

The Senate today voted unanimously..78 to nothing..to give 500-thousand postal workers an average pay increase of eight per cent. Senator Knowland says this is acceptable to the President who vetoed a bill to make the pay increase eight point six per cent. The new raise would be [redacted] retroactive to March the first..would cost the government [redacted] 164-million dollars a year.

The President today sent the Senate the Austrian peace treaty . He asked for quick action on a major objective of our foreign policy since the Moscow decleration in 1943.

The director of the Central Intelligence Agency said today that in the next ten years the Russians may overtake us in the number of technically (TRAINED) scientists. Allen W. Dulles says the Soviet pool of scientific manpower may grow larger than ours unless "we quickly take new measures to increase our facilities for scientific education." He said Russia's top scientific experts seem to be the equal of the top men in the WEST, "though they have less of them level for level." Allen Dulles also acknowledged that we have been surprised at Soviet progress, above all in aviation, electronics and nuclear fields. And he added: "Certainly the Russian's mind, as a mechanism of reason, is in no way inferior to that of any other human being." At the same time Allen Dulles pointed out that through improved education for the Soviet people "the troubled Soviet leaders have loosed forces dangerous to themselves. It will be difficult for them henceforth to close off their own people from access to the realities of the world."

Georgia's Attorney General Eugene Cook said today that the Supreme Court, in yesterday's opinion on desegregation of the public schools, failed to give a formula or to establish machinery to enforce its decision. He said the opinion has "opened the door for perhaps a century of litigation." And Georgia's Governor Griffen says the opinion was "an effort to [redacted] sugar-coat its bitter pill of tyranny."

In Detroit today, the [redacted] Ford Motor Company and the C.I.O. auto workers agreed on a five-day extension of their contract. It was to have expired at midnight..with 140-thousand workers scheduled to strike. The [redacted] contract now has been extended until Monday morning. And [redacted] Auto Workers President Reuther says both sides are still far apart on many important issues in addition to the question of the guaranteed annual wage.

Adlai Stevenson said tonight that the nation's immigration law is a "misguided policy" which requires quick revision. And the Associated Press says "a source in a position to know Stevenson's plans" has made it known that Stevenson is eager to make the race for President in 1956. This [redacted] SOURCE says Stevenson will be a candidate for [redacted] THE Democratic nomination provided he is convinced the party wants him to run.

Federal Judge Henry A. Schweinhaut today accused the State Department of trying to over-rule him. He ordered a passport issued immediately to Dr. Otto Nathan, a close friend of the late Albert Einstein. Nathan wants to go abroad in connection with settling the Einstein estate. Last week the Judge issued an oral order for a passport to be issued to him. Today, Judge Schweinhaut told the government attorney: "The court of appeals has the right to reverse this court but the Department of State cannot." Nathan has been trying to get a passport for two and a half years. He is a German-born, naturalized citizen of the United States. He has filed affidavits saying he never was a member of the Communist party. But he refuses to deny ever belonging to Communist fronts until the State Department accuses him of belonging to specific organizations.

Air Force Captain Raymond Wool today denied that he ever took a 50-thousand dollar bribe from a Chicago contractor. However, he admitted filing false income tax returns from 1951 through 1953.

In London, British Trade Union officials have failed to end the nation-wide railroad strike.

Edward R. Murrow: June 1, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Not long ago Premier Hatoyama of Japan, in addressing the budget committee of the Diet, created a sensation by saying that in the forthcoming peace negotiations with the Soviet Union, the Russians might well ask for the repeal of the Japanese-American security pact as the Russian price for returning to Japan the Kuriles and Southern Sakhalin. Then he did something quite unorthodox, he apologized for what he called "an unbecoming statement". But he didn't retract the words. He simply implied that he should not have said what he did.

Today the Soviet-Japanese negotiations for a peace treaty opened in London, and now Premier Hatoyama's indiscretion makes sure that these talks will be given the closest attention. It can be presumed that the Premier's slip was [redacted] intentional, and that he wanted everyone to know what might be at stake; everybody, that is, in Japan, and in Washington as well. It also can be presumed that he based his forecast on something said to him by Mr. Domnitsky, the former head of the Soviet mission in Tokyo, when the London negotiations were being prepared. And probably one reason he dropped the remark was to test Japanese opinion on paying so drastic a price to get back the former Japanese territory.

The very mention of the possible scrapping of the Japanese-American security pact shows that the negotiations that opened in London today are part of the Communists' world-wide diplomatic offensive. Its objective is to spread neutralism. In the end, if the drive succeeds, it would keep Germany from joining the Western defense system, would remove Japan from that system, and would lead the United States to pull back its forces from advanced bases in many parts of the world. There would be some Soviet withdrawals too. They would be the Kremlin's price for cutting Western power in the two former enemy countries, and to induce the United States to give up the bases now threatening Soviet industry.

The offensive opened with the signing of the treaty making Austria a neutral. It was followed by the so-called mission of repentance to Belgrade, which really is concerned with neutrality. Now come the Japanese negotiations. Next to follow will be Prime Minister Nehru's visit to Moscow where neutralism will be harped on even more stridently. And then will come the Four-Power talks that tackle German unification, disarmament and the pulling back of advanced forces by both East and West. All this is taking place in an air somewhat sweetened by Chou En-lai's calculated moderation at Bandung, and the release of the first of the imprisoned American airmen. Whatever else it is - in potentialities and in dangers - the Communist campaign certainly is grandiose.

The Soviet-Japanese negotiations will hardly start off sensationally. They begin at a low level and may drag on for six months before coming to grips with big issues. It is not a foregone conclusion that Japan will seriously consider a deal for lower Sakhalin and the Kuriles, at the price of the American security pact. Premier Hatoyama has played with the idea, but Foreign Minister Shigemitsu doesn't like it. He believes in close relations with the United States.

No doubt a great many Japanese yearn for neutrality. That is natural in the age of nuclear weapons. No doubt a great many Japanese are profoundly nationalistic and want to get back lost Japanese territory. But the decisive consideration may be that Soviet Russia and Communist China combined cannot keep Japanese economy afloat and that the United States can. Surely the Kremlin knows this. Still it can be expected to try to build up the yearning for neutrality and the longing for the lost territory. A rising public opinion on these lines in Japan might be a priceless asset for the Communists.

So in the negotiations starting today, Japan has bargaining power and it has some friends among the neutrals, too. In six months, Big Four negotiations should begin to take shape. By that time the Kremlin may think that a Japanese settlement can be arranged that still further advances the cause of neutralism.

There are those who despair ~~in~~ the slowness of modern day diplomacy... who even feel that what is accomplished will, in the final analysis, lead us nowhere. For the cynics, these words from Alice in Wonderland might be helpful: "Where shall I begin, please your Majesty ? he ~~asked~~. Begin at the beginning, the King said very gravely. And go on till you come to the end. Then stop." (This might also be good advice for statesmen.)

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow: June 1, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Not long ago Premier Hatoyama of Japan, in addressing the budget committee of the Diet, created a sensation by saying that in the forthcoming peace negotiations with the Soviet Union, the Russians might well ask for the repeal of the Japanese-American security pact as the Russian price for returning to Japan the Kuriles and Southern Sakhalin. Then he did something quite unorthodox, he apologized for what he called "an unbecoming statement". But he didn't retract the words. He simply implied that he should not have said what he did.

Today the Soviet-Japanese negotiations for a peace treaty opened in London, and now Premier Hatoyama's indiscretion makes sure that these talks will be given the closest attention. It can be presumed that the Premier's slip was not unintentional, and that he wanted everyone to know what might be at stake; everybody, that is, in Japan, and in Washington as well. It also can be presumed that he based his forecast on something said to him by Mr. Domnitsky, the former head of the Soviet mission in Tokyo, when the London negotiations were being prepared. And probably one reason he dropped the remark was to test Japanese opinion on paying so drastic a price to get back the former Japanese territory.

The very mention of the possible scrapping of the Japanese-American security pact shows that the negotiations that opened in London today are part of the Communists' world-wide diplomatic offensive. Its objective is to spread neutralism. In the end, if the drive succeeds, it would keep Germany from joining the Western defense system, would remove Japan from that system, and would lead the United States to pull back its forces from advanced bases in many parts of the world. There would be some Soviet withdrawals too. They would be the Kremlin's price for cutting Western power in the two former enemy countries, and to induce the United States to give up the bases now threatening Soviet industry.

The offensive opened with the signing of the treaty making Austria a neutral. It was followed by the so-called mission of repentance to Belgrade, which really is concerned with neutrality. Now come the Japanese negotiations. Next to follow will be Prime Minister Nehru's visit to Moscow where neutralism will be harped on even more stridently. And then will come the Four-Power talks that tackle German unification, disarmament and the pulling back of advanced forces by both East and West. All this is taking place in an air somewhat sweetened by Chou En-lai's calculated moderation at Bandung, and the release of the first of the imprisoned American airmen. Whatever else it is - in potentialities and in dangers - the Communist campaign certainly is grandiose.

The Soviet-Japanese negotiations will hardly start off sensationally. They begin at a low level and may drag on for six months before coming to grips with big issues. It is not a foregone conclusion that Japan will seriously consider a deal for lower Sakhalin and the Kuriles, at the price of the American security pact. Premier Hatoyama has played with the idea, but Foreign Minister Shigemitsu doesn't like it. He believes in close relations with the United States.

No doubt a great many Japanese yearn for neutrality. That is natural in the age of nuclear weapons. No doubt a great many Japanese are profoundly nationalistic and want to get back lost Japanese territory. But the decisive consideration may be that Soviet Russia and Communist China combined cannot keep Japanese economy afloat and that the United States can. Surely the Kremlin knows this. Still it can be expected to try to build up the yearning for neutrality and the longing for the lost territory. A rising public opinion on these lines in Japan might be a priceless asset for the Communists.

So in the negotiations starting today, Japan has bargaining power and it has some friends among the neutrals, too. In six months, Big Four negotiations should begin to take shape. By that time the Kremlin may think that a Japanese settlement can be arranged that still further advances the cause of neutralism.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The government today announced the release of 200-thousand shots of anti-polio vaccine manufactured by Pitman-More Company and by Wyeth, Incorporated. The Public Helath Service says this will permit the completion "of first vaccinations in a number of communities in which immunization programs were interrupted." The Public Health Service says from now on vaccine supplies will become progressibely available under new standards of production testing.

Republican Senator Knowland said today that compulsory federal control "might retard" rather than speed up a fair distribution of the vaccine. And The American Drug Manufacturers Association has expressed its industry's "admiration" for "the excellent manner" in which the Administration has handled the whole problem.

Four American fighter pilots who spend more than two years in Communist Chinese prison camps today landed it Honolulu. All four agreed "Its wonderful ..just great". Tomorrow they will meet some of their relatives who are now being flown to Honolulu from the states.

India's United Nations Delegate Krishna Menon said in New Delhi today that if international relations continue to improve we must expect that more Americans -- now held as prisoners in Red China..will be released.

And the State Department has raised from 52 to 63 the number of Americans it believes to be held by the Chinese Reds. The new list adds eleven men... six from the navy and five from the Coast Guard, who were lost in separate planes off China in 1953. The Department says it has some reason to believe that all of these people are alive.

The Senate today voted unanimously ..78 to nothing..to give 500-thousand postal workers an average pay increase of eight per cent. Senator Knowland says this is acceptable to the President who vetoed a bill to make the pay increase eight point six per cent. The new raise would be retroactive to March first..would cost the government 164-million dollars a year.

The President today sent the Senate the Austrian peace treaty. He asked for quick action on a major objective of our foreign policy since the Moscow declaration in 1943.

The director of the Central Intelligence Agency said today that in the next ten years the Russians may overtake us in the number of technically trained scientists. Allen W. Dulles says the Soviet pool of scientific manpower may grow larger than ours unless "we quickly take new measures to increase our facilities for scienfitic education. He said Russia's top scientific experts seem to be the equal of the top men in the West, "though they have less of them, level for level." Allen Dulles also acknowledged that we have been surprised at Soviet progress, above all in aviation, electronics and nuclear fields. And he added:"Certainly the Russian's mind, as a mechanism of reason, is in no way inferior to that of any other human being." At the same time Allen Dulles pointed out that through improved education for the Soviet people "the troubled Soviet leaders have loosed forces dangerous to themselves. It will be difficult for them henceforth to close off their own people from access to the realities of the world."

Georgia's Attorney General Eugene Cook said today that the Supreme Court, in yesterday's opinion on segregation of the public schools, failed to give a formula or to establish and machinery to enforce its decision. He said the opinion has "opened the door for perhaps a century of litigation." And Georgia's Governor Griffen says the opinion was "an effort to sugar-coat its bitter pill of tyranny."

In Detroit today, the Ford Motor Company and the C.I.O. auto workers agreed on a five-day extention of their contract. It was to have expired at midnight..with 140-thousand workers scheduled to strike. The contract now has been extended until Monday morning. And Auto Workers President Reuther says both sides are still far apart on many important issues in addition to the question of the guaranteed annual wage.

Adlai Stenvenson said tonight that the nation's immigration law is a "misguided policy" which requires quick revision. And the Associated Press says "a sourse in a position to know Stevenson's plans has made it known that Stevenson is eager to make the race for President in 1956. This source says Stevenson will be a candidate for the Democratic nomination provided he is convinced the party wants him to run.

Federal Judge Henry A Schweinhaut today accused the State Department of trying to over-rule him. He ordered a passport issued immediately to Dr. Otto Nathan, a close friend of the late Albert Einstein. Nathan wants to go abroad in connection with settling the Einstein estate. Last week the Judge issued an oral ofder for a passport to be issued to him. Today, Judge Schweinhaut told the government attorney: "The court of appeals has the right to reverse this court but the Department of State cannot." Nathan has been trying to get a passport for two and a half years. He is a German-born, naturalized citizen of the United States. He has filed affidavits saying he never was a member of the Communist party. But he refuses to deny ever belonging to Communist fronts until the State Department accuses him of belonging to specific organizations.

Air Force Captain Raymond Wool today denied that he ever took a 50-thousand dollar bribe from a Chicago contractor. However, he admitted filing false income tax returns from 1951 through 1953.

In London, British Trade Union officials have failed to end the nation-wide railroad strike.

Not long ago Premier Hatoyama of Japan, in addressing the budget committee of the Diet, created a sensation by saying that in the forthcoming peace negotiations with the Soviet Union, the Russians might well ask for the repeal of the Japanese- American security pact as the Russian price for returning to Japan the Kuriles and Southern Sakhalin. Then he did something quite unorthodox, he apologized for what he called "an unbecoming statement." But he didn't retract the words. He simply implied that he should not have said what he did.

Today the Soviet-Japanese negotiations for a peace treaty opened in London, and now Premier Hatoyama's indiscretion makes sure that these talks will be given the closest attention. It can be presumed that the Premier's slip was intentional, and that he wanted everyone to know what might be at stake; everyoody, that is, in Japan, and in Washington as well. It also can be presumed that he based his forecast on something said to him by Mr. Domitsky, the former head of the Soviet mission in Tokyo, when the London negotiations were being prepared. And probably one reason he dropped the remark was to test Japanese opinion on paying so drastic a price to get back the former Japanese territory.

The very mention of the possible scrapping of the Japanese-American security pact shows that the negotiations that opened in London today are part of the Communists' world-wide diplomatic offensive. Its objective is to spread neautralism. In the end, if the drive succeeds, it would keep Germany from joining the Western defense system, would remove Japan from that system, and would lead the United States to pull back its forces from advanced bases in many parts of the world. There would be some Soviet withdrawals too. They would be the Kremlin's price for cutting Western power in the two former enemy countries, and to induce the United States to give up the bases now threatening Soviet industry.

The offensive opened with the signing of the treaty making Austria a neautral. It was followed by the so-called mission of repentance to Belgrade, which really is concerned with neautrality. Now come the Japanese negotiations. Next to follow will be Prime Minister Nehru's visit to Moscow where neautralism will be hapredon even more stridently. And then will come the Four - Power talks that tackle German unification, disarmament and the pulling back of advanced forces by both East and West. All this is taking place in an air somewhat sweetened by Chou En-lai's calculated moderation at Bandung and the release of the first of the imprisoned American airmen. Whatever else it is - in potentialisties and in dangers - the Communist campaign certainly is grandiose.

The Soviet - Japanese negotiations will hardly start off sensationally They begin at a low level and may drag on for six months before coming to grips with big issues. It is not a foregone conclusion that Japan will seriously consider a deal for lower Sakhalin and the Kuriles, at the price of the American security pact. Premier Hatoyama has played with the idea, but Foreign Minister Shigemitsu doesn't like it. He believes in close relations with the United States.

No doubt a great many Japanese yearn for neautrality. That is natural in the age of nuclear weapons. No doubt a great many Japanese are profoundly nationalistic and want to get back lost Japanese territory. But the decisive consideration may be that Soviet Russia and Communist China combines cannot keep Japanese economy afloat and that the United Stated can. Surely the Kremlin knows this. Still it can be expected to try to build up the yearning for neautrality and the longing for the lost territory. A rising public opinion on these lines in Japan might be a priceless asset for the Communists.

So in the negotiations starting today, Japan has bargaining power and it has some friends among the neautrals, too. In six months, Big Four negotiations should begin to take shape. By that time the Kremlin may think that a Japanese settlement can be arranged that still further advances the cause of neautralism.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There are those who despair of the slowness of modern diplomacy.... even feel that what is accomplished will, in the final analysis, lead us nowhere. For the cynics, these words from Alice in Wonderland might be helpful: "Where shall I begin, please, your Majesty?""Begin at the beginning," the King said very gravely. And go on till you come to the end. Then stop." (This might also be good advice for statesmen.)

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday June 2, 1955

This is THE news:

Yugoslavia and THE Soviet Union tonight urged a peaceful solution of the world's outstanding problems. In a joint decelaration following the visit of Soviet Premier Bulganin and Party Boss Kruschev to Yugoslavia, the two countries ALSO agreed to improve their relations with each other. American officials say the communique appears to indicate that Marshal Tito is standing firm in his dtermination to keep Yugoslavia independent of Soviet domination. [I'd like to examine the reported results of this communique in a few minutes.]

In Honolulu today, those four airmen released from Communist Chinese prison camps (greeted) some of their relatives. It was a tearful, happy reunion. Both the flyers and their parents could only express great happiness after being apart for more than two years. And Captain Fisher of Iowa, speaking for all four men, thanked the Amerian people.. the United Nations..and others..for the efforts made to get these men released. They hope continued efforts will be made to free other Americans still in Red China.

Dag Hammershuld, the secretary general of the United Nations, said today that he is encouraged by THE release of these men. He said he will not rest or relax his EFFORTS to get the release of eleven other airmen still held by the Communists.

Vice President Nixon said today that the Big Four conference could be the world's last chance to avoid a catastrophic war. He said the Soviet representatives at the meeting "will be on trial before the whole world, including their own people."

Dr. Jonas E. Salk said in New York today that the anti-polio vaccines now in use "are better than those used in the field trials" last year. An analysis of these trials showed the vaccine to be between 80 and 90 per cent effective against polio. Dr. Salk feels that the rate of paralytic polio should now be lowered. And he warns that more polio cases will be reported now than ever before...because many other ailments ARE frequently mistaken for polio.

Adlai Stevenson today criticized the Eisenhower Administration for its handling of the vaccine program. He says it did not require "any special clairvoyance" to foresee the demand for the Salk vaccine and the need for careful planning of its production and distribution.

Stevenson says the federal government should help subsidize worthy private health insurance programs..step up its aid to medical research and provide for assistance to medical schools.

And the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis today ordered New Jersey to return its entire supply of the Salk vaccine for fruther testing. The Wyeth Laboratories also called for a return of the 239-thousand shots it had sent to New Jersey. A RE-CHECKING of this vaccine will take about thirty days.

Former Republican Senator Cain said today that the Attorney General's list of subversive organizations is "a warped and wormy measuring rod. He suggests that witnesses have listed 10 or 12 members of Congress..whom he did not name.. as having sponsored the Civil Rights Congress which is on the attorney general's list. And Cain.. now a member of the Subversive Activities Control Board... took note of a Senate committee's unanimous decision to set up a bi-partisan commission to investigate the government security program from top to bottom. He called this:"A tremendous step in the direction of preserving freedom in this country."

F.B.I. Cheif Hoover said today that there is no doubt that the use of (INFORMANTS) in law enforcement is justified. He added:"Unlike the totalitarian practise, the informant in America serves of his own free will, fulfilling one of the citizenship obligations of our democratic form of government."

Narcotics Commissioner Anslinger told a Senate committee today that there are an estimated 60-thousand drug addicts in the United States. He says they spend an average of ten dollars a day on narcotics. Anslinger says addicts steal to get money for drugs.. representing an enormous economic loss to the nation.

In Detroit, neither the Ford Motor Company nor the C.I.O. auto workers has made any announcement on their contract negotiations. But the Detroit News says it has learned from a high union official that the company has accepted in principle the union's demand that the industry continue part of the pay to employes when they are out of work. The papers calls this a 55-million dollar "job security fund" that would be "unprecedented in industry."

Democratic Representative Madden of Indiana today called for an increase in the minimum wage to prevent what he called the runaway flight of industry to low wage southern states. Madden wants an increase of the present 75 cents an hour minimum wage to $1.25 an hour.

Edward R. Murrow: June 2, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

It may be precarious to judge a diplomatic mission by reports that leak out of conversations held by the political visitors. Such reports are coming through of comments made by ~~Nikita~~ Khruschchev in Jugoslavia. These do not give a carefully rounded-~~out~~ picture of the mission as is produced by today's communique, but still they are significant, one might even say sensationally so. For they show Mr. Khruschchev stumped and awkward in the presence of Jugoslavia's brand of communism. To get the full flavor of it one must bear in mind that he is Stalin's successor as the highest official of the Soviet Communist Party - and like Stalin is the Number One personality of the Soviet empire. In the conversation quoted, he declined to criticize Jugoslavian communism as unorthodox. And of course he couldn't praise it, because that would be to confess the inferiority of the Soviet system.

The hour-long conversation that found Mr. Khruschchev stumped took place yesterday in a factory at Zagreb. It ended with a Jugoslav shop leader ardently explaining how the workers in the factory participate in management through freely elected councils. That is what workers don't do in the Soviet Union, for there the managing director is appointed by the state and is solely responsible to it.

The Jugoslavs did their best during the visit to get ~~their guests~~ The Russians to show interest in their system of direct workers' control. For this is one of the issues that led to the break with Tito. Yesterday Mr. Khruschchev was cornered by the shop official at a factory dinner and had to hear him out. The great Communist potentate then had to say something, and this is what he said: "I cannot make a judgment of your system now, but if the result is good, we wish you success. There is no reason why we should condemn your system. We don't know much about it and we probably won't follow it. But we will study it carefully, and there may be things in it which we can borrow from Jugoslavia on a basis of equality, just as we are ready to borrow from the Americans."

This answer is in line with what the communique has to say about non-interference in the affairs of other countries. But one objective of the Soviet mission was to restore the ideological harmony of the two countries. For the Kremlin that had to mean getting Jugoslavia back into the fold. It couldn't mean acknowledging any virtues in Jugoslavia's rebellious course. So this part of the mission was a fiasco. When Mr. Khruschchev said yesterday that he couldn't condemn what Jugoslavia was doing, it was like the head of a religion saying he couldn't condemn heresy.

But the communique successfully distracts attention from this failure.

It shows Tito joining the Kremlin in supporting what is called Communist China's "legitimate rights" with regard to Formosa. That may be his price for not having yielded to Soviet pressure on European and domestic issues. The communique endorses a German settlement without even mentioning neutrality. It merely advocates "an agreed settlement of the German question on a democratic basis in conformity both with the wishes and interests of the German people, and with the interests of general security."

The statement had to be quite vague about Soviet-Jugoslav relations. It says further steps are to be taken toward normalizing them; in other words, the visit did not normalize them. The rhetoric now in fashion in communist discussion of co-existence is generously used. Thus there is to be "respect for the sovereignty, independence, integrity, and for equality among states in their mutual relations and in their relations with other states". And the peaceful co-existence is to be "regardless of ideological differences, or differences of social order, which presumes the co-operation of all states in the field of international relations in general, and more particularly in the field of economic and cultural relations." And a pledge is given of non-interference in this language: It is to be non-interference "for whatever reason, whether of an economic, political or ideological nature, because questions of internal organization, of different social systems and of different forms of socialist development are solely the concern of the individual countries."

The Kremlin may have foreseen its failure to win Tito back, and perhaps the value of its mission to Belgrade has to be measured in other terms too. It depends in part on how much the cause of neutralism has been served and how much world opinion has been convinced that the Kremlin genuinely wants to ease world tensions in terms the West can accept. A failure in Belgrade might even count paradoxically as a kind of evidence that the Kremlin is trying.

But to Communists the mission may well seem unforgiveable except in these terms. It has reduced party morale, encouraged willful independence, and made a mockery of discipline and consistency. Bulganin's speech blaming Beria for Tito's expulsion from the Cominform was new low in post-war Communist expediency. Perhaps the cause of neutralism has been advanced, but Communists may feel that, if so, it has been at the sacrifice of some of the stability of the Kremlin's satellite empire.

The Russians have apparently found Marshal Tito a hard man to persuade. And somehow, it seems almost as if Tito were being advised by Andre Gide, who once said:"What another would have done as well as you, do not do it; what another would have said or written as well, do not say or write it. Be faithful to that which exists nowhere but in yourself - and thus make yourself indispensable."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

¶ It may be precarious to judge a diplomatic mission by reports that leak out of conversations held by the political visitors. Such reports are coming through of comments made by Nikita Khruschchev in Jugoslavia. These do not give a carefully rounded-out picture of the mission as is produced by today's communique, but still they are significant, one might even say sensationally so. For they show Mr. Khruschchev stumped and awkward in the presence of Jugoslavia's brand of communism. To get the full flavor of it one must bear in mind that he is Stalin's successor as the highest official of the Soviet Communist party—he might be called the pope of the Communist faith—and like Stalin is the Number One personality of the Soviet empire. In the conversation quoted he declined to criticize Jugoslavian communism as unorthodox. And of course he couldn't praise it, because that would be to confess the inferiority of the Soviet system.

¶ The hour-long conversation that found Mr. Khruschchev stumped, took place place yesterday in a factory at Zagreb. It ended with a Jugoslav shop leader ardently explaining how the workers in the factory participate in management through freely elected councils. That is what workers don't do in the Soviet Union, for there the managing director is appointed by the state and is solely responsible to it.

¶ The Jugoslavs did their best during the visit to get their guests to show interest in their system of direct workers' control. For this is one of the issues that led to the break with Tito. Yesterday Mr. Khruschchev was cornered by a shop official at a factory dinner and had to hear him out. ~~on the Jugoslav system and its benefits.~~ The great Communist potentate had to say something, and this is what he said:"I cannot make a judgment of your system now, but if the result is good, we wish you success. There is no reason why we should condemn your system.We don't know much about it and we probably won't follow it.But we will study it carefully, and there may be things in it which we can borrow from Jugoslavia on a basis of euqality, just as we are ready to borrow from the Americans."

¶ This answer is in line with what the Communique has to say about non-interference in the affairs of other countries. But one objective of the Soviet mission was to restore the ideological harmony of the two countries. For the Kremlin that had to mean getting Jugoslavia back into the fold. It couldn't mean acknowledging any virtues in Jugoslavia's rebellious course. So this part of the mission was a fiasco. When Mr. Khruschchev said yesterday that he couldn't condemn what Jugoslavia was doing it was like the head of a religion saying he couldn't condemn heresy.

But the communique successfully distracts attention from this failure. It shows Tito joining the Kremlin in supporting what is called Communist China's legitimate rights with regard to Formosa, that may be his price for not having yielded to Soviet pressure on European and domestic issues. The communique endorses a German settlement without mentioning neutrality. It merely advocates "an agreed settlement of the German question on a democratic basis in conformity both with the wishes and interests of the German people, and with the interests of general security."

The statement had to be quite vague about Soviet-Jugoslav relations. It says that further steps are to be taken toward normalizing them, in other words, the visit did not normalize them. The rhetoric now in fashion in communist discussion of co-existence is generously used. Thus there is to be "respect for the sovereignty, independence, integrity, and for equality among states in their mutual relations and in their relations with other states." And the peaceful co-existence is to be "regardless of ideological differences, or differences of social order, which presumes the cooperation of all states in the field of international relations in general, and more particularly in the field of economic and cultural relations." And ~~the~~ a pledge is given of non-interference in this admirable language: It is to be noninterference "for whatever reason, whether of an economic, political or ideiological nature, because questions of internal organization, of difference social systems and of different forms of socialist development are solely the concern of the individual countries."

¶ The Kremlin may have forseen its failure to win Tito back, and perhaps the value of its mission to Belgrade has to be measured in other terms too. It depends in part on how much the cause of neutralism has been served and how much world opinion has been convinced that the Kremlin genuinely wants to ease world tensions in terms the West can accept. A failure in Belgrade might even count paradoxically as a kind of evidence ~~of~~ that the Kremlin is trying.

¶ But to Communists the mission may well seem unforgiveable except in these terms. It has reduced party morale, encouraged wilful independence, and made a mockery of discipline and consistency. Bulganin's speech blaming Beria for Tito's expulsion from the Cominform was a new low in post-war Communist expediency. Perhaps the cause of neutralism has been advanced, but Communists may feel that, if so, it has been at the sacrifice of some of the ~~dependability~~ stability of the Kremlin's satellite empire.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union tonight urged a peaceful solution of the world's outstanding problems. In a joint declaration following the visit of Soviet Premier Bulganin and Party Boss Kruschev to Yugoslavia, the two countries also agreed to improve their relations with each other. American officials say the communique appears to indicate that Marshal Tito is standing firm an his determination to keep Yugoslavia independent of Soviet domination. I'd like to examine the reported results of this communique in a few minutes.

In Honolulu today, those four airmen released from Communist Chinese prison camps greeted some of their relatives. It was a tearful, happy reunion. Both the flyers and their parents could only express great happiness after being apart for more than two years. And Captain Fisher of Iowa, speaking for all four men, thanked the American people..the United Nations..and others.. for the efforts made to get these men released. They hope continued efforts will be made to free other Americans still in Red China.

Dag Hammarskjold, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, said today that he is encouraged by the release of these men. He said he will not rest or relax his efforts to get the release of eleven other airmen still held by the Communists.

Vice President Nixon said today that the Big Four conference could be the world's last chance to avoid a catastrophic war. He said the Soviet representatives at the meeting "will be on trial before the whole world, including their own people."

Dr. Jonas E. Salk said in New York today that the anti-polio vaccines now in use "are better than those used in the field trials" last year. An analysis of these trials showed the vaccine to be between 80 and 90 percent effective against polio. Dr. Salk feels that the rate of paralytic polio should now be lowered. And he warns that more polio cases will be reported now than ever before..because many other ailments are frequently mistaken for polio.

Adlai Stevenson today criticized the Eisenhower Administration for its handling of the vaccine program. He says it did not require "any special clairvoyance" to forsee that the demand for the Salk vaccine and the need for careful planning of its production and distribution.

Stevenson says the federal government should help subsidize worthy private health insurance programs..step up its aid to medical research and provide for assistance to medical schools.

And the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis today ordered New Jersey to return its entire supply of the Salk vaccine for further testing. The Wyeth Laboratories also called for a return of the 239-thousand shots it had sent to New Jersey. A re-checking of this vaccine will take about thirty days.

Former Republican Senator Cain said today that the Attorney General's list of subversive organizations is "a warped and wormy measuring rod". He suggests that witnesses have listed 10 or 12 members of ongress whom he did not name.. as having sponsored the Civil Rights Congress which is on the Attorney General's list. And Cain, now a member of the Subversive Adtivities Control Board, took note of a Senate committee's unanimous decision to set up a bi-partisan commission to investigate the government security program from top to bottom. He called this: "a tremendous step in the direction or preserving freedom in this country."

F. B. I. Chief Hoover said today that there is no doubt that the use of informants in law inforcement is justified. He added:"Unlike the totalitarian practice, the informant in America serves of his own free will, fulfilling one of the citizenship obligations of our democratic form of government ."

Narcotics Commissioner Anslinger told a Senate committee today that there are an estimated 60-thousand drug addicts in the United States. He says they spend an average of ten dollars a day on narcotics. Anslinger says addicts steal to get money for drugs..representing an enormous economic loss to the nation.

In Detroit, neither the Ford Motor Company nor the C.I.O. auto workers has made any announcement on their contract negotiations. But the Detroit News says it has learned from a high union official that the company has accepted in principle the union's demand that the industry continue part of the pay to employees when they are out of work. The papers call this a 55-million dollar "job security fund" that would be "unprecedented in industry."

Democratic Representative Madden of Indiana today called for an increase in the minimum wage to prevent what he called the runaway flight of industry to low wage southern states. Madden wants an increase in the present 75 cents an hour mimimum wage to $1.25 an hour.

It may be precarious to judge a diplomatic mission by reports that leak out of conversations held by the political visitors. Such reports are coming through of comments made by Khruschev in Jugoslavia. These do not give a carefully rounded picture of the mission as is produced by today's communique, but still they are significant, one might even say sensationally so. For they show Mr. Kruschef stumped and awkward in the presence of Jusoslavis's brand of communism. To get the full flavor it it one must bear in mind that he is Stalin's successor as the highest official of the Soviet Communist Party - and like Stalin is the Number One personality of the Soviet empire. In the conversation quoted, he declined to criticize Jugoslavian Communism as unorthunorthodox. And of course he couldn't praise it, because that would be to confess the inferiority of the Soviet system.

The hour-long conversation that found Mr. Kruschev stumped took place yesterday in a factory at Zagreb. It ended with a Jugoslav shop leader ardently explaining how the workers in the factory participate in management through freely elected councils. That is what workers don't do in the Soviet Union for there the managing director is appointed by the state and is solely responsible to it.

The Jugoslavs did their best during the visit to get the Russians to show interest in their system of direct workers' control. For this is one of the issues that led to the break with Tito. Yesterday Mr. Khruschev was cornered by the shop official at a factory dinner and had to hear him out. The great Communist potentate then had to say something, and this is what he said: "I cannot make a judgement of your system now, but if the result is good, we wish you scccess. There is no reason why we should condemn your good, we wish you success. We don't know much about it and we probably won't follow it. But we will study it carefully, and there may be things in it which we can borrow from Jugoslavia on a basis of equality, just as we are ready to borrow from the Americans."

This answer is in line with what the communique has to say about non-interference in the affairs of other countries. But one objective of the Soviet mission was to restore the ideological harmony of the two countries. For the Kremlin that had to mean getting Jugoslavia back into the fold. It couldn't mean acknowledging any virtues in Jugoslavia's rebellious course. So this part of the mission was a fiasco. When Mr. Khruschev said yesterday that he couldn't condemn what Jugoslavia was doing, it was like the head of a religion saying he couldn't condemn heresy.

But the communique successfully distracts attention from this failure. It shows Tito joining the Kremlin in supporting what it called Communist China's "legitimate rights" with regard to Formosa. That may be his price for not having yeilded to Soviet pressure on European and domestic issues.

The communique endorses a German settlement without even mentioning neautrality. It merely advocated "an agreed settlement of the German question on a democratic basis in comformity both with the wishes and interests of the German people, and with the interests of general security."

The statement had to be quite vague about Soviet - Jugoslav relations. It says further steps are to be taken toward normalizing them; in other words, the visit did not normalize them. The rhetoric now in fashion in Communist discussion of co-existence is generously used. Thus there is to be "respect for the soverignty, independence, integrity, and for equality among states in their mutual relations and in their relations with other states." And the peaceful co-existence is to be "regardless of ideological differences, or differences of social order, which presumes the co-operation of all states in the field of international relations in general, and more particularly in the field of economic and cultural relations." And a pledge is given of non-interference in this language; It is to be non-interference "for whatever reason, whether of an economic, political or ideological nature, because questions of internal organization, of different social systems and of different forms of socialist development are solely the concern of the individual countries."

The Kremlin may have foreseen its failure to win Tito back, and perhaps the value of its mission to Belgrade has to me measured in other terms too. It depends on part on how much the cause of neautralism has been served and how much world opinion has been convinced that the Kremlin genuinely wants to ease world tensions in terms the West can accept. A failure in Belgrade might even count paradoxically as a kind of evidence that the Kremlin is trying.

But to Communists the mission may well seem unforgiveable except in these terms. It has reduced party morale, encouraged willful independence, and made a mockery of discipline and consistency. Bulganin's speech blaming Beria for Tito's exp lsion from the Cominform was a new low in po t-war Communist expediency. Perhaps the cause of neautralism has been advanced, bu Communists may feel that, if so, it has been at the sacrifice of some of the stabiliyy of the Kremlin's satellite empire.

Thes is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Russians have apparently found Marshal Tito a hard man to persuade. And somehow, it seems almost as if Tito were being advised by Andre Gide, who once said:"What another would have done as well asy you, do not do it; what another would have said or written as well, do not say ro write it. Be faithful to that which exists nowhere but in yourself - and thus make yourself indespensible."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Friday June 3, 1955

This is the news:

Secretary of Air Talbott says our air force has more planes "capable of taking off with atomic weapons" than all the rest of the world. He added: " Regardless of what the Communists may do, the United States air force doesn't scare." At the same time, the Air Force today asked Congress for another 36-million dollars to construct extra bases to take care of its new [redacted] B-52 bombers. The Defense Department has decided to step-up the B-52 program by about 35 per cent. And while Secretary Talbott was saying we have " the most powerful fighting force in [redacted] EXISTENCE" Canadian Air Vice Marshal Plant said in Toronto: "In the event of any hostilities, God help the agressor." Plant feels a world-wide atomic war is inevitable. And he says the western powers are keen..anxious..willing and able to meet any Russian attack.

The State Department today refused to back up Vice President Nixon's statement that the proposed Big Four meeting "could be the world's last chance to settle differences peacefully and avoid catastrophic war." Diplomats in Washington were amazed at Mr. Nixon's statement, [redacted] because of statements by the President and others that no one should expect any miracles from the Big Four meeting. The Administration has been saying that Even if nothing comes of the meeting it would not be considered a momentous failure calling for drastic action.

The State Department says we are gratified at Russia's "apparent acceptance" of Yugoslavia's determination to remain independent of Soviet domination. The Russians today mobilized all of their propaganda machine to tell their people and the world that the Belgrade talks were a great Russian success against "American intriguers and the malicious American press." We'll hear a direct report from Yugoslavia in a few minutes.

The British railroad strike continues with Labor peacemakers reporting no progress in their efforts to get it settled.

And Hugh Dalton, the 67-year-old former chancellor of the exchequer, today resigned from the Labor Party's high command. He urged other elderly colleagues to step down to make way for younger men. But he would have former Prime Minister Atlee continue to lead the party.. to reconcile different factions.

A Vatican authority said today that Argentina's President Peron, a Roman Catholic once decorated by Pope Pius the twelfth, is only a short step from being excommunicated by the church.

In Washington today a Senate subcommittee voted to raise the nation-wide minimum wage from its present 75 cents an hour to one dollar an hour. The President had recommended an increase to 90 cents an hour. Only Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey voted against the one dollar wage.

And a special House committee today proposed to bring all servicemen under the regular social security system and eliminate the present 10-thousand dollar free life insurance for servicemen.

In Detroit, Ford AND THE C.I.O. auto workers are still negotiating a new contract. They met earlier today and will meet again tonight. A high union official says he thinks the company will "bend enough" to evert the crippling strike scheduled to start on Monday.

Senate investigators today accused Captain Raymond Wool of falsely branding himself a tax dodger in order to hide the real source of 16-thousand dollars he kept in a strong box in his home. Wool has testified that most of the 16-thousand came from the profits of a dress shop operated by his wife. But two former salesgirls testified today that the dress shop actually lost money. Wool repeated a denial that he ever took bribes from government contractors.

And now for a [redacted] summary of the Russian-Yugoslav conference [redacted] here is my colleague [redacted] Richard C. Hottelet recording from Belgrade.

(runs 7;15 ending - NOW BACK TO ED MURROW IN N.Y.

That was Dick Hottelet recording from Belgrade. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.... First.... here is Bob Dixon.

The Yugoslavs are attempting to maintain a position of armed neutrality. But they are also aware that history has shown that this is perhaps the most difficult policy a nation can pursue. Some may argue that times have changed, but more likely it's as William Cowper once said:"Nothing is ever forgotten; and not an oath is ever uttered, that does not continue to vibrate through all time, in the wide-spreading current of time."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, June 3, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... And now, for a summary of the Russian-Yugoslav conference, here is my colleague Richard C. Hottelet, recording from Belgrade.

HOTTELET: When the Soviet delegation landed at Belgrade airport eight days ago, the air was charged with excitement. As we watched the men of the Kremlin shake hands with Marshal Tito we had the feeling that history was being made. The big question was: Why have they come? This morning we watched the same men shake the same hand and get aboard the same plane, but the action was limp and routine. We were still asking "why did they come?", but the question was neither urgent nor particularly important. The provisional answer seems to be that they came on a wild goose chase. Whatever they're taking back with them does not seem to warrant the effort and humiliation this trip has cost them. If anything, the Russians may be in a worse position than before, because the Yugoslavs have not only lost some of their illusions but have taken a cynical measure of the Soviet leaders.

Marshal Tito dominated this conference, and the Russians left with what he was willing to give them and no more. It now appears that the Russians overplayed their hand at the very outset. Both sides had agreed long in advance that they would talk about improving relations between Russia and Yugoslavia and about lessening world tensions. Apart from that, everything was open.

The whole occasion of the arrival was fantastic. There stood the Russians, three of the most powerful men in the world, rulers of an empire armed to the teeth, possessors of the hydrogen bomb. Seven years ago, they and their party had kicked Tito out of the Cominform for disobedience. Their propaganda had reviled him as a mangy Fascist dog. They had tried everything short of armed invasion to overthrow him. Now they had swallowed their pride and had come to him from Moscow.

The Big-Four conference is not far off, and the time seemed pregnant with some Machiavellian plan. They might propose a neutral belt; get Tito's support for their European security scheme; ... persuade him to shift away from the West. Khrushchev took a paper out of his pocket and began to read. And as he started, "Dear Comrade Tito", Tito's face turned to stone. Khrushchev went on breezily about the old friendship of the two nations. He dismissed the entire Cominform drama in a short paragraph as Beria's fault. And then he came to his main point. In effect he proposed that both countries and both parties restore Communist solidarity.

Now, Tito is not exactly a modest man; he is not a democrat who feels emotionally attached to the West. It is possible that he could have been influenced if the Russians had asked him to lead a campaign for peace and understanding, on terms not unfavorable to themselves. With his country groaning under the load of military defense, he certainly wants normal relations and a relaxation of tensions. But Tito is not a fool. Neither he nor his people have forgotten the terrifying isolation of the Cominform crisis. They have kept their independence and their lives with Western help. Khrushchev's tone and his proposition were an insult to the Yugoslavs' pride and to their intelligence. Even considering the scheme would have compromised them. And the Yugoslavs from that moment on made it embarrassingly clear to the Russians that they would not even talk about ideological or party contacts. They considered this a state visit which could produce only open agreement between governments.

The Russians tried to press their point at the first conference session but reportedly met icy rebuff. The remarkable thing is that when this plan failed they did not have an alternative. The supposition is that the Soviet delegation came to Belgrade incredibly misinformed. Somehow, the Kremlin had got the idea that it had only to make this gesture to bring Tito back into the fold. When they failed, they had nothing more to say of any consequence. The joint declaration signed last nite is full of pious platitudes. It could have been drafted before the Russians ever got here and certainly did not need their presence.

The Yugoslavs conceded a line about Red China's legitimate claim to Formosa and a vague reference to the prohibition of atomic weapons. The rest is nothing but bromides - no Soviet ammunition for a Big-Four conference. Just as interesting is the fact that Tito demanded and got Soviet Prime Minister Bulganin to sign this document instead of Party Secretary Khrushchev. To the bitter end the Yugoslavs made this a state occasion with no Communist overtones.

Of greater importance than this formal byplay are some conclusions the Yugoslavs have come to about the Russians and their intentions. Before the conference Marshal Tito and his leaders maintained that Soviet policy had fundamentally changed for the better. Today Yugoslav sources say that the Soviet regime is still Stalinist. They cite a speech by Khrushchev in Slovenia on Tuesday in which he advocated Stalin's policy of strengthening the state and the army. Decentralization on Yugoslav lines, he said, was an illusion.

There were also some chilling intimate moments. Apparently, after a friendly dinner on Tito's Adriatic island of Brioni, Tito began to ask what had become of various prominent Russians whom he had known after the war. He mentioned one name. Khrushchev replied: "He was shot!" Tito mentioned another name. The answer came: "He was shot!" A third inquiry. Khrushchev didn't know and turned to his security adviser. The answer: "He was shot!" The conversation came to a clammy end.

The Yugoslavs say, too, that their delegation was not favorably impressed by the Russians personally. "We had no use for Stalin", they say, "but he at least was a statesman who knew what he wanted. Molotov, too. But Khrushchev, Bulganin and Mikoyan are lesser men; they seem to lack inner strength."

The Russians tried hard to be charming. They traveled around, seeing all the sights, overlooking the thin official welcome. They discussed plant management and gabbled away with workers as tho this was what they had come to do. These men, who are unapproachable in their own empire, patted backs, smiled and waved at everyone and looked around for hands to shake. Last nite they threw a sumptuous party - and from the way Khrushchev staggered out, he had obviously drunk far too many toasts. All the way thru there was a discrepancy between what these men were and how they were behaving.

The influence of Soviet Russia in Europe does not rest on charm but on the fear and respect it inspires. For the Yugoslavs, maybe for many others, it now engenders less of both. The Yugoslavs have fewer hopes and illusions about Soviet policy changing for the better, but they say this: The Russians seem, thru inner and outer necessity, to be in the process of change. The West should not sit back in passive distrust, but should try to direct this change now into acceptable channels.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Richard C. Hottelet recording from Belgrade on a most unusual conference.

-30-

Ediphone trans./E. Scheiner

Monday June 6, 1955

This is the news:

Ford and the C.I.O. auto workers today agreed on a ~~new contract~~ 3-year..averting a strike by 140-thousand workers. The agreement provides for a guaranteed semi-annual wage...the company calls it "a supplemental unemployment benefit plan." Under the provision Ford alone will contribute to a 55-million-dollar fund. When a worker is laid off money from this fund plus state unemployment benefits will guarantee him from 60 to 65 per cent of his regular wage for a total of 26 weeks..half a year. The plan goes into effect in a year when the fund has enough money. IT is based on some states changing their unemployment compensation laws. Both Ford and the Auto Workers think this will be no problem. In addition to the guaranteed semi-annual wage, the new contract provides for: an annual six cents an hour raise (or two and a half per cent of base pay)... an increase in the maximum pension... workers families to be included in hospitalization benefits...an adjustment in the cost of living escalator clause wherein the worker gets a penny an hour increase each time there's a half point increase in the cost of living index. Holiday pay will be at triple time..and Ford workers will be off half a day on Christmas and New year's eve.

Union President Reuther, preparing to lay the same terms before General Motors negotiators tomorrow, estimates Ford workers have gained an average 20 cents an hour in the new contract. He calls it "the largest economic package" ever offered. He says it establishes a new concept in industry: a guarantee that management will provide for workers who are laid off. And John S. Bugas, the chief Ford negotiator, calls the agreement a "significant deperature from the historic pattern of labor-management agreements."

The C.I.O. Steelworkers today "unanimously determined" to achieve a substantial wage increase in wage talks that open tomorrow with United States Steel.

The Supreme Court today cleared Yale Professor John P. Peters of disloyalty charges . The court rebuked the old Loyalty Review Board for "an unwarranted assumption of power." I'd like to discuss this case in a few minutes.

The State Department today granted a passport to Dr. Otto Nathan who has been trying for one for two and a half years. Only last week the Circuit court of appals ordered the department to grant Dr. Nathan a hearing or..explain why he has been denied a passport.

Secretary of State Dulles said today he doubts that the proposed top level Big Four talks will relax dangerous international tensions. He says:"For some time yet we must live as a nation that is imperiled."

The western powers today invited the Russians to meet in Geneva on July 18th. A month before that the foreign ministers of the Western nations will prepare for the conference with a meeting in New York.

President Eisenhower was at West Point today attending alumni programs with other members of his class of 1915. During the day he told two cadets this June sixth is "a big day in his life"..the 11th anniversary of the Normandy invasion..the same day his son John graduated from West Point. And the President told alumni members:"In the life we find outside the armed services there seems to be a prevalent notion that if you call enough names, hammer enough desks that you are a great leader." The President added: "Happily this Academy has never subscribed to such a false belief."

The government today approved more than a million shots of Salk anti-polio vaccine made by the Eli Lilly Company..for immediate use. This first release of new vaccine in more than a month will probably go to New Jersey, Maine, the Dakotas and Montana.

The American Cancer Society reports that a poll of a thousand cancer researchers, chest surgeons and pathologists, found a majority believe that heavy cigaret smoking may lead to lung cancer. Dr. Charles S. Cameron, medical and scientific director of the Cancer society, made the report which was challenged by Timothy V. Hartnett, a tobacco spokesman. Hartnett says Cameron's poll is considered "biased, non-scientific and filled with shortcomings and defects" by "competent opinion research authorities."

Another report by the American Cancer Society says, in effect: give up cigarets and you probably cut your risk of getting lung cancer. This is based on a study of 190-thousand men and their smoking habits. The tobacco industry says the Cancer Society's study ignores important environmental, geographical, occupational, physical and emotional factors that affect disease and longevity.

~~Defense Secretary Wilson says the department is considering a speed-up of combat planes besides the B-52 jet bomber...presumably jets fighters. Wilson says the production of the F-100 super Sabre could be speeded up. But the air force has not yet recommended such action.~~

Lewis Straws, chairman of the atomic energy commission, says it seems "an act of irresponsibility" for anyone to claim that radiation from atomic tests "is poisoning the air...and guaranteeing future generations of monsters."

Adlai Stevenson told the Smith College commencement that what we need in these times are unpredictable "ornery" characters..."who take open eyes and open minds out with them into the society which they will share and help to transform." He said "There are some leaders in our country who certainly have a brainwashing glint in their eyes when they meet with an unfamiliar idea."

In Italy, Premier SCELBA'S Christian Democrats have taken a commanding lead in returns from the Sicilian regional assembly election.

In Great Britain, striking railway engineers and firemen have rejected Prime Minister Eden's back to work plea. And a wildcat seamen's strike has tied up luxury passenger liners that were to return to the United States with American vacationers and emigrants. Cunard line has cancelled the roundtrips of three luxury liners booked by Americans who planned to go abroad.

Edward R. Murrow: June 6, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The Supreme Court ruling in the case of Dr. John P. Peters is important both for what it says and for what it doesn't say. Professor Peters, senior professor of medicine at Yale University, was fired as a consultant to the U.S. Public Health Service in May of 1953. He had been cleared by two loyalty boards, but a third board found what it called "a reasonable doubt" of his loyalty. Dr. Peters' lawyers challenged the constitutionality of his firing. (He was not permitted to confront his accusers or to cross-examine them, whoever they were.)

Today's opinion was delivered by Chief Justice Warren. It was a seven to two opinion, and it held that the procedure under which Dr. Peters was fired was invalid. What the Court was saying was that the third loyalty review board had no right to re-open the Peters case on its own initiative, after two lower boards had cleared him. The Court's decision therefore covers a narrow issue, and does not greatly clarify, and does not alter at all the security program as now administered.

Today's ruling by the Court did not pass upon the relative merits of the Truman and Eisenhower security programs. It ignored the question of whether the accused should be permitted to confront his accusers, with the right to cross-examine them. So the only question that was settled today was whether the loyalty board had the right to re-open the Peters case on its own initiative, XTHXXXX after he had twice been cleared. The Court decided that this should not have been done. Today's ruling does clear up the personal case of Dr. Peters completely. The Court ordered that the record of the last loyalty board hearing, and the record of the dismissal itself be expunged, wiped out, as though it had never occurred.

It was because the case of Dr. Peters should not have been re-opened for the third time that the majority of the Court felt that the constitutional issue did not arise. It held that since he shouldn't have been questioned and dismissed, it hadn't been essential for him to confront his accusers and be able to cross-examine them. However, Justices Black and Douglas believed that the constitutionality of the dismissal, without confrontation and cross-examination of accusing witnesses, should have been faced and settled. However, the Supreme Court has a tradition of not reaching out for such issues if they can be avoided.

It is worth pointing out that today's decision does not mean that anonymous evidence and the absence of cross-examination, have been found constitutional by inference. And it does not mean that this practise has been found unconstitutional by inference. It simply means that this issue, if it is to be settled, will have to come before the Court in a form that makes it the essence of the ruling required of the Court. This means that the constitutional question - whether a government employee can be fired as a loyalty risk, without being able to confront his accusers or to cross-examine them - is still left unsettled.

Attorney General Brownell has said that in security cases efforts will be made to produce government witnesses to testify against the accused, such witnesses to submit to cross-examination and face the accused, face-to-face. However, this promise is qualified by the reservation that this will be done "so long as the production of such witnesses would not jeopardize the national security." This does not make it clear who is to determine when the production of witnesses will in fact jeopardize the national security.

In today's decision Justices Douglas and Black voted with the majority, but felt that the constitutional issue did arise. Justice Douglas said: "Confrontation and cross-examination under oath are essential if the American ideal of due process is to remain a vital force in our public life." He said: "We deal here with the reputation of men and their right to work, things more precious than property itself. We have here a system where government, with all its power and authority, condemns a man to a suspect class and the outer darkness, with the rudiments of a fair ~~XXXXX~~ trial."

Justice Reid wrote a dissenting opinion, with Justice Burton concurring. They did not regard the board's action as invalid.

What the majority did was to re-state a principle of criminal law - that a verdict of guilty can be appealed, but a verdict of not guilty cannot be appealed.

In many parts of the country, this is the beginning of commencement week. There will be many words spoken, but none more appropriate than these by Thomas Huxley:"Perhaps the most valuable result of all education, he said, is to make yourself do the thing you you have to do when it ought to be done, whether you like it or not. It is the first lesson that ought to be learned, but is probably the last lesson we learn thoroughly."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 6, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Ford and the C.I.O. auto workers today agreed on a new 3-year contract ...averting a strike by 140 thousand workers. The agreement provides for a guaranteed semi-annual wage..the company calls it "a supplemental unemployment benefit plan." Under the provision Ford alone will contribute to a 55-million dollar fund. When a worker is laid off money from this fund plus state unemployment benefits will guarantee him from 60 to 65 per cent of his regular wage for a total of 26 weeks..half a year. The plan goes into effect in a year when the fund has enough money. It is based on some states changing their unemployment compensation laws. Both Ford and the Auto Workers think this will be no problem. In addition to the guaranteed semi-annual wage, the new contract provides for: an annual six cents an hour raise or two and a half per cent of base pay...an increase in the maximum pension..workers families to be included in hospitalization benefits..an adjustment in the cost of living esculator clause wherein the worker gets a penny an hour increase each time there's a half point increase in the cost of living index. Holiday pay will be at triple time..and Ford workers will be off half a day on Christmas and New Year's eve.

Union President Reuther, preparing to lay the same terms before General Motors negotiators tomorrow, estimates Ford workers have gained an average 20 cents an hour in the new contract. He calls it "the largest economic package" ever offered. He says it establishes a new concept in industry: a guarantee that management will provide for workers who are laid off. And Johs S. Bugas the chief Ford negotiator, calls the agreement a "significant departure from the historic pattern of labor-management agreements."

The C.I.O. Steelworkers today "unanimously determined" to achieve a substantial wage increase in wage talks that open tomorrow with United States Steel.

The Supreme Court today cleared Yale Professor John P. Peters of disloyalty charges. The court rebuked the old Loyalty Review Board for "an unwarranted assumption of power." I'd like to discuss this case in a few minutes.

The State Department today granted a passport to Dr. Otto Nathan who has been trying for one for two and a half years. Only last week the Circuit court of appeals ordered the department to grant Dr. Nathan a hearing or explain why he has been denied a passport.

Secretary of State Dulles said today he doubts that the proposed top level Big Four talks will relax dangerous international tensions. He says : "For some time yet we must ivee as a nation that is imperriled."

The western powers today invited the Russians to meet in Geneva on July 18th. A month before that the foreign ministers of the Western nations will prepare for the conference with a meeting in New York.

President Eisenhower was at West Point doday attending alumni program with other members of his class of 1915. During the day he told two cadets this June sixth is "a big day in his life"...the 11th anniversary of the Normandy invasion..the same day his son John graduated from West Point. And the President told alumni members: "In the life we find outside the armed services, there seems a prevelant notion that if you call enough names, hammer enough desks, that you are a great leader." The President added :"Happily this Academy has never subscribed to such a false belief."

The government today approved more than a million shots of Salk anti-polio vaccine made by the Eli Lilly Company..for idmediate use. This first release of new vaccine in more than a month will probably go to New Jersey, Maine, the Dakotas and Montana.

The American Cancer Society reports that a poll of a thousand cancer researchers, chest surgeons and pathologists, found a majority belief that heavy cigaret smoking may lead to lung cancer. Dr. Charles S. Cameron, medical and scientific director of the Cancer society, made the report which was challenged by Timothy V. Hartnett, a tobacco spokesman. Hartnett says Cameron's poll is considered "biased, non-scientific, and filled with short comings and defects" by "competent opinion research authorities."

Another report by the American Cancer Society says, in effect: give up cigarets and you probably cut your risk of getting lung cancer. This is based on a study of 190-thousand men and their smoking habits. The tobacco industry says the Cancer Society's study ignores important environmental, geographical, occupational, physical and emotional factors that affect disease and longevity.

Lewis Straws, chairman of the atomic energy commission, says it seems "an act of irresponsibility" for anyone to claim that radiation from atomic tests "is poisoning the air..and guaranteeing future generations of monsters."

Adlai Stevenson told the Smith College commencement that what we need in these times are unpredictable "ornery" characters.."who take open eyes and open minds out with them into the society which they will share and help to transform." He said "There are some leaders in our country who certainly have a brainwashing glint in their eyes when they meet with an unfamiliar idea."

In Italy, Premier Scelba's Christian Democratshave taken a commanding lead in returns from the Sicilian regional assembly election.

In Great Britain, a striking railway engineers and firemen have rejected Prime Minister Eden's back to work plea. And a wildcat seamen's strike has tied up luxury passenger liners that were to return to the Unites States with American vacationers and emigrants. Cunard line has cancelled the round trips of three luxury liners booked by Americans who planned to go abroad.

The Supreme Court ruling in the case of Dr. John Peters is important both for what is says and for what it doesn't say. Professor Peters, senior professor of medicine at Yale University, was fired as a consultant to the U.S. Public Health Service in May of 1953. He had been cleared by two loyalty boards, but a third board found what it called "a reasonable doubt" of his loyalty. Dr. Peters' lawyers challenged the constitutionality of his firing. He was not permitted to confront his accusers or to cross-examine them, whoever they were.

Today's opinion was delivered by Chief Justice Warren. It was a seven-to-two opinion, and it held that the procedure under which Dr. Peters was fired was invalid. What the Court was saying was that the third loyalty review board had no right to re-open the Peters case on its own initiative, after two lower boards had cleared him. The Court's decision therefore covers a narrow issue, and does not greatly clarify, and does not alter at all, the security program as now administered.

Today's ruling by the Court did not not pass upon the relative merits of the Truman and Eisenhower security programs. It ignored the question of whether the accused should be permitted to confront his accusers, with the right to cross-examine them. So the only question that was settled today was whether the loyalty board had the right to re-open the Peters case on its own initiative, after he had twice been cleared. The Court decided that this should not have been done. Today's ruling does clear up the personal case of Dr. Peters completely. The Court ordered that the record of the last loyalty board hearings, and the record of the dismissal itself be expunged, wiped out as though it had never occurred.

It was because the case of Dr. Peters should not have been reopened for the third time that the majority of the Court felt that the constitutional issue did not arise. It held that since he shouldn't have been questioned and dismissed, it hadn't been essential for him to confront his accusers and be able to cross-examine them. However, Justices Black and Douglas believed that the constitutionality of the dismissal, without confrontation and cross-examination of accusing witnesses, should have been faced ans settled. However the Supreme Court has a tradition of not reaching out for such issues if they can be avoided.

It is worth pointing out that today's decision does not mean that anonymous evidence and the absence of cross-examination, have been found constitutional by inference. And it does not mean that this practice has been found unconstitutional by inference. It simply means that this issue, if it is to be settled, will have to come before the court in a form that makes it the essence of the ruling required of the court. This means that the constituiional question - whether a government employee can be fired as a loyalty risk, without being able to confront his accusers or to cross-examine them - is still left unsettled.

Attorney General Brownell has said that in security cases efforts will be made to produce government witnesses to testify against the accused, such witnesses to submit to cross-examination and face the accused, face-to-face. However, this promise is qualified by the reservation that this will be done "So long as the production of such witnesses would not jeopardize the national security." This does not make it clear who is to determine when the production of witnesses will in fact jeopardize the national security.

In today's decision Justices Douglas and Black voted with the majority but felt that the constitutional issue did arise. Justice Douglas said: "confrontation and cross-examination under oath are essential if the American ideal of due process is to remain a vital force in our public life." He said:"We deal here with the reputation of men and their right to work, things more precious than property itself. We have here a system where government, with all its power and authority, condemns a man to a suspect class and the outer darkness, with the rudiments of a fair trial."

Justice Reid wrote a dissenting opinion, with Justice Burton concurring. They did not regard the board's action as invalid.

That the majority did was to resatate a principle of criminal law that a verdict of guilty can be appealed, but a verdict of not guilty cannot be appealed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. First, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW : In many parts of the country this is the beginning of commencement week. There will by many words spoken, but none more approptiate than these by Thomas Huxley:"Perhaps the most valuable result of all education" he said , "is to make yourself do the thing you have to do when it ought to be done, whether you like it or not. It is the first lesson that ought to be learned but it is probably the last lesson we learn thoroughly."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday, June 7, 1955

This is the news:

The President said today that the forthcoming Big Four meeting will not cure all the ills of a world he described as "sick with ignorance, mutual fears and hates." But he promised to explore "every decent avenue toward a just and lasting peace." We'll hear some of Mr. Eisenhower's ~~address~~ speech at West Point in a few minutes.

Secretary of State Dulles said of the same meeting: "If there is a will, and we can put a new spirit into it, then a great deal can come of it." Mr. Dulles told reporters in Washington that if it seems the Russians want to use the conference merely for propaganda, very little good will result.

The Russians today invited West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer to go to Moscow "in the nearest future" to discuss diplomatic ~~[redacted]~~ AND TRADE relations.. and "the interest of peace and European security." Moscow says the maintenance of peace depends on normal and good relations between the Soviet and German people. My colleague Dick ~~[redacted]~~ Hottelet cables from Bonn tonight: German sources say West ~~[redacted]~~ Germany will accept the Soviet offer..and Adenauer may go to Moscow..but only after detailed consideration of the Russian offer, & consultation with the West.

Moscow today gave India's Prime Minister Nehru the most lavish welcome it has ever given a foreigner..in recent memory. The whole Soviet cabinet greeted him at the airport...he was presented with many large bouquets of flowers. WHITE doves were let loose...large crowds appeared to cheer him (although the route of the parade had not been publicly announced.)

In Detroit today, General Motors and the C.I.O. auto workers agreed to postpone, until midnight Sunday, the contract negotiations that were to end tonight. And the union says there is every indication of a "peaceful settlement."

And Henry G. Ritter, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, says of the guaranteed wage agreement, in the auto workers-Ford contract: "A wave of strikes is almost sure to follow if other auto companies" follow Ford's lead. He says the wage plan could stifle new employment.

Commerce Secretary Weeks says, during May the nation hit new peaks of production; and employment was the highest for any May in our history. Weeks predicts this will be our best year ever. (provided the nation maintains industrial peace in its key industries.)

The Senate Labor committee has voted to raise the national minimum wage from 75 cents an hour to a dollar an hour. The President suggested 90 cents an hour.

The government reports it lost a half billion dollars in supporting farm prices during the first ten months of the fiscal year.

A Congressional conference committee has agreed on a compromise trade law. Senator Byrd says it meets with the President's approval.

Both the Senate and House have now approved an average pay increase of eight per cent for postal workers.

The Senate today handed the Administration a surprise defeat by rejecting the President's housing program in favor of a Democratic plan to provide many more housing units.

A House committee has blocked the controversial Dixon-Yates power project by refusing the President's request for six and a half million dollars in transmission line funds.

~~And another House committee has approved the construction of two atomic-powered merchant ships; one would be the peace ship the President suggested, the other would be for commercial use.~~

Surgeon General Scheele tonight will assure the nation that the Salk anti-polio vaccine is now as safe as science can make it.

In a speech to be heard over many of these CBS radio stations at 10;45 eastern time, he will say there is not enough for all children this summer. Dr. Scheele will explain that there's always a possibility of small amounts of live polio virus being present in the shots. But he says, this is true of other vaccines in use for 50 years. Earlier, Dr. Scheele told the American Medical Association that Public Health Service evidence "supports a hypothesis" that some of the vaccine produced by the Cutter Laboratories contained "infected virus."

Dr. Salk today received a ten-thousand-dollar award from an INSURANCE company for making "the greatest contribution to public health during the year." He said the award "fulfills to overflowing the cup of satisfaction."

In London, Laborite members of Parliament have re-elected Clement Atlee as their leader. But authoritative sources say Atllee will give up his party leadership in October.

Striking British railroad engineers and firemen are now considering a compromise peace formula. But a wildcat strike by seamen is still blocking the movement of six trans-Atlantic liners.

And now here is a recorded portion of what President Eisenhower told graduates of the United States Military Academy in a commencement address today:

(runs 6;10 ending

"...and that humanity's hunger for peace and justice is a mightier force than a few men's lust for power."

That was a recorded portion of the President's ~~address~~ speech at West Point today.

This is Ed Murrow..I'll be back in a moment with the Word for today..But first..here i Bob Dixon.

President Eisenhower spoke at West Point today of the speed with which change is occurring in world affairs. A long time ago Machiavelli said: "There is nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous to conduct, or more uncertain in its success, than to take the lead in the introduction of a new order of things."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, June 7, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... And now, here is a recorded portion of what President Eisenhower told graduates of the United States Military Academy in a Commencement address today.

PRES. EISENHOWER: Change in the leisurely days of the past was gradual and evolutionary. The armies of Napoleon moved across Western Europe with no more speed than those of Caesar, his predecessor by eighteen centuries. Now, within a single generation, a natural process has become a cataclysmic rush. This should generate neither a despairing belief that the tide of events is beyond human control nor an apathetic acceptance that human ability is not equal to the immense problems newly arisen. It does mean that we must think better, we must think faster and we must think more wisely than ever before.

When gas warfare was first introduced in combat in World War I, the techniques necessary to adjust for use the crude protective equipment of the time were both laborious and exacting. Because of this there grew up a saying in the Army that when a gas attack was met there were only two kinds of soldiers on the battlefront: the quick and the dead. Of the nations of today the future will say that there were two kinds: those that were intelligent, courageous, decisive and tireless in their support of high principle - and those that disappeared from the earth. The true patriots of today are those who are giving their best to assure that our own country will always be found in the first of these two categories.

You, who graduate today, will be servants of the civil power, committed to quick obedience. You may some day be responsible for the lives of men - possibly the fate of a campaign. No signal from headquarters will then communicate to you the proper action. The moment will not wait on the completion of a staff study. The arena of decision will be your own mind and conscience, naked of others' counsel. To be ready for that crisis is one mission of the American soldier. The other is vastly different. Altho you are to be leaders in the profession of arms, trained for the winning of battle, you are members of a vast team, the American nation. Its historic objectives have always been human dignity, human peace, human prosperity. These, as a public servant, you must help attain. In this, no mastery of command can substitute for an intelligent comprehension of the economic goals, the p_olitical impulses, the spiritual aspirations that move tens of millions of people. But your greatest opportunity for enduring contribution to America may well be the council table, far removed from war.

This country now approaches a Big Four conference. The populations of the countries to be represented at this conference constitute only a fraction of mankind. And free nations do not claim any right to speak for others. Therefore, this prospective meeting of the four powers can at best be only a beginning in the renewed effort that may last a generation. It is a task that may result in a long series of conferences. In them, this Government, meeting with others, will further extend its search for ways in which the peaceful a spirations of mankind may be attained.

Tho only a few individuals will be at those conferences to speak for America, yet in a definite sense we shall all be there - all of you, all the citizens of this great land. For the American words spoken in a world council will be of moment only if they conform to the spirit that is the true strength of our country.

Militarily and materially we are strong. More important, we are strong in the partnership of many allies. But, above all, our nation is strong in the support of principle: We espouse the cause of freedom and justice and peace for all peoples, regardless of race or flag or political ideology. Tho in this strength we have reason for confidence, we likewise have need for wisdom and the caution that wisdom enforces. ~~But~~ By caution I mean a prudent guard against fatuous expectations that a world, sick with ignorance, mutual fears and hates, can be miraculously cured by a single meeting. I mean a stern determination that we shall not be reckless or witless, relaxing our posture merely because a persistent foe may assume a smiling face and a soft voice. By wisdom I mean a calm awareness that strength at home, strength in allies, strength in moral position, arm us in impregnable fashion to meet every wile and strategem that may be used against us. But I mean also a persevering resolution to explore every decent avenue toward a lasting and just peace, no matter how many nor how bitter our disappointments. I mean an inspired faith that men's determination and capacity to better their world will in time override their ability to destroy it; and that humanity's hunger for peace and justice is a mightier force than a few men's lust for power.

MURROW: That was a recorded portion of the President's speech at West Point this morning.

-30-

Ediphone trans./ES

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, June 7, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The President said today that the forthcoming Big Four Meeting will not cure all the ills of a world he described as "sick with ignorance, mutual fears and hates." But he promised to explore "every decent avenue toward a just and lasting peace". We'll hear some of Mr. Esienhower's speech at West Point in a few minutes.

Secretary of State Dulles said of the same meeting: "If there is a will, and we can put a new spirit into it, then a great deal can come of it". Mr. Dulles told reporters in Washington that if it seems the Russians want to use the conference merely for propaganda very little good will result.

The Russians today invited West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer to go to Moscow "in the nearest future" to discuss diplomatic and trade relations..and "the interest of peace and European security." Moscow says the maintenance of peace depends on normal and good relations between the Soviet and German people. My colleague Dick Hottelet cables from Bonn tonight: German sources s say West Germany will accept the Soviet offer..and Adenauer may go to Moscow.. but only after detailed consideration of the Russian offer and consultation with the West. Moscow today gave India's Prime Minister Nehru the most lavish welcome it has ever given a foreigner..in recent memory. The whole Soviet cabinet greeted him at the airport..he was presented with many large boquets of flowers.. White doves were let loose..large crowds appeared to cheer him (although the route of the parade had not been publicly announced.)

In Detroit doday, General Motors and the C.I.O. auto workers agreed to postpone until midnight Sunday the contract negotiations that were to end tonight. And the union says there is every indication of a "peaceful settlement."

And Henry G. Ritter, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, says of the guaranteed wage agreement, in the auto workers--Ford contract: "A wave of strikes is almost sure to follow if other auto companies follow Ford's lead. He says the wage plan could stifle new employment.

Commerce Secretary Weeks says during May the nation his new peaks of production; and employment was the highest for any May in our history. Weeks predicts this will be our best year ever..provided the nation maintains industrial peace in its key industries.)

The Senate Labor committee has voted to raise the national minimum wage from 75 cents an hour to a dollar an hour. The President suggested 90 cents an hour.

The government reports it lost a half billion dollars in supporting farm prices during the first ten months of the fiscal year.

A Congressional conference committee has agreed on c compromise trade law. Senator Byrd says it meets with the President's aprroval.

Both the Senate and House have now approved an average pay increase of eight per cent for postal workers.

The Senate today handed the Administration a surprise defeat by rejecting the President's housing program in favor of a Democratic plan to provide many more housing units.

A House committee has blocked the controversial Dixon-Yates power project by refusing the President's request for six and a half million dollars in transmission line funds.

Surgeon General Scheele tonight will assure the nation that the Salk anti-polio vaccine is now "as safe as science can make it". In a speech to be heard over many of these CBS radio stations at 10:45 eastern time he will say there is not enough for all thildren this summer. Dr. Scheele will explain that there's always a possibility of small amounts of live polio virus bein present in the shots. But he says this is true of other vaccines in use for 50 years. Earlier, Dr. Scheele told the American Medical Association that Public Health Service evidence "supports a hypotheses" that some of the vaccine produced by the Cutter Laboratories contained "infected virus."

Dr. Salk today received a ten thousand dollar award from an insurance compnay for making "the greatest contribution to public health during the year." He said the award "fulfills to overflowing the cup of satisfaction."

In London, Laborite members of Parliament have re-elected Clement Atlee as their leader. But authoritative sources say Atlee will give up his party leadership in October.

Striking British railroad engineers and firemen are now considering a compromise peace formula. But a wildcat strike by seamen is still blocking the movement of six trans-Atlantic liners.

And now here is a recorded portion of what President Eisenhower told graduates of the United States Military Academy in a commencement address today:

EISENHOWER: Change in the leisurly days tf the past was gradual and evolutionary. The armies of Napoleon moved across Western Europe with no more speed than those of Ceasar, his prececessor by eighteen centuries. Now, within a single generation, a natural process has become a cataclysmic rush. This should generate neither a despairing belief that the tide of events is beyond human control nor an apathetic acceptance that human ability is not equal to the immense problems newly arisen. It does mean that we must think better, we must think faster and we must think more wisely than ever before.

When gas warfare was first introduced in combat in World War I, the techniques necessary to adjust for use the crude protective equipment of the time were both laborious and exacting. Because of this there grew up a saying in the Army that when a gas attack was met there were only two kinds of soldiers on the battlefront: the quick and the dead. Of the nations of today the future will say that there were two kinds: those that were intelligent, courageous, decisive and tireless in their support of high principle - and those that disappeared from the earth. The true patriots of today are those who are giving their best to assure that our country will always be found in the first of thest two categories.

You, who graduate today, will be servants of the civil power, committed to quick obedience. You may some day be responsible for the lives of men--possibly the fate of a campaign. No signal from headquarters will then communicate to you the proper action. The moment will not wait on the completion of a staff study. The arena of decision will be your own mind and conscience, naked of other's counsel. To be ready for that crisis in one mission of the American soldier. The other is vastly different. Although you are to be leaders in the profession of arms, trained for the winning of battle, you are members of a vast team, the American nation. Its historic objectives have always been human dignity, human peace, human prosperity. These, as a public servant, you must help maintain. In this, no mastery of command can substitute for an intelligent comprehension of the economic goals, the political impulses, the spiritual aspirations that move tens of millions of people. But your greatest opportunity for enduring contribution to America may well be the council table, far removed from war.

This country now approaches a Big Four conference. The populations of the countries to be represented at this conference constitute only a fraction of mankind. And free nations do not claim any right to speak for others. Therefore, this prospective meeting of the four powers can at best be only a beginning in the renewed effort that may last a generation. It is a task that may result in a long series of conferences. In them, this Government, meeting with others, will further extend its search for ways in which the peaceful aspirations of mankind may be attained.

Though only a few individuals will be at those conferences to speak for America, yet in a definite sense we shall all be there - all of you, all of the citizens of this great land. For the American words spoken in a world council will be of moment only if they conform to the spirit that is the true strength of our country.

Militarily and materially we are strong. More important, we are strong in the partnership of many allies. But, above all, our nation is strong in the support of principle: We espouse the cause of freedom and justice and peace for all peoples, regardless of race or flag or political ideology. Though in this strength we have reason for confidence, we likewise have need for wisdom and the caution that wisdom enforces. By caution I mean a prudent guard against fatuous expectations that a world, sick with ignorance, mutual fears and hates, can miraculously be cured by a single meeting. I mean a stern determination that we shall not be reckless or witless, relaxing our posture merely because a peristent foe may assume a smiling face and a soft voice. By wisdom I mean a calm awareness that strength at home, strength in allies, strength in moral position arm us in impregnable fashion to meet every wile and strategem that may be used against us. But I mean also a preserving resolution to explore every decent avenue toward a lasting and just peace, no matter how many nor how bitter our disappointments. I mean and inspried faith that men's determination and capacity to better their world will in time override their ability to destroy it; and that humanity's hunger for peace and justice is a mightier force than a few men's lust for power

That was a recorded portion of the President's speech as West Point this morning.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: President Eisenhower spoke at West Point today of the speed with which change is occuring in world affairs. A long time ago Machiavelli said: "There is nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous to conduct, or more uncertain in its success, than to take the lead in the introductionof a new order of thing.."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Wednesday, June 8, 1955

This is the news:

The President said today: he has the utmost confidence that West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer will stand by the western world in any DEALINGS with Moscow. The President has the utmost faith in Adenauer.. believes he's one of the world's great statesman..and feels Moscow's invitation to establish diplomatic relations with West Germany was "a logical gesture."

The West German government says it welcomes the invitation..hopes it will lead to the establishment of diplomatic.trade and cultural relations with Moscow. The problem must be examined. And three of the German political parties are urging their chancellor to accept the invitation. I'd like to review this Soviet move in a few minutes. —

At his news conference today the President agains explained his views toward the proposed Big Four meeting. He doesn't expect too much. But he hopes the meeting may open up new approaches to settling international differnces.

Mr. Eisenhower also called on The House to remove an anti-segregation amendment which has blocked action on a bill to strengthen our military reserves. Mr. Eisenhower says the bill is vital.. "more essential than ever for our security." The anti-segregation amendment would bar the enlistment of men in any National Guard or reserve unit that practises racial segregation.

The President again complimented Welfare Secretary Hobby on her policy of "caution and safety" in connection with the anti-polio vaccine. And he told reporters "there was a little something lacking" in early tests of the vaccine made by drug firms.

And again the President said he favors a new minimum federal wage of 90 cents an hour.

But later in the day the Senate shouted its approval of a one dollar an hour minimum wage..25 cents more than the present minimum.

The Atomic Energy Commission, with the President's approval, says it is going to step-up its production of nuclear weapons to add to "a wide variety" of stockpiled arms. The commission wants another 271-million dollars for atomic weapons in the new fiscal year. And it has requested another 134 million to develop atomic power plants for aircraft, navy surface vessels and peacetime power plants.

Foreign Aid Chief Stassen told a House committee that we should continue "a moderate, limited program" of economic assistance to Yugoslavia. He said Marshal Tito's country "remains firmly independent of the Cominform. The Administration has asked for forty and a half million dollars for Tito..aside from military aid. [redacted]

Some 58-thousand C.I.O. auto workers remained away from their jobs today. About 13-thousand were engaged in unauthorized stoppages at Ford plants. And 45-thousand General Motors employes were on wildcat strikes. Union President Reuther called on the men to go back to work. He said they are sabotaging "national negotiations" with General Motors. The Ford contract was signed today.

[redacted]

The Air Force today filed court martial charges against Captain Raymond Wool, former procurement official. He's DENIED [redacted] accepting a 50-thousand dollar bribe from a Chicago navy hat maker.

The hat maker, Harry Lev, told a Senate committee today he sent 576 pounds of a very special smoked sturgeon to 38 military and civilian officials. But he said these were not gifts. As he explained it: "In my mind, a gift is something a person wears."

Democratic Senator Lehman charged today that the President "belatedly" asked for changes in the [redacted] Refugee Relief Act after the firing of Edward Crosi focused attention on the program's failure.

In London today, Queen Elizabeth designated Roger Bannister, the first man to run the mile in less than four minutes, and Actor Alec Guinness to be commanders in the Order of the British Empire.

Striking British railroad men and officials of the National Railway had their first meeting today and expressed "mutual confidence" in each other. The seamen's strike continues and steamship officials say more than 2-thousand Americans who had booked passage to Europe have had to change their plans.

And the powerful "Voice of the Arab" radio today called on Arab NATIONS [redacted] to declare war on Isreal and "teach hatred of Isreal in our schools." British experts say the radio station is located outside of Cairo.

Edward R. Murrow: June 8, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The Soviet note inviting Chancellor Adenauer to Moscow to normalize diplomatic and trade relations is not surprising. It had been anticipated. It came somewhat sooner than had been expected, which goes to show that the Soviet campaign to prevent the re-armament of Germany on the side of the West is in high gear. What deserves to attract more attention about the note than its timing is its contents. It starts with a cold-blooded misinterpretation of history, goes on to make a rather crass threat of total destruction, and contains the incredible statement that East Germany is free from Soviet interference.

The misinterpretation of history is in the paragraph that reads: "Historical experience teaches us that the preservation and consolidation of peace in Europe depends to a large extent on the existence of normal and good relations between the Soviet and German peoples." That might pass as a bland truism if it were not for the memory of what happened the very last time friendly relations were established between the two countries. It brought the non-agression pact signed by Ribbentrop and the present Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov. IN 1939 Presumably Molotov drafted this paragraph. At any rate he approved of it. Yet, as well as anyone living, he knows that the peace of Europe was not preserved and consolidated by that treaty, and that it freed Hitler's hands to launch what became the worst war of all times, and it was meant to ~~free them.~~ produce that war.

The threat of destruction in the note was made in connection with the charge that plans are afoot in what it calls "certain aggressive circles" to set Germany and the Soviet Union in opposition to each other. "The bringing to fruition of these plans" it says, "would inescapably make Germany a battlefield and lead to its annihilation. Such a war on the territory of Germany, with modern weapons of mass destruction," the note continues, "would be even more cruel and devastating than all the past wars. We must not allow events to develop along this path." This, of course, is an undisguised warning to West Germany not to join the Western defense system.

The lie about the independence of East Germany is in the statement that relations with this territory "are developing" (~~and I quote~~) "on the firm basis of equality rights and non-interference into the internal affairs." Aside from the fact that the Soviet army keeps greater forces in East Germany than all the other Eastern satellites combined, the present East German regime derives none of its powers from the people, was set up and is maintained in power by the Soviet government, and is generally recognized to be even less independent than other satellite governments.

However, it is significant that the note should state the contrary. For since the Khrushchev-Bulganin mission of repentance to Belgrade, Soviet policy is on a new tack. The visit to Belgrade was a repudiation of the Cominform which had excommunicated Tito. So the official demise of the Cominform is to be expected. One recalls how the Comintern was dismantled with a great fanfare when the Soviet Union became an ally in World War Two. Later its functions were publicly resumed by the Cominform. Now something new is being rigged up to take over the functions of the Cominform.

Walter Ulbricht, head of the puppet government of East Germany, coming back from the last Warsaw conference, told his followers that a new consultative political committee for common planning and action is to be set up for all Communist states from East Germany to China. He indicated that the days of Soviet domination of the satellites were over, and that the Soviet Union was to be no more than first among equals. And that is precisely what the note to Bonn was saying. Some day soon, the new disguise may be introduced in which the Kremlin will continue to control Communist parties and their policies in foreign lands. But it hasn't been introduced yet, and the statement in the note about Soviet non-interference in East Germany reads like a joke.

The most persuasive feature in the note was its promise to increase trade with the Soviet Union. This maturally makes the proposed visit to Moscow quite tempting to German industrialists and labor. The note also mentions the importance of German unification, but without saying on what terms it could come about. It did not propose outright that Dr. Adenauer should come to Moscow to negotiate unification. The Kremlin knows that Dr. Adenauer is not at liberty to do that. Unification is a subject reserved by the three Western Powers for their own direct negotiation with the Soviet Union. Dr. Adenauer is not even free to conclude a peace treaty. But he has no limitation on his right to establish diplomatic relations and extend trade.

The invitation aroused enormous interest in Western capitals. In Bonn itself the government responded to it cordially, as it had to do. It couldn't very well reject a gesture so ostentatiously friendly. Both Washington and London assumed that Bonn would accept the invitation, though the actual visit to Moscow is not expected before the Big Four meeting at the summit. Both capitals expressed faith that Dr. Adenauer could be trusted to uphold his relations with the West. President Eisenhower gave him a specially hearty endorsement in his news conference.

The Russian note was clever and utterly cynical. But apparently it has been recognized in Western capitals as what it is.

The Russians in their note to Germany mangled recent history. Cicero said a long time ago: "The first law is that the historian shall never dare to set down what is false; the second, that he shall never dare to conceal the truth; the third, that there shall be no suspicion in his work of either favoritism or prejudice.

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The President said today: he has the utmost confidence that West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer will stand by the western world in any dealings with Moscow. The President has the utmost faith in Adenauer..believes he's one of the world's great statesmen..and feels Moscow's invitation to establish diplatic relations with West Germany was "a logical gesture."

The West German government says it welcomes the invitation..hopes it will lead to the establishment of diplomatic trade and cultural relations with Moscow. The problem must be examined. And three of the German political parties are urging their chancellor to accept the invitation. I'd like to review this Soviet move in a few minutes.

At his news conference today the President again explained his views toward the proposed Big Four meeting. He doesn't expect too much. But he hopes the meeting may open up new approaches to settling international differences.

Mr. Eisenhower also called on the House to remove an anti-segregation amentment which has blocked action on a bill to strengthen our military reserves. Mr. Eisenhower says the bill is vital.."more essential than ever for our security". The anti-segregation amendment would bar the enlistment of men in any National Guard or reserve unit that practises racial segregation.

The President again complimented Welfare Secretary Hobby on her policy of "caution and safety" in connection with the anti-polio vaccine. And he told reporters "there was a little something lacking" in early tests of the vaccine made by drug firms.

But later in the day, the Senate shouted its approval of a one dollar an hour minimum wage..25 cents more than the present minimum.

The Atomic Energy Commission, with the President's approval, says it is going to step-up its production of nuclear weapons to add to "a wide variety" of stockpiled arms. The commission wants another 271-million dollars for atomic weapons in the new fiscal year. And it has requested another 134 million to develop atomic power plants for aircraft, navy surface vessels and peacetime power plants.

Foreign Aid Chief Stassen told a House committee that we should continue "a moderate, limited program" of economic assistance to Yugoslavia. He said Marshal Tito's country "remains firmly independent of the Cominform. The Amdinistration has asked for forty and a half million dollars for Tito..aside from military aid.

Some 58-thousand C.I.O. auto workers remained away from their jobs today. About13thousand were engaged in unouthorized stoppages at Ford plants. And 45-thousand General Motors employees were on wildcat strikes. Union President Reuther called on the men to go back to work. He said they were sabotiging "national negotiations" with General Motors. The Ford contract was signed today.

The Air Force today filed court martial charges against Captain Raymond Wool, former procurement official. He's denied accepting a 50-thousand dollar bribe from a Chicago navy hat maker. The hat maker, Harry Lev, told a Senate committee today he sent 576 pounds of a very special smoked sturgeon to 38 military and civilian officials. But he said these were not gifts. As he explained it: "In my mind, a gift is something a person wears."

Democratic Senator Lehman charged today that the President "belatedly" asked for changes in the Refugee Relief Act after the firing of Edward Corsi focused attention on the program's failure.

In London today, Queen Elizabeth designated Roger Bannister, the first man to run the mile in less than four minutes, and Actor Alec Guinness to be commanders in the Order of the British Empire.

Striking British railroad men and officials of the National Railway had their first meeting today and expressed "mutual confidence" in each other. The seamen's strike continues and steamship officials say more then 2-thousand Americans who had booked passage to Europe have had to change their plans

And the powerful "Voice of the Arab" radio today called on Arab nations to ceclare war on Israel and "teach hatred of Israel in our schools". British experts say the radio station is located outside of Cairo.

The Soviet note inviting Chancellor Adenauer to Moscow to normalize diplamatic and trade relations is not surprising. It had been anticipated. It came somawhat sooner than had been expected, which goes to show that the Soviet campaign to prevent the re-armament of Germany on the side of the West is in high gear. What deserves to attract more attention about the note than its timing is its contents. It starts with a cold-blooded misinterpretation of history, goes on to make a rather crass threat of total destruction, and contains the incredible statement that East Germany is free from Soviet interference.

The misinterpretation of history is in the paragraph that reads: "Historical experience teaches us that the preservation and consolidation of peace in Europe depends to a large extent on the existence of normal and good relations between the Soviet and German peoples." That might pass as a bland truism if it were not for the memory of what happened the very last time friendly relations were established between the two countries. It brought the non-aggression pact signed by Ribbentrop and the present Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov in 1939. Presumably Molotov drafted this paragraph. At any rate he approved of it. Yet, as well as anyone livin , he knows that the peace of Europe was not preserved and consolidated by that treaty, and that it freed Hitler's hands to launch what became the worst war of all times, and it was meant to produce that war.

The threat of destruction in the note was made in connection with the charge that plans are afoot in what it calls "certain aggressive circles" to set Germany and the Soviet Union in opposition to each other. "The bringing to fruition of these plans" it says, "would unescapably make Germany a battlefield and lead to its annihilation. Such a war on the territory of Germany, with modern weapons of mass destruction, " the note continues, "would be even more cruel and devastating than all the past wars. We must not allow events to develop along this path." This of course, is an undisguised warning to West Germany not to join the Western defense system.

The lie about the independence of East Germany is in the statement that relations with this territory "are developing" "on the firm basis of equality rights and non-interference into the internal affairs." aside from the fact that the Soviet army keeps greater forces in East Germany than all the other Eastern satellites combined, the present East German regime derives none of its powers from the people, was set up and is maintained in power by the Soviet government, and is generally recognized to be even less independent than other satellite governments.

However, it is significant that the note should state the contrary. For since the Khruschev-Bulganin mission of repentance to Belgrade, Soviet policy is on a new tack. The visit to Belgrade was a repudiation of the Cominform which had exommuunicated Tito. So the official demise of the Cominform is to be expected. One recalls how the Comintern was dismantled with a great fanfare when the Soviet Union became an ally in World War Two. Later its functions were publicly resumed by the Cominform. Now something new is being rigged up to take over the functions of the Cominform.

Walter Ulbricht, head of the puppet government of East Germany, coming back from the last Warsaw conference, told his followers that a new consultative political committee for common planning and action is to be set up for all Communist states from East Germany to China. He indicated that the days of Soviet domination of the sattelites were over, and that the Soviet Union was to be no more than first among equals. And that is precisely what the note to Bonn was saying. Some day soon, the new disguise may be introduced in which the Kremlin will continue to control Communist parties and their policies in foreign lands. But it hasn't been introduced yet, and the statement in the note about Soviet non-interference in East Germany reads like a joke.

The most persuasive feature in the note was its promise to increase trade with the Soviet Union. This naturally makes the proposed visit to Moscow quite tempting to German industrialists and labor. The note also mentions the importance of German unification, but without saying on what terms it could come about. It did not propose outright that Dr. Adenauer should come to Moscow to negotiate unification. The Kremlin knows that Dr. Adenauer is not at liberty to do that. Unification is a subject reserved by the three Western powers for their own direct negotiation with the Soviet Union. Dr. Adenauer is not even free to conclude a peace treaty. But he has no limitation on his right to establish diplomatic relations and extend trade.

The invitation aroused enormous interest in Western capitals. In Bonn itself the government responded to it cordially, as it had to do. It couldn't very well reject a gesture so ostentatiously friendly. Both Washington and London assumed that Bonn would accept the invitation, though the actual visit to Moscow is not expected before the Big Four meeting at the summit. Both captials expressed faith that Dr. Adenauer could be trusted to uphold his relations with the West. President Eisenhower gave him a specially hearty endorsement in his news conference.

The Russian note was clever and utterly cynical. But apparently it has been recognized in Western capitals as what it is.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Russians in their note to Germany mangled recent history. Cicero said a long time ago: "The first law is that the historian shall never dare to ~~set~~ down what is false; the second, that he shall never dare to conceal the truth; the third, that there shall be no suspicion in his work of either favoritism or prejudice."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday June 9, 1955.

This is the news:

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer is willing to talk about diplomatic relations with the leaders of the Soviet Union. But a government spokesman says: the meeting cannot be held for several weeks...it will not necessarily be in Moscow..and it must be preceeded by a low-level exchange of views to determine what the spokesman calls "appropriate circumstances."

The Russian press today is printing a great deal of MATERIAL on Moscow's invitation to Adenauer. Both Pravda and Izvestia devoted whole pages to the story and reports of foreign reaction, (even though India's Prime Minister Nehru is now visiting Moscow.) The Soviet radio, too, is expressing intense interest in what West Germany is going to do. (I'd like to discuss this story in a few minutes.)

Soviet Premier Bulganin says he hopes that Russia and India can "ease the tension " near Formosa. At a Kremlin dinner honoring Nehru the Indian prime minister said, among other things: He has sensed a strong desire and yearning for peace by the Russian people..there has been a decrease in world tension in the last few months, although suspicion lingers. Nehru thinks the Soviet Union has done much to lessen tensions. He TOLD THE RUSSIANS HE hopes "your hand stretched out for peace will be held by others."

Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov, in Paris on his way through to the United Nations meeting in San Frasisco, conferred today with French leaders. French Premier Faure says: the conversation was agreeable. He thinks the invitation to Adenauer to visit Moscow is the most recent evidence that the diplomatic thaw is continuing. Faure says Molotov indicated Russia is willing to hold the Big Four meeting at Geneva on July 18th.

In London, British Prime Minister Eden says he hopes this meeting will be "only the first of a series." Eden reported "a definite improvement in the international situation" to his Parliament.

And Queen Elizabeth, opening the Parliament, predicted "fruitful negotistions" with Russia. AND She pledged that Britain will work for peace in Formosa.

Labor Leader Atlee today accused Prime Minister Eden of mishandling the British railroad strike. He charged that Eden had "put forward a new doctrine" in saying no negotiations can take place, until the strikers return to work. Eden denied the charge..pointed out that discussions with the strikers are in progress right now.

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles has appointed Pierce J. Gerety, to be in charge of the refugee program. Gerety is a 41-year-old Connecticut lawyer...general counsel of the Civil Service Commission..,and formerly headed a board that looked into loyalty cases among Americans working for the United Nations. The President has told Gerety to "make the reufugee program succeed." Gerety will work under Scott McCloud, the state department's security chief. But he'll be completely responsible for the refugee program.

General Motors said today, that it will close twenty plants across the country tomorrow..leaving 60-thousand workers without jobs. G.M. says this is necessary because of a shortage of parts, resulting from wildcat strikes by members of the Auto Workers union, who have been protesting a delay in G.M. contract negotiations.

The government has ordered a drastic shake-up and expansion, of the group that has been handling the Salk anti-polio vaccine. A special division is being set up to check the safety of the shots.

Democratic Representative Powell of New York says he will not retreat "one inch" from his anti-segregation amendment to the [redacted] administration's military reserves bill. The President yesterday called the amendment "extraneous." But Powell says he's going to offer a similar anti-segregation amendment to a school construction bill if it comes before the House.

Harry Lev, a wealthy Chicago cap maker, today refused to return to the government 30-thousand dollars he is supposed to have made by packaging uniform hats two to a box, instead of one to a box.

A Senate committee today heard Financier Robert R. Young describe what he called "the cleverest deal in my financial history." It concerned the way two texans, Clinton Murchison and Sid Richardson, bought 800-thousand shares of New York Central stock for 20-million dollars. Senator Lehman said the two men did not put up any of their own money. Young insisted they actually risked the full 20-million.

Sherman Adams, assistant to the President, said today that the Administration "will never involve American youth in a futile and avoidable conflict." But--he said "we resolutely continue to reject policies ~~mar~~ both of weakeness and vaccilation."

Edward R. Murrow: June 9, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The first reaction to the invitation of Chancellor Adenauer to come to Moscow was to recognize that the Kremlin was timing its hand very cleverly. Today a second reaction can be reported. It is that the invitation, whatever else it means, is a victory for Dr. Adenauer. This reaction is to be noted - for quite different reasons - both in Bonn and in Paris. In Paris it produced a hasty and unexpected official reception for Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov. He was passing through Paris on his way to the United Nations anniversary in San Francisco. He was spending the night there and nobody thought of his presence as an opportunity to transact important diplomatic business. Then came the news of the Soviet note to Bonn. As quick as a flash, the French Foreign Office went into action to improvise an official luncheon for this noon, so that Premier Faure and Foreign Minister Pinay could talk with the visitor. What the French had long feared had come to pass, so David Schoenbrun reported from Paris. A sovereign Germany, free to re-arm, was emerging as the dominant continental power, and it had become imperative for the French to find a new foreign policy. This deeply pessimistic opinion wasn't being proclaimed in public, but it accounted for the luncheon with Molotov, and the perceptive Soviet diplomat no doubt recognized the fact.

In Bonn, the first response to the note had been one of extreme caution, since anyone could see that the Kremlin was trying to lure Germany away from its new Western ties. The second response was to see why it was happening. It was pretty generally recognized that it came about because Dr. Adenauer had been able to carry through his policy of integration with the West. Dick Hottelet cables from Bonn that for years the opposition in West Germany had been fighting the tie-in with the West, arguing, as Moscow argued, that once the Paris accords were ratified there would be no more talk of unification. But now, just because the accords are ratified, Germany has received this invitation, with mention of unification and an offer of trade, and received it months earlier than anyone had expected. So now the Germans generally are saying that not only was Dr. Adenauer right, but his line of loyalty to the West must be held, since that might produce greater Soviet concessions.

But if the Germans feel their power is rising, they still appreciate that they need to be careful. They must avoid the slightest hint that they would make a separate deal with Moscow. They must not recognize the East German regime, and they must make it clear that in receiving Soviet recognition they are not accepting their present boundaries as final. That is, the ties with the West must remain, but the way to future concessions must be left open. So Dr. Adenauer is moving with gingerly care. There are to be preliminary contacts with the Russians, which will not even start till after ~~his~~ Adenauer's visit to Washington. Only when a limited and acceptable agenda is arranged will he go to Moscow. But he will then go quite gladly. He has repeatedly said he looked forward to normal diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union. When he gets them, he will have put one more silver cup on his shelf.

But it is not only Germany's strategic position that is good. The Kremlin has great strategic advantages, and they consist of more than being able to time moves nicely. It is a position of strength to be able to make a separate approach to any state from which something is wanted. The West, for its part, has to remain a chorus. Its governments do not dare to move singly, for that would wreck the unity on which ultimate success depends. But the Kremlin could go after Austria (by inviting another Chancellor to Moscow), then woo Jugoslavia, open negotiations with Japan, and now prepare for separate talks with West Germany. Nor is the Kremlin alone in using this method. Chou En-lai at Bandung personally saw delegation after delegation and offered each one separately some desired benefit. That is the way to keep the initiative. It is a way the Western foreign offices are unable to use.

One more theory about the Moscow invitation to Bonn should be mentioned. It is that it indicates a readiness to do business with the Bonn government apart from East Germany; in other words, the Soviet Union will not insist on a fusion of the two Germanys before making concessions. That is in line with the belief that Moscow is planning for a German confederation, as distinct from a federation like the United States, and that it will ultimately negotiate unification only on this basis. That would leave East Germany intact as a member, and so assure the Communists a foothold in a united Germany. This, of course, is precisely what Dr. Adenauer is committed to resist.

So it would seem that unification is a long way off. And if this is to be the way the cold war is to end, its place would be taken by something just about as unsettling, an unmakeable peace.

Despatches from world capitals make it clear that there's a lot of negotiating and conferring ahead. And history gives much support to what Lord Chesterfield once said: "A man of sense may be in haste, but can never be in a hurry, because he knows that whatever he does in a hurry he must necessarily do very ill." And Aaron Burr counselled: "Move slowly; never negotiate in a hurry."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer is willing to talk about diplomatic relations with the leaders of the Soviet Union. But a government spokesman says: the meeting cannot be held for several weeks..it will not necessarily be in Moscow. And it must be preceded by a low-level exchange of views to determine what the spokesman calls "appropriate circumstances."

The Russian press today is printing a great deal of material on Moscow's invitation to Adenauer. Both Pravda and Izvestia devoted whole pages to the story and reports of foreign reaction (even though India's Prime Minister Nehru is now visiting Moscow.) The Soviet radio, too, is expressing intense interest in what West Germany is going to do. (I'd like to discuss this story in a few minutes.)

Soviet Premier Bulganin says he hopes that Russia and India can "ease the tension" near Formosa. At a Kremlin dinner honoring Nehru the Indian Prime Minister said, among other things: he has sensed a strong desire and yearning for peace by the Russian people..there has been a decrease in world tension in the last few months, althoughsuspicion lingers. Nehru thinks the Soviet Union has done much to lessen tensions. He told the Russians he hopes "your hand stretched out for peace will be held by others."

Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov, in Paris on his was through to the United Nations meeting in San Francisco, conferred today with French leaders. French Premier Faure says: the conversation was agreeable. He thinks the invitation to Adenauer to visit Moscow is the most recent evidence that the diplomatic thaw is continuing. Faure says Molotvv indicated Russia is willing to hold the Big Four meeting at Geneva on July 18th.

In London, British Prime Minister Eden says he hopes this meeting will be "only the first of a series." Eden reported "a definite improvement in the international situation" to his Parliament.

And Queen Elizabeth, opening the Parliament, predicted "fruitful negotiations" with Russia and she pledged that Britain will work for peace in Formosa.

Labor Leader Atlee today accused Prime Minister Eden of mishandling the British railroad strike. He charged that Eden had "Put forward a new doctrine" in saying no negotiations can take place until the strikers return to work. Eden denied the charge..pointed out that disucssions with the strikers are in progress right now.

In Washington, Secretary of State Dulles has appointed Pierce J. Gerety to be in charge of the refugee program. Gerety is a 41-year-old Connecticut lawyer..general counsel for the Civil Service Commission, and formerly headed a board that looked into loyalty cases among Americans working for the United Nations. The President has told Gerety to "make the refugee program succeed." Gerety will work under Scott McCleod, the state department's security chief. But he'll be completely responsible for the refugee program.

General Motors said today that it will close twenty plants across the country tomorrow..leaving 60-thousand workers without jobs. G.M. says this is necessary because of a shortage of parts resulting from wildcat strikes by members of the Auto Workers Union who have been protesting a delay in G.M. contract negotiations.

The Government has ordered a drastic shake-up and expansion of the group that has been handling the Salk anti-polio vaccine. A special division is being set up to check the safety of the shots.

Democratic Representative Powell of New York says he will not retreat "one inch" from his anti-segregation amendment to the administration's military reserves bill. The President yesterday called the amendment "extraneous". But Powell says he's going to offer a similar anti-segregation amendment to a school construction bill it it comes before the House.

Harry Lev, a wealthy Chicago cap maker, today refused to return to the government 30-thousand dollars he is supposed to mave made by packaging uniform hats two to a box, instead of one to a box.

A Senate committee today heard Financier Robert R. Young describe what he called "the cleverest deal in my financial history." It concerned the way two Texans, Clinton Murchison and Sid Richardson, bought 800-thousand shares of New York Central stock for 20-million dollars. Senator Lehman said the two men did not put up any of their own monyy. Young insisted they actually risked the full 20-million.

Sherman Adams, assistant to the President, said today that the Administration "will involve American youth in a futile and avoidable conflict." But--he said "we resolutely continue to reject policies both of weakness and vaccilation."

The first reaction to the invitation of Chancellor Adenauer to come to Moscow was to recognize that the Kremlin was timing its hand very cleverly. Today a second reaction can be reported. It is that the invitation, whatever else it means, is a victory for Dr. Adenauer. This reaction is to be noted-for quite different reasons - both in Bonn and Paris. In Paris it produced a hasty and unexpected official reception for Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov. He was passing thorugh Paris on his way to the United Nations anniversary in San Francisco. He was spending the night there and nobody thought of his presence an as opportunity to transact important diplomatic business. Then came the news of the Soviet note to Bonn. As quick as a flash, the French Foreign Office went into action to improvise an official luncheon for this noon, so that Premier Faure and Foreign Minister Pinay could talk with the visitor. That the French had long feared had come to pass, so David Schoenbrun reported from Paris. A Soverign Germany, free to re-arm, was emerging as the dominant continental power, and it had become imperatvie for the French to find a new foreign policy. This deeply pessimistic opinion wasn't being proclaimed in public, but it accounted for the luncheon with Molotov, and the perspective Soviet diplomat no doubt recognized the fact.

In Bonn, the first response to the note had been one of extreme caution, since anyone could see that the Kremlin was trying to lure Germany away from its new Western ties. The second response was to see why it was happening. It was pretty generally recognized that it came about because Dr. Adenauer had been fighting the tie-in with the West, arguing, as Moscow argues, that once the Paris accords were ratified, there would be no more talk of unification. But now, just because the accords are ratified, Germany has received this invitation, with mentions of unification and an offer of trade, and recieved it months earlier than anyone had expected. So now the Germans generally are sayint that not only was Dr. Adenauer right, but his line of loyalty to the must be held, since that might produce greater Soviet concessions.

But if the Germans feel their power is rising, they still appreciate that they need to be careful. They must avoid the slightest hint that they would makd a separate deal with Moscow. They must not recognize the East Germas. regime, and they must make it clear that in receiving Soviet recognition, they are not accepting their present boundaries as final. That is, the ties with the West must remain, but the way to future concessions must be left open. So. Dr. Adenauer is moving with gingerly care. There are to be premiminary contacts with the Russians, which will not even start till after Anenauer's visit to Washintton. Only when a limited and acceptable agenda is arranged will he go to Moscow. But he will then go quite gladly. He has repeatedly said he looked forward to normal diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union. When he gets them, he will have to put one more silver cup on his shelf.

But it is not only Germany's strategic position that is good. The Kremlin has great strategic advantages, and they consist of more than being able to time moves nicely. It is a position of strength to be able to make a separate approach to any state from which something is wanted. The West, for its part, has to remain a chorus. Its governments do not dare to move singly, for that would wreck the unity on which ultimate success depends. But the Kremlin could go after Austria (by inviting another Chancellor to Moscow), then woo Jugoslavia, open negotiations with Japan, and now prepare for separate talks with West Germany. Nor is the Kremlin alone in using this method. Chou En-lai at Bandung personally saw delegation after delegation and offered each one separately some desired benefit. That is the way to keep the initiative. It is a way the Western foreign offices are unable to use.

One more theory about the Moscow invitation to Bonn should be mentioned. It is that it indicates a readiness to do business with the Bonn governmnnt apart from East Germany; in other words, the Soviet Union will not insist on a fusion of the two Germanys before making concessions. That is in line with the belief that Moscow is planning for a German confederation, as distinct from a federation like the United States, and it will ultimately negotiate unification only on this basis. That would leave East Germany intact as a member and so assure the Communists a foothold in a United Germany. This, of course, is precisely what Dr. Adenaure is committed to resist.

So it would seem that unification is a long way off. And if this is to be the way the cold war is to end, its place would be taken by something just about as unsettling, and unmakeable as peace.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Dispatches from world capitals make it clear that there's a lot of negotiating and conferring ahead. And history give such support to what Lord Chesteriield once said: "A man of sense may be in haste, but he can never be in a hurry, because he knows that whatever he does in a hurry he must necessarily do very ill." And Aaron Burr counselled: "Move slowly; never negotiate in a hurry."

Good night and good luck.

Friday June 10, 1955

This is the news:

Public health officials say six scientists are being assigned to keep a continuous on-the-spot check of all six manufacturers of the Salk anti-polio vaccine. And Surgeon General Sheele says there is "good reason to believe" that science will be able to use the theory behind the Salk vaccine to develop weapons against a number of other diseases..such as the common cold, influenza, virus pneumonia, [redacted] and measeles. Dr. Sheele refused to get into an argument with Basil O'Connor, head of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

2..

[redacted]

[redacted],

O'CONNOR says there's more to be told "of what actually has been transpiring" in the polio vaccine situation. He issued a statement noting that he has not yet received a copy of the government report released this morning. But from press reports he concludes: "They do not indicate that the report throws any light on the Cutter situation, which has been the cause of any difficulties that have arisen." O'Connor calls this report "the Public Health Service version" and notes that the public has not yet heard Dr. Jonas Salk's version.

In the report, DOCTOR [redacted] Scheele says, among other things: the major blame FOR the breakdown in the mass program was the incompatibility of mass production methods with the original Salk formula. He says the answer on the Cutter vaccine is not yet available. At the same time Dr. Scheele again expressed confidence in the vaccine.

The President today signed a bill approving an average eight per cent pay increase for a half million postal workers. Postmaster General Summerfield says the raises will be paid in checks for the period beginning June 16th..the retroactive feature will be handed out on July 15.

The House appropriations committee today denied the President's request for six and a half million dollars for the Dixon-Yates project. Instead it allotted the money to a new power plant for the Tennessee Valley Authority.

David McDONALD, the president of the C.I.O. Steelworkers, is reported to have told union negotiators in Pittsrbugh that the Steel industry is expected to offer the union a seven and a half cents an hour wage increase. The union is asking for "a substantial increase." And McDonald is reported to have said the union will reject a seven and a half cents offer.

The Department of agriculture today set 1956 wheat price supports at $1.81 a bushel..the lowest dollar support level since 1946. And Democrats immediately accused Secretary of Agriculture Benson of trying to destroy the farm program.

Secretary of State Dulles today told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that we are ready to help Austria re-arm within the limits allowed by its new peace treaty. Under the treaty Austria is allowed to build as large AN army as she likes..but without atomic weapons or other weapons of mass destruction.

General Gruenther, commander of the North Atlantic Treaty forces, said in Washington today: the west is militarily strong enough "as of today" to defeat any possible Soviet aggression. He made it clear that he considers western superiority in long range airpower the decisive factor at the moment. He does not contend that we can win a war with airpower alone. General Grunther notes that the Russians are making a major effort to develop their airpower.

The State Department says the western big three foreign ministers will meet with West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer here in New York next Friday.

And West Germany's Upper House today balked at the first re-armament laws..and sent them back to the Lower House with a request for "clarification." Among other things the Upper House wants to know how the democratic rights of future soldiers will be protected.. and how Parliament is to be sure of controlling the military.

The Atomic Energy Commission today agreed to sell the Swiss government the first nuclear research reactor it has ever offered for sale to a foreign government.

And in Moscow, former premier Malenkov told western reporters the Soviet Union expects to have m large atomic power plants in operation within a year. Malenkov talked "informally" after an Indian embassy party honoring the visiting Prime Minister Nehru. And Communist Boss Krushev also talked "informally"..telling reporters "there are no points of discord" seperating India and Russia. ~~He added: "And there will be no such points." Last night Premier Bulganin called for an alliance with India and Red China to eliminate tension in the Formosa area.~~

5

A Chinese Nationalist news agency says the Chinese Communists have given the Russians permission to establish an advanced Soviet air base at Shanghai.

~~The British Transport Commission has made no progress in settling the railway strike. And striking dock workers say their strike is still going on.~~

Edward R. Murrow: June 10, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

As a person who does considerable flying in the course of his work, this reporter may have more than a normal interest in news of progress in civial aviation. This past week has been unusual for that kind of news, and it is news of developments that ultimately will affect everyone. The Douglas Aircraft Company announced that it will build a jet transport with a speed of 550 miles an hour, to be available to airlines in 1959. It will fly New York to Paris in six-and-a-half hours, New York to Los Angeles in four-and-a-half hours. And American Airlines announced that it had ordered 35 turbo-prop transports from Lockheed for delivery in 1958. Already Boeing has a transport similar to the new Douglas that has made a hundred test flights, and this jet transport, if government orders allow, will be available for commercial use in 1958.

What these announcements signify is that in about five years aviation will start the change-over to jet and turbo-propulsion, in what promises to be the greatest revolution since the introduction of the piston engine. And while this will touch only that part of the population that travels by air, it is going to affect everybody on the face of the earth in some way. For it will shrink still further the distances between nations, a fact that increases the compulsion to peace. And it also will shrink distances within countries, with untold benefits to those with inadequate internal communications, as in most of Asia, Africa and South America.

The new planes, whether straight jets or turbo-props, are going to be tremendously fast, but this speed isn't necessarily going to cost more. (It may even be cheaper.) The new Douglas jet is to be from fifteen to twenty percent both faster and more economical than the D.C.-7. A British Viscount, the pioneer turbo-prop, cruises at 320 miles an hour, and a pay load on its European routes is sixteen passengers. It is a comfortable plane, free of the vibrations from piston engines, and somewhat quieter. A turbo-prop is a true jet plane, in which the force of the jet passes through a turbine that turns the propellers. The power plant is much smaller and simpler than a piston engine, so the planes are both lighter and faster. The Viscount has a relatively small range, about fifteen hundred miles. The new Douglas jet will fly 6,200 miles under favorable conditions, while the turbo-props ordered by American Airlines will have a range of two thousand miles.

The word "turbo" is going to interest car owners as well as the flying public. The turbo-jet power plant for cars is far along toward practical and economical use. Ten years from now turbo-cars may well be in mass production, and a revolution will be beginning on the roads, similar to the one that is to start five years earlier in the skies. The intense competition of the motor industry may bring it even sooner.

Turbo cars won't do much to shrink world distances, and WONT have the social consequences of the new planes. The automobile has already had, and goes on having, its social impact, and the turbo principle won't add much to it. But cars should be lighter, roomier and more economical. An article in this week's Colliers tells how Chrysler, General Motors, Ford and Studebaker-Packard are feverishly and secretly developing the turbo-car. The turbine power unit in its present stage already is more economical at forty miles an hour than the piston engine, but it still costs too much at lower speeds. The advantages of the turbo-car will be the lighter engine, lower fuel costs, smoother riding without vibration, simpler driving mechanism, cheaper maintenance, and in the end, probably a cheaper car.

So both the aeroplane and the automobile are hurtling toward a revolution. However, that does not mean that piston-driven planes and cars are not to be improved. Douglas, which has the fastest passenger plane at 365 miles an hour - the D.C.-7 - is bringing out a D.C.7-C, with slightly slower speed but with a non-stop range of five thousand miles. This will be able to fly Los Angeles to Denmark, over the Arctic route, with only one stop in 19 hours, a trip now taking 24. Lockheed is putting out a successor to its "Super-Connie" that will carry 9,600 gallons of fuel, hop the Atlantic non-stop and develop a cruising speed of 350 miles an hour. The medium-size Convair, which has most to fear from competition with the British turbo-prop, is coming out with a plane that flies 300 miles an hour. All these new models are to be quieter and more comfortable than their predecessors.

Two turbo-props already are flying out of New York on the Trans-Canadian Airlines. They make all told five flights a day to Toronto. Capitol Airlines startled the American aviation industry when it went to England to buy sixty turbo-props. These Viscounts go into service in August. Other companies have plans to acquire turbo-props. Thus Eastern has announced it will buy one hundred when it can get the kind of plane it needs, and it expects to take first delivery in 1958.

So man's desire to get to places in a hurry is being served with astonishing enterprise. What we - or anyone - will do with all the time that is to be saved is not for the turbo-makers to say. That calls for a different kind of enterprise and a still greater talent, than is to be found in the department of jets and turbo-props.

The scientists and engineers who are designing and developing these new aircraft and automobiles, are proceeding on the premise so ably stated by Francis Bacon, who said: "If a man will begin with certainties, he will end with doubts. But if he will be content to begin with doubts, he shall end in certainty."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

As a person who does considerable flying in the course of his work, this reporter may have more than a normal interest in news of progress in civil aviation. This past week has been unusual for that kind of news, and it is news of developments that ultimately will affect everyone. The Douglas Aircraft Company announced that it will build a jet transport with a speed of 550 miles an hour, to be avilable to airlines in 1959. It will fly NewYork to Paris in 6½ hours, Newyork to LosAngeles in 4½ hours. And American Airlines announced that it had ordered 35 turbo-prop transports from Lockheeds for delivery in 1958. Already Boeing has a transport similar to the new Douglas that has made a hundred test flights, and the jet transport, if government orders allow, will be available for commercial use in 1958.

¶ What these announcements signify is that in about five years aviation will start the changeover to jet and turbo-prop propulsion, in what promises to be the greatest revolution since the introduction of the piston engine. And while this will touch only that part of the population that travels by air, it is going to affect everybody on the face of the earth in some way. For it will shrink still further the distances between nations, a fact that increases the compulsion to peace. And it also will shrink distances within countries, with untold benefits to those with inadequate internal communications, as in most of Asia, Africa and South America.

The new planes, whether straight jets or turboprops, are going to be tremendo. fast, but this speed isn't necessarily going to cost more. It may even be cheaper. The new Douglas jet is to be from 15 to 20 percent both faster and more economical than the DC 7. A British Viscount, the pioneer turbo-prop cruises at 320 miles an hour, and a pay load on its European routes is sixteen passengers. It is a comfortable plane, free of the vibrations from piston engines, and somewhat quieter. A turbo-prop is a true jet plane, in which the force of the jet passes through a turbine that turns the propellers. The power plant is much smaller and simpler than a piston engine, so the planes are both lighter and faster. The Viscount has a relatively small range, about 1,500 miles. The new Douglas jet will fly 6,200 miles under favorable conditions, while the turboprops ordered by American Airlines will have a range of 2,000 miles.

The word "turbo" is not going to interest car owners as well as the flying public. ~~It is a word of the future for car owners too.~~ The turbo-jet power plant for cars is far along toward preactical and economical use. Ten years from now turbo-cars may well be in mass production, and a revolution will be beginning ~~on the roads~~ similar to the one that ~~started~~ started five years earlier ~~before~~ in the skies. The intense competition of the motor industry may bring it even sooner. Turbo cars won't do much to shrink world distances and so have the social consequences of the new planes. The automobile has already had and goes on having its social impact, and the turbo principle won't add much to it. But ~~the~~ cars should be lighter, roomier and more economical. An article in this week's Colliers tells how ~~the~~ Chrysler, General Motors, Ford and Studebaker-Packard all are feverishly and secretly developing the turbo-car. The turbine power unit ~~already~~ in its present stage is more economical at 40 miles an hour than the piston engine, but it still costs too much at lower speeds. The advantages of the ~~turbine~~ turbo-car will be the lighter engine, lower fuel costs, smoother riding without vibration, simpler driving mechanism, cheaper maintenance, and in the end, probably a cheaper car.

¶ So both the aeroplane and the automobile are hurtling ~~headlong~~ toward a revolution. However, that does not mean that piston-driven planes and cars are not to be improved. Douglas, ~~that~~ which has the fastest passenger plane at 365 miles an hour, the DC 7, is bringing out a DC 7-C, with slightly slower speed but with a non-stop range of 5,000 miles, ~~as great as the British Comet.~~ This will be able to fly Los Angeles to Denmark, over the Arctic route, with only one stop in 19 hours, a trip now taking 24. Lockheed is putting out a successor to its "Super-Connie" that will carry 9,600 gallons of fuel, hop the Atlantic non-stop and develop a cruising speed of 350 miles an hour. The medium-size Convair, which has most to fear from competition with the British turboprop, is coming out with a plane that flies 300 miles an hour. All these new models are to be quieter and more comfortable than their predecessors.

¶ Two turboprops already are flying out of New York on the Trans-Canadian Airlines. They make all told five flights a day to Toronto. Capitol Airlines startled the American aviation industry when it went to England to buy sixty turbo-props. These Viscounts gointo service in August. ~~They are well adaped to the shorter runs and special requirements of this line.~~ Other companies have plans to acquire turboprops. Thus Eastern has announced it will buy onehundred when it can get the kind of plane it needs and it expects to take first delivery in 1958.

¶ So man's desire to get to places in a hurry is being served with astonishing enterprise. ~~Ame[illegible]~~

~~they did not originate the jet revolution, which is owed more to the Germans and British. But everyone can enjoy its fruits.~~ (Americans more than others may) What we--or anyone--will do with all the time that will be saved is not for the turbo-makers to say. That calls for a different kind of enterprise and a still greater talent than is to be found in the department of jets and turboprops.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 10, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Public Health officials say six scientists are being assigned to keep a continuous on-the-spot check of all six manufacturers of the Salk anti-polio vaccine. And Surgeon General Scheele says there is "good reason to believe" that science will be able to use the theory behind the Salk vaccine to develope weapons against a number of other diseases..such as the common cold, influenza, virus pneumonia, and measels. Dr. Scheele refused to get into an argument with Basil O'Connor, head of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. O'Connor says there's more to be told "of what actually has been transpiring" in the polio vaccine situation. He issued a statement noting that he has not yet received a copy of the government report released this morning. But from press reports he concludes: "They do not indicate that the report throws any light on the Cutter situation, which has been the cause of any difficulties that have arisen." O'Connor calls this report "the Public Health Servise version." and notes that the public has not yet heard Dr. Dr. Jonas Salk's version.

In the report, Doctor Scheele says, among other things: the major blame for the breakdown in the mass program was the incompatibility of mass production methods with the original Salk formula. He says the answer on the Cutter vaccine is not yet available. At the same time Dr. Scheele again axpressed confidence in the vaccine.

The President today signed a bill approving an average eight per cent pay increase for a half million postal workers. Postmaster General Summerfield says the raises will be paid in checks for the period beginning June 16th.. the retroactive feature will he handed out on July 15.

The House apporpriations committee today denied the President's request for six and a half million dollars for the Dixon-Yates project. Instead it allotted the money to a new power plant for the Tennessee Valley Authority.

David McDonald, the president of the C.I.O. Steelworkers, is reported to have told union negotiators in Pittsburgh, that the Steel industry is expected to offer the union a seven and a half cents an hour wage increase. The union is asking for "a substantial increase." And McDonald is reported to have said the union will reject a seven and a half cents offer.

The Department of agriculture today set 1956 wheat price supports at $1.81 a bushel..the lowest dollar support level since 1946. And democrats immediately accused Secretary of Agriculture Benson of trying to destroy the farm program.

Secretary of State Dulles today told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that we are ready to help Austria re-arm within the limits allowed by its new peace treaty. Under the treaty Austria is allowed to build as large an army as she likes ..but without atomic weapons or other weapons of mass destruction.

General Gruenther, commander of the North Atlantic Treaty forces, said in Washington today: the west is militarily strong enough "as of today" to defeat any possible Soviet aggression. He made it clear that he considers western superiority in long range air power alone. General Gruenther notes that the Russians are making a major effort to develop their airpower.

The State Department says the western big three foreign ministers will meet with West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer here in New York next Friday.

And West Germany's Upper House today balked at the first re-armament laws ...and sent them back to the Lower House with a request for "clarification." Among other things the Upper House wants to know how the democratic rights of future soldiers will be protected..and how Parliament is to be sure of controlling the military.

The Atomic Energy Commission today agreed to sell the Swiss government the first nuclear research reactor it has ever offered for sale to a foreign government.

And in Moscow, former premier Malenkov told western reporters the Soviet Union expects to have a large atomic power plants in operation within a year. Malenkov talked "informally" after an Indian embassy party honoring the visiting Prime Minister Nehru. And Communist Boss Kruschev also talked "informally" telling reporters "there are no points of discord" separating India and Russia.

A Chinese Nationalist news agency says the Chinese Communists have given the Russians permission to establish an advanced Soviet air base at Shanghai.

As a person who does considerable flying in the course of his work, this reporter may have more than a normal interest in news of progress in civil aviation. This past week has been unusual for that kind of news, and it is news of development that ultimately will affect everyone. The Douglas Aircraft Comany announced that it will build a jet transport with a speed of 550 miles an hour, to be available to airlines in 1959. It will fly New York to Paris in six-and-a-half hours, New York to Los Angeles, in four-and-a-half hours. And American Airlines announced that it had ordered 35 turbo-prop transports from Lockheed for delivery in 1958. Already Boeing has a transport similar to the new Douglas that has made a hundred test flights, and this jet transport, if government orders allow, will be available for commercial use in 1958.

What these announcements signify is that in about five years aviation will start the change-over to jet and turbo-propulsion, in what promises to be the greatest revolution since the introduction of the piston engine. And while this will touch only that part of the population that travels by air, it is going to affect everybody on the face of the earth in some way. For it will shrink still further the distances between nations, a fact that increases the compulsion to peace. And it also will shrink distances within countries, withuntold benefits to those with inadequate internal communications, as in most of Asia, Africa and South America.

The new planes, whether straight jets of turbo-props, are going to be tremendously fast, but this speed isn't necessarily going to cost more. (It may even be cheaper.) The New Douglas jet is to be from fifteen to twenty percent faster and more economical than the D.C.-7. A British Viscount the pioneer turbo-prop, cruises at 320 miles an hour, and a pay load on its European routes is sixteen passengers. It is a comfortable plane, free of the vibrations from piston engines, and somewhat quieter. A turbo-prop is a true jet plane, in which the force of the jet passes through a turbine that turns the propellers. The power plant is much smaller and simpler than a piston engine, so tha planes are both lighter and faster. The Viscount has a relatively small range, about fifteen hundred miles. The new Douglas jet will fly 6,200 miles under favorable conditions, while the turbo-props ordered by American Airlines will have a range of two thousand miles.

The word "turbo" is going to interest car owners as well as the flying public. The turbo-jet power plant for cars is far along toward practical and economical use. Ten years from now turbo-cars may well be in mass production, and a revolution will be beginning on the roads, similar to the one that is to start five years earlier in the skies. The intense competition of the motor industry may bring it even sooner.

Turbo cars won't do much to shrink the world distances, and won't have the social consequences of the new planes. The automobile has already had, and goes on having, its social impact, and the turbo principle won't add much to it. But cars should be lighter, roomier, and more economical. An article in this week's Colliers tells how Chrysler, General Motors, Ford and Studebaker-Packsrd are feverishly and secretly developing the turbo-car. The turbine power unit in its present state already is more economical at forty miles an hour then the piston engine, but it still costs too much at lower speeds. The advantages of the turbo-car will be the lighter engine, lower fuel costs, smoother riding without vibration, simpler driving mechanism, cheaper maintenance, and in the end, probably a cheaper car.

So both the aeroplane and the automobile are hurtling toward a revolution. However, that does not mean that piston-driven planes and cars are not to be improved. Douglas, which has the fastest passenger plane at 365 miles an hour - the D.C.7- is bringing out th D.C.7-C, with slightly slower speed but with a non-stop range of five thousand miles. This will be able to fly Lon Angeles to Denmark, over the Artic route, with only one stop, in 19 hours, a trip now taking 24. Lockheed is putting out a successor to its "Super - Connie" that will carry 9,600 gallons of fuel, hop the Atlantic non-stop and develop a cruising speed of 350 miles an hour. The medium -size Convair, which has most to fear from competition with the British turbo-- prop is coming out with a plane that flies 300 miles an hour. All these new models are to be quieter and more comfortable than their predecessors.

Two turbo-props already are flying out of New York on the Trans-Canadian Airlines. They make all told five flights a day to Toronto. Capitol Airlines startled the American aviation industry when it went ot England to buy sixty turbo-props. These Viscounts go into service in August. Other companies have plans to acquire turbo-props. Thus Eastern has announced it will buy one hundred when it can get the kind of plane it needs, and it expects to take first delivery in 1958.

So man's desire to get to places in a hurry is being served with astonishing enterprises. What we-or anyone- will do with all the time that is to be saved is not for the turbo-makers to say. That calls for a different kind of enterprise and a still greater talent, than is to be found in the department of jets and turbo-props..

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The scientists and engineers who are designing and developing these new aircraft and automobiles, are proceeding on the premise so ably stated by Francis Bacon, who said: "If a man will begin w th certainties, he will end with doubts. But if he will be content to begin with doubts, he shall end in certainty."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday June 13, 1955

This is the news:

The Russians today formally agreed to the western proposal for a Big Four meeting in Geneva on July 18th. But in an official announcement and a news dispatch in the government-controlled Tass agency they made it clear: they would like the meeting to run longer than the three or four days mentioned by the West..and they do not feel that the status of East European Communists or the role of international communism should be considered at the meeting. The Soviet view is that the meeting should be devoted to "lessen international tensions."

The Soviet press statement accused Secretary of State Dulles of trying to set conditions for the conference that would handicap "it." [redacted] AND THE RUSSIANS says if Mr. Dulles wants to discuss international Communism, the [redacted] might want to discuss International Capitalism.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer arrived in Washington today. He told reporters: "My countrymen are convinced that a close and loyal partnership with the peoples of the Free World is the best means of maintaining peace and freedom." He said the West Germans consider the recently ratified Atlantic Pact Alliance with the west as the best means of reunifying Germany in freedom.

Adlai Stevenson said today that at the forthcoming Big Four conference "our role is to keep our hopes high but our heads clear." He said we must honestly and dispassionately consider every suggestion. We should "look for the bases of agreement and be willing to take some reasonable chances." He added: "To want peace is to want compromise." [redacted]

In Detroit today, General Motors and the C.I.O. auto workers agreed on a contract parallelling the one the union won from Ford last week. It includes the same guaranteed wage plan and improvements in pay, pensions, vacations and holiday. [redacted] A similar contract was given to the International Union of Electrical Workers for its 35-thousand GM employes. [redacted]

Dr. Jonas E. Salk INDICATED today that the government may have been responsible for some of the troubles with his anti-polio vaccine. He said this was because the government's original standards were not precise enough. He feels the revised standards "will preclude deviation from the procedures originally intended."

~~The Democratic Digest, a party publication, accuses the government of "mismanagement" in the polio program..calls it a muddle..and says its another symptom of the slowdown extended all along the line in the Welfare department.~~

The Joint Congressional Atomic Energy Committee today approved the President's plan to help free nations build atomic research reactors. But the committee rejected his proposal to build an atomic powered ship and send it around the world. Chairman Holfield, California Democrat, told reporters: "We deleted the showboat."

The Senate armed services committee has tentatively approved a four-year extension of the draft. ~~No final action was taken because of the battle over the Presidential reserve bill, but it looks like the House over the segregation issue.~~

Admiral Radford, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, told a House committee today: by helping the free world to arm we are able to reduce our own active military manpower..and still maintain balanced forces on a global scale. The Admiral said the foreign military aid program is not a give-away but "an essential and realistic" act of self-interest...recognizing that no county alone can match the Communist bloc in manpower.

General Ridgeway, who retires as army chief of staff at the end of this month, has been named chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research.

Democratic party leaders today formally recommended that their 1956 national convention abandon the controversial "loyalty oath." It was this oath that started the North-south party split in 1952.

A Senate elections committee has approved a bill that would set a ceiling of about 12-million dollars on campaign spending on behalf of a presidential nominee. All candidates would be personally responsible for almost all spending on their behalf. It would be a criminal offense to spend money for a candidate without his approval.

The Hoover Commission has called on the President to enforce reforms in what it calls "wasteful" property management practises of the government. The Commission says this is costing taxpayers money and diverting revenue from states and cities.

There was new street fighting in Beunos Aires today.. before the Metropolitan Cathedral where 23 persons were injured in week-end rioting between supporters of the government and the Roman Catholic church. NO ONE WAS HURT.

In singapore, 15-thousand workers stayed away from their jobs in a Communist-backed strike. And the British government had no progress to report on the 16-day railroad strike in Great Britain.

The United Nations Mixed armistice commission today found Egypt guilty of a "flagrant violation" of the armistice agreement..attacking an Isreali truck southeast of Gaza.

Edward R. Murrow: June 13, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

With the arrival of Chancellor Adenauer in Washington today, diplomacy opened its most important term of activity since the war. To put the schedule consecutively, Dr. Adenauer's arrival will be followed almost at once by that of Krishna Menon, special representative of India's Prime Minister Nehru. That means talks at the White House and State Department on his recent visit to Peiping, and the problem of negotiating with Communist China. Then comes a meeting of the Big Three foreign ministers in New York, later in the week, with Dr. Adenauer sitting in with Secretary Dulles, Mr. McMillan of Britain and Monsieur Pinay of France. This is in preparation for the meeting of the three Western ministers with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov in San Francisco next week. On that occasion, ~~the date and place of the conference at the summit will be settled. Presumably the date is July 18 and the place Geneva. Some important~~ an effort made will be to reach an agreement on the agenda for the "summit meeting."

But while these matters are occupying the Big Four foreign ministers at San Francisco, the anniversary of the United Nations will have brought together a great array of foreign ministers. Where so many powerful leaders are congregated, a great deal of diplomatic business can be begun. For example, Mr. Molotov is bringing with him several Far Eastern experts. It is just possible that he may want their advice on including the Far East on the agenda for the meeting at the summit. But it is far more likely that they are being brought along to establish contacts at San Francisco with visiting ministers from the Far East. It may be that the Kremlin sees in San Francisco the chance to draw even with Communist China, after Chou En-lai's remarkable successes in separate meetings with so many foreign ministers at Bandung. XXX

As to the meeting at the summit, outright failure now hardly seems possible. For the Big Four hardly would meet simply to declare bankruptcy. So the news will be how much possibility of agreement is seen for negotiations that will follow at the foreign minister level and even lower. The top men will decide little more than the direction and the scope of the negotiations.

As a preparation for a preparation, the Western Powers have been holding meetings in Washington at the level just below the foreign ministers. They have made an appraisal of Soviet policy for the benefit of the Foreign Ministers when they meet in New York. The British and French ambassadors sat down with top experts of the State Department and the National Security Council. The analysis is reported to have shown a prevailing belief that the prime objectives of Soviet policy continue to be to divide the West, detach smaller countries from Western leadership, and get American military forces withdrawn from Europe and from forward bases.

To quote an adage by Dr. Adenauer: "The Russians only change their policy when it no longer is meeting with success." That is to say that the change of Kremlin policy is a new search for an unfound success; it is not a change of heart. But that is not to suggest that the Kremlin will not pay a price for the success. If it is going to win away adherents of the West it will have to make attractive offers. And in East Germany today the Communists show signs of alarm that they are to be the price paid for West Germany's detachment. Soviet spokesmen talked disparagingly about the puppet regime in East Germany to West German correspondents now visiting Moscow. One high Soviet official admitted that the Communists might be beaten in a genuinely free election in East Germany. Deputy Foreign Minister Semyenov told a West German correspondent that West Germany, with its 45,000,000 population, was very well situated to gain political ascendancy over East Germany, so long as it pursued a policy of peace. And the Soviet news organ in Berlin yesterday attacked sharply those who accuse the Soviet Union of wishing to maintain the partition of Germany, and went on to write hundreds of words on the coming Moscow-Bonn negotiations without even mentioning the East German regime.

The London Observer said yesterday that all recent Russian moves seem to suggest that their main proposals will aim at a mainly military ~~detente~~ stand still, at regional limitation of armaments, and a phased withdrawal of the forces of the big powers from the center of Europe. Other British sources predict that if an outright sacrifice of East Germany does not prove to be enough to buy the withdrawal of United States forces, the Kremlin might raise the ante. They suggest that Moscow might propose adding Czechoslovakia and Hungary to the proposed great neutral buffer area, comprising a united Germany and Jugoslavia. They would not let the two satellites desert to the West, but would envisage their enjoying the same status as Jugoslavia. That is, they would continue to be Communist, and the West would be assured of normal relations so long as their foreign offices were independent, like Tito's, and they could do business with the West like him. By such an offer the Kremlin would have to pull its own army out of these countries. Maybe Secretary Dulles had an inkling of such a possibility when he said we would raise the issue of the satellites at the summit.

The series of diplomatic conferences about to take place should serve to remind us all that in matters of international politics, anything can happen. Perhaps Alexander Pope had some good advice to offer when he said: "Blessed is he who expects nothing, for he shall never be disappointed." And in a more optimistic vein, Robert Louis Stevenson suggested: "To travel hopefully is a better thing than to arrive, and the true success is to labor."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 13, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Russians today formally agreed to the western proposal for a Big Four meeting in Geneva on July 18th. But in an official announcement and a news dispatch in the government-controlled Tass agency, they made it clear: they would like the meeting to run longer than the three or four days mentioned by the West and they do not feel that the status of East European Communists or the role of international Communism should be considered at the meeting. The Soviet view is that the meeting should be devoted to "lessen international tensions" .

The Soviet Press statement accused Secretary of State Dulles of trying to set conditions for the conference that would handicap it. And the Russians say if Mr. Dulles wants to discuss Cimmunism, they might discuss Capitalism.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer arrived in Washington today. He told reporters: "My countrymen are convinced that a close and loyal partnership with the peoples of the Free World is the best means of maintaining peace and freedom." He said the West Germans consider the recently ratified Atlantic Pact Alliance with the West as the best means of reunifying Germany in freedom.

Adlai Stevenson said today that at the forthcoming Big Four conference "our role is to keep our hopes high but our heads clear." He said we must honestly and dispassionately consider every suggestion. We should "look for the bases of agreement and be willing to take some reasonalbe chances." He added: To want peace is to want compromise."

In Detroit today, General Motors and the C.I.O. auto workers agreed on a contract parallelling the one the union won from Ford last week. It includes the same guaranteed wage plan and improvements in pay, pessions, vacations and holidays. A similar contract was given to the international Union of Electrical Workers for its 35 thousand GM emoloyees.

Dr. Jonas Salk indicated today that the government may have been responsible for some of the troubles with this anti-polio vaccine. He said this was because the government's original standards were not precise enough. He feels the revised standards "will preclude deviation from the procedures originally intended."

The joint Congressional Atomic Energy Committee today approved the President's plan to help free nations build atomic research reactors. But the committee rejected his proposal to build an atomic powered ship and send it around the world. Chariman Holfield, California Democrat, told reporters: "We deleted the showboat."

The Senate armed services committee has tentatively approved a four year extension of the draft

Admiral Radoford chairman of the joint cheifs of staff, told a House committee today: by helping the free world to arm we are able to reduce our own active military manpower and st ll maintain balanced forces on a global scale. The Admiral said the foreign military aid program is not a give-away but "an essential and realistic" act of self-interest..recognizing that no country alone can match the Communist bloc in manpower.

General Ridgeway, who retires as army chief of staff at the end of this month, had been named chairman of the board of Trustees of the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research.

Democratic party leaders today formally recommended that their 1956 national convention abandon the controversial "loyalty oath". It was this oath that started the North-South party split in 1952.

A Senate elections committee has approved a bill that would set a ceiling of about 12-million dollars an campaign spending on behalf of a presidential nominee. All candidates would be personally responsible for almost all spending on their behalf. It would be a criminal offense to spend money for a candidate without his approval.

The Hoover Commission has called on the President to enforce reforms in what it calls "wasteful property management practices of the government." The Commission says this is costing taxpayers money and diverting revenue from states and cities.

There was new street fighting in Buenos Aires today..before the Metropolitan Cathedral where 23 persons were injured in week-end rioting between supporters of the government and the Roman Catholic Church. No one was hurt.

In Singapore, 15-thousand workers stayed away from their jobs in a Communist-backed strike. And the British government has no progress to report on the 16-day railroad strike in Great Britain.

The United Nations mixed armistice commission today found Egypt guilty of a "flagrant violation" of the armistice agreement..attacking an Israeli truck southeast of Gaza.

With the arrival of the Chancellor Adenauer in Washington today, diplomacy opened its most important term of activity since the war. To put the schedule consecutively, Dr. Adenauer's arrival will be followed almost at once b that of Krishna Menon, special representative of India's Prime Minister Nehru. That means talks at the White House and State Department on his recent visit to Peiping, and the problem of negotiating with Communist China Then comes a meeting with the Big Three foreign ministers in New York, later in the week, with Dr. Adenauer sittin in with Secretary Dulles. Mr. McMillan of Britain and Monsiour Pinay of France. This is in preparation for the meeting of the three Western ministers with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov in San Francisco next week. On that occasion an effort will be made to reach an agreement on the agenda for the "summit meeting".

But while these matters are occupying the Big Four foreign ministers at San Francisco, the anniversary of the United Nations will have brought together a great array of foreign ministers. Where so many powerful leaders are congregated, a great deal of diplomatic business can be begun. For example, Mr. Molotov is bringing with him several Eastern experts. It is just possible that he may want their advice on including the Far East on the agenda for the meeting at the summit. But it is a far more likely that they are being brought along to establish contacts at San Francisco with visiting ministers from the Far East. It may be that the Kremlin sees in San Francisco the chance to draw even with Communist China, after Chou en-Lai's remarkable successes in separate meetings with so many foreign ministers at Bandung.

As to the meeting at the summit, outright failure now hardly seems possible. For the Big Four hardly would meet simply to declare bankruptcy. So the news will be how much possibility of agreement is seen for negotiations that will follow at the foreign minister level and even lower. The top men will decide little more than the direction and the scope of the negotiations.

As a preparation for a preparation, the Western Powers have been holding meetings in Washington at the level just below the foreign ministers. They have made an appraisal of Soviet policy for the benefit of the Foreign Ministers when they meet in New York. The British and French ambassadors sat down with top experts of the State Department and the National Security Council. The analysis is reported to have shown a prevailing belief that the prime objectives of Soviet policy continue to be to divide the West, detatch smaller countries from Western leadership, and get American military forces withdrawn from Europe and forward bases.

To quote an adage by Dr. Adenauer:"The Russians only change their policy when it no longer is meeting with success." That is to say that the change of Kremlin policy is a new search for an unfound success; it is not a change of heart. But that is not to suggest that the Kremlin will not pay a price for the success. It it is going to win away adherents of the West it will have to make attractive offers. And in East Germany today the Communists show signs of alarm that they are to be the price paid for West Germany's detachment. Soviet spokesmen talked disparagingly about the puppet regime in East Germany to West German correspondents now visiting Moscow. One high Soviet official admitted that the Communists might be beaten in a genuinely free election in East Germany. Deputy Foreign Minister Semyenov told a West German correspondent that the West Germany , with its 45,000,000 population, was very well situated to gain political ascendancy over East Germany, so long as it pursued a policy of peace. And the Soviet news organ in Berlin yesterday attacked sharply those who accuse the Soviet Union of wishing to maintain the partition of Germany, and went on to write hundreds of words on the coming Moscow-Bonn negotiations without even mentioning the East German regime.

The London Observer said yesterday that all recent Russian moves seem to suggest that their main proposals will aim at a mainly military stand still, at regional limitation of armaments, and a phased withdrawal of the forces of the big powers from the center of Europe. Other British sources predict that if an outright sacrifice of East Germany does not prove to be enough, to buy the withdrawal of the United States Forces, the Kremlin might raise the ante. They suggest that Moscow might propose adding Czechoslovakia and Hungary to the proposed great neautral buffer area, comprising a united Germany and Jugo lavia. They would not let the two satellites desert to the West, but would envisage their enjoying the same status as Jugoslavia . That is, they would continue to be Communist, and the West would be assured of normal relations so long as their Foreign offices were independent, like Tito's, and they could do business with the West like him. By such an offer the Kremlin wuld have to pull its own army out of these countries. Maybe Secretary Dulles had an inkling of such a possibility when he said we would raise the issue of the satellites at the summit.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The series of diplomatic conferences about to take place should serve to remind us all that in matters of international politics, anything can happen. Perhaps Alexander Pope had some good advice to offer when he said: "Blessed is he who expects nothing, for he shall never be disappointed." And in a more optimistic vein, Robert Louis Stevenson suggested:"To travel hopefully is a better bhing than to arrive, and the true success is to labor."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday, June 14, 1955

This is the news:

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer said today his country will honor her obligations to the free nations. West Germany will reject any Russian offer to turn a united Germany into a neutral nation in the cold war. #

As Adenauer put it to reporters in Washington: "The neutralization of Germany would in a relatively short time permit Soviet Russia to extend her power over all of western Europe." Earlier, the chancellor met with the President. The two leaders expressed their combined opinion that a neutrality role would never solve Germany's problems. Adenauer said later: the free world is about to enter a long period of negotiations with the Russians.. the free people must not become impatient, must show great discipline.

India's Krishna Mennon conferred today with the President and Vice President Nixon. He told reporters he feels Red China has opened the door for the release of eleven American flyers by releasing four flyers recently. And Mr. Nixon says Mennon is optomistic about the release of the eleven.. and a continued quiet in the Formosa area.

The Senate Foreign Relations committee has recommended ratification of the Austrian independence treaty.

And Secretary of State Dulles HAS told Representative Vorys of Ohio: a congressional move to have the United Nations brand Russia an aggressor, is not likely to succeed.. "and would be widely interpreted as an effort to prejudice" the Big Four meeting at Geneva.

A Senate committee today added 700-million dollars to a House-approved appropriation for the Air Force..."to assure us the most powerful air force in the world."

Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services committee said, after conferring with Defense Secretary Wilson, that it will not be possible to add a military reserve plan to the approved draft extension.

A House committee has recommended a flat seven and a half per cent pay increase for a million federal civil service workers. The Senate has approved a ten per cent increase.

The House has voted, 347 to 54, to extend the reciprocal trade act for three years.

The United States Court of Appeals in Washington today upheld a lower court's dismissal, of TWO COUNTS OF A perjury indictment against Owen Lattimore. The COURT split, four to four, upholding the action of District Judge Youngdahl. Lattimore was first indicted in 1952 and accused of being a Communist "sympathizer." Judge Youngdahl threw that charge out as "osbcure" and was upheldby the ~~appellate~~ APPEALS court. Then Lattimore was indicted, among other things, on charges of being a "promoter and follower" of Communism. It was these chages that were dismissed by ~~Hmmm~~ Youngdahl and upheld by the appals court today. The government must now decide whether to appeal to the Supreme Court or try Lattimore on five OTHER perjury charges that are outstanding against him from the 1952 indictment. At one point in this case United States Attorney Rover charged that Judge Youngdahl was biased and prejudiced in favor of Lattimore. The Judge called this charge scandalous.

A Senate committee today heard Clarence E. Clarke, a suspended employe of the Small Business Administration, charge that his former boss used the government's security program as an "escape hatch" to fire employes unjsutly. Clarke made the charge against George V. McDavitt. The Small Business Administration chief, Wendell Barnes, says Clarke's testimony is "unsupported"..that ~~hmm~~ Clarke didn't understand the security program or the ~~way~~ WAY it operates.

Democratic Senator Hill of Alabama today demanded that the government make a statement on the safety of the Salk anti-polio vaccince.

Surgeon General Scheele told the Senator: the vaccine "is a potent material as safe as we know how to make it." He said it is sound to use it for mass immunization even though the Public Health Service doesn't have the answer to all things abut the vaccine. During a Senate hearing on a bill to furnish free vaccine for children, Welfare Secretary Hobby said that Hill's plan to have the FEDERAL government furnish the free vaccine might lead to "socialized medicine by the back door." She said it assumes a lack of local ability or initiative to take advantage of our new public health advances. And in reference to the whole polio dispute, Mrs. Hobby said: "When the truth is known and people cease to play politics with polio, the Public Health Service will stand."

In Beunos Aires today, Argentina's General Confederation of Labor paralyzed the city with a general strike in support of President Peron's campaign against the Roman Catholic church. And the government ordered two Catholic bishops discharged from their jobs. Both were called for questioning before a federal jury. The bishops are accused of promoting disorders that involved supporters of the church and supporters of Peron. The government claims it can dismiss the bishops under a law which makes the Catholic Church the state religion of Argentina.

Great Britain's 17-day-old railroad strike ended today with the British Transport Commission promising to name an impartial referee to hear the strikers claims for higher pay.

Edward R. Murrow: June 14, 1955. 7:45 p.m.

When the Tass News Agency spells out what it calls "the really urgent problems of international affairs," it certain that the Kremlin ordered it to do so. It did this yesterday in connection with the note accepting Geneva and July 18 as place and date of the so-called meeting of the Big Four at the summit. Tass carried a long statement criticizing Secretary Dulles for what it called "diverting attention" from these really urgent problems, and then went on to specify them.

It named four: the reduction of national armaments, along with the prohibition of nuclear weapons; the establishment of a system of collective security in Europe; the safeguarding of peace and security in Asia and the Far East; and the restoration of the legitimate rights of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations." It then added an "et cetera", and it is striking that the whole of the German problem was relegated to the rank of an et cetera.

It is noteworthy that of four subjects specified, two are Asian and only two are European. The emphasis on Asia should make the activities in this country of the Indian emissary of Prime Minister Nehru, Mr. Krishna Menon, more understandable.

Mr. Krishna Menon was credited at the Bandung Conference with having done as much as anyone to persuade Communist China's premier Chou En-lai to offer to negotiate with the United States a settlement of the Formosa question. Later, at Chou's suggestion, he went to Peiping to advise on the problem, and after his return he announced the coming release of some of the imprisoned American airmen. Mr. Nehru was able before that announcement to inform President Eisenhower by cable that it was coming, and he received a cordial and grateful cable in reply from the President.

Persons close to Dag Hammerskjold, Secretary General of the United Nations, have been annoyed that India took, or was given, credit for the release of the airmen. He had worked for it much longer than Krishna Menon, and he was bringing pressure to bear on Peiping at the time of Menon's greatest activity.

Probably it needed the efforts of both to produce the result. Release of the airmen is formally a U.N. question, and since Peiping wants to win friends in the U.N. it would pay heed to Mr. Hammarskjold. But the Chinese Communists also like to work with India. At Bandung, they were ostentatiously moderate, largely through Indian influence, and it brought them an undeniable success. Moscow also recognizes that close relations with India go to create an appearance of moderation that can be exploited in marshalling public opinion during the tough negotiations to come. That would account for the unprecedented honors heaped on Mr. Nehru last week in Moscow. Under present circumstances both Moscow and Peiping are saying and doing things to please the Indians. Obviously they want the Indians in return to exert their influence to moderate Western demands. And presumably that is what Krishna Menon is attempting in Washington.

There are clearly two conflicting policies about when and how to deal with Communist China. The Kremlin wants to do it right away at Geneva. But it can't be done there unless there is a settlement in the Formosa Straits. Secretary Dulles, for his part, wants to wait. He said last week that he thought the best way to deal with the Formosa question was to do nothing about it for a while. He does want a cease-fire in the area, but he said that a de facto cease-fire already prevails. He noted that the danger of war had receded, partly due to the Bandung conference, and remarked that some ailments are best cured by not doing too much about them.

Chou En-lai also wants negotiations to get going, and impatiently is insisting on the United States getting out of Formosa, and on the island being what he calls "liberated". It may be a sign of his impatience that Communists in Singapore are now trying to disrupt Malaya with a general strike, just as ~~the settlement~~ Singapore gets started on its first enjoyment of self-government. It might be read as a hint that Red China can be menacing elsewhere than in Formosa.

But if Chou En-lai counts on getting Formosa soon as the result of a bargain at the summit, he is expecting more than the Kremlin. Judging by a remark of Premier Bulganin, ~~it~~ Russia has in view something much more moderate. In a toast to Mr. Nehru he said: "Let us hope that our joint efforts result in an easing of tension off the East coast of China near Formosa." He didn't mention Formosa, and seemed to be saying that a deal need only be made by which the coastal islands no longer can be centers of conflict.

Whatever Mr. Krishna Menon has been reporting in Washington today about Chou En-lai, it could almost be taken for granted that he was trying to promote a settlement by which the coastal islands no longer were used by Chiang Kai-shek, and for an early recognition of Peiping's right to represent the Chinese people in the U.N. For the Indian government has never made a secret of its sympathy for these particular aims of the communist regime.

In the continuing search for peace, statesmen could do worse than give some thought to these words by Henry Ward Beecher:"Men, he said, are often like knives with many blades; they know how to open one and only one; all the rest are buried in the handle, and they are no better than they would have been if they had been made with but one blade. Many men use but one or two faculties out of the score they are endowed with."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Swing 5, 30 June 24

When the Tass News Agency spells out what are "the really urgent problems of international affairs, one knows that the Kremlin ordered it to do so. It did this yesterday in connection with the note accepting Geneva and July 18 as place and date of the socalled meeting of the Big Four at the summit. Tass carried a long statement criticizing Secretary Dulles for what it called "diverting attention" from these really urgent problems, and then went on to specify them. It named four: the reduction of national armaments along with the prohibition of nuclear weapons; the establishment of a system of collective security in Europe; the safeguarding of peace and security in Asia and the Far East; and the restoration of the legitimate rights of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations." It then added an "et cetera", and it is striking that the whole of the German problem was relegated to the rank of an et cetera.

~~In connection with~~ the mention of a collective security system for Europe, it can be reported that the Western powers are themselves preparing a proposal for guaranteeing all European countries, communist and non-communist, against aggression. This project is now in the hands of a working group and the West may offer it at Geneva if the Soviet Union agrees to a phased and supervised disarmament program.

¶ It is noteworthy that of four subjects specified, two are Asian and only two are European. The emphasis on Asia should make the activities in this country of the Indian emissary of Prime Minister Nehru, Mr. Krishna Menon, more understandable.

¶ Mr. Krishna Menon was credited at the Bandung Conference with having done as much as anyone to persuade Communist China's premier Chou En-lai to offer to negotiate with the United States a settlement of the Formosa question. Later, at Chou's suggestion, he went to Peiping to advise on the problem, and after his return he announced the coming release of some of the imprisoned American airmen. Mr. Nehru was able before that announcement to inform President Eisenhower by cable that it was coming, and he received a cordial and grateful cable in reply from the President.

¶ Persons close to Dag Hammerskjold, Secretary General of the United Nations, have been annoyed that India took, or was given, credit for the release of the airmen. He had worked for it much longer than Krishna Menon, and he was bringing pressure to bear on Peiping at the time of Menon's greatest activity.

¶ Probably it needed the efforts of both to produce the result. Release of the airmen is formally a U.N. question, and since Peiping wants to win friends in the UN it would pay heed to Mr. Hammarskjold. But the Chinese Communists also like to work with India. At Bandung, they were ostentatiously moderate, largely through Indian influence, and it brought them an undeniable success. Moscow also recognizes that close relations with India goes to create an appearance ~~atmosphere~~ of moderation that ~~which~~ can be exploited in marshalling public opinion during ~~behind~~ the tough negotiations ~~now~~ to come. That would account for the unprecedented honors heaped on Mr. Nehru last week in Moscow. ~~Only a little while ago the Soviet press was calling Mr. Nehru a lackey of the West. But~~ Under present circumstances both Moscow and Peiping are saying and doing things to please the Indians. Obviously they want the Indians in return to exert their influence to moderate Western demands. And presumably that is what Krishna Menon is ~~doing~~ attempting in Washington.

There are clearly two conflicting policies about when and how to deal with Communist China. The Kremlin wants to do it right away at Geneva.

But it can't be done there unless there is a settlement first in the Formosa Straits. Secretary Dulles, for his part, wants to wait. He said last week that he thought the best way to deal with the Formosa question was to do nothing about it for awhile. He does want a cease-fire in the area, but he said that a defacto cease-fire already prevails. He noted that the danger of war had receded, partly due to the Bandung conference, and remarked that some ailments are best cured by not doing too much about them.

Chou En-lai also wants negotiations to get going, and impatiently is insisting on the United States getting out of Formosa, and on the island being what he calls "liberated." It may be a sign of his impatience that communists in Singapore are now tring to disrupt Malaya with a general strike, just as the Settlement gets started on its first enjoyment of self-government. It might be read as a hint that Red China can be menacing elsewhere than in Formosa.

But if Chou En-lai counts on getting Formosa soon as the result of a bargain at the summit, he is expecting more than the Kremlin. Judging by a remark of Premier Bulganin, it has in view something much more moderate. In a toast to Mr. Nehru he said: "Let us hope that our joint efforts result in an easing of tension off the East coast of China near Formosa." He didn't mention Formosa, and seemed to be saying that a deal ~~should~~ need only be made by which the coastal islands no longer ~~xxx~~ can be centers of conflict.

¶ Whatever Mr. Krishna Menon has been reporting in Washington today about Chou-En lai, it could almost be taken for granted that he was trying to ~~pushing for~~ promote a settlement by which the coastal islands no longer ~~could be~~ were used by Chiang Kai-shek, and for an early recognition of Communist China's right to represent the Chinese people in the UN. For the Indian government has never made a secret of its sympathy for these particular aims of the ~~Peiping~~ Communist regime.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 14, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer said today his country will honor her obligations to the free nations. West Germany will reject any Russian offer to turn a united Germany into a neautral nation in the cold war.

As Adenauer put it to reporters in Washington: "The neautralization of Germany would in a relatively short time permit Soviet Russia to extend her power over all of western Europe". Earlier, the chancellor met with the President. The two leaders expressed their combined opinion that a neautrality role would never solve Germany's problems. Adenauer said later: the free world is about to enter a long period of negotiations with the Russians...the free people must not become impatient, must show great discipline.

India's Krishna Menon conferred with the President, and Vice President Nixon. He told reporters he feels Red China has opened the door for the release of eleven American fluers by releasing four flyers recently. And Mr. Nixon says Mennon is optimistic about the release of the eleven..and a continued quiet in the Formosa area.

The Senate Foreign Relations committee has recommended ratification of the Austrian independence treaty.

And Secretary of State Dulles has told Representative Vorys of Ohio: a congressional move to have the United Nations brand Russia an aggressor is not likely to succeed.."and would be widely interpreted as an effert to prejudice" the Big Four meeting at Geneva.

A Senate committee today added 700-million dollars to a House approved appropriation for the Air Force.."to assure us the most powerful air force in the world."

Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services committee said after conferring with Defense Secretary Wilson that it will not be possible to add a military reserve plan to the approved draft extension.

A House committee has recommended a flat seven and a half per cent pay increase for a million federal civil service workers. The Senate has approved a ten per cent increase.

The House has voted, 347 to 54, to extend the reciprocal trade act for three years.

The United States Court of Appeals in Washington today upheld a lower court's dismissal of two counts of a perjury indictment against Owen Lattimore. The court split four to four, upholding the action of District Judge Youngdahl. Lattimore was first indicted in 1952 and accused of being a Communist "sympathizer." Judge Youngdahl threw that charge out as "obscure" and was upheld by the appeals court. Then Lattimore was indicted, among other things, on charges of being a "promoter and follower" of Communism. It was these charges that were dismissed by Youngdahl and upheld by the appeals court today. The government must not decide whether to appeal to the Supreme Court or try Lattimore on five other perjury charges that are outstanding against him from the 1952 indictment. At one point in this case United States Attorney Rover charged that Youngdahl was biased and prejudiced in favor of Lattimore. The Judge called this charge scandalous.

A Senate committee today heard Clarence E. Clarke, a suspended employee of the Small Business Administration, charge that his former boss used the government's security program as an "escape hatch" to fire employees unjustly. Clarke made the charge against George V. McDavitt. The Small Business Administration chief, Wendell Barnes, says Clarke's tesimmony is "unsupported" that Clarke didn't understand the security program or the way it operates.

Democratic Senator Hill of Alabama today demanded that the government make a statement on the safety of the Salk anti-polio vaccine. Surgeon General Scheele told the Senator: the vaccine "is a potent material as safe as we know how to make it." He said it is sound to use it for mass immunization. even though the Public Health Service doesn't have the answer to all things about the vaccine. During a Senate hearing on a bill to furnish free vaccine for children, Welfare Secretary Hobby said that Hill's plan to have the federal government furnish the free vaccine might lead to a "socialized medicine by the back door." She said it assumes a lack of local ability or initiative to take advantage of our new public health advances. And in reference to the whole polio dispute Mrs. Hobby said:"When the truth is known and people cease to play politics with polio the Public Health Service will stand.

In Buesnos Aires today, Argentina's General Confederation of Labor paralyzed the city with a federal strike in support of President Peron's campaign against the Roman Catholic Church. And the government ordered two Catholic bishops discharged from their jobs. Both were called for questioning before a federal jury. The bishops are accused of promoting disorders that involved supporters of the church and supporters of Peron. The government claims it can dismiss the bishops under a law which makes the Catholic Church the state religion of Argentina.

Great Britain's 17-day-old railroad strike ended today with the British Transport Commission promising to name an impartial referee to hear the strikers claims for higher pay.

Then the Tass News Agency spells out what it calls "the really urgent problems of international affairs.", it's certain that the Kremlin ordered it to do so. It did this yesterday in connection iith the note accepting Geneva and July 18 as place and date of the so-called meeting of the Big Four at the summit. Tass carried a long statement criticizing Secretary Dulles for what it called "diverting attention" from these really urgent problems, and then went on to specify them.

It named four: the reduction of national armaments, along with the prohibition of nuclear weapons; the establishment of a system of collective security in Europe; the safeguarding of peace and security in Asia, and the Far East; and the restoration of legitimate rights to the People's Republic of China in the United Nations." It then added an "et cetera", and it is striking that the whole of the German problem was relegated to the rank of an et cetera.

It is noteworthy that of four subjects specified, two are Asian and only two are European. The emphasis on Asia should make the activities in this country of the Indian emissary of Prime Minister Nehru, Mr. Krishna Menon, more understandable.

Mr. Krishna Menon was credited at the Bandung Conference with having as much as anyone to persuade Communist China's premier Chou en-lai to offer to negotiate with the United States as settlement of the Formosa question Later, at Chou's suggestion, he went to Peiping to advise on the problem, and after his return he announced the coming release of some of the imprisoned American airmen. Mr. Nehru was able before that announcement to inform President Eisenhower by cable that it was coming, and he received a cordial and grateful cable in reply from the President.

Persons close to Dag Hammerskjold, Secretary General of the United Nations, have been annoyed that India took, or was given, credit for the release of the airmen. He had worked for it much longer than Krishna Menon, and he was bringing pressure to bear on Peiping at the time of Menon's greatest activity.

Probably it needed the efforts of both to produce the result. Release of the airmen is formally a U.N. question, and since Peiping wants to win friends in the U.N., it would pay heed to Mr. Hammarskjold. But the Chinese Communists also like to work with India. At Bandung, they were ostentatiously moderate, largely through Indian influence, and it brought them an undeniable success. Moscow also recognizes that close relations with India go to create an appearance of moderation that can be exploited in marshalling public opinion during the tough negotiations to come. That would account for the unprecedented honors heaped on Mr. Nehru last week in Moscow. Under thesent circumstances both Moscow and Peiping are saying and doing things to please the Indians. Obviously they want the Indians in return to exert their influence to moderate Western demands. And presumably that is what Krishna Menon is attempting in Washington.

There are clearly two conflicting policies about when and how to deal with Communist China. The Kremlin wants to do it right away at Geneva. But it can't be done there unless there is a settlement in the Formosa Straits. Secretary Dulles, for his part, wants to wait. He said last week that he thought the best way to deal with the Formosa question was to do nothing about it for a while. He does want a cease-fire in the area, but he said that a de-facto cease-fire already prevails. He noted that the danger of war had receded, partly due to the Bandung conference, and remarked that some ailments are best cured by not doing too much about them.

Chou En Lai also wants negotiations to get going, and impatiently is insisting on the United States getting out of Formosa, and on the island being what he calls "liberated". It may be a sign of his impatience that Communists in Singapore are now trying to disrupt Malaya with a general strike, just as Singapore gets started on its first enjoyment of self government. It might be read as a hint that Red China can be menacing elsewhere than in Formosa.

But if Chou en Lai counts on getting Formosa soon as the result of a bargain at the summit, he is ecpecting more than the Kremlin. Judging by a remark of Premier Bulganin, Russia has in view something much more moderate In a toast to Mr. Nehru he sai :"Let us hope that our joint efforts result in an easing of tension off the East coast of China near Formosa." He didn't mention Formosa, and seemed to be saying that a deal need only be made by which the coastal islands no longer can be centers of conflict.

Whatever Mr. Krishna Menon has been reporting in Washington today about Chou en Lai , it could almost be taken for granted that he was trying to promote a settlement by which the coastal islands no longer were used by Chiang Kai-shek, and for an early recognition of Peiping's right to represent the Chinese people in the U.N. For the Indian government has never made a secret of its sympathy for these particular aims of the Communist regime.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In the continuing search for peace, statesmen could do worse than give some thought to these words by Henry Ward Beecher:"Men", he said, "are often like knives with many blades; they know how to open one and only one; all the rest are buried in the handle, and they are no better than they would have been if they had meen made with but one blade. Many men use but one or two faculties out of the score they are endowed with.

Good Night and Good Luck.

Wednesday, June 15, 1955

This is thenews:

Fifty-three American cities today participated in the biggest air raid test ever held. Theoretical plane dropped theoretical bombs on the big cities. And in Washington, although the Congress continued its business, 15-thousand officials scattered to secret places within a 300-mile radius. The President and about 30 of the highest government officials went to a secret "operations center." Mr. Eisenhower will remain there for three days and nights. Today, in a brief broadcast from this hide-away, the President explained that the whole purpose of the civil defense test is to make sure the government could go on without interruption in the event of a real emergency.

By coincidence, today's test came as Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov was visiting New York on his way to the United Nations meeting in San Fransisco. Molotov took occassion to offer greetings to all Americans "who are in favor of lasting peace." He visited the United Nations headquarters, dropped in at the Metropolitan Museum of Art and strolled along the Hudson River.

Before Mr. Eisenhower left Washington today he pledged our unrelenting co-operation in seeking permanent peace through the atom. We have signed agreements with Great Britain, Canada and Belgium on atomic research matters. And we agreed to exchange atomic information for mutual defense purposes with the British and Canadians.

I'd like to discuss our atomic and hydrogen bombs..and their power..in a few minutes.

Congress today approved and sent to the White House a compromise foreign trade bill..one of the key measures in the Administration's program. The bill extends the law for three years and gives the President new power to cut tarriffs.

Democratic Representative Cannon of Missouri charged today that the controversial Dixon-Yates power contract is part of an effort by private power companies to create a national power monopoly. Cannon says the private power companies have started a campaign to destroy the Tennessee Valley Authority...the Rural Electrification Administration... and municipal power systems. Republican Representative Phillipps says the Republicans are not trying to destroy T.V.A. but are "trying to help it grow up and stand on its own feet." And Republican Representative Hoffman of Michigan says residents of the Tennessee Valley are trying to get something for nothing.

The American Medical Association told Senators today that there is no emergency in the matter of making the Salk anti-polio vaccine available to children. And the A.M.A. went on record against the [redacted] plan sponsored by Democrats to pay for the innoculation of all youngsters through the age of 19.

Basil O'Connor of the National Association for Infantile Paralysis told the Senators the chief interest of his group is to : give the vaccine to as many children as possible and "thus prevent as much polio as possible with all its disastrous results."

The Federal Reserve Board reports that industrial production broke all records in May.. passing the previous peak set two years earlier. Durable goods production was "moderately below" the previous record but there was an unprecedented production of non-durable goods.

Federal Judge Bastian today fined former Republican Representative Barmblett of California 5-thousand dollars for a salary kick-back scheme. The judge sentenced him to four months to a year in jail but suspended this sentence.

The Peron government has expelled two Roman Catholic prelates. When they arrived in Rio de Janeiro they said they had been forced to leave Beunos Aires so quickly all they could take with them were the clothes they wore. They were not permitted to communicate with their superiors in Argentina (before their departure by plane for Rome. Both clergymen Deny the charges of inciting riots and other disorders. After they left, Argentine police searched hundreds of parish houses for documents to support Peron's contention that the Church inspired the week-end clashes bewteen Catholics and Peron supporters. (A high Vatican source says President Peron and "others involved" incurred automatic excommunication from the church by arresting and expelling the two prelates.)

Australia today decided to send a battallion.. perhaps a thousand men..to join the British fighting Communist-led guerrillas in Malaya. Prime Minister Menzies says these troops must not be used in relation to any civil disturbances.

The Chinese Communist radio says it has exposed a counter-revolutionary clique in Red China..connected with the Nationalist government. There were no details.

Edward R. Murrow: June 15, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Probably it is unavoidable at this point in the atomic age that nuclear weapons should keep ahead of the plans of civil defense to deal with them. # Out in Yucca Flat last month civil defense had its first experience with a non-imaginery atomic bomb. It was a lavish kind of dress rehearsal, intended to be overwhelmingly realistic. And of course any atomic explosion is awe-inspiring. But the experience at Yucca Flat was a glaring understatement. It was real, all right, but it was not a realistic exhibition of what to expect from an enemy nuclear attack, that is, unless the enemy confined himself to a small and early type of nuclear weapon.

The bomb used had an explosion-equivalent of about 30,000 tons of TNT. Don't let me appear to belittle this amount of force. It is half again as much as wiped out Hiroshima in a flash and killed up to a hundred thousand persons. But since then nuclear weapons have undergone fantastic development. The Bikini bomb of last year had a force measured in megatons - millions, not thousands, of tons of TNT. The estimate was fourteen megatons, which would make it 466 times more powerful than the explosion at Yucca Flat. So it is ~~not~~ unfair to say that whatever civil defense learned at Yucca Flat would be of limited value in coping with an up-to-date nuclear attack.

Today many Americans may believe they were up-to-date in dealing with an imaginery hydrogen bomb. But here, too, progress in nuclear weapons has left civil defense behind. For the hydrogen bomb no longer is the last word in nuclear weapons. There is a new last word, or latest word. Actually it consists of three words, it is the fission-fusion-fission bomb. The Bikini bomb, which has been called a hydrogen bomb, was in fact a fission-fusion-fission bomb. You may recall that when it went off it not only surpassed the expectations of the physicists, it astonished them. And you know that the fall-out from the explosion covered an area far larger than had been anticipated, with tragic consequences to Japanese fishing boats.

Only now is the public being given some inkling of the new type of nuclear weapon. One can describe a hydrogen bomb as one in which a fission bomb explodes first, and in so doing generates heat enough to fuse the atoms in a special kind of hydrogen, and this causes a tremendous explosion that produces a heat as great as in the interior of the sun. But in the Bikini bomb, this hydrogen explosion wasn't the end of the story. The hydrogen core had an outside jacket made probably of the cheapest and commonest form of uranium - U-238. This form of uranium cannot produce an ordinary kind of fission explosion. A chain reaction would only follow if it were subjected to a fantastically high energy. In the Bikini bomb precisely this fantastically high energy was produced, and it set off the uranium jacket, — the first time, one must suppose, that U-238 ever exploded on this planet. One can sum up the new MX weapon by saying that an A-bomb triggers an H-bomb, and the H-bomb triggers a U-bomb. Since U-238 is relatively cheap and plentiful, and since the size of the bomb is theoretically unlimited, the capability of destroying all life on this planet really surpasses all imagination.

According to Dr. Willard Libby, Atomic Energy Commissioner, the Bikini bomb released ten megatons of fission energy. How much fusion energy it produced he did not say. It was this statement, made in a highly technical address on June 2, that gave the first hint that a new last word had been coined in nuclear weapons.

Dr. Libby suggested as an extreme possibility that 100,000 square miles could be contaminated so seriously by a 10-megaton bomb that residents could not safely return to their homes permanently for many days. This compares with the 7,000 square miles which the AEC at first said was the area affected by the Bikini fall-out.

So today's elaborate exercises, which involved moving thousands of Washington officials to secret hide-outs, are on the verge of being obsolete. All the transferred officials might still be in a dangerously contaminated region. They would be in shelters protected from fall-out. But they would have to stay in them a long time after the explosion, as would the residents of the area.

Here in New York, today's imaginery hydrogen bomb caused three million imaginery deaths. Everyone ~~This reporter~~ would be horrified if such language were used with full realization of what it meant. Even so it is not comforting that it is not somewhat better understood. President Eisenhower understood it when he said that now there is no alternative to peace. But the public lags behind civil defense in appreciating what it means to live in the atomic age. And civil defense itself lags behind the development of nuclear weapons.

Today the hydrogen bomb may well have seemed unreal to most Americans, and many of them may confidently think it never will fall on this land. It is to be hoped that enough of them also realized that if bombs are not to fall ~~this has to be so~~, basic and unprecedented political changes must be made, which they must be prepared to support. And they must support them, not out of credulity, but out of the sheer insistence on survival.

There are always those who will say: it can't happen here. But Civilian Defense officials warn repeatedly that it can. Thomas Fuller once remarked wisely that: "a man surprised is half beaten." To forestall such a possibility, something might be gained by repeating these words by Swinburne: "Not with dreams, he said, but with blood and with iron shall a nation be moulded to last."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Probably it is unavoidable at this point in the atomic age that nuclear weapons should keep ahead of the plans of civil defense to cope with them. Out in Yucca Flat last month civil defense had its first experience with a non-imaginary atomic bomb. It was a lavish kind of dress-rehearsal, intended to be overwhelmingly realistic. And of course any atomic explosion is awe-inspiring. But the experience at Yucca Flat was a glaring under-statement. It was real, all right, but it was not a realistic exhibition of what to expect from an enemy nuclear attack, that is, unless the enemy confined himself to a small and early type of nuclear weapon. The bomb used had an explosion equivalent of about 30,000 tons of TNT. Don't let me appear to belittle this amount of force. It is half again as much as wiped out Hiroshima in a flash and killed up to a hundred thousand persons. But since then nuclear weapons have undergone fantastic development. The Bikini bomb of last year had a force measured in megatons--millions, not thousands, of tons of TNT. The estimate was 14 megatons, which would make it 466 times more powerful than the explosion at Yucca Flat.

it is not unfair to say that whatever civil defense learned at

'lat would be of limited value in coping with an uptodate nuclear attack.

Today many Americans may believe they were uptodate in dealing with an imaginary hydrogen bomb. But here, too, progress in nuclear weapons has left civil defense behind. For the hydrogen bomb no longer is the last word in nuclear weapons. There is a new last word, or latest word. Actually it consists of three words, it is the fission-fusion-fission bomb. The Bikini bomb, which has been called a hydrogen bomb, was in fact a fission-fusion-fission bomb. You may recall that when it went off it not only surpassed the expectations of the physicists, it astonished them. And you know that the fall-out from the explosion covered an area far larger than had been anticipated with tragic consequences to Japanese fishing boats.

¶ Only now is the public being given some inkling of the new type of nuclear weapon. One can describe a hydrogen bomb as one in which a fission bomb explodes first, and in so doing generates heat enough to fuse the atoms in a special kind of hydrogen, and this causes a tremendous explosion that produces a heat as great as in the interior of the sun. But in the Bikini bomb, this hydrogen explosion wasn't nd of the story. The hydrogen core had an outside jacket made probably of the cheapest and commonest flrm of uranium— U-238.

This form of uranium cannot produce an ordinary kind of fission explosion. A chain reaction would only follow if it were subjected to a fantastically high energy. In the Bikini bomb precisely this fantastically high energy was produced, and it set off the uranium jacket, the first time, one must suppose, that U-238 ever exploded on this planet. One can sum up the new weapon by saying that an A-bomb triggers an H-bomb and the H-bomb triggers a U-bomb. Since U-238 is relatively cheap and plentiful, and since the size of the bomb is theoretically unlimited, the capability of destroying all life on this planet really surpasses all imagination.

¶ According to Dr.Willard Libby, Atomic Energy Commissioner, the Bikini bomb released ten megatons of of fission energy. How much fusion energy it produced he did not say. It was this statement, made in a highly technical address on June 2, that gave the first hint that a new last word had been coined in nuclear weapons.

¶ Dr.Libby suggested as an extreme possibility that 100,000 square miles could be contaminated so seriously by a 10-megaton bomb so that residents could not safely return to their homes permanently for many days. This compares with the 7,000 square miles which the AEC at first said was the area affected by the Bikini fall-out.

So today's elaborate exercises, which involved moving thousands of Washington officials to secret hide-outs, are on the verge of being obsolete. All the transferred officials might still be in a dangerously contaminated region. They would be in shelters protected from fall-out. But they would have to stay in them a long time after the explosion, as would the residents of the area.

Here in New York, today's imaginary hydrogen bomb caused three million imaginary deaths. This reporter would be horrified if such language were used with full realization of what it meant. Even so it is not comforting that it is not somewhat better understood. President Eisenhower understood it when he said that now there is no alternative to peace. But the public lags behind civil defense in appreciating what it means to live in the atomic age. And civil defense itself lags behind the development of nuclear weapons.

Today the hydrogen bomb may well have seemed unreal to most Americans, and many of them may confidently think it never will fall on this land. It is to be hoped that enough of them also realized that if this is to be so, basic and unprecedented political changes must be made, which they must be prepared to support. And they must support them, not out of credulity, but out of the sheer insistence on survival.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Fifty-three American cities today participated in the biggest air raid test ever held. Theoretical planes dropped theoretical bombs on the big cities. And in Washington, although the Congress continued its business, 15-thousand officials scattered to secret places within a 300 mile radius. The President and about 30 of the highest government officials went to a secret "operation center". Mr. Eisenhower will remainthere for three days and nights. Today in a brief broadcast from this hide-away the President explained that the whole purpose of the Civil defense test is to make sure the government could go on without interruption in the event of a real emergency.

By coincidence, today's test came as Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov was visiting New York on his way to the United Nations meeting in San Francisco. Molotov took occasion to offer greetings to all Americans "who are in favor of lasting peace." He visited the United Nations headquarters, dropped in at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and strolled along the Hudson River.

Before Mr. Eisenhower left Washington today he pledged our unrelenting co-operation in seeking permanent peace through the atom. We have signed agreements with Great Britain, Canada and Belgium on atomic research matters. And we agreed to exchange atomic information for mutual defense purposes with the British and Canadians.

I'd like to discuss our atomic and hydrogen bombs ..and their power.. in a few minutes.

Congress today approved and sent to the White House a compromise foreign trade bill..one of the key measures in the Administration's program. The bill extends the law for three years and gives the President new power to cut tarriffs.

Democratic Representative Canon of Missouri charged today that the controversial Dixon-Yates power contract is part of an effort by private power companies to create a national power monopoly. Cannon says the private power companies have started a campaign to destroy the Tennessee Valley Authority.. the Rural Electrification Administration..and municiple power systems. Republecas Representative Phillipps says the Rppublicans are not trying to destroy T.V.A. but are "trying to help it grow up and stand on its own feet." And Republican Representative Hoffman of Michican says residents of the Tennessee Valley are trying to get something for nothing.

The American Medical Association told Senators today that there is no emergency in the matter of making the Salk anti-polio vaccine available to children. And the A.M.A. went on record against the plan sponsored by Democrats to pay for the innoculation of all youngsters through the age of 19.

Basil O'Connor of the National Association for Infantile Paralysis told the Senators the chief interest of his group is to : give the vaccine to as many children as possible and "thus prevent as much polio as possible with all its disasterous results."

The Federal Reserve Board reports that industrial production broke all records in May..passing the previous peak set two years earlier. Durable goods production was "moderately below" the previous record but there was an unprecedented production on non-durable goods.

Federal Judge Bastian today fined former Republican Representative Barmblett of California 5-thousand dollars for a salary kick-back scheme. The judge sentenced him to four months to a year in jail but suspended this sentence.

The Peron government has expelled two Roman Catholic prelates. When they arrived in Rio de Janerio they siad they had been forced to leave Buenos Aires so quickly all they could take with them were the clothes they wore. They were not permitted to communicate with their superiors in Argentina before their departure by plane for Rome. Both clergymen deny the charges of inciting riots and other disorders. After they left, Argentine police searched hundreds of parish houses for documents to support Peron's contention that the Church inspired the week-end clashes between Catholics and Peron supporters. (A high Vatican source says President Peron and "others involved" incurred automatic excommunication from the church by arresting and expelling the two prelates.)

Australia today decided to send a battalion ..perhaps a thousand men. . to join the British fighting Communist-led guerillas in Malaya. Prime Minister Menzies says these troops must not be used in relation to any civil disturbances. The Chinese Communist radio says it has exposed a counter-revolutionary clique in Red China ..connected with the Nationalist government. There were no details.

Probably it is unavoidable at this point in the atomic age that nuclear weapons should keep ahead of the plans of civil defense to deal with them.

Out in Yucca Flats last month civil defense had its first experience with a non-imaginary atomic bomb. It was a lavish kind of dress rehearsal, intended to be overwhelmingly realistic. And of course any atomic explosion is awe-inspiring. But the experience at Yucca Flat was a glaring understatement. It was real, all right, but it was not a realistic exhibition of what to expect from an enemy nuclear attack, that is, unless the enemy confined himself to a small and early type of nuclear waapon.

The bomb used had an explosion-equivalent of about 30,000 tons of TNT. Don't let me appear to belittle this amount of force. It is half again as much as wiped out Hiroshima in a flash and killed up to a hundred thousand persons. But since then nuclear weapons have undergone fantastic development. The Bikini bomb of last year had a force measured in megatons - millions, not thousands of tons of TNT. The estimate was fourteen megatons, which would make it 466 times more powerful than the explosion at Yucca Flats. So it is fair to say that whatever civil defense learned at Yucca Flats would be of limited value in coping with an up-to-date nuclear attack.

Today many Americans may believe they were up-to-date in dealing with an imaginary hydrogen bomb. But here, too, progress in nuclear weapons has left civil defense behind. For the hydrogen bomb no longer is the last word in nuclear weapons. There is a new last word, or latest word. Actually it consists of three words, it is the fission-fusion-fission bomb. The Bikini bomb, which has been called a hydrogen bomb, was in fact a fission-fusion-fission bomb. You may recall that when it went off it not only surpassed the expectations of the physicists, it astonished them. And you know that the fall-out from the explosion covered an area far larger than had been anticipated, with tragic consequences to Japanese fishing boats.

Only now, is the public being given some inkling of the new of nuclear weapon. One can describe a hydrogen bomb as one in which a fission bomb explodes first, and in so doing generates heat enough to fuse the atoms in a special kind of hydrogen, and this causes a tremendous explsionn that produces a heat as great as the interior of the sun. But in the Bikini bomb, this hydrogen explosion wasn't the end of the story. The hydrogen core had an outside jacket made probably of the cheapest and commonest form of uranium - U-238. This form of uranium cannot produce an ordinary kind of fission explosion. A chain reaction would only follow if it were subjected to a fantastically high energy. In the Bikini bomb precisely this fantastically high energy was produced, and it set off the uranium jacket, the first time, one must suppose, that U-238 ever exploded on this planet. One can sum up the new weapon by saying that an A-bomb triggers an H-bomb, and the H-bomb triggers a U-bomb. Since U-238 is relatively cheap and plentiful, and since the size of the bomb is theoretically unlimited, the capability of destroying all life on this planet really surpasses all imagination.

According to Dr. Willard Libby, Atomic Energy Commissioner, the Bikini bomb released ten megatons of fission energy. How much fusion energy it produced he did not say. It was this statement, made in a highly technical address on June 2, that gave the first hint that a new last word had been coined in nuclear weapons.

Dr. Libby suggested as an extreme possiblitty that 100,000 square miles could be contaminates so seriously by a 10-megaton bomb that residents could not safely return to their homes permanently for many days. This compares with 7,000 square miles which the AEC at first said was the area affected by the Bikini fall-out.

So today's elaborate exercises, which involved moving thousands of Washington officials to secret hide-outs, are on the verge of being obsolete. All the transferred officials might still be in a dangerously contaminated region. They would be in shelters protected from fall-out. But they would have to stay in them after the explosion, as would the residents of the area.

Here in New York, today's imaginary hydrogen bomb caused three million imaginary deaths. Every one would be horrified if such language were used with full realization of that it meant. Even so it is not comforting that it is not somewhat better understood. President Eisenhower understood it when he said that now there is no alternative to peace. But the public lags behind civil defense in appreciating what it means to live in the atomic age And civil defense itself lags behind the developement of nuclear weapons.

Today the hydrogen bomb may well have seemed unreal to most Americans, and many of them may confidently think it never will fall on this land. It is to be hoped that enough of them also realized that if bombs are not to fall , basic and unprecedented political changes must be made, which they must be prepared to support. And they must support them, not out of credulity but out of the sheer insistence on survival.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with The Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There are always those who will say: it can't happen here. But Civilian Defense officials warn repeatedly that it can. Thomas Fuller once remarkedwisely that:"a man surprised is half beaten." To forestall such a possibility, something might be gained by repeating these words by Swinburne: "Not with dreams," he said, "but with blood and with iron shall a nation be moulded to last."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday, June 16, 1955

This is the news:

President Peron of Argentina says a revolt against his regime has ended with "a great quantity of dead." It started just before noon [redacted] when newspapers printed word that Peron had been excommunicated by the VATICAN. Four to six fighter planes appeared over Government House in Beunos Aires. Two of the three bombs they dropped hit their target. Peron supporters and army anti-aircraft fired at the attackers. believed to be from the navy. Then Peron supporters and anti-government partisans started hand-to-hand fighting in the streets. The government announced the revolt was being crushed. But a little after 3 p.m. when large crowds were in the Government House area more planes came over: one wave of three bombers.. a second wave of two bombers plus some light planes...at least one jet. They scored [redacted] one hit on the Government House. There were many casualties but no estimates on their number. One reporter counted a dozen bombs falling in eight minutes. At this point Peron sent tanks and gun-carriers into the area. Soldiers arrived in armored trucks and started seeking out anti-government fighters. We're told that ambulances raced through the area all afternoon. Reporters say they saw many wounded and dead persons on the street. And tonight President Peron took to the radio to say the revolt was ended.."the planes as usual fled to Uruguay"... he acknowledged that some minor points of resistance still existed.. blamed the attack on the navy and said:"We will never forgive the infamy of our enemies." In a few minutes I'd like to review Peron's battle with the ROMAN Catholic Church in Catholic Argentina.

In this country the President spent the day at his secret headquarters and continued to keep track of results of "Operation Alert." He told reporters today that the first hours of yesterday's AIR raid drill turned up "more complications than he ever believed possible."

The President today formally asked Congress for 35-million dollars to finance his proposed program of providing free anti-polio vaccine for children unable to pay for it.

And representatives of the White House, and the State, Defense and Justice departments have issued a statement on the future of the 21 Americans who DECIDED to stay in Communist China..at the end of the Korean war. The government says if these men want to return home, they must present themselves to American authorities. But they will later be held accountable for any "wrongful act they may have committed." There have been reports that at least two of the men..possibly eight of them . want to come home.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer told a Harvard Alumni meeting in Cambridge, Massachusetts that prospects for next month's Big Four meeting are better than at any recent cold war conference. ~~He urged the United States to take the initiative in a world-wide plan for controlled disarmament. And he warned that unless the United States and Russia agree on such a plan "the present state of conflicts short of a major war will continue."~~

Adenauer FLYS to New York for tomorrow's meeting with the American, British and French foreign ministers. Today, the Big Three ministers met to consider whether the Russians actually propose to lessen world tensions, or whether they are again engaged in a propaganda manuver. British Foreign Minister McMillan told reporters before the meeting: the Geneva conference of heads of state will give diplomacy a new phase. He said: "In the words of Churchill jaw-jaw is better than war-war."

Senator McCarthy said today its a tragic blunder for the President to agree to meet with the Russians. He said: "The Administration is fashioning the most [illegible] world's worst defeat since the end of the second world war." He said this raises a question as to whether Mr. Eisenhower ever has really understood what the cold war involves. Republican Leader Knowland said: he is not willing to take McCarthy's defeatist position. Knowland is sure the President and Secretary of State "are going to do everything they can to protect our interests."

In the House today, Administration supporters won a major victory in the disputed Dixon-Yates power contract. The House voted [illegible] to strike out of an appropriations bill a section that earmarked six and a half millions [illegible] for the Tennessee Valley Authority to build its own steam power plant. This leaves the way clear for the Administration to proceed with its plan for private utilities to build the Dixon-Yates plant.

In 18 Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific ports today, some 28-thousand seaman started to quit work..to back their demand for an unemployment insurance plan, similar to that won by the C.I.O.

Auto Workers. ~~This walkout, at the peak of the biggest tourist travel year in history, involves four unions. The old contract expired at midnight.~~ Management says the unions are trying to put a premium on quitting..demanding unemployment benefits for men who voluntarily leave their jobs.

Striking seamen in Great Britain, who are demanding a guaranteed 48-hour work week and other benefits, today prevented the sailing of the Queen Mary for New York. Six other trans-Atlantic liners are tied up at Liverpool. ~~The government has started to draft some of the strikers into the military services... A government spokesman says this is "normal procedure" not an attempt to break the strike.~~

Edward R. Murrow: June 16, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Though Buenos Aires is on the verge of outright civil war, it is hard for an outsider to say just what started Juan Peron on his struggle with the Roman Catholic Church. It began in a small way. But it now swelled to a floodtide that threatens his survival as head of the state. Its origin has been ascribed to the progress being made by a small Christian Democratic party and to Peron's almost ferocious zeal to wipe out anything that might in time challenge his authority. The party was still of infant size, but that does not disprove the explanation, for Peron is violent and headstrong, and capable of taking on the Roman church.

He may have been inflamed by rumors that a deal was possible - or brewing - between military and church leaders to seize political power. Nothing has been disclosed to substantiate the rumors, but they were current in the Argentine capital.

Some observers say that Peron decided to attack the church to distract attention from rising economic difficulties and the growing corruption of his administration. This is the mustard plaster theory, that one form of local irritation makes different forms of pain more bearable. Other dictators have believed in it.

Peron in time decided to separate church and state. On May 23 he signed a bill calling a convention to amend the constitution by striking from it all references to the church. By the end of May he had abolished tax exemptions for religious institutions. By early June, religious instruction in the Argentine schools ended. The Catholics fought back with demonstrations and circulars. When Catholic newspapers were suppressed, priests read news bulletins from their pulpits. One of them threatened those who legislated against the rights of the church with excommunication.

Last week the conflict came to a head over the celebration of Corpus Cristi day. This had always been a national holiday. Peron forbade its observance as such. The church postponed its annual procession from last Thursday to Saturday, so more worshippers could take part. Peron then forbade outdoor religious demonstrations. So the procession was confined to the interior of the cathedral. However, 100,000 had gathered for the event, and knelt silently in the Plaza de Mayo (Plahsa day My-O) outside the cathedral till the ceremony concluded. Then the crowd moved slowly down the broad Avenida (Ah-ven-eeda) de Mayo (day My-O) with sounds of prayer and hymn-singing, till it reached the Federal Congress building. It expected to be attacked by the police, but Peron chose not to strike that day and that way. And the crowds ended by raising the Argentine and Vatican flags over the Congress building. It had been the biggest religious demonstration ever seen in Argentina.

But rioting followed next day. The cathedral was pelted with stones and fruit by what seemed to be labor demonstrators, who shouted: "Long live Peron, down with the Pope!" Catholics gathered on the Cathedral steps shouting back: "Long Live Christ the King!" But they were outnumbered and had to take cover.

Peron ordered the house of every priest in the city searched for evidence that the clergy had instigated the rioting. He singled out two ~~monsignors~~ Prelates as having had the chief responsibility and ordered them dismissed, invoking an old colonial law authorizing the government to oust churchmen who fail to perform their duties.

This week the government organ, Democracia (Dem-o-crahsia), published a virulent attack on the church hierarchy. It listed Cardinal Copello (Co-Py-O), primate of Argentina, among a so-called "Who's Who in Infamy" and carried the word: "moneylender" under his picture. It charged him with importing luxury cars for re-sale in the black market.

The excommunication that now has followed the expulsion of the two monsignors applied to Peron and all his top advisors, as well as those who put the two churchmen on the plane to Rome. According to the constitution, which is still in force, the President must be a Roman Catholic, so that Peron could not legally continue in office if he ceased to be a member of the church. Excommunication deprives him of the privilege of receiving the sacrament, but this does not seem to be enough to invoke the constitutional provision.

Peron is the first Roman Catholic ruler in modern times to have been excommunicated. When Cardinal Mindzenty was convicted in Hungary, a sweeping excommunication was decreed. But the head of the Hungarian state was a communist and not a Catholic. Dispatches from Argentina today stress that Peron still is considered a member of the Catholic church.

A substantial part of Peron's following is from the labor unions. They have undergone a treatment that has been a combination of scourge and bribery. The unions were cleansed of all independent leadership so that subservience to the regime was assured. This was carried through by the late Eva Peron. But it was accompanied by exceptional economic privileges, and the whole operation was attended by an emotional enthusiasm reminiscent of the days of Hitler's highest popularity. When today's attack on the presidential palace was launched, the call from the government went out to the unions to take to the streets and defend PERONS ~~their~~ regime.

History has shown that a mixture of religion and politics is always explosive. Frederick Robertson reached this conclusion ~~more than a hundred years ago~~, when he noted:"Religious controversy does only harm. It destroys humble inquiry after truth and throws all the energies into an attempt to prove ourselves right - a spirit in which no man gets at truth." It's ~~pretty much~~ as Jonathan Swift said:"We have just enough religion to make us hate, but not enough to make us love one another."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

about 550

Though Buenos Aires is seething with what seems to be outright civil war, it is hard for an outsider to say just what started Juan Peron on his struggle with the Roman Catholic church. It began in a small way. But by now it has swollen to a floodtide that threatens his survival as head of the state. Its origin has been ascribed to the progress being made by a small Christian Democratic party and to Peron's almost feriocious zeal to wipe out anything that might in time challenge his authority. The party was still of infant size, but that does not disprove the explanation, for Peron is violent and headstrong, and not incapable of taking on the Roman church.

¶ He may have been inflamed by rumors that a deal was possible--or brewing--between military and church leaders to seize political power. Nothing has been disclosed to substantiate the rumors, but they were current in the Argentine capital.

¶ Some observers say that Peron decided to attack the church to distract attention from rising economic difficulties and the growing corruption of his administration. This is the mustard plaster theory, that one form of local irritation different forms of pain more bearable. Other dictators have believed in it.

¶ Peron in time decided to separate church and state. On May 23 he signed a bill calling a convention to amend the constitution by striking from it all references to the church. By the end of May he had abolished tax exemptions for religious institutions. By early June, religious instruction in the Argentine schools ended. The Catholics fought back with demonstrations and circulars. When Catholic newspapers were suppressed, priests read news bulletins from their pulpits. One of them threatened those who legislated against the rights of the church with excommunication.

¶ Last week the conflict came to a head over the celebration of Corpus Cristi day. This had always been a national holiday. Peron forbade its observance as such. The church postponed its annual procession from last Thursday to Saturday, so more worshippers could take part. Then Peron forbade outdoor religious demonstrations. So the procession was confined to the interior of the cathedral, However 100,000 had gathered for the event, and knelt silently in the Plaza de Mayo outside the cathedral till the ceremony concluded. Then the crowd moved slowly down the bread Avenida de Mayo with sounds of prayer and hymn-singing, till it reached the Federal Congress building. It expected to be attacked by the police, but Peron chose not to strike that day and that way. And the crowds ended by raising the Argentine and Vatican flags over the Congress building. It has been the biggest ~~after giving the greatest~~ religious demonstration ever seen in Argentina.

But rioting followed next day. The cathedral was pelted with stones and fruit by what seemed to be labor demonstrators, who shouted "Long live Peron, down with the Pope!" Catholics gathered on the Cathedral steps shouting back "Long live Christ the King!" But they were outnumbered and had to take cover.

Peron ordered the house of every priest in the city searched for evidence that the clergy had instigated the rioting. He singled out two monsignors as having had the chief responsibility and ordered them dismissed, invoking an old colonial law authorizing the government to oust churchmen who fail to perform their duties.

This week the government organ Democracia published a virulent attack on the church hierarchy. It listed Cardinal Copello, primate of Argentina, among a so-called "Who's Who in Infamy" and carried the word:"moneylender" under his picture. It charged him with importing luxury cars for resale in the blacm market.

The excommunication that now has followed the expulsion of the two monsignors applied to Peron and all his top advisors, as well as those who put the two churchmen on the plane to Rome. According to the constitution, which is still in force, the President must be a Roman Catholic, so that Perdon could not legally continue in office if he ceased to be a member of the church. Excommunication deprives him of the privilege of receiving the sacrament, but this does not seem to be enough to invoke the constitutional provision.

Peron is the first Roman Catholic ruler in modern times to have been excommunicated. When Cardinal Mindszenty was convicted in Hungary a sweeping excommunication was decreed. But the head of the Hungarian state was a communist and not a Catholic. Dispatches from Argentina today stress that Peron still is considered a member of the Catholic church.

A substantial part of Peron's following is from the labor unions. They have undergone a treatment that has been a combination of scourge and bribery.

The unions were cleansed of all independent leadership so that subservience to the regime was assured. This was carried through by the late Eva Peron. But it was accompanied by exceptional economic privileges, and the whole operation was attended by an emotional enthusiasm reminiscent of the days of Hitler's highest popularity. When today's attack on the presidential palace was launched the call from the government went out to the unions to take to the streets and defend their regime.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

President Peron of Argentina says a revolt against his regime has ended with "a great quantity of dead". It started just before noon when newspapers printed word that Peron had been excommunicated by the Vatican. Four to six fighter planes appeared over Government House in Buenos Aires. Two of the three bombs they dropped hit their target. Peron supporters and army anti-aircraft fired at the attackers..believed to be from the navy. Then Peron supporters and anti-government partisans started hand-to hand fighting in the streets. The government announced the revolt was being crushed. But a little after 3 p.m. when large crowds were in the Government House area more planes came over: one wave of three bombers..a second wave of two bombers plus some light planes..at least one jet. They scored one hit on the Government House. There were many casualties but no estimates on their number. One reporter counted a dozen bombs falling in eight minutes. At this point Peron sent tanks and gun carriers into the area. So guns arrived in armored trucks and started seeking out anti-government fighters. We're told that ambulances raced through the area all afternoon. Reporters say they saw many wounded and dead persons on the street. And tonight President Peron took to the radio to say the revolt was ended.."the planes as usall fled to Uraguay"..he acknowledged that some minor points of resistance still existed..blamed the attack on the navy and said.."We will never forgive the infamy of our enemies." In a few munutes I'd like to review Peron's battle with the Roman Catholic Church in Catholic Argentina.

In this country the President spent the day at his secret headquarters and continued to keep track of results of "Operation Alert." He told reporters today that the first hours of yeaterday's air raid drill turned up "more complications than he ever believed possible."

The President today formally asked Congress for 35-million dollars to finance his proposed program of providing free anti-polio vaccine for children unable to pay for it.

And representatives of the White House, and the State, Defense and Justice departments have issued a statement on the future of the 21 Americans who decided to stay in Communist China..at the end of the Korean war. The government says if the men want to return home, they must present themselves to American authorities. But they will later by held accountable for any "wrongful act they man have committed." There have been reports that at least two of the men ..possibly eight of them want to come home.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer told a Harvard Alumni meeting in Cambridge, Massachusetts that prospects for the next month's Big Four meeting are better than any recent cold war conference. Adenauer flys to New York for tomorrow's meeting with the American, British and French foreign ministers. Today the Big Three ministers met to consider whether the Russians actually propose to lessen world tensions or whether they are again engaged in a propaganda maneuver. British Foreign Minister McMillan told reporters before the meeting: the Geneva conference of heads of state will give diplomacy a new phase. He said: "In the words of Chruchill jaw-jaw is better than war-war."

Senator McCarthy said today its a tragic blunder for the President to agree to meet with the Russians. He said this raises a question as to whether Mr. Eisenhower ever has really understood what the cold war involves. Republican Leader Knowland said: he is not willing to take McCarthy's defeatest position. Knowland is sure the President and Secretary of State "are going to do everything they can to protect our interests."

In the House today, Administration supporters won a major victory in the disputed Dixon-Yates power contract. The House voted to strike out of an appropriation bill a section that earmarked six and a half millions for the Tennessee Valley Authority to build its own steam power plant. This leaves the way clear for the Administration to proceed with its plan for private utilites to build the Dixon-Yates plant.

In 18 tlantic Gulf and Pacific ports today some 23-thousand seamen started to quit work..to back their demand for an unemployment insurance plan similar to that won by the C.I.O..Auto Workers Management says the unions are trying to put a premium on quitting..demanding unemployment benefits for men who voluntarily leave their jobs.

Striking seamen in Great Britain, who are demanding a guaranteed 48-hour work week and other benefits, today prevented the sailing of the Queen Mary for New York. Six other trans-Atlantic liners are tied up at Liverpool.

Though Buenos Aires is on the verge of outright civil war, it is hard for an outsider tosay just what started Juan Peron on his struggle with the Roman Catholic Church. It be an in a small way. But it swelled to a floodtide that threatens his survival has head of the state. It origin has been ascribed to the progress being made by a small Christian Democratic party and to Peron's almost ferocious zeal to wipe out anything that might in time challenge his authority. The party was still of infant size, but that does not disprove the explanation, for Peron is violent and headstrong, and capable of taking on the Roman church.

He may have been inflamed by rumors that a deal was possible - or brewing - between military and church leaders to seize political power. Nothing has been disclosed to substantiate the rumors, but they were current in the Argentine capital.

Some observers say that Peron decided to attack the church to distract attention from rising economic difficulties and the growing corruption of his administration. This is the mustard plaster theory, that one form of local irritation makes different forms of pain more bearable. Other dictators have beleived it.

Peron in time decided to separate church and state. On May 23 he signed a bill calling a convention to amend the constitution by striking from it all references to the church. By the end of May he had abolished tax exemptions for religious institutions. By early June, religious instruction in the Argentine schools ended. The Catholics fought back with demonstrations and circullars. Then Catholic newspapers were suppressed, priests read news bulletins from their pulpits. One of them threatened those who legislated against the rights of the church with excommunication.

Last week the conflict came to a head over the celebration of Corpus Christi day. This had always been a national holiday. Peron forbade its observance as such. The church postponed its annual procession from last Thursday to Saturday, so more worshippers could take part. Peron then forbade outdoor religious demonstrations. So the procession was confined to the interior of the cathederal. However, 100,000 had gathered fot the event, and knelt silently in the Plaza Mayo outside the cathereral till the ceremony had concluded. Then the crowd moved slowly down the broad Avenida de Mayo with sounds of prayer and hymn-singing, till it reached the Federal Congress building. It expected to be attacked by the police, but Peron chose not to strike that day and that way. And the crowds ended by raising the Argentine and Vatican flags over the Congress building. It had been the biggest religious demonstration ever seen in Argentina.

But rioting followed next day. The cathedral was pelted with stones and fruit b what seemed to be labor demonstrators who shouted: "Long live Peron, down with the Pope!" Catholics gathered on the Cathederal steps shouting back:"Long Live Christ the King!" But they were outnumbered and had to take cover.

Peron ordered the house of every priest in the city searched for evidence that the clergy had instigated the rioting. He singled out two prelates as having had the chief responsibility and ordered them dismissed, invoking an old colonial law authorizing the government to oust churchmen who fail to perform their duties.

This week the government organ, Democracia, published a virulent attack on the church hierarchy. It listed Cardinal Copelly, primate of Argentina, among a so-called "Who's Who in Infamy" and carried the word: "moneylender" under his picture. It charged him with importing luxury cars for re-sale in the black market.

The excommunication that now has followed the expulsion of the two monsignors applied to Peron and all his top advisors, as well as those who put the two churchmen on the plane to Rome. According to the constitution, which is still in force, the President must be a Roman Catholic, so that Peron could not legally continue in office if he ceased to be a member of the church. Excommunication deprives him of the privilege of receiving the sacrament, but this does not seem to be enough to invoke the constitutional provision.

Peron is the first Roman Catholic ruler in modern times to have been excommunicated. When Cardinal Mindzenty was convicted in Hungary, a sweeping excommunication was decreed. But the head of the Hungarian state was a Communist, not a Catholic. Dispatches from Argentina today stress that Peron still is considered a member of the Catholic Church.

A substantial part of Peron's following is from the labor unions. They have undergone a treatment that has been a combination of scourge and bribery.

The unions were cleansed of all independent leadership so that subversivience to the regime assured. This was carried through by the late Eva Peron. But it was accompanied by exceptional economic privileges, and the whole operation was attended by an emotional enthusiasm reminiscent of the days of Hitler's highest popularity. When today's attack on the presidential palace was launched, the call from the government went out to the unions to take the streets and defend Peron's regime.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON:COMMERCIAL

MURROW: History has shown that a mixture of religion and politics is always explosive Frederick Robertson reached this conclusion when he noted:"Religious controversy does only harm. It destroys humble inquiry after truth and throws all the energies into an attempt to prove ourselves right - a spirit in which no man gets at truth." It's as Jonathan Swift said "We have just enough rel - igion to make us hate, but not enough to make us love one another."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Friday June 17, 1955

This is the news:

Argentine Police say approximately a thousand persons are dead or wounded, as a result of yesterday's revolt in Buneos Aires. The official figures are: 156 killed..96 gravely wounded..another 750 hurt. President Peron made another radio broadcast today to break the total news blackout from his country. He blames Communists, for attacks made on churches last night. He said: "They did not even respect the religious buildings that are priceless relics of our heritage." (There are reports that seven churches were burned.) Peron says he will block any further raids on churches. And he told his 19-million people: "We are not fighting religion. I have said a thousand times that I am a Catholic, and that many of us are Catholics." He said that the people must decide, at the next election, whether to keep church and state joined, as at present, or to keep the government independent from the Catholic church.

In Uruguay, 122 Argentine naval officers, who revolted against Peron, are now being interned. They landed in 37 planes.

And in Vatican City today, Pope Pius heard a report on what's been going on in Argentina from the two prelates expelled by Peron. Then the Pope gave the Argentine hierarchy, clergy and people his blessing. The Vatican Radio says yesterday's fighting in Beunos Aires "has profoundly upset Catholics and friends of liberty and human dignity throughout the world." The radio says "Peron follows the iniquitious path of persecutors of all times."

In Washington today the Senate overwhelmingly approved the Austrian peace treaty. The vote was 63 to 3..with Republican Senators Jenner of Indiana...Malone of Nevada and McCarthy of Wisconsin voting against it.

Here in New York the Big Three foreign ministers agreed on all procedures for the forthcoming meeting of the heads of state. Then West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer joined the meeting. An authoritative source says Adenauer made it clear that he will ask the Russians to accept such tough conditions before he agrees to visit Moscow, that he may never make the trip. ~~Adenauer is reported to want: release of 9-thousand German war prisoners.. no recognition by Moscow of the East German government and no recognition of the Oder-Neisse line as Germany's eastern frontier. Without these agreements he will not go to Moscow.~~

The President today ended his stay at the Operation Alert

headquarters. He said his deepest impression of the air raid exervise was this:"The most devout daily prayers that any of us has should be uttered in supplication that this kind of disaster never comes to the United States." The President said he derived great encouragement from the test. And he said the most important point he wanted to make was that no "extraneous matter of any kind" must block congressional action on military reserve bills. In an obvious reference to a move in the House to bar racial segregation in the reserves and the National Guard the President said:"This is no place to attach social , political or any other kind of legislation. The bills must be passed for the security and safety" of the nation.

Civil Defense Administrator Val Peterson says the tests show that "America cannot be destroyed by nuclear attack." He's confident the nation can survive if it does the things necessary for survival.

Radio Moscow says the whole "operation alert" was a government scheme to intimidate the public so that more money can be spent for armaments.

Informed officials in Washington say the Russians recently expelled three American army military attaches from Moscow. There are no official details. But reports from London say the men left two weeks ago. And that both Washington and Moscow have kept the whole thing quiet to avoid [redacted] (CREATING another public incident.

A Senate committee today voted unanimously for a thorough, bi-partisan study of the Administration's security program.

[redacted] Assistant Defense Secretary Honaman says demands for defense information ought to meet the tests of being "useful.. valuable and interesting." In an exchange of letters, J.R. Wiggins, chairman of the Freedom of Information committee of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, points out that there must be a difference of opinion on what these terms mean. He says: "An official inside the Defense Department is not likely to regard as 'constructive" information that discloses his own errors."

Some 5-thousand National Maritime Union members here in New York have agreed to end their strike. They've been granted an unemployment benefit system. Two smaller unions have not yet agreed on terms.

Here in New York, John Golden, the veteran theatrical producer died today. Golden, who [redacted] was 80, had made a success as an actor, song-writer, producer and stage and costume designer.

Edward R. Murrow: June 17, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Next in importance to the Big Four conference in Geneva next month, is the preparation done by the West for that conference. Three of the Big Four are allies, and they confront the fourth, one of whose objectives is to disrupt the alliance of the three. However much the three want tensions reduced in the world, the pattern of the conference has to be rigid: there must be three on one side, unless the fourth will join the three. Otherwise Western unity would be shattered, Western strength would be reduced, no tensions would be lessened, and the West would lose the conference, and perhaps the cold war.

So the talks between Secretaries Dulles, MacMillan and Pinay, that opened in New York yesterday and continued through today, have more than routine significance. They are laying the strategy for the Geneva meeting, insofar as the nature of that meeting can be foreseen. Yesterday, the three ministers examined each other's views on what brought about the conference, and what to expect at Geneva. This morning, they shared their outlooks on the substance of issues that will be raised. This afternoon they talked over the German problem with Chancellor Adenauer.

The three have a general idea of the procedure they would like to have adopted at Geneva. They will suggest to Mr. Molotov, that the conference operate without any fixed agenda. Each of the four chiefs of state would make his statement, about what he considered the primary cause of world tensions. / It is assumed that there will be some agreement in what President Eisenhower, Prime Minister Eden and Premiers Faure and Bulganin have to say. The conference then could examine the agreed subjects one by one. The ministers yesterday did not expect the Big Four to reach any decisions, other than to determine the scope and nature of the negotiations that are to follow, at the foreign minister level. It was foreseen that Premier Bulganin would try to have Far Eastern issues discussed at Geneva, but the three prefer this to be held over for a separate conference. Obviously the plan of having no agenda at Geneva has to be accepted by the Kremlin.

Light on Soviet strategy in Geneva is not coming from Moscow, or other Soviet sources. But a piece of news was leaked yesterday by the Japanese Foreign Office, that comes as a warning signal to any who expect agreements to be easily come by, either at Geneva or in the talks to follow. / It is news of the terms of a peace treaty offered to Japan by the Soviet Union.

It will be recalled that Japan and the Soviet have no peace treaty, since the Soviet Union refused to sign the treaty the other states at war with Japan signed, four years ago at San Francisco. For some time the Kremlin has talked about ending the state of war with Japan, which Japan was glad to do, and talks started in London a short while back. Asian countries have been watching closely, because they anticipated that the Kremlin would go to considerable lengths to lure Japan away from its close ties with the United States. The Japanese themselves felt confident that they might be offered some of their territory now held by the Soviet Union. They didn't dare to expect lower Sakhalin, but they did think they might be promised all or some of the Kuriles, and at the very least ~~Shikotan and Habomai~~ the islands, close to the coast of Hokkaido, since these were not mentioned in the Yalta agreement.

To their amazement and dismay, the Soviet Union offered next to nothing, and not a square inch of territory. The treaty is virtually the same one which Japan rejected four years ago, except that it does not limit Japan's defense forces. At that time Soviet diplomacy had not put on a new look, and the ice jam in world relationships was not presumed to be melting.

Some of the offered terms are worth repeating. There is to be a pledge of non-aggression and non-interference. Japan is to relinquish all claims to the territory now occupied by the Soviet Union. Japan would be barred from alliances or military coalitions against any power that fought against Japan in the last war. The Japanese Foreign Office, by the way, doesn't think this stipulation necessarily applies to the security treaty with the United States. But a clause in the treaty closes the waters between Japan and Korea, as well as Japan's inland seaways, to all military craft except those of the Soviet Union and Communist China. That would prevent the United States from protecting northern Japan or going to the aid of Korea, and would make Japan a part of the Soviet military empire.

The treaty does include a few minor advantages, but it does not even mention the release of Japanese prisoners still held in the Soviet Union.

One can see why the Japanese Foreign Office leaked the terms of the treaty. The news will bring to earth a good many in Japan who have been indulging in sentimental peace talk, based on faith that the new look in Soviet diplomacy opens a new era of generosity, if only the West will go along.

The Soviet offer, to be sure, is not the final one, it is only an opening "asking bid." But it shows that Soviet diplomacy has not changed. It is tough, it plays its cards close to the chest, and sets out to get the utmost at the least possible cost. One must expect just such tough bargaining with the West at Geneva and thereafter. That no doubt is why Dr. Adenauer said at Harvard yesterday that the negotiations may last a year, if not more.

And here is a news bulletin:

The Chinese Communist radio has just announced that an attempt was made to overthrow the government. The Communists say it was led by what's called "anti-revolutionary elements" who wanted to establish a monarchy. We are not told when this happened. We are told that some persons have been tried and sentenced to death.

Good N

International diplomacy is a delicate affair and a serious one because the stakes are so high. It is further complicated by something Emerson once referred to in these words:"Every child of the Saxon race, he said, is educated to wish to be first. It is our system; and a man often comes to measure his greatness by the regrets, envies and hatreds of his competitors."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow: June 17, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Next in importance to the Big Four conference in Geneva next month, is the preparation done by the West for that conference. Three of the Big Four are allies, and they confront the fourth, one of whose objectives is to disrupt the alliance of the three. However much the three want tensions reduced in the world, the pattern of the conference has to be rigid: there must be three on one side, unless the fourth will join the three. Otherwise Western unity would be shattered, Western strength would be reduced, no tensions would be lessened, and the West would lose the conference, and perhaps the cold war.

So the talks between Secretaries Dulles, MacMillan and Pinay, that opened in New York yesterday and continued through today, have more than routine significance. They are laying the strategy for the Geneva meeting, insofar as the nature of that meeting can be foreseen. Yesterday, the three ministers examined each other's views on what brought about the conference, and what to expect at Geneva. This morning, they shared their outlooks on the substance of issues that will be raised. This afternoon they talked over the German problem with Chancellor Adenauer.

The three have a general idea of the procedure they would like to have adopted at Geneva. They will suggest to Mr. Molotov, that the conference operate without any fixed agenda. Each of the four chiefs of state would make his statement, about what he considered the primary cause of world tensions. It is assumed that there will be some agreement in what President Eisenhower, Prime Minister Eden and Premiers Faure and Bulganin have to say. The conference then could examine the agreed subjects one by one. The ministers yesterday did not expect the Big Four to reach any decisions, other than to determine the scope and nature of the negotiations that are to follow, at the foreign minister level. It was foreseen that Premier Bulganin would try to have Far Eastern issues discussed at Geneva, but the three prefer this to be held over for a separate conference. Obviously the plan of having no agenda at Geneva has to be accepted by the Kremlin.

Light on Soviet strategy in Geneva is not coming from Moscow, or other Soviet sources. But a piece of news was leaked yesterday by the Japanese Foreign Office, that comes as a warning signal to any who expect agreements to be easily come by, either at Geneva or in the talks to follow. It is news of the terms of a peace treaty offered to Japan by the Soviet Union.

It will be recalled that Japan and the Soviet have no peace treaty, since the Soviet Union refused to sign the treaty the other states at war with Japan signed, four years ago at San Francisco. For some time the Kremlin has talked about ending the state of war with Japan, which Japan was glad to do, and talks started in London a short while back. Asian countries have been watching closely, because they anticipated that the Kremlin would go to considerable lengths to lure Japan away from its close ties with the United States. The Japanese themselves felt confident that they might be offered some of their territory now held by the Soviet Union. They didn't dare to expect lower Sakhalin, but they did think they might be promised all or some of the Kuriles, and at the very least Shikotan and Habomai islands, close to the coast of Hokkaido, since these were not mentioned in the Yalta agreement.

To their amazement and dismay, the Soviet Union offered next to nothing, and not a square inch of territory. The treaty is virtually the same one which Japan rejected four years ago, except that it does not limit Japan's defense forces. At that time Soviet diplomacy had not put on a new look, and the ice jam in world relationships was not presumed to be melting.

Some of the offered terms are worth repeating. There is to be a pledge of non-aggression and non-interference. Japan is to relinquish all claims to the territory now occupied by the Soviet Union. Japan would be barred from alliances or military coalitions against any power that fought against Japan in the last war. The Japanese Foreign Office, by the way, doesn't think this stipulation necessarily applies to the security treaty with the United States. But a clause in the treaty closes the waters between Japan and Korea, as well as Japan's inland seaways, to all military craft except those of the Soviet Union and Communist China. That would prevent the United States from protecting northern Japan or going to the aid of Korea, and would make Japan a part of the Soviet military empire.

The treaty does include a few minor advantages, but it does not even mention the release of Japanese prisoners still held in the Soviet Union.

One can see why the Japanese Foreign Office leaked the terms of the treaty. The news will bring to earth a good many in Japan who have been indulging in sentimental peace talk, based on faith that the new look in Soviet diplomacy opens a new era of generosity, if only the West will go along.

The Soviet offer, to be sure, is not the final one, it is only an opening "asking bid." But it shows that Soviet diplomacy has not changed. It is tough, it plays its cards close to the chest, and sets out to get the utmost at the least possible cost. One must expect just such tough bargaining with the West at Geneva and thereafter. That no doubt is why Dr. Adenauer said at Harvard yesterday that the negotiations may last a year, if not more.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 17, 1955
8:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Argentine Police say approximately a thousand persons are dead or wounded as a result of yesterday's revolt in Beenos Aires The official figures are: 156 killed--96 gravely wounded..another 750 hurt. President Peron made another radio broadcast today to break the total news blackout from his country. He blames Communists for attacks made on churches last night. He said: "They did not even respect thr religious buildings that are priceless relics of our heritage." There are reports that seven churches were burned. Peron says he will block any further raids on churches. And he told his 19-million people:"We are not fighting religion. I have said a thousand times that I am a Catholic and that many of us are Catholics." He said that the people must decide, at the next election, whether to keep church and state joined, as at present, or to keep the government independent from the Catholic Church.

In Uraguay, 122 Argentine naval officers who revolted against Peron now are being interned. They landed in 37 planes.

And in Vatican City today, Pope Pius heard a report on what's bean going on in Argentina from the two prelates expedled by Peron. Then the Pope gave the Argentine hierarchy, clergy and people his blessing. The Vatican Radio says yesterday's fighting in Buenos Aires "has profoundly upset Cathplics and friends of liberty and human dignity throughout the world." The radio says "Peron follows the initquitious path of persecutors of all times."

In Washington today the Senate overwhelmingly approved the Austrian peace treaty. The vote was 63 to 3..with Republican Senators Jenner of Indiana..Malone of Nevada and McCarthy of Wisconsin voting against it.

Here in New York the Big Three foreign ministers agreed on all procedures for the forthcoming meeting of the heads of state. Then West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer joined the meeting. An authoritative source says Adenauer made it clear that he will ask the Russians to accept such tough conditions before he agrees to visit Moscow, that he may never take the trip.

The President today ended his stay at Operation Alert headquarters. He said his deepest impressions of the air raid exercise was this:"The most devout daily prayers that any of us has should be uttered in supplication that this kind of disaster neve comes to the United States." The President said he derived great encouragement from the test. And he said the most important thing he wanted to make was that no "extraneous matter of any kind" must block congressional action on the militray reserve bills. In an obvious reference to a move in the House to bar racial segregation in the reserves and the National Guard the President said:"This is no place to attach social, political or any other kind of legislation. The bills must be passed for the security and safety" of the nation.

Civil Defense Administrator Val Peterson says the tests show that "American cannot be destroyed by nuclear attack." He's confident tha nation can survive if it does the things necessary for survival.

Radio Moscow says the whole "operation alert" was a government scheme to intimidate the public so that more money can be spent on armaments.

Informed officials in Washington say the Russians recently expelled three American army military attaches from Moscow. There are no official details. But reports from London say the men left two weeks ago and that both Washington and Moscow have kept the whole thing quiet to avoid creating another public incident.

A Senate committee today voted unanimously for a thorough, bi-partisan study of the Administration's security program.

Assistant Defense Secretary Honaman says demands for defense information ought to meet the tests of being "useful..valuable and interesting." In an exchange of letters, J.R. Wiggins, chairman of the Freedom of Information committee of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, points out that there must be a difference of opinion on what these terms mean. He says:"An official inside the Defense Department is not likely to regard as "constructive" information that discloses his own errors."

Some 5-thousand National Maritime Union members here in New York have agreed to end their strike. They've been granted an unemployemnt benefit system. Two smaller unions have not yet agreed on terms.

Here in New York, John Golden, the veteran theatrical producer died today. Golden, who was 80, had made a success as an actor, song-writer, producer and stage costume designer.

Next in importance to the Big Four conference in Geneva next month, is the preparation done by the West for that conference. Three of the Big Four are allies, and they confront the fourth, one of whose objective is to disrupt the alliance of the three. However much the three want tensions reduced in the world, the pattern of the conference has to be rigid: there must be three on one side, unless the fourth will join the three. Otherwise Western unity would be lessened, and the West would lose the conference, and perhaps the cold war.

So the talks between Secretaries Dulles, MacMillan and Pinay, that opened in New York yesterday and continued thorugh today have more than routine significance. They are laying the strategy for the Geneva meeting, insofar as the nature of that meeting can be foreseen. Yesterday, the three ministers examined each other's views on what brought about the conference, and what to expect at Geneva. This morning, They shared their outlooks on the substance of issues that will be raised. This afternoon they talked over the German problem with Chancellor Adenauer.

The three have a general idea of the procedure thay would like to have adopted at Geneva. Theywill suggest to Mr. Molotov, that the conference operate without any fixed agenda. Each of the four chiefs of state would make this statement, about what he considered the primary cause of the world tensions. It is assured that there will be some agreement in what President Eisenhower, Prime Minister Eden and Premiers Faure and Bulganin have to say. The conference then could examine the agreed subjects one by one. The ministers yesterday did not expect the Big Four to reach anydecisions other then to determine the scope and nature of the negotiations that are to follow, at the foreign minister level. It was forseen that Premier Bulganin would try to have Far Eastern issues discussed at Geneva, but the three prefer this to to be held over for a separate conference. Obviously the plan of having no agenda at Geneva had to be sccepted by the Kremlin.

Light on Soviet strategy in Geneva is not coming from Moscow, or other Soviet sources. But a piece of news was leaked yesterday the the Japanese Foreign office, that comes as a warning signal to any who expect agreements to be easily come by, either at Geneva or in the talks to follow. It is news of the terms of a peace treaty offered to Japan by the Soviet Union.

It will be recalled that Japan and the Soviet have no peace treaty, since the Soviet Union refused to sign the treaty the other states at war with Japan signed, four years ago at San Francisco. For some timm the Kremlin has talked about ending the state of war with Japan, which Japan was glad to do, and talks started in London a short while back, Asian countries have been watching closely, because they anticipated that the ties with the United States. The Japanese themselves felt confident that they might be offered some of their territory now held by the Soviet Union. They didn't dare to expect lower Sahhalin, but they did think they might be promised all or some of the Kuriles, and at the very least the islands, close to the coast of Hokaido, since these were not mentioned in the Yalta agreement.

To their amazement and dismay, the Soviet Union offered next to nothing, and not a square inch of territory. The treaty isvirtually the same one which Japan rejected four years ago, except that it does not limit Japan's defense forces. At that time Soviet diplomacy had not to put on a new look, and the ice jam in world relationships was not presumed to be melting.

Some of the offered terms are worth repeating. There is to be a pledge of non-aggression and non - interference. Japan is to relinquish all claims to the territory not occupied by the Soviet Union. Japan would be barred from alliances or military coalitions against any power that fought against Japan in the last war. The Japanese Foreign office, by the way, doesn't think this stipulation necessarily applies to the security treaty with the United States. But a clause in the treaty closes the waters between Japan and Korea, as well as Japan's island seaways, to all military craft except those of the Soviet Union and Communist China. That would prevent the United States from protecting northern Japan or going to the aid of Korea, and would make Japan a part of the Soviet military empire.

The treaty does include a few minor advantages, but it does not even mention the release of the Japanese prisoners still held in the Soviet Union.

One can see why the Japanese Foreign Office leaked the terms of the treaty. The news will being to earth a good many in Japan who have been indulging in sentimental peace talk, based on faith that the new look is Soviet diplomacy opens a new era of generosity, if only the West will go along.

The Soviet offer, to be sure, is not the final one, it is only an opening "asking bid". But it shows that Soviet diplomacy has not changed. It is tough, it plays its cards close to the chest, and sets out to get the utmost at the least possible cost. One must expect just such tough bargaining with the West at Geneva and thereafter. That no doubt is why Dr. Adenauer said at Harvard yesterday that negotiations may last a yeat, if not more.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Here is a news bulletin.....The Chinese Communist radio has just announced that an attempd was made to overthrow the government. The Communists say it was led by what's called "anti-revolutionary elements" who wanted to establish a monarchy. We are not told when this happened. We are told that some persosn have been tried and sentenced to death.

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday June 20, 1955

This is the news:

The President today called on the world to dismantle "its terrible apparatus of fear, mis-trust and weapons" and seek the way toward peace. In a few minutes I'd like to review the President's speech in San Fransisco marking the tenth anniversary of the United Nations.

In Washington today, the Senate passed a military funds bill calling for almost 32-billion dollars. And in a surprise move it rejected the President's plans to cut the Marine force by 22-thousand men. The Senate added 46 millions to keep the Marines at their present authorized strength of 215-thousand men.

At the last minute Democratic Senator Symington of Missouri dropped his plan to ask for another 200-millions for jet fighters. This was because Air Secretary Talbott announced that he was recommending "quantity production" of two fighter planes.. the F 101 and the F 104. (This follows the Administration's recent move to increase the production of B-52 jet bombers by 35 per cent.)

In the House, Chairman Vinson of the Armed Services Committee introduced a military reserve bill which drops the heart of the Administration's bill: the ~~minimum~~ provision for a special six-months training corps for teen-age volunteers. The new bill also removes the proposed presidential authority to call up a maximum of one million reservists without consulting Congress. And it eliminates the controversial National Guard section to which Representative Powell of New York had attached an anti-segregation rider. House Republican Leader Martin says he thinks this Vinson bill will be passed.

An air force spokesman said today that all of the four flyers recently released by the Chinese Communists had "confessed" that they crossed the border from Korea into Red China on orders from the government. The spokesman says no such orders were ever issued. One of the four also "confessed" participating in germ warfare.

The House today passed a bill that would give more than a million federal government workers a seven and a half per cent pay raise. The Senate has approved a ten per cent increase. Its expected that the two houses will agree on an eight per cent compromise increase.

Secretary of Welfare Hobby said today that responsibility for federal action in the Salk anti-polio vaccine situation rests with Surgeon General Scheele. Mrs. Hobby made it clear she is not dissatisfied with the way Dr. Scheele handled things. But she said control of such things as this vaccine rests with the public health service and not the secretary. (Dr. Scheele's health service is an agency of the Welfare Department which is headed by Mrs. Hobby.) The Secretary also said she would not be able to tell if there has been any negligence in handling the whole program "until the answer to the Cutter problem is known"... a reference to the fact that some children innocculated with a vaccine made by the Cutter Labortories developed polio.

The United States Steel Corporation says that later in the week it will offer the C.I.O. steelworkers "a wage increase which we hope will result in a speedy and mutual settlement of our negotiations." U.S. Steel SAYS it is taking into consideration "the co-operation and productive effort of the steelworkers in the last year."

Henry Ford the second says he would like to see all the auto manufacturers bargain together with the C.I.O. auto workers. In an interview in the Detroit News Ford makes it clear he is very much in favor of industry-wide bargaining.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People says it owes President Eisenhower "a debt of gratitude for his firm stand against racial segregation." The Negro group adds: "That praise extends to very few of his own political party." And the Association urges the Democrats to abandon "their present surrender on major civil rights issues and moral principles made in an effort to woo the most reactionary elements in the south."

In Argentina today..according to censored reports from Beunos Aires.. the new chief of the armed forces, General Franklin Lucerno, is trying to get the country back to normal. There has been no confirmation of reports that a triumvirate will soon take over management of thegovernment, with President Peron one of the three new leaders. Rebel officers now in Uruguay say thefight against Peron's government is continuing

In Chicago, Dr. Conant, our ambassador to Germany, said today that West Germany seems determined to keep its new army "under strict civilian control."

Edward R. Murrow: June 20, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

When President Eisenhower last addressed the United Nations he introduced the concept of "atoms for peace." Today's ~~address~~ speech did not contain a comparable innovation, but it was marked by something that the United Nations delegates may not have dared to expect, a strong show of optimism on the theme of peace.

After briefly reviewing the first decade of the United Nations, Mr. Eisenhower took a look at the decade now coming up. "The summer of 1955, like the one of 1945" he said, "is another season of high hope for the world. There again stirs in the hearts of men a renewed devotion to the work for the elimination of war. Each of us here is witness that never in ten years has the will of many nations seemed so resolved to wage an honest and sustained campaign for a just and lasting peace." "These longings" he said, "have strengthened the weak, encouraged the doubtful, heartened the tired, confirmed the believing. Almost, it seems that men, with souls restored, are, with faith and courage, resuming the march toward the greatest human goal."

He spoke of the coming Big Four conference of heads of government. "Whether or not" he said, "we shall reach the initial decision that will start dismantling the terrible apparatus of fear and mistrust and weapons erected since the end of World War II, I do not know." But he did know the basis of success. "It is" he said, "that every individual at that meeting be loyal to the spirit of the United Nations and dedicated to the principles of its charter." And he promised solemnly "to all the men and women of the world who may hear or read my words" that those who represent the United States will strive so to be both loyal and dedicated.

He then followed by summarizing the essence of the charter, as though selecting precisely those principles that have most bearing on issues now before the world. One is the individual rights of man. Another is the right of every people to the kind of government under which it chooses to live, and the right to select in full freedom those who conduct that government. Another is that any nation possessing foreign territories must assist the peoples of those areas to develop free institutions, so they can choose for themselves their permanent political status.

He stressed the conviction expressed in the charter that no nation has the right to employ force aggressively, or threaten to do so. "Those who wrote the charter" he said, "clearly realized that global war has come to pose for civilization a threat of shattering destruction, and a sodden existence by the survivors in a dark and broken world." He also added:

"Likewise they recognized that the first responsibility of every nation is to provide for its own defense, and the clear right to associate itself with other like-minded peoples for the promotion of their common security."

Mr. Eisenhower promised help for others to achieve constantly rising economic levels through American aid, including peaceful uses of atomic energy. "In time" he said in a key passage, "we hope to make unnecessary the vast armaments that - even when maintained only for security - terrify the world with their devastating potentiality, and tax unbearably the creative energies of men. As some success in disarmament is achieved" he went on, "we hope that each of the so-called Great Powers will contribute to the United Nations, for promoting the technical and economic progress of the less productive areas, a portion of the resultant savings in military expenditure."

President Eisenhower stressed another theme that bears on one of the problems of the day. "We and a majority of all nations" he said, "are, I believe, united in another hope: that every government will abstain from attempting itself, or aiding others to attempt, the subversion, coercion, infiltration or destruction of other governments."

His [redacted] Speech Reached its climax with a promise to leave no stone unturned in the work for peace. He said significantly: "We shall reject no method, however novel, that holds any hope, however faint, for a just and lasting peace." He recalled a statement by Lincoln, that the dogmas of the quiet past were inadequate to the stormy present of his day. "Our case is new" Lincoln had said, "so we must think anew and act anew." Mr. Eisenhower applied the words to the second decade of the United Nations. "We must find such a new kind of peace" he said, "that all the world will think anew and act anew." "It cannot be a mere stilling of the guns - it must be a glorious way of life. Scientists" he said, "will be liberated to work always for men, never against them. Who can doubt" he asked, "that in the next ten years world science can so beat down the ravages of disease and the pangs of poverty, that humankind will experience a new expansion of living standards and of cultural and spiritual horizons. In this new kind of peace" he said, "the artist, teacher, philosopher, worker, farmer, producer and scientist will truly work together for the common welfare."

It was not only an eloquent ~~address~~ speech, it was a skillful one. It did not leave it for the Soviet Union to seize the initiative in speaking out for peace at this juncture. Instead of holding back skeptically for proof of Soviet co-operation, the President exhibited a challenging hope. He took the lead.

The search for something resembling a durable peace has occupied mankind through much of history. And even though success has yet to be attained, the desire for lasting peace has not been deminished. Samuel Johnson once remarked ~~appropriately~~: "It is necessary to hope, though hope should always be deluded; for hope itself is happiness and its frustrations - however frequent - are yet less dreadful than its extinction."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 13, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Russians today formally agreed to the western proposal for a Big Four meeting in Geneva on July 18th. But in an official announcement and a news dispatch in the government-controlled Tass agency, they made it clear: they would like the meeting to run longer than the three or four days mentioned by the West and they do not feel that the status of East European Communists or the role of international Communism should be considered at the meeting. The Soviet view is that the meeting should be devoted to "lessen international tensions" .

The Soviet Press statement accused Secretary of State Dulles of trying to set conditions for the conference that would handicap it. And the Russians say if Mr. Dulles wants to discuss Cimmunism, they might discuss Capitalism.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer arrived in Washington today. He told reporters: "My countrymen are convinced that a close and loyal partnership with the peoples of the Free World is the best means of maintaining peace and freedom." He said the West Germans consider the recently ratified Atlantic Pact Alliance with the West as the best means of reunifying Germany in freedom.

Adlai Stevenson said today that at the forthcoming Big Four conference "our role is to keep our hopes high but our heads clear." He said we must honestly and dispassionately consider every suggestion. We should "look for the bases of agreement and be willing to take some reasonalbe chances." He added: To want peace is to want compromise."

In Detroit today, General Motors and the C.I.O. auto workers agreed on a contract parallelling the one the union won from Ford last week. It includes the same guaranteed wage plan and improvements in pay, pessions, vacations and holidays. A similar contract was given to the international Union of Electrical Workers for its 35 thousand GM emoloyees.

Dr. Jonas Salk indicated today that the government may have been responsible for some of the troubles with this anti-polio vaccine. He said this was because the government's original standards were not precise enough. He feels the revised standards "will preclude deviation from the procedures originally intended."

The joint Congressional Atomic Energy Committee today approved the President's plan to help free nations build atomic research reactors. But the committee rejected his proposal to build an atomic powered ship and send it around the world. Chariman Holfield, California Democrat, told reporters: "We deleted the showboat."

The Senate armed services committee has tentatively approved a four year extension of the draft

Admiral Radoford chairman of the joint cheifs of staff, told a House committee today: by helping the free world to arm we are able to reduce our own active military manpower and st ll maintain balanced forces on a global scale. The Admiral said the foreign military aid program is not a give-away but "an essential and realistic" act of self-interest..recognizing that no country alone can match the Communist bloc in manpower.

General Ridgeway, who retires as army chief of staff at the end of this month, had been named chairman of the board of Trustees of the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research.

Democratic party leaders today formally recommended that their 1956 national convention abandon the controversial "loyalty oath". It was this oath that started the North-South party split in 1952.

A Senate elections committee has approved a bill that would set a ceiling of about 12-million dollars an campaign spending on behalf of a presidential nominee. All candidates would be personally responsible for almost all spending on their behalf. It would be a criminal offense to spend money for a candidate without his approval.

The Hoover Commission has called on the President to enforce reforms in what it calls "wasteful property management practices of the government." The Commission says this is costing taxpayers money and diverting revenue from states and cities.

There was new street fighting in Buenos Aires today..before the Metropolitan Cathedral where 23 persons were injured in week-end rioting between supporters of the government and the Roman Catholic Church. No one was hurt.

In Singapore, 15-thousand workers stayed away from their jobs in a Communist-backed strike. And the British government has no progress to report on the 16-day railroad strike in Great Britain.

The United Nations mixed armistice commission today found Egypt guilty of a "flagrant violation" of the armistice agreement..attacking an Israeli truck southeast of Gaza.

With the arrival of the Chancellor Adenauer in Washington today, diplomacy opened its most important term of activity since the war. To put the schedule consecutively, Dr. Adenauer's arrival will be followed almost at once b that of Krishna Menon, special representative of India's Prime Minister Nehru. That means talks at the White House and State Department on his recent visit to Peiping, and the problem of negotiating with Communist China Then comes a meeting with the Big Three foreign ministers in New York, later in the week, with Dr. Adenauer sittin in with Secretary Dulles. Mr. McMillan of Britain and Monsiour Pinay of France. This is in preparation for the meeting of the three Western ministers with Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov in San Francisco next week. On that occasion an effort will be made to reach an agreement on the agenda for the "summit meeting".

But while these matters are occupying the Big Four foreign ministers at San Francisco, the anniversary of the United Nations will have brought together a great array of foreign ministers. Where so many powerful leaders are congregated, a great deal of diplomatic business can be begun. For example, Mr. Molotov is bringing with him several Eastern experts. It is just possible that he may want their advice on including the Far East on the agenda for the meeting at the summit. But it is a far more likely that they are being brought along to establish contacts at San Francisco with visiting ministers from the Far East. It may be that the Kremlin sees in San Francisco the chance to draw even with Communist China, after Chou en-Lai's remarkable successes in separate meetings with so many foreign ministers at Bandung.

As to the meeting at the summit, outright failure now hardly seems possible. For the Big Four hardly would meet simply to declare bankruptcy. So the news will be how much possibility of agreement is seen for negotiations that will follow at the foreign minister level and even lower. The top men will decide little more than the direction and the scope of the negotiations.

As a preparation for a preparation, the Western Powers have been holding meetings in Washington at the level just below the foreign ministers. They have made an appraisal of Soviet policy for the benefit of the Foreign Ministers when they meet in New York. The British and French ambassadors sat down with top experts of the State Department and the National Security Council. The analysis is reported to have shown a prevailing belief that the prime objectives of Soviet policy continue to be to divide the West, detatch smaller countries from Western leadership, and get American military forces withdrawn from Europe and forward bases.

To quote an adage by Dr. Adenauer:"The Russians only change their policy when it no longer is meeting with success." That is to say that the change of Kremlin policy is a new search for an unfound success; it is not a change of heart. But that is not to suggest that the Kremlin will not pay a price for the success. It it is going to win away adherents of the West it will have to make attractive offers. And in East Germany today the Communists show signs of alarm that they are to be the price paid for West Germany's detachment. Soviet spokesmen talked disparagingly about the puppet regime in East Germany to West German correspondents now visiting Moscow. One high Soviet official admitted that the Communists might be beaten in a genuinely free election in East Germany. Deputy Foreign Minister Semyanov told a West German correspondent that the West Germany , with its 45,000,000 population, was very well situated to gain political ascendancy over East Germany, so long as it pursued a policy of peace. And the Soviet news organ in Berlin yesterday attacked sharply those who accuse the Soviet Union of wishing to maintain the partition of Germany, and went on to write hundreds of words on the coming Moscow-Bonn negotiations without even mentioning the East German regime.

The London Observer said yesterday that all recent Russian moves seem to suggest that their main proposals will aim at a mainly military stand still, at regional limitation of armaments, and a phased withdrawal of the forces of the big powers from the center of Europe. Other British sources predict that if an outright sacrifice of East Germany does not prove to be enough, to buy the withdrawal of the United States Forces, the Kremlin might raise the ante. They suggest that Moscow might propose adding Czechoslovakia and Hungary to the proposed great neautral buffer area, comprising a united Germany and Jugo lavia. They would not let the two satellites desert to the West, but would envisage their enjoying the same status as Jugoslavia . That is, they would continue to be Communist, and the West would be assured of normal relations so long as their Foreign offices were independent, like Tito's, and they could do business with the West like him. By such an offer the Kremlin wuld have to pull its own army out of these countries. Maybe Secretary Dulles had an inkling of such a possibility when he said we would raise the issue of the satellites at the summit.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The series of diplomatic conferences about to take place should serve to remind us all that in matters of international politics, anything can happen. Perhaps Alexander Pope had some good advice to offer when he said: "Blessed is he who expects nothing, for he shall never be disappointed." And in a more optimistic vein, Robert Louis Stevenson suggested:"To travel hopefully is a better bhing than to arrive, and the true success is to labor."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday, June 21, 1955

This is the news:

The Big Four have agreed that at the Summit conference to be held in July they will discuss any subject " believed to be a contributory cause of world tensions." Undersecretary of State Herbert Hoover Junior made this known today in testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He was opposing Senator McCarthy's resolution to have the Senate insist that the Russians discuss the question of the Communist satellites. One Senator said later, the McCarthy move was voted down. Hoover said the purpose of the broad agreement of the Big Four is to "eliminate possible arguments on the fixing of a rigid agenda."

The Foreign Ministers of the Big Four met in San Fransisco and apparently completed arrangements. British Foreign Secretary McMillan appealed for a further easing of tension between East and West.

And in London, former Prime Minister Churchill said he is hopeful that the Geneva conference will ease these tensions. But, he said, "We must not count upon complete and immediate success. We must persevere in the maintenance of peace through strength, for that is our theme."

In Moscow, Soviet Premier Bulganin said his country will try to reduce international tensions and consolidate confidence among all nations. (Only yesterday the President made a similar committment at the United Nations meeting at San Fransisco.)

The Bulganin statement ecame at a Moscow rally attended by some one hundred thousand persons, to honor India's Prime Minister Nehru. He is completing a two-week visit to Russia. And he told the crowd today: Bulganin has agreed to visit India in the future. Nehru also said that the exclusion of Red China from the United Nations is "not only an abnormal phenomenon, but a danger to peace." ~~He said "We shall soon see" Red China in the U.N. And he added: "The [illegible] must be prevented from committing suicide when it is on the threshold of triumph."~~

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer said today: "Nowhere was Hitler ~~im~~ so enthusiastically received as in Vienna." This remark came during a ~~[illegible]~~ heated debate in the West German parliament. Austrian officials reacted with shock and anger.

In Rome, the Christiam Democratic Party has withdrawn ~~his~~ its support from Premier Mario Scelba. He'll Expected to Resign tomorrow. ~~and has resigned~~

There was no announced change in the structure of the Argentine government today despite ~~the~~ speculation that it would be re-organized, as a result of last week's revolt. E.G. Maley, an American publishing executive who [redacted] witnessed the revolt said in Rio de Janeiro today that he thinks the death toll [redacted] could reach 3-thousand. He says President Peron is "now in the hands of the army."

Admiral Carney, the chief of naval operations, said in Los Angeles today, that the Russians are challenging allied naval supremacy in the Pacific.

And Major General Creasy, the chief [redacted] army chemical officer, says the potential threat from germ and chemical warfare is as great as the danger from atomic weapons.

~~The Army announced that on July second, some 18-thousand soldiers, their families and possessions, will leave Fort Riley, Kansas for Wurzburg, Germany. And when they start arriving in Germany, 18-thousand other soldiers will start heading for Fort Riley. The Army calls this the biggest overseas movement of service personnel in peacetime history.~~

The President today signed the new trade agreements bill and said it will help bolster the defenses of the free world.

The Washington Evening Star says Army Secretary Stevens is resigning as of July 31. There is no comment from Stevens. And the White House says it has no resignation at all..oral or written.

The House Armed Services Committee has refused to take quick action on a new military reserves bill..its been sent to a sub-committee for five days of study.

Welfare Secretary Hobby says "a thorough-going review and inquiry" is essential before any new social security law is passed. But Democrats on the House Ways and Means committee voted 15 to 10 against a Republican move to force open hearings on the Democratic proposals. The Democrats would: make women eligible for benefits at 62 instead of 65... allow immediate benefits to totally and permanently disabled workers..instead of making them wait until age 65. The Democrats would also continue benefits to the children of physically or mentally incapacitated workers after the children have reached the age of 18.

The Census Bureau estimates that one and a half million Americans have quit smoking completely in the last 18 months. Thirty-five million others continue to be regular smokers. This sample study was made for the National Cancer Institute of the Public Health Service. There is no way of telling how many persons who have quit smoking were influenced by the discussion of a possible relation between ciagrets and lung cancer.

Edward R. Murrow: June 21, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Many people in this country undoubtedly have a comfortable feeling that the Eisenhower administration is doing something big, imaginative and effective about sharing our atomic knowledge for the benefit of the world. # The atoms-for-peace idea has boundless possibilities. President Eisenhower, speaking at the Penn State commencement, said that the uranium potentially available probably contains twenty times as much power as all the world's coal, petroleum and natural gas resources combined.

But the sharing now actually being done by the United States is not making all our friends happy, and critics point out that we do not yet exert a commanding leadership in atomic matters.

There are three kinds of atomic sharing to be taken into account. One is the sharing of military information. An agreement with Great Britain and Canada was announced yesterday which takes advantage of the relaxation of secrecy about atomic matters as legislated last year. But its terms do not much please the British. There will be no disclosure of information on the design and manufacture of atomic weapons, (which still is not permitted by law.) "What kind of partnership is this?" asked the London Times today, "which must be kept so perilously hobbled?" "The use of atomic weapons, their effects and defense against them" it said, "can be discussed together but not the weapons themselves. In the race for safety, perhaps survival, the Allies deliberately handicap themselves."

Pentagon experts can argue, that there is a case for not sharing information about atomic weapons, because of a possible failure of British security. It naturally wants to keep knowledge of atomic weapons from the Iron Curtain countries.

But this argument does not apply to the other two kinds of atomic sharing, both of which are now legal. One is sharing the knowledge of how to make a research reactor, the other, how to make a power reactor. Only in the field of research reactors, is the Administration escaping criticism. Under the relaxed secrecy laws, the Administration is setting up a program to supply other countries with such reactors, and bear half the cost.

President Eisenhower also has proclaimed, that we will supply information about power reactors, but as he put it, "within prudent security considerations."

Gordon Dean, former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, believes there is a serious misconception about the security involved. Speaking on an Atoms-for-Peace forum, at "The Nation's" birthday dinner, he said that the United States remains significantly aloof from the world atomic picture, except in its public pronouncements and speeches. We could revolutionize the world, he said, but probably will do only part of the revolutionizing. What the world wants, he pointed out, is power reactors, that is atomic furnaces to generate power. If we don't supply the information about making them, and allow our industry to make and export them, other countries, he said, will do it, and we shall lose friends and forfeit influence.

If we do not move soon, he warned, England will surely do so. He told how Sweden wanted a research reactor, and later a power reactor. At the time it couldn't get the research reactor in the United States, so it extracted uranium from its own shale, turned to France to bring uranium oxide to the metal stage, to the United Kingdom for help in making fuel, and to Norway for heavy water. So it built its own research reactor. Now it is building a power reactor. India and Brazil, he said, have turned to France. "In fact" he said, "practically every country in Europe has turned for atomic assistance to England and France, and received it - assistance frequently refused by the United States." Argentina has perfected a process for producing pure uranium metal, but with the help of a German company. At the coming Geneva atomic conference, the Soviet Union promises to supply information about its own power reactor.

The reason the United States holds back in this field is because the power reactor, in making heat, makes plutonium, and plutonium is fissionable material usable in an A-bomb. "I very much fear" said Mr. Dean sarcastically, "that we are still operating on the theory that some day the Russians will be able to build a power reactor, make plutonium and fabricate an atomic bomb."

He advocated sweeping aside altogether the security restrictions about power reactors. Even if the Soviet Union got some additional plutonium, he argued, the amount would be only a drop in the bucket compared with what that country already has produced. Mr. Dean wants no secrecy about atoms for peace, and also no control over making and exporting power reactors. We should face up to the fact, he said, that we are talking about nothing more than a new source of power. American industries, he said, should be free to compete in the world markets. They should sell power reactors to mining countries in the Far North, the high Andes, the jungles of Africa. They should be able to instal central power stations where needed. They should supply the power to convert salt water to fresh, irrigate the deserts, and alter the entire face of the globe. That, he said, is the way to make friends and exert leadership.

Judging by the temperature readings in many parts of the country, it's all too apparent that this is the first day of summer. There's some slight comfort in the conclusion once reached by Erasmus that "Summer will not last forever." And when you're really warm, think of what Sydney Smith once wrote:" Heat ma'am. It's so dreadful that I find there's nothing left but to take off my flesh and sit in my bones."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

¶ Many people in this country undoubtedly have a comfortable feeling that the Eisenhower administration is doing something big, imaginative and effective about sharing our atomic knowledge for the benefit of the world. The atoms-for-peace idea has boundless possibilities. President Eisenhower, speaking at the Penn State commencement, said that the uranium potentially available probably contains twenty times as much power as all its coal, petroleum and natural gas resources combined.

¶ But the sharing now actually being done by the United States is not making all our friends happy, and critics point out that we do not yet exert a commanding leadership in atomic matters.

¶ There are three kinds of atomic sharing to be taken into account. One is the sharing of military information. An agreement with Great Britain and Canada was announced yesterday which takes advantage of the relaxation of secrecy about atomic matters as legislated last year. But its terms do not much please the British, because there will be no disclosure " information on the design and manufacture of atomic weapons, which is not permitted by law."What kind of partnership is this" asked the London Times today,"which must be kept so perilously hobbled?" "The use of atomic weapons, their effects and defense against them" it said, "can be discussed together, but not the weapons themselves. In the race form safety, perhaps survival, the Allies deliberately handicap themselves."

¶ Pentagon experts can argue that there is a case for not sharing information about atomic weapons, because of a possible failure of British security. It wants to keep knowledge of atomic weapons from the Iron Curtain countries.

¶ But this argument does not apply to the other two kinds of atomic sharing, both of which are now legal. One is sharing the knowledge of how to make a research reactor, the other, how to make a power reactor. Only in the field of research reactors is the Administration escaping criticism. Under the relaxed secrecy laws, the Administration is setting up a program to supply other countries with such reactors, and bear half the cost.

¶ President Eisenhower also has proclaimed that we will supply information about reactors, but as he put it,"within prudent security considerations."

Gordon Gray, former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, believes there is a serious misconception about the security involved. Speaking on an Atoms-for-Peace forum at The Nation's birthday dinner, he said that the United States remains significantly aloof from the world atomic picture, except in its public pronouncements and speeches. We could revolutionize the world, he said, but probably will do only part of the revolutionizing. What the world wants, he pointed out, is power reactors, that is, atomic furnaces to generate power. If we don't supply the information about making them, and allow our industry to make and export them, other countries, he said, will do it, and we shall lose friends and forfeit influence.

If we do not move soon, he warned, England will surely do so. He told how Sweden wanted a research reactor, and later a power reactor. At the time it couldn't get the research reactor in the United States, so it extracted uranium from its own shale, turned to France to bring uranium oxide to the metal stage, to the United Kingdom for help in making fuel, and to Norway for heavy water. So it built its own research reactor and now it is building a power reactor. India and Brazil, he said, have turned to France. "In fact," he said, "practically every country in Europe has turned for atomic assistance to England and France and received it, assistance frequently refused by the United States. Argentina has perfected a process for producing pure uranium metal, but with the help of a German company. At the coming Geneva atomic conference, the Soviet Union promises to supply information about its own power reactor.

¶ The reason the United States holds back in this field is because the power reactor in making heat, makes plutonium, and plutonium is fissionable material usable in an A-bomb. "I very much fear" said Mr. Dean sarcastically, "that we are still operating on the theory that some day the Russians will be able to build a power reactor, make plutonium and fabricate an atomic bomb."

¶ He advocated sweeping aside altogether the security restrictions about power reactors. Even if the Soviet Union got some additional plutonium, he argued, the amount would be only a drop in the bucket compared with what that country has produced. Mr Dean wants no secrecy about atoms for peace, and also no control over making and exporting power reactors. We should face up to the fact, he said, that we are talking about nothing more than a new source of power. American industries, he said, should be free to compete in the world markets. They should sell power reactors to mining countries in the Far North, the high Andes, the jungles of Africa. They should be able to instal central power stations where needed. They should supply the power to convert salt water to fresh, irrigate the deserts, and alter the entire face of the globe. That, he said, is the way to make friends and exert leadership.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 21. 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Big Four have agreed that at the Summit conferences to be held in July they will discuss any subject "believed to be a contributary cause of world tensions." Undersecretary of State Herbert Hoover Junior made this known today in testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. He was opposing Senator McCarthy's resolution to have the Senate insist that the Russians discuss the question of the Communist satellites. One Senator said later the McCarthy move was voted down. Hoover said the purpose of the broad agreement of the Big Four is to "eliminate possible arguments on the fixing of a rigid agenda."

The Foreign Ministers of the Big Four met in San Francisco and apparently completed arrangements. British Foreign Secretary McMillan appealed for a further easing of tensions between East and West.

And in London, former Prime Minister Churchill said he is hopeful that the Geneva conference will ease these tensions. But, he said, "We must not count upon complete and immediate success. We must preserve in the maintenance of peace through strength, for that is our theme."

In Moscow, Soviet Premier Bulganin said his country will try to reduce international tensions and consolidate confidence among all nations. Only yesterday the President made a similar committment at the United Nations meeting at San Francisco.

The Bulganin statement came at a Moscow rally attended by some one hundred thousand persons to honor India's Prime Minister Nehru. He is completing a two-week visit to Russia. And he told the crowd today: Bulganin has agreed to visit India in the future. Nehru also said the exclusion of Red China from the United Nations is "not only an abnormal phenomenon but a danger to peace."

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer said today: "Nowhere was Hitler so enthusiastically received as in Vienna."This remark came during a heated debate in the West German parliament. Austrian officials reacted with shock and anger.

In Rome, the Chirstian Democratic Party has withdrawn its support from Premier Mario Scelba. He's expected to resign tomorrow.

There was no announced change in the structure of the Argentine government today despite speculation that it would be reorganized as a result of last week's revolt. E.G. Maley, an American publishing executive who witnessed the revolt said in Rio de Janerio today that he thinks the death toll could reach 3-thousand. He says President Peron is "now in the hands of the army."

Admiral Carney, the chief of naval operations, said in Los Angeles today that the Russians are challenging allied naval supremacy in the Pacific.

And Major General Creasy, the chief army chemical officer, sa s the potential threat from germ and chemical warfare is as great as the danger from atomic weapons.

The President today signed the new trade agreements bill and said it will help bolster the defenses of the free world.

The Washington Evening Star says Ar y Secretary Stevens is resigning as of July 31. There is no comment from Stevens. And the White House says it has no resignation at all..oral or written.

The House Armed Services Committee has refused to take quick action on a new military reserve bill. It's been sent to a sub committee for five days of study.

Welfare Secretary Hobby says "a thorough-going review and inquiry is essential before any new social security law is passed. But Democrats on the House Ways and Means committee voted 15 to 10 against a Republican move to force open hearings on the Democratic proposals. The Democrats would: make women eligible for benefits at 62 instead of 65...allow immediate benefits to totally and permanently disabled workers..instead of making them wait until age 65. The Democrats would also continue benefits to the children of physically or mentally incapacitated workers after the cilldren have reached the age of 18.

The Census Bureau estimates that one and a half million Americanss have quit smoking completely in the last 19 months. Thirty-five million others continue to be regular smokers This sample study was made for the National Cancer Institute of the Public Health Service. There is no way of telling how many persons who have quit smoking were influenced by the discussion of a possible relation between cigaretts and lu g cancer.

Many people in this country undoubtedly have a comfortable feeling that the Eisenhower administration is toing something big, imaginative and effective about sharing our atomic knowledge for the fenefit of the world.

The atoms for peace idea has boundless possiblitiess. President Eisenhower, speaking at the Penn State commencement, said that the uranium potentially abailable probably contains twenty times as much power as all the world's coal, petroleum and natural gas resources combined.

But the sharing now actually being done by the United States is not making all our friends happy, and critics point out that we do not yet exert a commanding leadership in atomic matters.

There are three kinds of atomic sharing to be taken into account. One is the sharing of military information. An agreement with Great Britain and Canada was announced yesterday which takes advantage of the relaxation of secrecy about atomic matters as legislated last year. But its terms do not much please the British. There will be no disclosure of information on the design and manufacture of atomic weapons, which still is not permitted by law. "What kind of partnership is this?" asked the London Times today, "which must be kept so perilously hobbled?" "The use of atomic weapons, their effects and defense against them" it said, "can be discussed together but not the weapons themselves. In the race for safety, perhaps survival, the Allies deliberately handicap themselves."

Pentagon experts can argue that there is a case for not sharing information about atomic weapons, because of a possible failure of British security. It naturally wants to keep knowledge of atomic weapons from the Iron Curtain countries.

But this argument does not apply to the other two kinds of atomic sharing, both of which are now legal. One is sharing the knowledge of how to make a research reactor, the other, how to make a power reactor. Only in the field of research reactors is the Administration escaping criticism. Under the relaxed secrecy laws, the Amdinistration is setting up a program to supply other countries with such reactors, and bear half the cost.

President Eisenhower also has proclaimed that we will supply information about power reactors, but as he put it, "within prudent security considerations".

Gordon Dean, former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, believes there is a serious misconception about the security involved. Speaking on an Atoms-for-Peace forum at "The Nation's birthday dinner, he said that the United States remains significantly aloof from the world atomic pictures, except in its public pronouncements and speeches. We could revolutionize the world, he said, but probably will do only part of the revolutionizing. What the world wants, he pointed, out, is power reactors, that is atomic furnaces to generate power. If we don't supply the information about making them, and allow our industry to make and export them. other countries, he said, will do it, and we shall lose friends and forfeit influence.

If we do not move soon, he warned, England will surely do so, He told how Sweeden wanted a research reactor, and later a power reactor. At the time it couldn't get the research reactor in the United States, so it extracted uranium from its own shale, turned to France to bring uranium oxide to the metal stage, to the United Kingdom for help in making fuel and to Norway for heavy water. So it built its own research reactor. Now it is building a power reactor. India and Brazil, he said, have turned to France. "In fact" he said, "practically every country in Europe has turned for atomic assistance to England and France, and received it - assistance frequently refused by the United States." Argentina has perfected a process for producing pure uranium metal, but with the help of a German company. At the coming Geneva atomic conference, the Soviet Union promises to supply information about its own power reactor.

The reason the United States holds back in this field is because the power reactor, in making heat, makes plutonium, and plutonium is fissionable material usable in an A-bomb. "I very much fear" said Mr. Dean sarcastically, "that we are still operating on the theory that some day the Russians will be able to build a power reactor, make plutonium and fabricate an atomic bomb."

He advocated sweeping aside altogether the security restrictions about power reactors. Even if the Soviet Union got some additional plutonium, he argued, the amount would be only a drop in the bucket compared with that that country already has produced. Mr. Dann wants no secrecy about atoms for peace, and also no control over making and exporting power reactors. He should face up to the fact, he said, that we are talking about nothing more than a new source of power. American industries, he said, should be free to compete in the world markets. They should sell power reactors to mining countries in the Far North, the high Andes, the jungles of Africa. They should be able to install central power stations where needed. They should supply the power to convertstale water to fresh, irrigate the deserts, and later the entire face of the globe. That, he said, is the way to make friends and exert leadership.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Judging by the temperature readings in many parts of the country, it's all to apparent that this is the first day of summer." There's some slight comfort in the conclusion once reached by Erasmus that "Summer will not last forever." And when you're really warm, think of what Sydney Smith once wrote:"Heat ma'am ..It's so dreadful that I find there's nothing left but to take off my flesh and sit in my bones."

Good Night and Good Luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

A leading polio expert recommended today that all anti-polio innoculations be suspended. And Dr. Albert Sabin, of the Children's Hospital Research Foundation in Cincinnati, also told a House committee that the manufacture of the Salk vaccine should be discontinued until..as he put it..."a less dangerous preparation can be perfected." Dr. Sabin cautioned against proceeding to fast. He said: "We cannot afford another Cutter incident" ..a reference to the fact that some children innoculated with the Cutter vaccine later developed polio.

Dr. Thomas M. Rivers of the Rockerfeller Institute for Medical Research told the House investigators he disagrees with Dr. Sabin..he urged continued manufacture of the Salk vaccine.

Dr. Jonas Salk took no part in the argument except to warn against "loosing sight of the forest for the trees." He said : "I prefer to remain in the role of an investigator providing the facts." But later, speaking to reporters, Dr. Salk expressed confidence in the current innoculation program.

The President was in Rutland, Vermont today..starting a six-day visit to the Northern New England States. He told 25-thousand persons at the Vermont State Dairy Festival that we will always remain strong. "But always in one hand will be the olive branch, held out to all who will take it in honesty and integrity." Mr. Eisenhower added, "we must be determined. We must not sacrifice principle for expediency."

The Weather Bureau has issued a tornado alert for West Central Vermont in the general area in which the President it staying.

At San Francisco today, Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov called on the United Nations to " pass from words to deeds and embark upon such steps as would lead to the establishment of the necessary trust among nations." We'll hear a direct report from San Francisco in a few minutes.

The White House today announced the resignation of Army Secretary Stevens. Before he left tho Vermont the President accepted Seeven's resignation which was made for "compelling personal considerations." The President accepted the resignation with deep regret, praised Stevens for his devotion and told him he had contributed "extensively to the vital task of reshaping our military forces to conform the the conditions of our time." The President has nominated Wilbur M. Brucker of Michigan to succeed Stevens. Brucker, who will be 61 tomorrow, is a former Republican governor of Michigan. He has been serving as the Pentagon's general counsel. In the exchange between Setvens and the President there has no mention of the Army-McCarthy hearings of a year ago.

The Senate today overwhelmingly voted against a resolution by Senator McCarthy aimed at forcing the Big Four conference to disuuss the state of the Soviet Satellites. It would have asked the President to obtain an agreement before the conference, to discss the satellites at the Geneva conference. The vote against the McCarthy proposal was 77 to 4. McCarthy was joined by Republican senators Langer of North Dakota..Malone of Nevada and Jenner of Indiana. The Senate refused to permit McCarthy to amend his resolution or to withdraw it.

Senate-House negotiators today agreed on a seven and a half per cent pay increase for more than a million federal workers. Leaders of both parties say the President will approve it. The increases will add about 328-million dollars to the government's four and a third billion dollar pay roll.

In Moscow today India's Prime Minister Nehru and Soviet Premier Bulganin signed a joint communique. The Soviet Foreign Ministry says the text will be made public.tomorrow.

The News China news agency said today that Ho Chi Minh, the ruler of Communist-North Viet Nam, has left Hanoi to talk with government leaders of Russia and Communist China. This comes less than a month before authoritess of North and South Viet Nam are supposed to begin talks for country wide elections.

Italian Premier Mario Scelba was forced to resign today because of a rightist minority in his own Christian Democrat party. It was just two months ago that pro-western Permier Scelba toured the United States. My colleague . . Bill Downs reports from Rome that the experts there feel that it will be impossible to form a new government and that a general election may be the only solution.

In Beunos Aires, Argentine army guards have been withdrawn from government headquarters. And the government says political prisoners are now being relesasd. Army Minister Franklin Lucero in a broadcast to the nation raised Peron as "the very excellent president of the nation.

Now, for a report on today's activities at the United Nations meeting, here is Winston Burdett reporting from San Francisco.

BURDETT: Russia's foreign Minister Molotov swept up ans wrapped together all the major Soviet policy statements of the past year or so and presented them in a single massive package today to the United Nations anniversary meeting here. There was nothing new in his speech. There was not a single demand or claim or proposal that has not been thoroughly aired and advertised before. But from the lofty rostrum of the United Nations with thirty-seven foreign ministers and four hundred other world diplomats following his every word, and a capacity audience that overflowed into the aisles of the San Francisco Opera House, with this platform and with this assembly, Molotov gave the old words and the old slagans a new twist. When he had finished, the propaganda ...? was perfectly clear. It was as though he had said "This is our program. What is yours?" It was a speech clearly aimed at world opinion in the weeks before Geneva.

Molotov laid out the terms of his program in one, two, three order. His major terms for peace were these: The dismantling of all military bases on foreign soil; the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Germany; a collective security system for all of Europe; and a Far Eastern settlement that would give Formosa to Red China. He embroidered the central demands with some other familiar Russian slogans: more cultural tiesamong the nations; more trade; more traveling delegations; and, more tourism. All of these are the first steps, Molotov said, the first deeds, as he called them, that are necessary to establish trust among the nations. Once performed they whould open the way, he said, for disarmament and the banning of atomic weapons. There is, possibly, something new here, the implication that no serious headway can be made on disarmament until these perliminary steps are taken.

Molotov called for Red China's early admission to the United Nations, and he demanded also that Red China take part in any world disamrmemnt talks.

On the subject of disarmement, Molotov claimed that Russia has made a substantial concession to Western views by agreeing to set a fixed limit on her armed forces. "Thus", he said, "the West can no longer claim that Russia has any special advantages in conventional weapons and, therefore," he concluded, "there is no reason for the West to put off the question of atomic disarmament. It is up to the United States and other Western powers," he said, "to make the next move." And this was the real point of his speech. Molotov was saying, in effect, "We Russians have done everything, what are the Americans going to do?" And he did not hesitate to pick up and use an American phrase "We should pass," he said, "from words to deeds."

It was clear that what Molotov have us today was a statement of his program for coming negotiations; his agenda for Geneva; a list of the subjects that Bulganin will want to talk about there and more than a hint of how he will talk about them.

This was the speech that everyone has been waiting for this week, and as soon as it ias over, most of the world's imortant statesmen who had been listening to it, disgorged into the foyer to talk it over the wide colonnaded morble foyer of the opera house. Within two minutes it was a crowded , noisy concourse of diplomats and newsmen. I asked a member of the British delegation what he thought of the Molotov speech. His joking answer was "The whole thing was out of order." That he means was that Molotov had ranged over most of the world's controversial issues and political controversy is supposed to be taboo at this anniversary session.

General Carlos Romulo, of the Philippines, was angry. Romulo told me that he had been strongly tempted to rise and object to the end of the Molotov speech, and to point out to the presiding officer, Eelco van Kleffans, that if van Kleffans had ruled the Syrian delegate out of order yesterday for one small reference to Arab nationalism, then certainly, he should have brought down his gavel on Molotov with all his talk of aggressive imperialistic blocks. Romulo said "What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. Big powers should be disciplined along with the little."

Romulo added that the only reason he did not object was that he did not wish to spoil the feeling of amity which everyone is trying hard to preserve at this birthday party.

But a little later, for a few hectic moments, this amity was really shaken and General Romulo himself was in the midst of the fray. The orator was Emilio Portuondo, the delegate of Cuba, who vigorously assailed the Soviet enslavement of more than a hundred million persons in Eastern Europe. The gavel of Mr. Van Klevfens sharply interrupted him. Van Kleffens asked that the Cuban refrain from political attacks. General Romulo thereupon leaped from his chair ran up in front of the rostrum, crying, amid the general hubub, "I protest. Mr. Molotov raised many controvsrsial issues". But in the end Mr. Van Kleffans ruling that this is not the place for any debate, prevailed. The Cuban went on and finished his speech, dropping those parts of it which he was compelled to drop by the ruling of the chair. He then took his seat with a thunderous ovation ringing in his ears. Secretary Dulles stood up and went to the aisle to shake his hand. Molotov sat in silence frowning and the rest of the Russians frowned along with him.

I should report in conclusion that the Big Four meeting here is over, formally and happily, over. Britains's Foreign Secretary Harold MacMillan is leading for London today. He had a last private talk with Molotov and a Brtish spokesman tells me that although the Russian has not yet given his formal agreement to all the western proposals for the Geneva meeting, the whole assumption now is that all is light and harmony, no hitches are expected. "As far as the Big Four in Geneva are concerned," the British spokesman says, "the party here is over." And that's pretty much the story from San Francisco today.

That was Winston Burdett reporting from San Francisco. Thes is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It is perhaps a relfection of the times in which we are living, that statesmen, more and more, are calling for fewer words and more deeds. George Herbert once put it well when he said: "It is more painful to do nothing than something." But unfortunately, A. Connon Doyle came closer to reality in concluding:"What you do in this world is a matter of no consiquence. The question is what can you make people believe you have done."

Good Night and Good Luck.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, June 22, 1955
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Now for a report on today's activities at the United Nations meeting, here is Winston Burdett reporting from San Francisco.

BURDETT: Russia's Foreign Minister Molotov swept up and wrapped together all the major Soviet policy statements of the past year or so and presented them in a single massive package today to the United Nations anniversary meeting here. There was nothing new in his speech. There was not a single demand or claim or proposal that has not been thoroughly aired and advertised before. But from the lofty rostrum of the United Nations, with thirty-seven ~~mmmmmm~~ foreign ministers and four hundred other world diplomats following his every word, and a capacity audience that overflowed into the aisles of the San Francisco Opera House, with this platform and with this assembly, Molotov gave the old words and the old slogans a new twist. When he had finished, the propaganda ...? was perfectly clear. It was as though he had said "This is our program. What is yours?" It was a speech clearly aimed at world opinion in the weeks before Geneva.

Molotov laid out the terms of his program in one, two, three order. His major terms for peace were these: The dismantling of all military bases on foreign soil; the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Germany; a collective security system for all of Europe; and a Far Eastern settlement that would give Formosa to Red China. He embroidered the central demands with some other familiar Russian slogans: more cultural ties among the nations; more trade; more traveling delegations; and, more tourism. All of these are the first steps, Molotov said, the first deeds, as he called them, that are necessary to establish trust among the nations. Once performed they should open the way, he said, for disarmament and the banning of atomic weapons. There is, possibly, something new here, the implication that no serious headway can be made on disarmament until these preliminary steps are taken.

Molotov called for Red China's early admission to the United Nations, and he demanded also that Red China take part in any world disarmament talks.

On the subject of disarmament, Molotov claimed that Russia has made a substantial concession to Western views by agreeing to set a fixed limit on her armed forces. "Thus," he said, "the West can no longer claim that Russia has any special advantage in conventional weapons and, therefore," he condluded, "there is no reason for the West to put off the question of atomic disarmament. It is up to the United States and the other Western powers," he said, "to make the next move." And this was the real point of his speech. Molotov was saying, in effect, "we Russians have done everything, what're the Americans going to do?" And he did not hesitate to pick up and use an American phrase "We should pass," he said, "from words to deeds."

It was clear that what Molotov gave us today was a statement of his program for coming negotiations; his agenda for Geneva; a list of the subjects that Bulganin will want to talk about there and more than a hint of how he will talk about them.

This was the speech that everyone has been waiting for this week, and as soon as it was over, most of the world's important statesmen who had been listening to it, disgorged into the foyer to talk it over, the wide colonnaded marble foyer of the opera house. Within two minutes it was a crowded, noisy concourse of diplomats and newsmen. I asked a member of the British delegation what he thought of the Molotov speech. His joking answer was "The whole thing was out of order." What he meant was that Molotov had ranged over most of the world's controversial issues and political controversy is supposed to be taboo at this anniversary session.

General Carlos Romulo, of the Philippines, was angry. Romulo told me that he had been strongly tempted to rise and object at the end of the Molotov speech, and to point out to the presiding offi cer, Eelco van Kleffens, that if van Kleffens had ruled the Syrian delegate out of or-day yesterday for one small reference to Arab nationalism, then certainly, he should have brought down his gavel on Molotov with all his talk of aggressive imperialistic blocks. Romulo said "What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. Big powers should be disciplined along with the little."

Romulo added that the only reason he did not object was that he did not wish to spoil the feeling of amity which everyone is trying hard to preserve at this birthday party.

But a little later, for a few hectic moments, this amity was rudely shaken and GeneralRomulo himself was in the midst of the g fray. The orator was Emilio Portuondo, the delegate of Cuba, who vigorously assailed the Soviet enslavement of more than a hundred million persons in Eastern Europe. The gavel of Mr. Van Kleffens sharply interrupted him. Van Kleffens asked that the Cuban refrain from political attacks. General Romulo thereupon leaped from his chair and ran up in front of the rostrum, crying, amid the general hubub, "I protest. Mr. Molotov raised many controversial issues." But in the end Mr. Van Kleffens' ruling, that this is not the place for any debate, prevailed. The Cuban went on and finished his speech, dropping those parts of it which he was compelled to drop by the ruling ofthe chair. He then took his seat with a thunderous ovation ringing in his ears. Secretary Dulles stood up and went to the aisle to shake his hand. Molotov sat in silence frowning and the rest of the Russians frowned along with him.

I should report in conclusion that the Big Four meeting here is over, formally and happily, over. Britain's Foreign Secretary Harold Macmillan is leaving for London today. He had a last private talk with Molotov and a British spokesman tells me that although the Russian has not yet given his formal agreement to all the western proposals for the Geneva meeting, the whole assumption now is that all is light and harmony, no hitches are expected. "As far as the Big Four in Geneva are concerned," the British spokesman says, "the party here is over." And that's pretty much the story from San Francisco today. (30)

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

A group of polio experts voted 8 to 3 today to continue the Salk anti-polio vaccination program this summer. In an unofficial poll before a House committee the majority of scientists present ignored criticism by a few scientists that the vaccine is not safe enough. Dr. Jonas E. Salk, who developed the vaccine, did not vote. The panel was in unanimous agreement to try to get "weaker strains" into the polio virus as soon as possible. The big argument against continuing the Salk vaccine program came from Dr. Albert Sabin of Cincinnati. He said: "I cannot ask anyone to come forward and take the chance of getting polio..thorugh vaccination..which they might not get anyway." And the majority opinion was summed up by Dr. James A. Shannon of the National Institutes of Health. He said:"The present vaccine is sufficiently safe for use. The risk is slight, much less than that of getting polio by ordinary means."

Surgeon General Scheele later told the committee:"The government continues to endorse the manufacture and use of the Salk vaccine. The Public Health Service repeats its belief that the present vaccine is effective and safe for use."

In St. Louis, Basil O'Connor, head of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, strongly defended the vaccine's safety and attacked those who favor suspending the inoculation program. He said criticism by Dr. Sabin is "old stuff."

At the United Nations meeting in San Francisco, French Foreign Minister Pinay called for a unified Germany. He said the West must reject Russian efforts to turn Germany into a neautral buffer state. We'll hear a direct report from San Francisco in a few minutes.

Russia and India have now made public the agreement they reached at the end of the Indian Prime Minister Nehru's visit to the Soviet Union. Both countries favor a ban on nuclear weapons..a seat in the United Nations for Communist China..and the surrender of Formosa to Red China.

In London, Left-wing Laborite Aneurin Bevan has been elected to the party's "shadow cabinet" which would take-over the government in the event Prime Minister Eden's Conservative government should fall.

And in Argentina, President Peron's cabinet resigned today..all 16 ministers submitting their resignations so that Peron can reor anize the government.

In Washington, Defense Secretary Wilson announced that Deputy Secretary Robert B. Anderson is going to resign in the next few months. Wilson says he has been so informed by Anderson, a Texan, who came to Washington as Secretary of the Navy and then was promoted to Deputy Secretary of Defense. The Wilson statement adds: "Mr. Anderson said that he was not prepared to say what he would do upon leaving the government. A successor will be nominated shortly." The Wilson statement did not say why Anderson is resigning. And Anderson was not available for comment. Only yesterday Army Secretary Stevens submitted his resignation to the president.

The United States Court of Appeals in Washington ruled today that Americans have a "natural right" to travel abroad. This right cannot be denied arbitrarily or without due process of law. This action takes from the State Department its past exclusive power to issue passports. The decision makes it clear that the Department's actions may be challenged in the courts. In recent years some groups have protested that the Department denied certain persons passports without proper hearings and without giving accused persons a chance to face their accusers. Today's court decision also holds that membership in an organization on the attorney general's subversive list is not sufficient grounds for denying a passport application. The court says denial of a passport "causes a deprivation of liberty that a citizen otherwise would have." The case at issue concerns Max Schactman of the Independent Socialist League which is on the attorney general's list of subversive organization.

Chairman Dawson of the House Government Operations Committee announced today that a sub-committee is started an investigation to determine whether the government is "withholding pertinent and timely information" from those who are "entitled to receive it."

Congress today completed action on a compromise bill to raise the pay of federal workers by seven and a half per cent. It now goes to the White House.

The President spent part of the day in Vermont. He tried fishing again-without luck and told reporters with a laugh: "The fish in Vermont must all be Democrats --they won't bite for me." Later, he flew to New Hampshire. And in a speech to 15-thousand persons before the state captiol at Concord he praised his chief assistant, former New Hampshire governor Sherman Adams. He said Adams doesn't seem to be a third of the way through the "lectures" he gives the White House staff. Many in the crowd took this to be a hint about the possibility of the President running for a second term.

The government reported today that the cost of living index remained steady in May. (Its varied only one tenth of a per cent in the past six months. And Labor secretary Mitchell says the take-home pay of factory workers reached a new high in May. He added:"These two factors, along with increasing job opportunities and declining unemployment, are concrete evidence of the strenght of our economy." The average weekly take home pay for factory workers in May was seventy dollars and twelve cents.

The President and former President Hoover today urged Congress to accept as a gift a memorial bell tower to be erected in memory of the late Senator Taft. The 100-foot marble tower would be constructed on the Capitol grounds.

Today was another busy day at the San Francisco Opera House..where the U.N. is meeting and Larry LeSueur was there. What to you have to report, Larry:

LESUEUR: Whenever the Foreign Minister of a great power speaks, it's news; but when Antoine Pinay of France addressed this U.N. commerarative session here at the San Francisco Opera House today, it was even more unusual. The French Foreign Minister gave the world its first western reaction to Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov's uncompromising peace terms of the day before. The French Foreign Minister had certain advantages when he spoke today, for he had dined with Mr. Molotov last night, becoming the first of the Western Big Three to speak privately to the Russian diplomat since Molotov shattered the calm of this U.N. birthday party yesterday. Today the dapper Mr. Pinay was far more diplomatic than Mr. Molotov had been. Although he looked grim and determined as he faced the foreign diplomats from the rostrum of the elegant grey-and-gold Opera House, Pinay spoke in firm but conciliatory terms.

The little Frenchman proceeded to torpedo the Russian charge that Allied military bases on foreign soil are potential insturments of American aggression. Mr. Pinay said bluntly that within the Atlantic Treaty Organization he knew of no foreign military bases. He said he only knew that common means are being made available to serve a common peaceful ideal. In other words, he pointed out that these military bases overseas are part and parcel of a Western defensive alliance and are not just foreign ground occupied by American air power.

Mr. Pinay agreed with the Russian Foreign Minister that Germany must be reunited; but, as you said earlier, Ed, Mr. Pinay ruled out what he called "the misconception af a neautral Germany", on the grounds that a great people cannot indefinitely be subjugated to a trusteeship. But regarding Mr. Molotov's proposal for an all-European anti-aggression agrangement, there Mr. Pinay appeared to hold out more than a crumb of compromise. He definitely raised the possibility that an all-Europenn anti-aggression treaty might be one of the main subjects of discussion at the summit meeting- in Geneva next month. Mr. Pinay, referring to the Atlantic Pact, said such regional treaties did open the way for agreements to be concluded on an interregional level and with, what the Frenchman called, "the same equality of duties and the same certainty of guarantees."

Thus it appeared to most observers that France, at least among the Western Big Three, is prepared to consider some sort of European non-aggression pact between the Atlantic nations and the Communist states one which might serve the purpose, if not of neautralizing Germany, of at least keeping a rearmed Germany within protective bonds. But whether these feelings about European defense treaties with the Communist states are shared by the United States is not easy to determine.

While it's known that the advisors to John Foster Dulles have been hard at work preparing the American Secretary of State's speech tomorrow, Mr. Dulles himself and a few of his principal adivsors, like American Ambassador to Moscow Charles Bohlen, had a private lunch with Molotov today. Rumors are flying around the hotel corridors of this city regarding the nature of Secretary Dulles's reply to Molotov tomorrow. Some observers, like tha articulate Democratic Senator from Minnesota, Hubert Humphrey, think that Dulles should answer Molotov's challenging speech point-by-point. But my information is that Secretary Dulles in not going to try to match Molotov's caustic remarks, for it's now presumed that Molotov's loaded speech yesterday was deliberately designed to turn this U.N. commemmorative session into a public discussion of the pressing problems that will come up at Geneva. As a matter of fact, the Foreign Minister of Nationslist China, Mr. George Yeh, dleivered a blistering attack on one issue: the Communist demand for the surrender of Chiang Kai Shek's island and he was gaveled down.

But my best information is that Secretary of State Dulles will not attempt to rebut Mr. Molotov tomorrow, but will confine himself to a constructive speech, not only to preserve this U.N. commemorative atmosphere but to avoid publicly committing President Eisenhower to any positions on world problems before the leaders actually meet in Geneva next mont . But just so this commemorative session will contribute something to history, U.N. Secetary Hammarskjold had been ciruclating a San Frnncisco Peace Declaration among the delegates, to be delivered b President Van Kleffens on the final day as a sort of summing up. The Western Big Three are in firm agreement that the declaration must consist only of high-sounding phrases, but Mr. Molotov would like the U.N. to take a public position on some of the world problmms before they're discussed at Geneva. But it's believed that in the end Molotov will come around and the peace declaration will be something that all nations can adopt without committing themselves to anything.

And that's the way it looks in San Francisco today.

MURROW: That was Larry LeSueur reporting from San Francisco.

In Washington today: the House Banking Committee voted to add one thousand units for old people to the public housing program requested by the President.

Sol Schlesinger, a New York cap manufacturer, refused to let a Senate investigating committee see his records. He said the Senators might find evidence that "might tend to incriminate" him.

And in Virginia, Governor Stanley and the State Board of Education announced a policy of cintinuing Virginia's segregated public schools in the next school year. The governor and the education board say the problems created by the Supreme Court's decision to end segregation in ths schools "cannot be solved suddenly..hasty action could well result in serious damage to the public school system."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: There are those, in moments of impatience, who regard the work of the U.N. as commendable but unrealistic for the times in which we're living. Daniel Webster had an answer to this when he said: "If we work upon marble it will perish. If we work upon brass, time will efface it." If we rear temples, they will crumble to dust. But it we work upon men's immortal minds, if we embue them with high principles, we engrave on those tablets something no time can efface. Good Night and Good Luck.

CBS RADIO DIVISION

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, June 23, 1955
7:45-8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Today was another busy day at the San Francisco Opera House, where the United Nations is meeting - and Larry Lesueur was there.

What do you have to report, Larry?

LESUEUR: Whenever the Foreign Minister of a great power speaks, it's news; but when Antoine Pinay of France addressed this U.N. commemorative session here at the San Francisco Opera House today, it was even more unusual. The French Foreign Minister gave the world its first Western reaction to Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov's uncompromising peace terms of the day before. The FrenchForeign Minister had certain advantages when he spoke today, for he had dined with Mr. Molotov last nite, becoming the first of the Western Big Three to speak privately to the Russian diplomat since Molotov shattered the calm of this U.N. birthday party yesterday. Today the dapper Mr. Pinay was far more diplomatic than Mr. Molotov had been. Altho he looked grim and determined as he faced the foreign diplomats from the rostrum of the elegant grey-and-gold Opera House, Pinay spoke in firm but conciliatory terms.

The little Frenchman proceeded to torpedo the Russian charge that Allied military bases on foreign soil are potential instruments of American aggression. Mr. Pinay said bluntly that within the Atlantic Treaty Organization he knew of no foreign military bases. He said he only knew that common means are being made available to serve a common peaceful ideal. In other words, he pointed out that these military bases overseas are part and parcel of a Western defensive alliance and are not just foreign ground occupied by American air power.

Mr. Pinay agreed with the Russian Foreign Minister that Germany must be reunited; but, as you said earlier, Ed, Mr. Pinay ruled out what he called "the misconception of a neutral Germany," on the grounds that a great people cannot indefinitely be subjected to a trusteeship. But regarding

Mr. Molotov's proposal for an all-European anti-aggression arrangement, there Mr. Pinay appeared to hold out more than a crumb of compromise. He definitely raised the possibility that an all-European anti-aggression treaty might be one of the main subjects of discussion at the summit meeting in Geneva next month. Mr. Pinay, referring to the Atlantic Pact, said such regional treaties did open the way for agreements to be concluded on an interregional level and with, what the Frenchman called, "the same equality of duties and the same certainty of guarantees".

Thus it appeared to most observers that France, at least among the Western Big Three, is prepared to consider some sort of European non-aggression pact between the Atlantic nations and the Communist states, one which might serve the purpose, if not of neutralizing Germany, of at least keeping a rearmed Germany within protective bonds. But whether these feelings about European defense treaties with the Communist states are shared by the United States is not easy to determine.

While it's known that the advisors to John Foster Dulles have been hard at work preparing the American Secretary of State's speech tomorrow, Mr. Dulles himself and a few of his principal advisors, like American Ambassador to Moscow Mr Charles Bohlen, had a private lunch with Molotov today. Rumors are flying around the hotel corridors of this city regarding the nature of Secretary Dulles' reply to Molotov tomorrow. Some observers, like the articulate Democratic Senator from Minnesota, Hubert Humphrey, think that Dulles should answer Molotov's challenging speech point-by-point. But my information is that Secretary Dulles is not going to try to match Molotov's caustic remarks, for it's now presumed that Molotov's loaded speech yesterday was deliberately designed to turn this U.N. commemorative session into a public discussion of the pressing problems that will come up at Geneva. As a matter of fact, the Foreign Minister of Nationalist China, Mr. George Yeh, delivered a blistering attack on one issue: the Communist demand for the surrender of Chiang Kai Shek's island - and he was gaveled down.

But my best information is that Secretary of State Dulles will not attempt to rebut Mr. Molotov tomorrow, but will confine himself to a constructive speech, not only to preserve this U.N. commemorative atmosphere but to avoid publicly committing President Eisenhower to any positions on world problems before the leaders actually meet in Geneva next month. But just so this commemorative session will contribute something to history, ~~S~~ U.N. Secretary Hammarskjold has been circulating a San Francisco peace declaration among the delegates, to be delivered by President Van Kleffens on the final day as a sort of summing up. The Western Big Three are in firm agreement that the declaration must consist only of high-sounding phrases, but Mr. Molotov would like the U.N. to take a public position on some of the world problems before they're discussed at Geneva. But it's believed that in the end Molotov will come 'round and the peace declaration will be something that all nations can adopt without committing themselves to anything.

And that's the way it looks in San Francisco today.

-30-

Ediphone trans./ES

Friday, June 24, 1955

This is the news:

Two Russian Migs have forced one of our Navy patrol bombers to crash-land in Alaska. The President and the Navy announced today that the attack occurred on Wednesday over the Bering Sea..international waters. We call it "unexplicable and unwarranted." The plane was forced to land on St. Lawrence island, about 100 miles from Siberia. Seven of the 11 crewmen were injured. The Navy plane did not fire back at the Russian Migs.

Normally, in such incidents, the State Department protests to Moscow almost automatically. But today the President, traveling in New England, told Secretary of State Dulles to take this up with Russian Foreign Minister Molotov, ATTENDING the San Fransisco conference. Mr. Dulles did. And the State Department says Molotov said he was unaware of the incident but WILL investigate.

In Washington a number of Congressmen are calling this latest incident "incredible..the unmasking of the Russian peace offensive."

The news was released at just about the time Secretary of State Dulles was making his speech to the United Nations conference. Mr. Dulles(..in a speech I'd like to review in a few minutes.) said the cold war could be ended if all nations observe the United Nations charter.. refrain from force and halt subversion against other countries.

The President spent the day in New Hampshire. And he told two audiences: we must remain strong as we seek world peace. An aide said Mr. Eisenhower laughed when he read newspaper accounts of the commotion he caused as a result of a remark on Sherman Adams "lectures" to his staff. This was taken, by some, to be a possible indication that the President would run for re-election. But he had nothing to say about this today..in public.

Atomic Energy Chief Straws announced today that the President has doubled the amount of enriched uranium now available for nuclear research in friendly countries. Straws says this is one of the steps in the President's atoms-for-peace program.

The Associated Press reports that the revised safety standards for the Salk anti-polio vaccine are causing delays in the release of the vaccine that were not expected a month ago. A survey of the six manufacturers indicates that large amounts of the vaccine may not be available until the middle of July. And it may be August or later before the supply hits full scale. It was four weeks ago that

Surgeon General Sheele said that he was "very optomistic", that the vaccine would be flowing from the manufacturers "very shortly." Since then, only one million 200-thousand shots have been released. And the medical director of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis... Dr. Hart Van Riper.. says the foundation's "program is at a standstill until we get some more vaccine."

Republican Representative Lovre of South Dakota said today, that the farmers "will set a time bomb under the entire agricultural economy" if they vote tomorrow, to kill government wheat acreage and marketing controls. He says if the farmers reject controls "every farmer in the United States will be adversely affected."

White House news secretary Hagerty said today, that Agroculture Secretary Benson feels a department release, describing Wolf Ladejinsky as a member of two Communist fronts "was probably writtent too hard." Ladejinsky was fired as a security risk by the Department of Agriculture but hired by the Foreign Operations Administration. Clark Mollenhoff of the Des Moines Reigster, has pursued the case with the President. And today Hagerty informed the REPORTER THAT Benson has indicated his department's original announcement was "probably written a bit too hard."

The House Ways and Means Committee has voted to keep the national debt limit at 281 billion dollars for another year. The Administration requested the extension. Otherwise the debt limit would fall back to 275 billions at the end of this month.

The Federal Reserve Board recommends that the anti-trust laws be extended to cover all bank mergers. Board Chairman William McChesney Martin says there were 207 mergers last year compared with 100 in 1952.

Prime Minister U Nu of Burma arrived in New York today to begin a three-week visit to this country. He said he brings the good will of the Burmese people for the United States.

The Singapore Government today released four of the seven union leaders whose arrest caused the threat of a general strike over the week-end. The government says the "evidence does not indicate a threat to internal security" so far as these four men are concerned.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer today appealed to his followers to enable him to put the first west German soldiers in uniform before the Geneva Big Four conference. He said this is essential to preserve the unity of the west against Russian pressure.

Edward R. Murrow: June 24, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Secretary Dulles, in his speech at San Francisco, faced quite a demanding task. He had to answer Foreign Minister Molotov's contentious speech effectively, and yet not violate, as Mr. Molotov had done, the U.N.'s birthday party etiquette frowning on contentiousness. And he had to be constructive without saying anything that appeared to commit President Eisenhower in advance to any decision at the summit meeting in Geneva. His speech seemed to accomplish both purposes. The guns he turned on Molotov didn't roar loudly, but his listeners knew they hit their target. And all he committed President Eisenhower to do at Geneva, the President himself had promised to do in his opening ~~address.~~ speech.

Mr. Dulles took a look at what is being called a new era and the events that have made it look new. One was the end of the fighting in Korea. "Why did it end?" he asked. Because sixteen U.N. members fought the aggressor, and the aggression failed. "It is strange indeed" said Mr. Dulles, "to hear this triumph of collective security hailed as proof of the peace-loving character of the aggressor and his supporters. If they had had their way, we should today be commemorating the fifth anniversary of the demise of the United Nations."

The same lesson about the fruit of collective action, he said, had been learned in Indochina, from the Austrian treaty, from improved Soviet-Jugoslav relations, from the Soviet offer of diplomatic and economic relations with West Germany, and from the Soviet-Japanese peace negotiations. "Through all these events" he said, "there runs a common theme. Those who believed in the principles of the Charter have helped each other, and in so doing have helped themselves."

What marks this as a new era, Mr. Dulles suggested, was that some men were making a virtue of necessity. "Today" he said, "the necessity for virtue has been created by a stalwart thwarting of efforts to subvert our charter. If we want to see that virtue continue, it may be prudent to continue what produced it." And driving the point further, he continued: "Steadfastness to principle and sacrifice for principle, are the proven price of the good that we have won. It would be reckless to expect further good at any lesser price. To achieve peace with justice, peace with sovereignty for nations great and small, peace with respect for human beings without regard to class, will require sustaining the effort, the sacrifice, the solidarity, which brought us where we are today."

Mr. Molotov had laid down seven points in his speech as essentials of peace. Mr. Dulles countered him by saying: "To bring the cold war to an end, seven points are not needed. One is sufficient." The one was to observe the charter of the United Nations, refrain from the use of force or threat of force in international relations, and refrain from the support and direction of subversion against the institutions of other countries.

But Mr. Dulles was not being deliberately abstract. He also went into particulars about the "much" that remains to be done. He listed five headings. As first he named the unification of Germany. The second was one of his favorite themes, the problems of the East European nations which, as he put it, are "in servitude," having been liberated from one despotism only to be subjected to another.

The third heading was the problem raised by the Chinese Communist regime. It became an aggressor in Korea, Mr. Dulles said, promoted aggression in Indochina, and has used force or the threat of force in the Formosa area. "Recent developments" he said, "including the influence of the Bandung conference, suggest that the immediate threat of war may have receded. Let us pray that this is so."

His fourth point was the existence of the apparatus known as international communism. This he called "a world-wide conspiracy to bring into power a form of government which never in any country, at any time, was freely chosen by the people, and which destroys the reality of independence."

Point five was arms reduction. Here he reminded his listeners that nearly a decade ago the United States had made a proposal to internationalize atomic energy. "This, if accepted" he said, "would have prevented the present competitive production of these weapons." This was at a time when the United States was sole possessor of this weapon, yet the proposal was rejected. Subsequent proposals also were spurned, he went on. Now the Soviet Union has indicated it might consider seriously the initiative taken months before by other members of the disarmament subcommittee. "Let us hope" said Mr. Dulles, "that these indications can be translated into concrete action, making possible limitations which are in fact dependable and not a fraud."

He promised that at Geneva "we shall not assume to act as a world directorate with the right to determine the destinies of others. We shall seek to find procedures such that all nations directly concerned can fully assert whatever rights and views they have." Applied to Mr. Dulles's own schedule of things to be done, this indicates negotiations after Geneva not only with West Germany, but with both Nationalist and Communist China.

Secretary of State Dulles spoke today of morality and steadfastness to principle. On this subject, Albert Schweitzer once said ~~quite eloquently:~~ "The power of ideals is incalculable. We see no power in a drop of water. But let it get into a crack in the rock and be turned into ice and it splits the rock; turned into steam it drives powerful engines. Something has happened to that drop of water which makes active and effective the power that is latent in it."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Swing June 24

Secretary Dulles, in his speech at SanFrancisco, faced quite a demanding task. He had to answer Foreign Minister Molotov's contentious peace speech effectively, and yet not violate, as Mr.Molotov had done, the UN's birthday-party etiquette frowning on contentiousness. And he had to be constructive without saying anything that appeared to commit President Eisenhower in advance to any decision at the summit meeting in Geneva. His speech seemed to accomplish both purposes. The guns he turned on Molotov didn't roar loudly, but his listeners knew they hit their target. And all he commited President Eisenhower to do at Geneva, the President himself had promised to do in his opening address.

¶ Mr.Dulles took a look at what is being called a new era and the events that have made it look new. One was the end of the fighting in Korea."Why did it end?" he asked . Because sixteen UN members fought the aggressor, and the aggression failed."It is strange indeed" said Mr. Dulles,"to hear this triumph of collective security hailed as proof ot the peace-loving character of the aggressor and his supporters.If they had had their way, we should today be commemorating the fifth anniversary of of the demise of the United Nations."

¶ The same lesson about the fruit of collective action, he said, had been learned in Indochina, from the Austrian treaty, from improved Soviet-Jugoslav relations, from the Soviet offer of diplomatic and economic relations with ~~the~~ West Germany ~~republic,~~ and from the Soviet-Japanese peace negotiations."Through all these events" he said,"there runs a common theme. Those who believed in the principles of the Charter have helped each others and in so doing have helped themselves."

¶ What marks this as a new era,Mr. Dulles suggested, was that some men were making a virtue of necessity."Today" he said,"the necessity for virtue has been created by a stalwart thwarting of efforts to subvert our charter. If we want to see that virtue continue, it may be prudent to continue what has produced it." And driving the point further, he continued:"Steadfastness to principle and sacrifice for principle, are the proven price of the good that we have won.It would be reckless to expect further good at any lesser price. To achieve peace with justice, peace with sovereignty for nations great and small, peace with respect for human beings without regard to class, will require sustaining the effort, the sacrifice, the solidarity, which brought us where we are today."

Mr. Molotov had laid down seven points in his speech as essentials of peace. Mr.Dulles countered him by saying:To bring the cold war to an end seven points are not needed. One is sufficient." The one was to observe the charter of the United Nations, refrain from the use of force or threat of force in international relations, and from the support and direction of subversion against the institutions of other countries.

But Mr.Dulles was not being deliberately abstract. He also went into particulars about the much that remains to be done.He listed five headings. As first he named the unification of Germany. The second was one of his favorite themes, the problems of the East European nations which, as he put it,are "in servitude", having been liberated from one despotism to be subjected to another. The third heading was the problem raised by the Chinese Communist regime. It became an aggressor in Korea, Mr.Dulles said, promoted aggression in Indochina, and has used force or the threat of force in the Taiwan area."Recent developments" he said,"including the influence of the Bandung conference, suggest that the immediate threat of war may have receded. Let us pray that this is so."

His fourth point was the existence of the apparatus known as international communism. This he called "a worldwide conspiracy to bring into power a form of government which never in any country, at any time, was freely chosen by the people, and which destroys the reality of independence."

Point five was ~~the heading of~~ arms reduction. Here he reminded his listeners that nearly a decade ago the United States, had made a proposal to internationalize atomic energy. "This, if accepted" he said. "would have prevented the present competitive production of these weapons." This was at a time when the United States was sole possessor of this weapon, yet the proposal was rejected. Subsequent proposals also were spurned, he went on. Now the Soviet Union has indicated it might consider seriously the initiative taken months before by other members of the disarmament subcommittee. "Let us hope" said Mr. Dulles, "that these indications can be translated into concerete action, making possible limitations which are in fact dependable and not a fraud."

He promised that at Geneva "we shall not assume to act as a world directorate with the right to determine the destinies of others. "We shall seek to find procedures such that all nations directly concerned can fully assert whatever rights and views they have." Applied to Mr. Dulles's own schedule of things to be done, this indicates negotiations after Geneva not only with West Germany, but both Nationalist and Communist China.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 24, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Two Russian Migs have forced one of our Navy patrol bombers to crash-land in Alaska. The President and the Navy announced today that the attack occurred on Wednesday over the Bering Sea..international waters. We call it "unexplicable and unwarranted." The plane was forced to land on St. Lawrence island, about 100 miles from Siberia. Seven of the 11 crewmen were injured. The Navy plane did not fire back at the Russian Migs.

Normally, in such incidents, the State Department protests to Moscow almost automatically. But today the President, traveling in New England, told Secretary of State Dulles to take this up with Russian Foreign Minister Molotov, attending the San Francisco conference. Mr. Dulles did. And the State Department says Molotov said he was unaware of the incident but will investigate.

In Washington a number of Congressmen are calling this latest incident "incredible..the unmansing of the Russian peace offensive."

The news was released at just about the time Secretary of State Dulles was making his speech to the United Nations conference. Mr. Dulles..in a speech I'd like to review in a few minutes..said the cold war could be ended if all nations observe the United Nations charter..refrain from force and halt subversion against other countries.

The President spent the day in New Hampshire. And he told two audiences we must remain strong as we seek world peace. Ad aide said Mr. Eisenhower laughed when he read newspaper accounts of the commotion he caused as a result of a remark on Sherman Adams "lectures" to his staff. This was taken, by some, to be a possible indication that the president would run for re-election.

But he had nothing to say about this today..in public.

Atomic Energy Chief Straws announced today that the President has doubled the amount of enriched urnnium now abailable for nuclear research in friendly countries. Straws says this is one of the steps in the President's atoms-for-peace program.

The Associated Press reports that the revised safety standards for the Salk anti-polio vaccine are causing delays in thr release of the vaccine that were not expected a month ago. A survey of the six manufacturers indicates that large amounts of the vaccine may not be available until the middle of July. And it may be August or later before the supply hits full scale. It was four weeks ago that Surgeon General Scheele said that he was "very optimistic" that the vaccine would be flowing from the manufacturers "very shortly". Since then, only one million 200 thousand shots have been released. And the medical director of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis , Dr. Hart Van Riper, says the foundation's "program is at a standstill until we get more vaccine."

Republican Representative Lovre of South Dakota said today that farmers "will set a time bomb under the entire agricultural economy" if they vote tomorrow to kill government wheat acerage and marketing controls. He says if the farmers reject controls "every farmer in the United States will be adversely affected."

White House news secretary Hagerty said today that Acrigulture Secretary Benson feels a department release describing Wolf Ladejinsky as a member of two communist fronts "was probably written too hard." Ladejinsky was fired as a security risk by the Department of Agriculture but hired by the Foreign Operations Administration. Clark Millenhoff of the Des. Moines Register has pursued the case with the President. And today Hagerty informed the reporter that Benson has indicated his department's original announcement was "probably written a bit too hard.

The House Ways and Means Committee has voted to keep the nation debt limit at 281 billion dollars for another year. The Administration requested the extension. Otherwise the debt limit would fall back to 275 billions at the end of this month.

The Federal Reserve Board recommends that the anti-trust laws be extended to cover all bank mergers. Board Chairman William McChensey Martin says there were 207 mergers last year compared with 100 in 1952.

Prime Minister U Nu of Burma arrived in New York today to begin a three week visit to this country. He said he brings the good will of the Burmese people to the United States.

The Singapore Government today released four of the seven union leaders whose arrest caused the threat of a general strike over the week-nd. The government says the "evidence does not indicate a threat to the internal security" so far as these four men are concerned.

West Germany's Chancellor Adenauer today appealed to his followers to enable him to put the first west German soldiers in uniform before the Geneva Big Four conference. He said this is essential. to preserve the unity of the West against Russian pressure.

Secretary Dulles, in his speech at San Francisco, faced quite a demanding task. He had to answer Foreign Minister Molotov's contintious speech effectively, and yet not violate, as Mr. Molotov had done, the U.N.'s birthday party etiquette frowning on contentiousness. And he had to be constructive without saying anything that appeared to commit President Eisenhower in advance to any decision at the summit meeting in Geneva. His speech seemed to accomplish both purposes. The guns he turned on Molotov didn't roar loudly, but his listeners knew thay hit their target. And all he committed President Eisenhower to do at Geneva, the President himself had promised to do in his opening speech.

Mr. Dulles took a look at what is being called a new era and the events that have made it look new. One was the end of the fighting in Korea. "Why did it end?" he asked Because sixteen U.N. members fought the aggressor, and the aggression failed. "It is strange indeed" said Mr. Dulles, "to hear this triumph of collective security hailed as proof of the peace-loving character of the aggressor had his supporters. If they had had their way, we should today be commemorating the fifth anniversary of the demise of the United Nations."

The same lesson about the fruit of collective action, he said, had been learned in Indochina, from the Austrian treaty, from improved Soviet-Jugoslav relations, from the Soviet offer of diplomatic and economic relations with West Germany, and from the Soviet-Japanese peace negotiations. "through all these events" he said, "There runs a common theme. Those who believe in the principles of the Charter have helped each other, and in so doing have helped themselves."

What marks this as a new era, Mr. Dulles suggested, was that some men were making a virtue of necessity. "Today" he said, "the necessity for virtue has been created by a stalward thwarting of efforts to subvert our charter. If we want to see that virtue continue, it may be prudent to continue what produced it." And driving the point further, he continued: "Steadfastness to principle and sacrifice for principle, are the proven price of the good that we have won. It would be reckless to expect further good an any lesser price. To achieve peace with justice, peace with soverignty for nations great and small, peace with respect for human beings without regard to class will require sustaining the effort, the sacrifice, the solidarity, which brought us where we are today."

Mr. Molotov had haid down seven points in his speech as essentials of peace. Mr. Dulles countered him by saying: "To bring the cold war to an end seven points are not needed. One is sufficient." The one was to observe the charter of the United Nations, refrain from the use of force or threat of force in international relations, and refrain from the support and direction of subversion against the institutions of other countries.

But Mr. Dulles was not being deliverately abstract. He also went into particulars about the "much" that ramains to be done. He listed five headings As first he named the unification of Germany. The second was one of his favorite themes, the problems of the East European nations which, as he put it, are "in servitude", having been liberated from one despotism only to be subjugated to another.

The third heading was the problem raised by the Chinese Communist regime. It became an aggressor in Korea, Mr. Dulles said, promoted aggression in Indochina, and has used force or the threat of force in the Formosa area. "Recent developments" he said, "including the influence of the Bandung conference, suggest that the immediate threat of war may have receded. Let us pray that this is so."

His fourth point was the existence of the apparatus known as international communism. This he called "a world-wideconspiracy to bring into power a form of government which never in any country, at any time, was freely chosen by the poeple, and which destroys the reality of independence."

Point five was arms reduction. Here he reminded his listeners that nearly a decade ago the United States had made a proposal to internationalize atomic energy. "This, if accepted" he said, "would have prevented the present competitive production of these weapons." This was at a time when the United States was sole possessor of this weapon, yet the proposal was rejected. Subsequent proposals also were spurned, he went on. Now the Soviet Union has indicated it might consider seriously the initiative taken months before by other members of the disarmement subcommittee. "Let us hope" said Mr. Dulles, "that these indications can be translated into concrete action, making possible limitations which are in fact dependable and aot a fraud.

He promised that at Geneva "we shall not assume to act as a world directorate with the right to determine the destinies of others. We shall seek to find prodecures such that all nations directly concerned can fully assert whatever rights and views they have." Applied to Mr. Dulles's own schedule of things to be done, this indicates negotiations after Geneva not only with West Germany, but with both Nationalist and Communist China.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Secretary of State Dulles spoke today of morality and steadfastness to principle. On this subject, Albert Schweitzer once said "The power of ideals is incalucable. We see no power in a drop of water. But let it get into a crack in the rock and be turned into ice and it splits the rock; turned into steam it drives powerful engines. Something has happened to that drop of water which makes active and effective the power that is latent in it."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday June 27, 1955

This is the news:

The President said today that our goal is to win a permanent peace and "not merely an uneasy cessation of the guns." Touring Maine, after a restful week-end of fishing, the President said: "We cannot have prosperity without peace and there can be no peace unless we are prosperous." The President flies back to Washington tonight and he will be accompanied from Bangor, Maine, by Secretary of State Dulles. Mr. Dulles is flying up to Maine to ride back with the President and discuss the attack on one of our planes by Russian Migs. #

The Russians have offered to pay half the cost of our plane. Mr. Dulles says this is "short of what he had requested." The Secretary emphasizes there is no emergency connected with his trip to Maine.

~~just that he thinks the air trip back to Washington is better than holding a conference after the Presidential plane returns.~~

The Chinese Nationalists say Russian pilots in Migs shot down A Nationalist jet trainer yesterday..the Pilot was killed. #

The Nationalists say they heard intercom conversations indicating that the enemy pilots were Russians. And an unarmed amphibious plane was also attacked over the Formosa Strait.

India's Prime Minister Nehru arrived in Vienna today. He told reporters he saw "no iron curtain" on his recent trip to Russia and her satellites. He told the newsmen:"co-existence is the only alternative to war in the atomic age."

Yugoslavia's President Tito has accepted an invitation to visit Moscow..returning the recent visit to Belgrade by Kruschev and Bulganin of the Soviet Union. This will be Tito's first trip to Moscow since the Cominform threw him out of the Communist party in 1948 for what was called "nationalist tendencies."

In Italy, Antonio Segni, a Christian Democrat, has been selected to try to form a new government. He's a 64-year-old farm reformer, scholar and deputy in the Parliament.

~~The British today protested to Greece over a recent Greek radio broadcast to Cyprus which repeated an underground organization call for the people of Cyprus to liberate their island. British government sources say the government plans to offer Cyprus limited self-rule soon..in an effort o stop some [illegible] rebellious movements. The residents of Cyprus are mostly of Greek and Turkish blood.~~

In Argentina today the government released 19 Radical Party leaders who had been detained since the revolt against President Peron.

In this country, the C.I.O. steelworkers wage policy committee today authorized a nation-wide strike at midnight Thursday. Union President McDonland told reporters "Don't get the idea we are strike-happy." Tomorrow the union resumes negotiations with U.S. Steel. The union has rejected the company's offer of an average 10 cents an hour wage increase. [redacted]

The Senate today approved a special presidential commission to study all aspects of the federal security program. Members of both parties expressed the hope that the commission will operate in a "dispassionate, non-political atmosphere."

Republican Senator Williams of Delaware today denounced as "a raid on the Treasury" a bill proposing a long-term program of price supports for certain minerals. Williams says the bill, introduced by Republican Senator Goldwater of Arizona and others, was approved in committee without any public hearings. He says it could cost taxpayers 750-million dollars if it's passed. Williams calls the bill

"one of the boldest raids on the federal treasury that has been proposed in recent years." It would commit the government to buy, for the next 12 years, the entire production of several minerals at a price "far above the prevailing domestic or world market."

Clarence Mitchell, Washington director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, today told a House committee that it would be "national suicide" to permit racial segregation in National Guard Units. Despite warnings from the President that an amendmenat to ban segregation would kill the bill, Mitchell said: "We shall never agree with anyone, not even our great president, who tells us that we must not make an all-out effort to contribute our skills and abilities to the defense of the country in an emergency."

The House today approved a two-and-a-third billion dollar bill to ~~build~~ construct military bases... and a 268-million-dollar atomic construction bill. The atomic bill does not call for the "peace ship" proposed by the President.

The 25-member Commission on Intergovernmental Relations --created by Congress two years ago--today recommended that the federal government withdraw from some fields of taxation..leaving them to the states. The Commission also recommends: state highway building programs to be financed on a pay as you build [redacted] basis, with increased federal aid...and the Commission would have the federal government take over full command of civilian defense.

Edward R. Murrow: June 27, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

The celebration of the United Nations birthday at San Francisco is over, and diplomats and analysts everywhere are figuring out just what happened and what it means. They appear pretty generally to agree that the San Francisco meeting went about as well as had been expected. It did not produce any major disappointment, neither did it surpass expectations in any notable way. They seem to agree, also that the United Nations played second fiddle to the upcoming summit meeting of the Big Four. The anniversary, it now seems, might have fallen pretty flat if the interest in the Geneva conference had not been so engrossing. That is another way of saying that the United Nations is not much as a policy-making body, but is a first rate forum. And while the Big Four meeting might turn out to be much like it, with debate and maneuver substituting for concrete decisions, the Geneva conference will test the possibility of action, even though it fails to act on its own.

One real ~~helpfulness~~ dividend of the San Francisco conference was the new light - one might better say, the little new light - it shed on the intentions of the two sides at Geneva. There is no reason to believe that the basic Soviet objective has been changed. It is to keep an armed West Germany from being incorporated in the Western defense system. It has been that ever since the Paris accord came within sight of ratification. The so-called New Look in Soviet policy may appear to provide a different objective, the easing of tensions. But the point of that is to see that Germany does not swing to the West as an armed partner.

However, the easing of tensions is of enormous importance, not only for its effect on the future of Germany, but because any improvement in the international climate puts a catastrophic war a little further away. It now seems clear that the Soviet Union does not expect the unification of Germany at Geneva or for some time thereafter. It does not hope, certainly not now, to get a neutral Germany, unified or not unified, armed or unarmed. It has to approach its goal obliquely. And what the diplomats at San Francisco particularly noted was what Mr. Molotov had to say when he talked with foreign ministers there, as he did with most of the thirty-seven who attended.

He spoke glowingly of the benefits to be gained from increasing world trade, chiefly East-West trade. He spoke about the Soviet disarmament proposals. Also about dismantling advanced Western air bases. And of putting an end to Western military alliances.

As to world trade, a Soviet proposal to call a world trade conference is now expected. It would be popular. As to disarmament, the Soviet case is that the West's own terms for reducing conventional arms and abolishing nuclear weapons have been accepted in the main, and unless the West is going back on itself, agreements should be within reach.

The theme of dismantling bases is part of the Soviet concept of relieving tensions by both sides pulling armed forces back in central Europe. The Kremlin is expected to offer to withdraw Soviet forces even as far as the Soviet borders, if the British, French and American forces in Germany pull out, and forward American bases are dismantled. This ties in with the Soviet talk about ending the West's military alliances, and with its disarmament proposals. For what Moscow seeks is an all-European security pact, which would include the limitation of the military forces in Central Europe, those of the countries themselves, and those of the Big Four stationed there.

This is the subject which holds out some promise of results from the summit meeting. For interest in an all-European security agreement is not confined to the Russians. Dr. Adenauer has been pressing for it ever since the ratification of the Paris accord. And it Resembles a proposal made by Mendes-France, when he was French Premier. At that time, even while advocating the Paris accords, he appeared to be hinting that ratification could lead to a limitation of armed strengths in Europe and so make German re-armament unnecessary. Now Washington is stated to be working on a security agreement embracing both NATO and anti-NATO countries, to be laid before the Geneva meeting.

Any final action at the summit along these lines was not expected. It was seen at San Francisco that the men at the top could not settle anything themselves, beyond agreeing what should be negotiated at the foreign minister level.

The Kremlin policy of driving a wedge between the Western allies, or between the Allies and Germany, did not ~~XXXXXXXX~~ prosper at San Francisco. The Big Three were in hearty accord on major matters. It can now be revealed that this unity in part grew out of Dr. Adenauer's visit to Washington. He, President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles agreed on two points. One was that no separate peace was to be reached with the Soviet Union in the cold war. The other was that if a settlement was to be made that involved concessions to the Kremlin, it must be a package that included German unification. The two points then were put up to the British and French foreign ministers, and ~~XXX~~ accepted. The understanding is only verbal, but it is a firm commitment. As a result, the negotiations now to come should be tough and lengthy, that is, unless anyone believes the Soviet Union is going to Geneva ready for virtual surrender.

It would seem that if ever there is to be achieved something resembling a durable peace ~~on this [illegible] planet of ours,~~ one of the first things required is to rid ourselves of national prejudices. Ralph Sockman once put it well when he said:"Working together is even more effective than talking together." To which we might add this note by Plutarch:"Often by foregoing a part we save the whole, and by yielding in a small matter secure a greater."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

Swing 6 mer June 27.

It has not much mattered, in the view of the State Department, whether the Formosa Straits area enjoyed a defacto cease fire, or one sealed by formal agreement, so long as it was a cease fire. And Secretary Dulles has spoken confidently about there already being a defacto cease fire. The Washington view has been that if it lasts a while, and is accompanied by acts of goodwill--like the release of prisoners--negotiations over Fomosa would eventually be both possible and desirable.

This anticipation of a long stretch of calm has had a rude jolt from the appearance of Communist fighter-jets over the Formosa straits and from their engaging in active fighting. The American doctor who was aboard a chartered civilian plane, attacked by Communists on its way to Matsu, told newsmen his plane was escorted by Nationalist fighter planes. The newsmen could see the bullet holes in his plane. Whatever the details and circumstances of this and other reported attacks, the significant news is that the cease fire in the Formosa area is not operative, defacto, or any other way.

¶ Until now the Communists have not been able to sustain jet fighters over the coastal islands, not having a close enough base, and not having been able to get jet fuel through the Nationalist blockade. Now they have a usable base and they have fuel. The CBS correspondent in Hongkong reported today that he had been told by a traveler, who had been on the mainland opposite Formosa a month ago, that the Communists have completed a super-highway over the Fukien mountains. This traveler said he counted fifty fuel tankers on the new road in a single day.

¶ The build-up of Communist air strength in this area would be highly foreboding if it represented preparation for an assault on Formosa. It would be less so if the attack was to be on the coastal islands. But in either case it can not be called a pa~~cific gesture~~ praying development. And the use of the MIG's to fire on the fighter escort of a plane on its way to Matsu has an unmistakable meaning. The war between Chinese Communists and Nationalists is still active. There is no cease fire. Tension is not subsiding. It continues to be dangerous.

¶ The danger is not confined to the Formosa area. In North Korea the terms of the armistice is being violated in the creation of a sizeable North Korean airforce of Soviet origin. The Pentagon has known this for some time, but publishable proof was hard to come by. Now two North Korean pilots have defected to South Korea and they have revealed that North Korea possesses a combat force of about 600 planes, with more coming in regularly from the Soviet Union. It had none at the conclusion of the armistice. Included are 276 MIG jet-fighters, 120 bombers and about 100 fighter-bombers. The pilots, in a statement issued by the South Korean government today, said that Soviet officers have charge of training and of administering the airforce, and that it includes 500 pilots trained in the Soviet Union. They said that the North Korean pilots had orders to shoot down any Allied planes that invaded the North. Under the armistice, both sides are prohibited from reinforcing their air strength from outside Korea.

¶ But if the Communists are indifferent to the armistice terms in Korea, they are very keen on their being observed in Vietnam. For in Vietnam they call for an election that is to determine future control of the country, and if held punctually, under supervision set up by the armistice agreement, the Communists confidently expect a decisive victory. What they now fear is the growing strength of the Diem government in South Vietnam. If Diem succeeds in getting Bao Dai removed as head of state, the premier would be able to dissociate himself from the armistice altogether and manage the election to suit himself.

¶ A paradox has grown out of this situation. The North Vietnam government, which is Communist, actually sent a protest to France against the withdrawal of French troops from Vietnam. It pointed out that the North Vietnam government recognizes the authority of Bao Dai, and said that after the election Vietnam would be unified and be a member of the French Union.

¶ This is understandable only as a bid for French support at the Big Four meeting for an election as prescribed by the armistice agreement. Ho Chi Minh, the almost legendary North Vietnam leader, is in Peiping holding strategy talks with his Chinese Communist sponsors. If they can be sure of the right kind of election at the right time they count on sweeping into power throughout former Indochina. And then SEATO's guarantee would be next to worthless, and any hope of stopping infiltration elsewhere in free Asian countries would be sadly undermined.

¶ The flare-up of fighting in the Formosa straits also seems designed to influence the Big Four at Geneva. It looks like an attempt to get them to call at once a broad conference on the Far East, something both Moscow and Peiping have put near the top of their list of preferences.

¶ The United States and its Allies also want negotiations and believe in the conference method. But a conference, held because conditions have improved and good will is being demonstrated, as in Europe, is one thing. One called because conditions are worsening and good will is vanishing, as in Asia, is another. It is this second kind the Communists also seem to be working for.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 27, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The President said today that our goal is to win a permanent peace and "not merely an uneasy cessation of the guns" . Touring Maine, after a restful week-end of fishing, the President said: "We cannot have prosperity without peace and there can be no peace unless we are prosperous." The President flies tack to Washington tonight. He will be accompanied from Bangor, Maine, by Secretary of State Dulles. Mr. Dulles is flying up to Maine to ride back with the President and disucuss the attack on one of our planes by Russian Migs. The Russians have offered to pay half the cost of our plane. Mr. Dulles says this is "short of what he had requested." The Secretary emphasizes there is no emergency connected with his trip to Maine.

The Chinese Nationalists say Russian pilots in Migs shot down a Nationalist jet trainer yesterday..the Pilot was killed.

The Nationalists say they heard intercom conversations indicating that the enemy pilots were Russians. And an unarmed amphibious plane was also attacked over the Formosa Strait.

India's Prime Minister Nehru arrived in Vienna today. He told reporters he saw "no iron curtain" on his recent trip to Russia and her satellites. He told the newsmen: "co existence is the only alternative to war in the atomic age."

Yugoslavia's resident Tito has accepted an invitation to visit Moscow... returning the recent visit to Belgrade by Kruschev and Bulganin of the Soviet Union. This will be Tito's first trip to Moscow since the Cominform threw him out of the Communist party in 1948 for what was called "nationalist tendencies."

In Italy, Antonio Segni, a Christian Democrat, has been selected to try to form a new government. He's a 64-year old farm reformer, scholar and deputy in the Parliament.

In Argentina today the government released 19 radical party leaders who had been detained since the revolt against President Peron.

In this country, the C.I.O. steelworkers wage policy committe today authorized a nation-wide strike at mignight Thursday. Union President McConald told reporters "Don't get the idea we are strike-happy". Tomorrow the union resumes negotiations with U.S. Steel. The union rejected the company's offer of an average 10 cents an hour wage increase.

The Senate today arproved a special presidential commission to study all aspects of the federal security program. Members of both parties expressed the hope that the commission wil operate in a "dispassionate, non-political atmosphere."

Republican Senator Willimas of Delaware today denounced as "a raid on the Treasury" a bill proposing a long-term program of price supports for certain minerals. Willimas says the bill, introduced by Republican Senator Goldwater of Arizona and others, was approved in committee without any public hearings. He says it could cost tax payers 750-million dollars if its passed. Williams alls the bill"one of the boldest raids on the federal treasury that has been proposed in recent years." It would commit the government to buy, for the next 12 years, the entire production of several minerals at a price "far above the prevailing domestic or world market."

Clarence Mitchell, Washington director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, today told a House committee that it would be "national suicide" to permit recial segregation in National guard Units. Despite warnings from the president that an amendment to ban segregation would kill the bill, Mitchell said:"We shall never agree with anoone, not even our great president, w o tells us that we must not make an all-out effort to contribute our skills and abilities to the defense of the co ntry in an emergency."

The House today approved a two and a third billion dollar bill to con struct military bases..and a 268 million dollar atomic construction bill. The atomic bill does not call for the "peace ship proposed by the President.

The 25-member Commission on Intergovernmental Relations --created by Congress two years ago -today recommended that the federal government withdraw from some fields of taxation..leaving them to the states. The Commission also recommends: state highway building programs to be financed by a pay as you build basis, with increased federal aid..and the Commission would have the federal government take over full command of civilian defense.

The celebration of the United Nations birthday at San Francisco is over, and diplomats and analysts everywhere are figuring out just what happened and what it means. They appear pretty generally to agree that the San Francisco meeting went about as sell as had been expected. It did not proudce any major disappointment, niether did it surpass expectations in any notable way. They seem to agree, also that the United Nations palyed second fiddle to the up-coming summit meeting of the Big Four. The anniversary, it now seems, might have fallen pretty flat if the interest in the Geneva conference had hot been so engrossing. That is another way of aaying that the United Nations is not much as a policy-making body, but is a first rate furum. And while the Big Four meeting might turn out to be much like it, with debate and man-euver substituting for concrete decisions, the Geneva Conference will test the possibility of action, even though it fails to act on its own.

One real dividend of the San Francisco conference was the new light one might better say, the little new light it shed on the intentions of two sides at Geneva. There is no reason to believe that the basic Soviet objective has been changed. It is to keep an armed West Germany from being incorporated in the Western defense system. It has been that ever since the Paris accord came within sight of ratification. The so-called New Look in Soviet policy may appear to provide a different objective, the easing of tensions. But the point of that is to see that Germany does not swing to the West as an armed partner.

However the easing of tensions is on enormous importance, not only for its effect on the future of Germany, but because any improvement in the international climate puts a catastrophic war a little further away. It now seems clear that the Soviet Union does not expect the unification of Germany at Geneva or for some time thereafter. It does not hope, certainly not now, to get a neautral Germany, unified or not unified, armed or unarmed. It has to approach its goal obliquely. And what the diplomats at San Francisco particularly noted was what Mr. Molotov had to say when he talked with foreign ministers there, as he did with most of the thirty-seven who attended.

He spoke glowingly of the benefits to be gained from increasing world trade, chiefly East-West trace. He spoke about the Soviet disarmement proposals. Also about dismantling advanced Western air bases. And of putting an end to Western military alliances.

As to World trade, a Soviet proposal to call a world trade conference is now expected. It would be popular. As to disarmement, the Soviet case is that the West's own terms for reducing conventional arms and abolishing nuclear weapons have been accepted in the main, and unless the West is going back on itself, agreements should be within reach.

The theme of dismantling bases is part of the Soviet concept of relieving tensions by both sides pulling armed forces back in central Europe. The Kremlin is expected to offer to withdraw Soviet forces even as far as the Soviet borders, if the British, French and American forces in Germany pull out, and forward American bases are dismantled. This ties in with the Soviet talk about ending the West's military alliances, and with its disarmement proposals. For what Moscow seeks is an all-European security pact, which would include the limitation of the military forces in Central Europe, those of the countries themselves, and those of the Big Four stationed there.

This is the subject which holds out some promise of results from the summit meeting. For interest in an all-European security pact, which would include the limitation of the military forces in Central Europe, those of the countries themselves, and those of the big four stationed there.

This is the subject which holds out some promise of results from the summit meeting. For interest in an all European security agreement is not confined to the Russians. Dr. Adenauer has been pressing for it ever since the ratification of the Paris accord. And it resembles a proposal made by Mendes-France, when he was French Premier. At that time, even while advocating the Paris accords, he appeared to be hinting that ratification could lead to a limitation of armed strengths in Europe and so make German re-armament unnecessary. Now Washington is stated to be working on a security agreement embracing both NATO and anti-NATO countries, to be laid before the Geneva meeting.

And final action at the summit a long these lines was not expected. It was seen at San Francisco that the men at the top could not settle anything themselves, beyond agreeing what should be negotiated at the foreign minister level.

The Kremlin policy of driving a wedge between the Western allies, or between the Allies and Germany, did not prosper at San Francisco. The Big Three were in hearty accord on major matters. It can now be revealed thst this unity in part grew out of Dr. Adenauer's visit to Washington. He, President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles agreed on two points. One was that no separate peace was to be reached with the Soviet Union in the cold war. The other was that if a setllement was to me made that involved concessions to the Kremlin, it must ba a package that included German unification. The two points then were put up to the British and French foreign ministers, and accepted. The understanding is only verbal, but it is a firm commitment. As a result the negotiations now to come should be tough and lengthy, that is, unless anyone believes the Soviet Union is going to Geneva ready for virtual surrender.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It would seem that if ever there is to be achieved something resembling a durable peace, one of the first things required is to rid ourselves of national prejudice. Ralph Sockman once put it well when he said:"Working together is even more effective than talking together." To which we might add this note by Plutarch:"Often by foregoing a part we save the whole, and by yielding in a smal matter secure a greater."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Tuesday June 28, 1955

This is the news:

The Government today gave up its perjury prosecution of Owen Lattimore, the controversial Far Eastern specialist. After losing two major rounds in court fights, Attorney General Brownell said today: there is no reasonable likelihood of a successful prosecution of five lesser charges. The courts threw out as "formless and obscure" charges that Lattimore was a "follower" of the Communist party line and a "promoter" of Communist causes. In the court battle since 1952 District Judge Luther Youngdahl twice threw out key counts against Lattimore. In the most recent case, United States Attorney Leo Rover accused the judge of a fixed personal bias and prejudice. Judge Youngdahl called this charge "scandalous." In Sweden today, where he is vacationing, Owen Lattimore said the government should have reached today's decision a long time ago." The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee said today that the attorney general's list of subversive organizations is "widely misunderstood and misapplied" and needs to be put in proper perspective. The committee recommends that the attorney general publish a handbook with additional information about each organization so membership can be evaluated "intelligently" for security purposes. The committee also feels that persons turned down for government jobs because of unevaluated derogatory information should be given an opportunity for a hearing.

The Hoover Commission today criticized the government's intelligence agencies for "lack of adequate intelligence data from behind the Iron Curtain." It called for greater boldness at the policy level.. and a willingness to "accept certain calculated political and diplomatic risks." And in answer to charges by Senator McCarthy that Communists and their sympathizers have penetrated the Central Intelligence Agency the Commission says: "We discovered no valid ground for the suspicion that the C.I.A. or any other element was being effectively contaminated by any organized subversive clique." It praised C.I.A. Chief Allen Dulles as "industrious, objective, selfless, enthusiastic and imaginative."

Here in New York today, Corporal Harold M. Dunn unexpectedly pleaded guilty to charges that he collaborated with the Chinese Communists while a war prisoner. He could receive a life sentence at hard labor.

The steel industry says it will start to shut down its blast furnaces tomorrow..in anticipation of a strike by the C.I.O. steelworkers at midnight Thursday. Both sides are negotiating again today but there has been no positive development.

The President today signed a bill to give more than a million federal employes an average seven and a half per cent pay increase... that would average $325 a year. Congress and the President have now completed action on raises for more than three million federal employes. This will cost about one and a quarter billion dollars a year.

Both the House and Senate today passed the draft extension act. This calls for four years of service. Congress also approved a two year extension of the doctors draft. Both laws were due to expire Thursday night.

The Senate, by one vote, refused to approve the President's request for an atom-powered merchant ship.

The House Armed Services Committee has approved a military reserve program. Democratic Representative Powell of New York says he'll offer an anti-segregation amendment when it comes to the floor.

Secretary of State Dulles SAID today THAT the Russians must agree to unite Western and Eastern Germany if they sincerely want to end cold war tensions. He says Russia seems to have lost interest in unifying Germany now that the plan cannot be used as "good bait" to block German re-armament.

In West Germany today, Chancellor Adenauer's own deputies joined the opposition Socialists in attacking a government bill to sign up volunteers for the proposed German army. The Lower House sent the bill to committee for study.

At his news conference today Secretary Dulles said he thought the shooting down of one of our naval planes off Alaska was due to "trigger happy " Russian pilots. He does not think it was deliberate Soviet policy. And he notes that the Russian expression of regret MARKS the first time they have publicly "regretted" such incidents. Mr. Dulles says the President wants more facts before deciding whether to stick to our demand that the Russians pay all losses and reperations to the seven wounded airmen. Russia has offered to pay half the damages.

Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov was in New York today..he visited the home of Bernard Baruch and again invited him to visit Russia.

The State Department reveals that we have called on Moscow to admit an American Roman Catholic priest to replace the one expelled in March. And "in the interests of reciprocity" we have offered to permit a Soviet clergyman to enter this country "to administer to the needs of Soviet nationals."

Republican Senator Williams of Delaware charged today that a former congressman..who he did not name.. and three others have made "windfall" pension benefits of thousands of dollars through loopholes in the federal retirement laws. ~~And he also charges that the government proposes to sell the ships to the Oceanic Steamship Company, a West Coast Company. He says the proposal is to sell the ships for about half their cost and then give them back to the company more than that, to convert the cargo ships to passenger service.~~

The Air ~~Man~~ Force says it has sighted ONE ~~a~~ missing Marine corps flyer ON A RAFT, about 110 miles south of Tokyo. He and a crewmate crashed their fighter-bomber four days ago. There is no report on the second man.

It has not much mattered, in the view of the State Department, whether the Formosa Straits area enjoyed an informal cease-fire, or one sealed by formal agreement, so long as it was a cease-fire. / Secretary Dulles has spoken confidently about there already being a de facto cease-fire. / The Washington view has been, that if it lasts awhile, and is accompanied by acts of good will - like the release of prisoners - negotiations over Formosa would eventually be both possible, and desirable.

This anticipation of a long stretch of calm has had a rude jolt, from the appearance of Communist jets over the Formosa straits, and from their engaging in active fighting. The American physician who was aboard a chartered civilian plane, attacked by Communists on its way to Matsu, told newsmen, his plane was escorted by Nationalist fighter planes. The newsmen could see the bullet holes in his plane. Whatever the details and circumstances of this, and other reported attacks, the significant news is, that the cease-fire in the Formosa area is not operative, de facto, or any other way.

Until now the Communists have not been able to sustain jet fighters over the coastal islands, not having a close enough base, and not having been able to get jet fuel through the Nationalist blockade. Now they have a usable base, and they have fuel. The C.B.S. News correspondent in Hong Kong reported today, that he had been told by a traveler, who had been on the mainland opposite Formosa a month ago, that the Communists have completed a super-highway over the Fukien mountains. This traveler said he counted fifty fuel tankers on the new road in a single day.

The build-up of Communist air strength in this area would be highly foreboding, if it represented preparation for an assault on Formosa. It would be less so, if the attack was to be on the coastal islands. But in either case it cannot be called a pacifying development. And the use of the MIG's to fire on the fighter escort of a plane on its way to Matsu has an unmistakable meaning. The war between Chinese Communists and Nationalists is still active. There is no cease fire. Tension is not subsiding. It continues to be dangerous.

The danger is not confined to the Formosa area. In North Korea the terms of the armistice are being violated, in the creation of a sizeable North Korean air force, of Soviet origin. The Pentagon has known this for some time, but publishable proof was hard to come by. Now, two North Korean pilots have defected to South Korea, and they have revealed that North Korea possesses a combat force of about 600 planes, with more coming in regularly from the Soviet Union. Included are 276 MIG jet fighters, 120 bombers and about 100 fighter-bombers. The pilots, in a statement issued by the South Korean government today, said that Soviet officers have charge of training, and of administering the air force, and that it includes 500 pilots trained in the Soviet Union. They said that the North Korean pilots had orders to shoot down any Allied planes that invaded the North. Under the armistice, both sides are prohibited from reinforcing their air strength from outside Korea.

But if the Communists are indifferent to the armistice terms in Korea, they are very keen on their being observed in Vietnam. For in Vietnam they call for an election that is to determine future control of the country, and if held punctually, under supervision set up by the armistice agreement, the Communists expect a decisive victory. What they now fear, is the growing strength of the Diem government in South Vietnam. If Diem succeeds in getting Bao Dai removed as head of state, the premier would be able to dissociate himself from the armistice altogether, and manage the election to suit himself. Ho Chi Minh, the North Vietnam leader, is in Peiping, holding strategy talks with his Chinese Communist sponsors. If they can be sure of the right kind of election, at the right time, they count on sweeping into power throughout former Indochina. And then SEATO's guarantee would be next to worthless, and any hope of stopping infiltration elsewhere in free Asian countries would be sadly undermined.

The flare-up of fighting in the Formosa straits also seems designed to influence the Big Four at Geneva. It looks like an attempt to get them to call at once a broad conference on the Far East, something both Moscow and Peiping have put near the top of their list of preferences.

The United States and its Allies also want negotiations, and believe in the conference method. But a conference, held because conditions have improved and good will is being demonstrated, as in Europe, is one thing. One called because conditions are worsening and good will is vanishing, as in Asia, is another. It is this second kind the Communists also seem to be working for.

This is E.R.M.-
Wond —

Hugh Holder

Another political conference approaches. The climate is not exactly conducive to international friendship. But let us hope that those attending will feel at least partially as Jan Smuts did when he said:*

"This is a good world. We need not approve of all the items in it, nor of all the individuals in it. But the world itself is more than its parts or individuals - it has a soul, a spirit, a fundamental relation deeper than all other relations."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Government today gave up its perjury prosecution of Owen Lattimore, the controversial Far Eastern specialist. After losing two major rounds in court fights, Attorney General Brownell said today: there is no reasonable likelihood of a successful prosecution of five lesser charges. The courts threw out as "formless and obscure" charges that Lattimore was a "follower" of the Communist party line and a "promoter" of Communist causes. In the court battle since 1952, District Judge Luther Youngdahl twice threw out key counts against Lattimore. In the most recent case, United States Attorney Leo Rover accused the judge of a fixed personal bias and prejudice. Judge Youngdahl called this charge "scandalous." In Sweeden today, where he is cacationing, Owen Lattimore said the government should have reached today's decision a long time ago." The Senate Internal Security Subcommittee said today that the attorney general's list of subversive organizations is "widely misunderstood and misapplied"..and needs to be put in proper perspective. The committee recommends that the attorney general publish a handbook with additional information about each organization so membership can be evaluated "intelligently" for security peuposes. The committee also feels that persons turned down for government jobs because of unevaluated derogatory information should be given an opportunity for a healing.

The Hoover Commission today criticized the government's intelligence agencies for "lack of adequate intelligence data from behind the Iron Curtain" It called for greater boldness at the policy level..and a willingness to "accept certain calculated political and diplomatic risks." And in answer to charges by Senator McCarthy that Communists and their sympathizers have penetrated the Central Intelligence Agency the Commission says: "We discovered no valid ground for the suspicion that the C.I.A. or any other element was being effectively contaminated by any organized subversive clique." It praised C.I.A. Chief Allen Dulles as "industious, objective, selfless, enthusiastic and imaginative."

Here in New York today, Corporal Harold M. Dunn enexpectedly pleaded guilty to charges that he collaborated with the Chinese Communists while a war prisoner. He could receive a life sentence at hard labor.

The steel industry says it will start to shut down its blast furnaces at tomorrow..in anticipation of a strike by the C.I.O. steelworkers at midnight Thursday. Both sides are negotiating agian today but there has been no positive development.

The President today signed a bill to give more than a million federal employees an average seven and a half per cent ay increase..that would average $325 a year. Congress and the President have now completed action on raises for more than three million federal employees. This will cost about one and a quarter billion dollars a year.

Both the House and Senate today passed the draft extension act. This calls for four years of service. Congress also approved a two year extension of the doctors draft. Both laws were due to expire Thrusday night.

The Senate, by one vote, refused to approve the President's request for atom-powered merchant ship.

The House Armed Services Committee has aprroved a military reserve program. Democratic Representative Powell of New York says he'll offer an anti-segregation amendment when it comes to the floor.

Secretary of State Dulles said today that the Russians must agree to unite Western and Eastern Germany if they sincerely want to end cold war tensions. He says Russia seems to have lost interest in unifying Germany now that the plan ca not be used as "good bait" to block German re-armament.

In West Germany today, Chancellor Adenauer's own deputies joined the opposition Socialists in attacking a government bill to sign up volunteers for the proposed German army. The Lower House sent the bill to committee for study.

At his news conference today Secretary Dulles said he thought the shooting down of one of our naval planes off Alaska was due to "trigger happy" Russian pilots. He does not think it was deliberate Soviet policy. And he notes that the Russian expression of regret marks the first time they have publicly "regretted" such indicents. Mr. Dulles says the President wants more facts before deciding whether to stick to our demand that the Russians pay all losses and reperations to the seven wounded airmen. Russia has offered to pay half the damages.

Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov was in New York today..he visited the home of Bernard Baruch and again invited him to visit Russia.

The State Department reveals that we have called on Moscow to admit an an American Roman Cahtolic priest to replace the one expelled in March. And "in the interests of reciprocity" we have offered to permit a Soviet clergyman to enter this country""to administer to the needs of Soviet nationals."

Republican Senator Williams of Delaware charged today that a former congressman...who he did not name..and three others have made " windfall" pension benefits of thousands of dollars through loopholes in the federal retirement laws.

The Air Force says it has sighted one missing Marine Corps flyer on a raft about 110 miles south of Tokyo. He and a crewmate crashed their fighter-bomber four days ago. There is no report on the second man.

It has not much mattered, in the view of the State Department, whether the Formosa Straits area enjoyed an informal cease fire, or one sealed by formal agreement, so long as it was a cease fire. Secretary Dulles has spoken confidently about there already being a de facto cease fire. The Washington view has been, that if it lasts awhile, and is accompanied by acts of good will - like the release of prisoners - negotiations over Formosa would eventually be both possible, and desirable.

This anticipation of a long stretch of calm has made a rude jolt from the appearance of Communist jets over the Formosa straits, and from their engaging in active fighting. The American physician who was aboard a chartered civilian plane, attacked by Communists on its way to Matsu, told newsmen, his plane was escorted by Nationalist fighter planes. The newsmen could see the bullet holes in his plane. Whatever the details and circumstances of this, thd others reported attacks, the significant news is, that the cease-fire in the Formosa area is not operative, de facto, or any other way.

Until now the Communists have not been able to sustain jet fighters over the coastal islands, not having a close enough base, and not having been able to get jet fuel through the Nationalist blockade. Now they have a usable base, and they have fuel. The C.B.S. news correspondent in Hong Kong reported today, that he had been told by a reporter, who had been on the mainland opposite Formosa a month ago, that the Communists have completed a super-highway over the Fukien mountains. This traveler said he counted fifty fuel tankers on the news road in a single day.

The build-up of Communist air strenght in this area would be highly foreboding, if it represented preparation for an assault on Formosa. It would be less so, if the attack was to be on the coastal islands. But in either case it cannot be called a pacifying development. And the use of the MIG's to fire on the fighter escort of a plane on its way to Matsu has an unmistakable meaning. The war between Chinese Communists and Nationalists is still active. There is no cease fire. Tension is not subsiding. It continues to be dangerous.

The danger is not confined to the Formosa area. In North Korea the terms of the armistice are being violated, in the creation of a sizeable North Korean air force, of Soviet origin. The Pentagon has known this for some time, but publishable proof was hard to come by. Now two North Korean pilots have defected to South Korea, and they have revealed that North Korea possesses a combat force of about 600 planes, with more coming in regularly from the Soviet Union. Included are 275 MIG jet fighters, 120 bombers and about 100 fighter-bombers. The pilots, in a statement issued by the South Korean government today, said that Soviet officers have charge of training, and of administering the air force, and that it includes 500 pilots trained in the Soviet Union. They said that the North Korean pilots had orders to shoot down any Allied planes that invaded the North. Under the armistice, both sides are prohibited from reinforcing their air strength from outside Korea.

But if the Communists are indifferent to the armistice terms in Korea, they are very keen on their being observed in Vietnam. For in Vietnam they call for an election that is to determine future control of the coutnry, and if held punctually, under supervision set up by the armistice agreement, the Communists expect a decisive victory. What they not fear, is the growing strength of the Diem government in South Vietnam. If Diem succeeds in getting Bao Dai removed as head of state, the premier would be able to dissociate himself from the armistice altogether, and manage the election to suit himself. Ho Chi Minh, the North Vietnam leader, is in Peiping, holding strategy talks with his Chinese Communist sponsors. If they can be sure of the right kind of election, at the right time, they count on sweeping into power throughout former Indochina. And then SEATO's guarantee would be next to worthless, and any hope of stopping infiltration elsewhere in free Asian countries would be sadly undermined.

The flare-up of fighting in the Formosa straits also seems designed to influence the Big Four at Geneva. It looks like an attempt to get them to call at once a broad conference on the Far Esst, something both Moscow and Peiping have put near the top of their list of preferences.

The United States and its Allies also want negotiations, and believe in the conference method. But a conference, held because conditions have improved and good will is being demonstrated, as in Europe, is one thing. One called because conditions are worsening and good will is vanishing, as in Asia, is another. It is this second kind ofe Communists also seem to be working for.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Hugh Holder.

HOLDER: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Another political conference approaches. The climate is not exactly conducive to international friendship. But let us hope that those attening will feel at least partially as Jan Smuts did when he said: "This is a good world. We need not approve of all the items in it, nor of all the individuals in in. But the world itself is more than its parts or individuals. - it has a soul, a spirit, a fundamental relation deeper than all other relations."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Wednesday June 9 1955

This is the news:

The President said today that he believes the chances of easing world tensions and fears are better today than they were two months ago. Mr. Eisenhower told reporters this belief is partly based on what he has learned of last week's United Nations meeting in San Fransisco. He went on to say: It is obvious some change has taken place in the Russian attitude. He feels that if there's any way to take the burden of fear off people, then we should explore it. And he is trying not to expect too much from the Geneva Summit conference.

Mr. Eisenhower also told the reporters that he is sure the shooting down by Soviet Migs of one of our naval planes off Alaska was a local occurrence..not a matter of Soviet policy. He said weather conditions in the area were not good; part of the incident was due to a misunderstanding.

The President was asked about Senate Democratic Leader Johnson's statement praising the accomplishments of the Democratic-controlled Congress. Mr. Eisenhower--almost angry--challenged the Johnson claim. He read a list of legislation--not approved--which he described as vital for the country. He said some people are confused on where the credit--or blame lies. Later, Senator Johnson said the Democrats have given responsible consideration to the President's program. But they have not acted "like a bunch of second leiutenants."

Mr. Eisenhower also told the reporters: his plan for an atomic-powered ship, turned down by Senate Democrats, was a sure means of easing world tensions. And he said he was only kidding when he hinted, on his New England trip, that he might be thinking of running for a second term.

The United States Steel Corporation hinted today that it might be ready to raise its wage increase offer to the C.I.O. steelworkers. A strike is scheduled for midnight tomorrow and many steel plants have started to bank their furnaces. John A. Stephens, a U.S. Steel vice-president, says he thinks a peaceful agreement can be reached "if both sides work hard enough and both give." Union President McDonald said: "There is still time to conclude a settlement."..but he has not heard from the industry since yesterday afternoon.

The Hoover Commission, in a report on our natural resources, today recommended a sharp increase in federal power rates.. a ban on new government steam generating plants..and a plan to allow private utilities to buy "a fair share" of public power. The commission also recommends that the Tennessee Valley Authority and similar projects be required to issue public securities to obtain funds for future expansion. In minority reports, Commission Members Arthur Fleming, the defense mobilizer, and Attorney General Brownell said these proposals would "impede the government in exercising its proper role in the development of water resources." Another member, James A. Farley, said the report comes "dangerously close to inviting an abdication by the federal government of its responsibilities" in this field. Another dissenter, Democratic Representative Holifield of California says the commission "deliberately" played down a report on dissenting views.

Prime Minister U Nu of Burma arrived in Washington today and said his country and ours share common objectives in the dedication to peace and the democratic way of life.

Corporal Harold M. Dunn, a Korean veteran who admitted collaborating with the Chinese Communists while a war prisoner, today was sentenced to eight years of hard labor. Dunn, who is 26, told a military court: "It was a tragic mistake for which I am sorry."

A Senate committee today heard CBS News Correspondent Winston Burdett testify that he was "a devoted and dedicated" member of the Communist party for four and a half years. He said he did espionage work for the Russians in Finland, Romania and Yugoslavia for two years. Burdett said he joined the party, at 23, through a unit on the now defunct Brooklyn Eagle. He gave the committee names of 22 persons, 13 of whom worked for the Eagle, who were Communists or he believed to be Communists. Burdett said he quit the party in 1942 and the Russians later assassinated his wife, a visiting journalist in Northern Iran, because "she knew too much." Chairman Eastland told Burdett he has rendered "a fine service to his country." A CBS statement says Burdett voluntarily started telling his story to the F.B.I. four years ago. The statement says CBS is convinced his break with the Communists is complete and final and that he has been a loyal and honest citizen ever since.

A Senate-House conference committee today agreed to keep the Marine corps at its present strength and to step-up production of long-range heavy bombers.

And off Japan, two Marine airmen are missing in addition to the two Marines flyers they were searching for yesterday. There has been no radio signal today from either of the men who went down in their plane on Sunday. Of the other two men--one is missing from a searching helicopter that crashed..and a pilot hunting for the original missing men is now "not accounted for."

The British made it clear today that they will use warships in the Far East, if necessary, to keep the sea lanes open for their merchant ships bound for Communist China. Earlier this month Chinese Nationalists intercepted two British ships.

In Beunos Aires today, the government lifted the state of seige that was declared during the June 16 revolt.

My colleague Larry Leseuer is an old hand at covering international conferences...He is back from the UN meeting at San Francisco and has had time to sort out his impressions....Larry?

Letter June 29, 1955

(1)

Perhaps the most lasting impression this reporter is likely to have of the San Francisco UN celebration came on the day after the UN session was over...The Molotov's the Dulles's, the Pinays and the MacMillan's had departed, leaving only a few UN banners and posters behind to indicate that they had met and talked under its shield... and San Francisco, a friendly city with a past, has settled down to a quiet future..

This reporter, wearied by the sketch-making and the midnite press conferences, took advantage of a a wait between plans to journey out to the famed Red wood Grove, just north of the city, the great Muir Woods National Forest... below Mount Tamalpais...//

The place of the big trees was quiet when this reporter arrived, The tourist season hasn't begun yet, and visitors are still few. //.But I sonn discovered I was not alone.. There, in the quiet red wood forest, was a scattering of diplomats, some of them quite well-known, like Nationalist China's Tingfu Tsiang, and the tall Netherlands Foreign Minister, J.M. Luns...We didn't talk very much, just nodded a friendly greeting, and walked together to stand silently Before the plague placed among the tallest of the red woods, (in Cathedral Grove) to honor Franklin D. Roosevelt, as architect of the United Nations...It was put there ten years ago, when he died, as the United Nations was being born..

It did seem fitting that diplomats who deal in words, words like "Maybe" and perhaps, should walk pensively in the shadow of the immemorial red woods, and ponder on the permanence of those brooding trees, to reflect perhaps on the transient nature of the week gone by, in which more than 2 million words were telegraphed around the world from Sam Francisco.. Perhaps they thought - This too, will pass'

But what was accomplished.? at that Tenth UN anniversary.? Well, with the memory of the red woods indelibly Fixed in my mind, its hard to say...

But if I'm to judge from what the diplomats told me, the important events were never proclaimed publically... they said an atmosphere had been created in which people could talk to each other, in private, beside swimming pools and over champagne glasses.. in short, it was the diplomat's view, that after ten years of cold war, old fashioned diplomacy has been resurrected...

Its true that the rival cases of the major antagonists in the cold war, America and Russia, were placed before the public in the speeches of Molotov and Dulles, but the important things that occurred, took place in private...When 38 foreign ministers, including the Western Big Three, had the opportunity to exchange words with each other, and with Molotov +

What did he tell them? Well..to some Molotov was non-committal... The foreign ministers of some of the smaller countries, told me he had merely asked them for their philosophical views on life.. But to others, Molotov appeared to mean business...The Big Four foreign ministers came to San Francisco, expressing doubt at Molotov's motives, But they left, apparently convinced that Russia means to negotiate.. To try to get out of the market at the top, as it were, or as near to the top as they can get, with a few small losses., if necessary.

The feeling is, that Russia wants, for reasons we can only surmise, to stop pushing in Europe at least temporarily, and to consolidate her war-time and post-war gains.. Molotov apparently made known that he wants defense treaties with the West for Communist Eastern Europe, so that russia can relax the arms race..

Mr. Molotov declined to be drawn out on the subject of Asia from which we can only surmise that communism still holds a few ambitions for the Far East...

But it was a new Molotov...This steely-eyed, grim-lipped man was making a great effort to smile, to be genial, even charming... But it was an effort...For this is not Mr. Molotov's style... And yet The effort he made to be liked was so pronounced that it became the number one conversational topic in San Francisco..

Molotov was as distant as ever to reporters, shrugging off their questions with a polite but blank, "Thank you", except for his press conference at which he was tense and unsmiling..

But

[redacted]t the ten gallon hat, worn squarely on his head at Cheyenne, Wyoming, making him look as incongruous as Calvin Coolidge in a war-bonnet, that was the new Molotov style...those calculated museum trips in New York, and his admiration of things American, his pheasantries in the Chicago stockyards...his farewell remarks on shipboard today.. All of them denoted a Molotov with a new paint job...But veteran diplomats tell me that when Russia really changes, she'll first change her negotiators..

And that's [redacted] San Francisco, Ed.

The Russians are quite adept at changing political hats when the situation requires it. And what we witnessed in the case of Molotov might perhaps best be described in these words by W.H. Auden: "To us, he is no more a person now, but a climate of opinion." The important thing for the Russians to remember was expressed once by Henry Ford when he said: "You can't build up a reputation on what you are going to do."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The President said today that he believes the chances of easing world tensions and fears are better today than they were two months ago. Mr. Eisenhower told reporters this belief is partly based on what he has learned of last week's United Nations meeting in San Francisco. He went on to say: It is obvious some change has taken place in the Russian attitude. He feels that if there's any way to take the burden of fear off people, then we should explore it. And he is trying not to expect too much from the Geneva Summit conference.

Mr. Eisenhower also told the reporters that he is sure the shooting down by Soviet Migs of one of our naval planes off Alaska was a local occurance... not a matter of Soviet policy. He said weather conditions in the area were not good; part of the incident was due to a misunderstanding.

The President was asked about Senate Deomcratic Leader Johnson's statement praising the accomplishments of the Democratic-controlled Congress. Mr. Eisenhower -- almost angry--challenged the Johsnon claim. He read a list of legislation -- not approved --which he described as vital for the country. He said some people are confused on where the credit-- or blame lies. Later, Senator Johnson said the Democrats have given responsible consideration to the President's program. But they had not acted "like a bunch of second lieutenants."

Mr. Eisenhower also told the reporters: his plan for an atomic-powered ship, turned down by Senate Democrats, was a sure means of easing world tensions. And he said he was only kidding when he hinted, on his New England trip, t at he might be thinking of running for a second term.

The United States Steel Corporation hinted today that it might be ready to raise its wage increase offer to the C I.O. steelworkers. A strike is scheduled for midnight tomorrow and many steel plants have started to bank their furnaces. John A. Stephens, a U.S. Steel vice - president, says he thinks a peaceful agreement can be reached "if both sides work hard enough and both give." Union President McConald said: "There is still time to conclude a settlement"...but he has not heard from the industry since yesterday afternoon.

The Hoover Commission, in a report on our natural resources, today recommended a sharp increase in federal power rates..a ban on new government steam generating plants..and a plan to allow private utilities to buy "a fair share" of public power. The commission also recommends that the Tennessee Valley Authority and similar projects be required to issue public securities to obtain funds for future expansion. In minority reports, Commission Members Arthur Fleming, the defense mobilizer, and Attorney General Brownell said these proposals would "impede the government in exercising its proper role in the development of water resources." Another member, James A Farley said the report comes "dangerously close to inviting an abdication of the federal government of its responsibilities" in this field. Another dissenter, Democratic Representative Holifield of California says the commission "deliberately" played down a report on dissenting views.

Prime Minister U Nu of Burma arrived in Washington today and said his country and ours share common objectives in the dedication to peace and the democratic way of live.

Corporal Harold M. Dunn, a Korean veteran who admitted collaborating with the Chinese Communists while a war prisoner, today was sentenced to eight years of hard labor. Dunn, who is 26, told a military court: "It was a tragic mistake for which I am sorry."

A Senate committee today heard CBS news correspondent Winston Burdett testify that hw was "a devoted and dedicated" member of the Communist party for four and a half years. He said he did espionage work for the Russians in Finland, Romania and Yugoslavia for two years. Burdett said he joined the party at 23, through a unit on the now defunct Brooklyn Eagle. He gave the committee names of 22 persons, 13 of whom worked for the Eagle, who were Communists or be believed to be Communists. Burdett said he quit the party in 1942 and the Russians later assassinated his wife, a visiting journalist in Northern Iran, bacause "she knew too much." Chairman Eastland told Burdett he was rendered "a fine service to his country". A CBS statement says Burdett volunatrily started telling his story to the F.B.I. four years ago. The statement says CBS is convinced his break with the Communists is complete and final and that he has been a loyal and honest citizen ever sicce.

A Senate-House conference committee today agreed to keep the Marine Corps at its present strength and to step up production of long-range heavy bombers.

And off Japan, two Marine airmen are missing in addition to the two Marine flyers they were searching for yesterday. There has been no radio signal today from either of the men who went down in their plane on Sunday. Of the other two men -- one is missing from a searching helicopter that crashed ..and a pilot hunting for the original missing men is now "not accounted for."

The British made it clear oday that they will use warships in the Far East, if necessary, to keep the sea lanes open for their merchant ships bound for Communist China. Earlier this onth Chinese Nationalists intercepted two British ships.

In Buenos Aires today, the government lifted the state of seige that was declared during the June 16 revolt.

My colleague Larry Lesueur is an old hand at covering international conferences..He is back from the UN meeting at San Francisco and has had time to sort out his impressions....Larry?

Perhaps the most lasting impression this reporter is likely to have of the San Frencisco UN celebration came on the day after the UN session was over. The Molotovs the Dulless the Pinays and the MacMillans had departed, leaving only a few UN banners and posters behind to indicate that they had met and talked under its shield. ..and San Francisco, a friendly city with a past, has settled down to a quiet future.

This reporter, wearied by the speech-making and the midnight press confer nces, took advantage of a wait between planes to journey out to the famed Red Wood Grove just north of the city, the great Muier Woods National Forest.. below Mount Tampalpais .

The place of the big trees was quite when this reporter arrived, The tourist season hasn't begun yet, and the visitors are still few. But I soon discovered I was not alone. There, in the quiet red wood forest was a scattering of diplomats some of them quite well known, like Nationalist China's Tingfu Tsiang, and the tall Netherlands Foreign Minister, H.M. Luns...We didn't talk very much, just nodded a friendly greeting,a and walked together to stand silently before the plaque placed among the tallest of the red woods, in Cathedral Grove, to honor Franklin D. Roosevelt, as arhchitectof the United ations. It was put there ten years ago, when he died as the United Nations was being born.

It did seem fitting that diplomats who deal in words, words like "maybe" and perhaps, should walk pensively in the shadow of the immemorial red woods, and ponder on the permanence of those brooding trees, to reflect perhaps on the transient nature of the week gone by, in which more than 2 million words were telegraphed around the world from San Francisco..Perhaps they thought this too, will pass.

But what was accomplished? At that Tenth UN Anniversary? Well, with the memory of the red woods indelibly fixed in my mind, its hard to say.

But if I'm to judge from what the diplomats told me, the important events were never proclaimed publicly....an atmosphere they said had been created in which people could talk to each other, in private, beside swimming pools and over champagne glasses..in short, it was the diplomats view that after ten years of cold war, old fashioned diplomacy has been resurrected.

It's true that the rival cases of the major antagonists in the cold war.. America and Russia, were placed before the public in the speeches of Molotov and Dulles, but the important things that occurred, took place in private.. when 28 foreign ministers, including the Western Big Three, had the opportunity to exchange words with each other and with Molotov.

What did he tell them? Well to some Molotov was non-committal..the foreign ministers of some of the smaller countries, told me he had merely asked them for their philosophical views on life...But to others, Molotov appeared to mean business. The Big Four foreign ministers who came to San Francisco, expressing doubt at Molotov's motives, but they left apparently convinced that Russian means to negotiate To try to get out of the market at the top, as it were, ao at near to the top as they can get, with a few small losses, if necessary.

The feeling is, that Russia wants for reasons we can only surmise, to stop pushing in Europe, at least temporarily, and to consolidate her war-time and post war gains. Molotov apparently made known that he wants defense treaties with the west for Communist Eastern Europe, so that Russian can relax the the arms race. Mr. Molotov declined to be drawn out on the subject of Asia from which we can only surmise that Communist still holds a few ambitions for the Far East.

But it was a new Molotov ..this steely-eyed, grim-lipped man was making a great effort to smile, to be genial, even charming. But it was an effort..for this is not Mr. Molotov's style..and yet the effort he made to be liked was so pronounced that it became the number one conversational topic an San Francisco.

Molotov was as distant as ever to reporters, shrugging off their questions with a polite but blank, "thank you", except for his press conference at which he was tense and unsmiling.

But the ten gallon hat, worn squarely on his head at Cheyenne, Wyoming, making him look as incongruous as Calvin Coolidge in a war-bonnet, that was the new Molotov style...those calculated museum trips in New York, and his admiration of things American, his pleasantries in the Chicago stockyards...his farewell remarks on shipboard today. All of them denoted a Molotov with a new paint job. But veteran diplomats tell me that when Russia reall changes, the ll first change her negotiators.

And that's my impression of San Francisco, Ed.

MURROW : That was Larry Lesueur, reporting on his impressions of San Francisco. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. first, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: The Russians are quite adept an changing political hats when the situation reuqires it. And what we witnessed in the case of Molotov might perhaps best be described in these words by W. H. Auden: To us, he is no more a person now, but a "climate of opinion." Th important thing for the Russians to remember was expressed once by Henry Ford when he said:"You can't build up a reputation on what you areo going to do." Good Night and Good Luck.

Thursday - June 30, 1955

Stet

[redacted]:

The United States Steel Corporation [redacted] laid-off ten thousand workers at its Chicago and Gary, Indiana plants. Sixteen of the 23 blast furnaces at the two plants were banked this afternoon. In other scattered areas steelworkers [redacted] left their jobs..either because of lay-offs or in anticipation of the strike THAT WAS scheduled to start at midnight tonight. #

David McDonald, president of the C.I.O. steelworkers and John Stephens, chief negotiator for United States Steel, HAD been meeting through MOST of theday. ~~McDonald had scheduled a radio address tonight but then cancelled it.~~ On the Stock Exchange today, steel stocks ~~were~~ active..the big ones going up about a dollar a share...in expectation of an agreement. The Union is demanding a "substantial" wage increase.... something more than the average ten cents an hour offered by the industry.

Stet all

The White House announced tonight that the President has ordered a study to determine whether the government should cancel or continue the Dixon-Yates power contract. The President says this new study is necessary because the city of Memphis has decided to build its own power generating plant rather than take Dixon-Yates power. Supporters of public power have bitterly fought the Dixon-Yates agreement.

THE PRESIDENT TONIGHT SIGNED THE DRAFT BILL EXTENSION.

~~An estimated 50 thousand copper workers, members of the independent Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers union, are scheduled to strike at midnight. They are demanding a 20 cents an hour wage increase.. a variation of the guaranteed annual wage.. and fringe benefits.~~

~~In Washington,~~ The Senate today approved and sent to the President a bill continuing the federal debt limit at 281 billion dollars for another year. And both the House and Senate approved, without debate, a 32-billion dollar defense appropriation.

The United States and West Germany today signed a military assistance agreement. It calls for us to give the West Germans hundreds of millions of dollars worth of equipment for the new German army. And the Germans, in return, pledge to promote "an integrated defense of the North Atlantic area" in accordance with NATO defense plans.

The West German government today replied to Moscow's invitation to discuss the establishment of diplomatic, trade and cultural relations. The German note side-steps the invitation to Chancellor Adenauer to visit Moscow. Instead, it suggests that the German and Russian ambassadors in Paris should meet to prepare an agenda for later talks.

British Prime Minister Eden announced today that Greece and Turkey have been invited to a London conference to settle the dispute over Cyprus, the British Mediterranean stronghold. THE ISLAND [redacted] has experienced a recent wave of terrorism...in support of demands by Greek inhabitants for union with Greece.

~~India's Prime Minister Nehru arrived in Belgrade today and received what is described as "the warmest welcome ever accorded a foreign visitor to Yugoslavia."~~

Indian Red Cross officials said today that three American soldiers, who once chose to stay in Red China, probably will be repatriated within a few days.

The State Department says the Communist regime in Northern Indo-China is flagrantly violating the Geneva armistice...by doubling its army, with equipment sent in from Communist China.

That big air and sea search for missing American flyers is still going on off the Japanese coast. Faint radio signals from at least one of the airmen were heard today...but NO ONE WAS [redacted] sighted.

Argentine diplomatic sources say President Peron has cabled a report on church-state relations to Pope Pius. But Vatican sources say they know nothing of the message from the recently ex-communicated Argentine President.

In Washington today, Federal District Judge Curran ruled that a finding of "reasonable doubt" as to the loyalty of John Stewart Service must be stricken from government records. But the court held that Service, fired from the State Department in 1951, was legally fired by former Secretary of State Acheson and is not entitled to get his job back. [redacted]

Senate investigators today heard Charles Grutzner, a New York Times reporter, acknowledge that he was a Communist party member from 1937 to 1940..before he joined the Times. Krutzner heatedly denied a charge that while working as a reporter in Korea he filed two stories that indirectly helped the Communists. Another witness, Victor Weingarten, a former reporter for the Brooklyn Eagle, denied that he has been a Communist since 1940. He refused to SAY whether he had been a party member before that. And he refused to SAY whether any of his associates were Communists.

Former President Hoover said today that if the reorganization plans of the Hoover Commission are adopted, the budget can be balanced and taxes reduced. The Hoover Commission expires at midnight. At a news conference today, Mr. Hoover released a hitherto secret report of the TASK force on Water and Power. It urged the sale, lease or transfer of all federally-owned power plants along with "town sites and related buildings." Democratic Representative Holifield of California calls it a manual for "private utility propaganda." ~~And Socialist leader Norman Thomas today resigned from the Citizens Committee for the Hoover report, because, he said, the Commission instead "tried to document Mr. Hoover's particular politico-economic creed."~~

7

The prime minister of Burma..U Nu..today walked out on Secretary of Agriculture Benson because he had been kept standing in an ante-room for five minutes. Washington dispatches say this has left State Department officials "a bit aghast." Secretary Benson says he was busy with other visitors...he has gone to the Blair House, where the U Nu is staying, "to offer my apology."

Edward R. Murrow: June 30, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

Here in New York this evening a taxi driver by the name of Sanford Barnett, gets his picture on the front page of the Journal American. And richly does Mr. Barnett deserve this distinction. For it is hot in this city of steam, scurry and scamper, and Mr. Barnett drives his taxi-cab attired in Bermuda shorts and an open-neck shirt. He has struck a blow ~~XXXXXX~~ for freedom - especially freedom of the knees and neck. He is a non-conformist - a rebel against the fashion or the prejudice which demands that the male animal shall be attired in the summertime in garb that is an offence against nature and logic. Less civilized, or perhaps I should say less mechanized men manage things better.

Have regard for a moment to the neck of the average city dweller in the hot months of summer. It is encased in a shirt; the collar of said shirt generally contains at least four layers of cloth. The neck is further swaddled by a necktie - at least two more layers; then the coat collar, another two or maybe four layers of cloth. What has happened to the American neck? Why is ~~XX~~ it so delicate as to require such protection in the heat of summer? What price the free independent, non-conformist nature of the American male, when he submits so tamely to this torture? He is neither free nor enterprising. From head to toe he is a conformist.

No pith helmet, no open-toed sandals; and above the shoes, the garters which have the effect of contour plowing, namely to absorb or restrain the moisture. Men of mettle should appear on the streets, or in the office, in open-necked shirts and shorts. If the knees are knobby, so be it. If the stomach has undertaken an independent career, wear the shirt on the outside, thereby softening the lines of the contour.

No one has yet contended that it is un-American to be comfortable. We suffer as we do because of an unwillingness on the part of the individual to break from the herd. We are the victims of a sad tradition combined with timidity. There is even a possible class angle in this minor tragedy. If you observe taxi drivers, construction workers, farmers, you are not likely to find a buttoned shirt or a necktie in the lot. Those men are doing work no less important, no less dignified than those office workers who present such a sorry spectacle of saturation as they walk down the street, afraid to break with the sartorial sanctions of the past. What pitiable figures are we all, the victims of our own timidity and conformity, more to be scorned than pitied. Maybe this unnecessary clothing is some sort of protective coloring which we hope will make us appear more respectable and important than we are. But it isn't comfortable, and I suspect it isn't even as hygenic as an open-necked shirt and shorts.

We deliberately inconvenience ourselves in an age when it is possible that each one of us may be turned into a radio-active cinder. Humans have devised a method of destroying humanity, but they lack the courage to be comfortable while waiting to see whether that destruction will be accomplished.

Someone once said that we are so busy dealing with the urgent that we never get around to the important. It is both urgent and important that something be done to liberate the neck and knees of the American male, but unhappily nothing can be done about it. We lack the courage required to escape this brutal bondage, particularly around the neck. We lack the courage, independence, indifference to custom, which would permit us to free ourselves. This is a shameful admission. It arises from an unwillingness to be different, or to be stared at.

Lest this be regarded as an effort to undermine the flourishing and imaginative necktie industry, permit me to say that I would willingly wear two neckties in the winter-time, if none need be worn in the summertime. After all, nations have been conquered and empires built by men who never knew a necktie; and it's even money that Davy Crockett in his better days didn't wear one of the things.

And so, having uttered these futile words, in an air-conditioned NEWS ROOM ~~studio~~, this reporter will now swathe his neck in those ten or twelve layers of cloth, and depart - a beaten man, one of the herd - lacking in courage, ~~but nevertheless filled with admiration and envy for the cab driver,~~ Sanford Barnett, in Bermuda shorts and an open-necked shirt. Come to think of it, maybe even he is only "half brave," because I'll bet most people who ride with him don't even know he's wearing shorts.

Conformity. thy symbol is Clothes,

Jack Clarke

WORD FOR THE DAY June 30, 1955.

It may well be that the summer costume suggested - ~~sandals, shorts and open-neck shirt~~ - would not be appealing to the eye. But I take refuge in a comment by Lord Chesterfield who said: "The wickedest work in this world is symbolized, not by a wine glass but by a looking-glass." We have no ~~confidence~~ competence to comment upon the exotic summer clothes worn by women, but a few of these creations remind us of Jonathan Swift, who said: "She wears her clothes as if they were thrown on her with a pitchfork."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The United States Steel Corporation laid-off ten thousand workers at its Chicago and Gary, Indiana plants. Sixteen of the 23 furnaces at the two plants were banked this afternoon. In other scattered areas steelworkers left their jobs...either because of lay-offs or in anticipation of the strike that was scheduled to start at midnight tonight.

David McDoaals, president of the C.I.O. steel workers and John Stephens chief negotiator for United States Steel had been meeting through most of the day. McDonald had scheduled a radio address tonight but then cancelled it. On the Stock exchange today, steel stocks were active..the big ones going up about a dollar a share..in expectation of an agreement. The Union is demanding a "substantial" wage increase ..something more than the average ten cents an hour offered by the industry.

The White House announced tongight that the President has ordered a study to determine whether the government should cancel or continue the Dixon Yates power contract. The President says this new study is necesary because the city of Memphis has decided to build its own power generating plant rather than take Dixon-Yates power. Supporters of public power have bitterly fought the Dixon-Yates agreement.

The President tongigh signed the draft bill extension.

The Senate today approved and sent to the President a bill continuing the federal debt limit at 281 billion dollars for another year. And both the House and Senate approved, withour debate, a 32-billion dollar defense appropriation.

The United States and West Germany today signed a military assistance agreement . It calls for us to give the West Germans hundreds of millions of dollars worth of equipment for the new German army. And the Germans in return, pledge to promote "an integrated defense of the North Atlantic area" in accordance with NATO defense plans.

The West German government today replied to Moscow's invitation to discuss the establishment of diplomatic , trade and cultural relations. The German note side-steps the invitation to Chancellor Adenauer to visit Moscow. Instead, it suggests that the German and Russian ambassadors in Paris should meet to prepare an agenda for later talks.

British Prime Minister Eden today announced that Greece and Turkey have been invited to a London conference to settle the dispute over Cyprus, the British Mediterranean stronghold. The island has experienced a recent wave of terrorism. in support of demands by Greek inhabitants for union with Greece.

Indian Red Cross officials said today that three American soldiers, who once chose to stay in Red China, probably will be repatriated within a fdw days.

The State Department says the Communist regime in Northern Indo-China is flagrently violating the Geneva armistice..by doubling its army, with equipment sent in from Communist China.

That big air and sea search for m ssing American flyers is still going on off the Japanese coast. Faint radio signals from at least one of the airmen were heard today..but no one was sighted.

Argentine diplomatic sources say President Peron has cabled a report on church - state relations to Pope Pius. But Vatican sources say they know nothing of the message from the recently expcommunicated Argentine President.

In Washington today, Federal District Judge Curran ruled that a finding of "reasonable doubt" as to the loyalty of John Stewart Service must be stricken from government records. But the court held that Service, fired from the State Department in 1951, was legally fired by former Secretary of State Achesson, and is not entitled to get his job back.

Senate investigators today heard Charles Grutzner, a New York Times reporter, acknowledge that he as a Communist party member from 1937 to 1940 before th joined the Times. Krutzner heatedly denied a charge that while orking as a reporter in Korea, he filed two stories that indirectly helped the Communists. Another witness, Victor Weingarten, a former reporter for the Brooklyn Eagle, dienied that he has been a Communist since 1940. He refused to say whether he had been a party member before that. And he refused to say whether any of his associates were Communists.

Former President Hoover said today that if the reorganization plans of the Hoover Commission are adopted, the budget can be balanced and taxes reduced. The Hoover Commission expires at midnight. At a news conference today, Mr. Hoover released a hitherto secret report of the task force on water and power. It urged the sale, lease or transfer of all federally-owned power plants along with "town sites and related buildings." Democratic Representative Holifield of California calls it a manual for "private utility propaganda."

The prime minister of Burma ..U Nu..today walked out on Secretary of Agriculture enson because he had been left standing in an anti-room for five minutes. Washington dispatches say this has lef State Department officials "a bit aghast." Secretary Benson says he was busy withother visitors,..he has gone to Blair House where U Nu is staying "to offer my apology."

Here in New York this evening a taxi driver by the name of Sanford Barnett, gets his picture on the front page of the Journal American. And richly does Mr. Barnett deserve this distinction. For it is hot in this city of steam, scurry and scamper, and Mr. Barnett drives his taxi-cab attired in Bermuda shorts and an open-eck shirt. He has struck a blow for freedom - especially freedom of the knees and neck. He is a non-conformist - a rebel against the fashion or the prejudice which demands that the male animal shall be attired in the summertime in garb that is an offence against nature and logic. Less civilized, or perhaps I should say less mechanized men manage things better.

Have regard for a moment to the neck of the average city dweller in the hot months of summer. It is encased in a shirt; the collar of said shirt generally contains at least four layers of cloth. The neck is further swaddled by a necktie - at least two more layers; then the coat collar, another two or maybe four layers of cloth. What has ahppened to the American neck? Why is it so delicate as to require such protection in the heat of summer? What price the free, independent, non-conformist nature of the American male, when he submits so tamely to this turture? He is neither free nor enterprising. From head to he is a conformist. No pith helmet, no open-toes sandals; and above the shoes, the garters which have the effect of contour plowing, namely to absorb or restrain the moisture. Men of mettle should appear on the streets, or in the office, in open-necked shirts and shorts. If the knees are knobby, so be it. If the stomach has undertaken an independent career, wear the shirt on the outside, therby softening the lines of the countour.

No one has yet contended that it is un-American to be comfortable. We suffer as we do because of an unwillingness on the part of the individual to break from the herd. We are the victims of a sad tradition combined wiht timidity. There is even a possible class angle in this minor tragedy. Iy you observe taxi drivers, construction workers, farmers, you are not likely to find a buttoned shirt or a necktie in the lot. Those men are doing work no less important, no less dignified that those office workers who present such a sorry spectacle of saturation as they walk down the street, afraid to break with the sartorial sanctions of of the past. What pitiable figures are we all, the victims of our own timidity and conformity, more to be scored than pitied. Maybe this unnecessary clothing is some sort of protective coloring which we hope will make up appear more respectable and important than we are.

But it isn't comfortable, and I suspect it isn't even as hygenic as an open-necked shirt and shorts.

We deliberately inconvenience ourselves in an age when it is possible that each one of us may be turned into a radio-active cinder. Humans have devised a method of destroying humanity, but they lack the courage to be comfortable while waiting to see whether that destruction will be acomplished.

Someone once said that we are so busy dealing with the urgent that we never get around to the important. It is both urgent and important that something be done to liberate the neck and knees of the American male, but unhappily, nothing can be done about it. We lack the courage required to escape this brutal bondage, particularly around the neck. We lack the courage, independence, and indifference to custom, which would permit us to free ourselves. This is a shameful admission. It arises from an unwillingness to be different. or to be stared at.

Lest this be regarded as an effort to undermine the flourishing and immaginative necktie industry, permit me to say that I would willingly wear two neckties in the wintertime, if non need be worn in the summertime. After all, nations have been conquered and empires built by men who never knew a necktie; and it's even money that Davy Crockett in his better days didn't wear one of the things.

And so, having uttered these futile words, in an air-conditioned news room, this reporter will now swathe his neck in those ten or twelve layers of cloth, and depart - a beaten man, one of the herd - lacking in courage, but nevertheless, filled with admiration and envy for the cab driver, Sanford Barnett, in Bermuda shorts and an open-necked shirt. Come to think of it, maybe even he is only "half brave", because I'll bet most people who ride with him don't even know he's wearing shorts.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

It may well be that the summer costume suggested would not be appealing to the eye. But I take refuge in a comment by Lord Chesterfield who said: "The wickedest work in this world is symbolized, not by a wine glass but by a looking glass." We have no competence to comment upon the exotic summer clothes worn by women, but of few of these creations remind us of Jonathan Swift, who said: She wears her clothes as if they were thrown on her with a pitchfork."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Friday, July 1, 1955

This is the news:

The nation's major steel companies have started signing contracts with the C.I.O. steelworkers...with AVERAGE wage increases of 15 cents an hour. United States Steel and the union reached an agreement this morning after one of the shortest industry strikes in history --12 HOURS. The company first offered the union a ten cent an hour raise..this was turned down. The new agreements, expected to be general in the industry, will make the average hourly earnings of steelworkers two dollars and forty-four and a half cents. And United States steel announced tonight that it will raise its prices an average of $7.50 a ton..an average five and eight-tenths per cent compared to an average seven and a half per cent pay increase for its workers. The company says the price increase "will exert only a minor influence on the cost of the finished product that the consumer buys."

Some 30-thousand members of the International Mine, Mill and Smelter workers union are on strike today.. cutting the production of copper, lead, zinc and other vital materials. The union wants higher wages and guaranteed payments for workers who are temporarily laid off.

2

In Washington, AFofL street car and bus operators went on strike today, creating one of the worst traffic jams in the District's history. Senator Morse and others introduced a resolution to take up the franchise of the Capitol Transit Company and give it to another private firm. Morse says Capital Transit's service is bad. The chairman of the company's board is Louis Wolfson, who recently made an unsuccessful fight for control of Montgomery Ward. The striking [redacted] union wants a wage increase and other benefits.

3

[redacted]

The House today approved the President's bill to build up a trained military reserve [redacted]. It voted down a new attempt by Democratic Representative Powell of New York to add an anti-segregation amendment. The bill would increase the trained reserve from 700-thousand to 3-million men in four years...largely through teen-aged volunteers who would take six months of special training and then do reserve duty for seven and a half years.

The Senate Appropriations committee has voted to hold back money for a power line to the proposed Dixon-Yates plant..if the city of Memphis starts building its own power plant within 90 days.

Chairman Eastland of the Senate investigating committee says New York Times reporter Charles Grutzner "apparently did nothing to violate security" by disclosing the first combat use of Sabrejets [redacted] in Korea.

Harold Stassen today stepped down as foreign aid chief..to become the President's special assistant for world disarmament problems. Stassen appealed to America to concentrate most of its aid funds in Asia for "a long time to come."

The President flew to his farm in Gettysbirg this afternoon to join Mrs. Eisenhower on their 39th wedding anniversary

The Chinese Communists say that the five United Nations soldiers who now want to go home have been placed under police surveillance because of "rowdy behavior." The Communists say the men, three of them Americans, have been staying out late and drinking.

Off Japan, one of four missing Marines has been found dead, in the wreckage of his jet plane on a small island. The hunt for the three other men is now in its sixth day.

In Portugal today, eight Portugese fighter pilots, flying American Thunderjets, crashed into a 15-hundred foot mountain that was invisible in fog. All eight, one four-plane flight above the other, were killed. It was the worst air crash in the history of the Portugese air force.

A high Turkish official said today that Turkey will accept Great Britain's invitation to a London conference on Cyprus. The acting Greek foreign minister says his country--also invited..is giving the invitation very careful consideration.

In Washington today, Civil Defense Administrator Peterson, in his annual report to the President and Congress, said that despite some moves toward easing world tension, the threat of atomic attack is greater today than it was a year ago. He says the civil defense agency has scrapped its previous "duck and cover" plan for the nation's 70 critical target areas. Now, it favors the concept of mass evacuation, which Peterson admits might be "the toughest undertaking in the history of the world."

In Chile, a state of emergency has been declared in parts of the country because of a strike by 60-thousand government workers for more pay and a halt to inflation.

Edward R. Murrow: July 1, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

These are the days when people are studying what happens, to see if any of it suggests, like a barometer, what the weather will be like at the summit when the Big Four meet. A great deal has been happening, and much of it seems to promise fair weather at Geneva, though not all of it. But even favorable omens have to be taken with a little reserve, for it is one of the arts of diplomacy to devise them. If one side at Geneva expects something from the other side, and does so confidently, it makes it harder not to yield something. Then it is easier to lay the blame for an eventual failure. Optimism can be an element of strategy, as well as a state of mind.

However, not all the optimism shown in Washington and other Western capitals, is professional. Probably the most important result of the San Francisco conference was the conviction it left in the minds of quite hard-boiled Western diplomats that the Soviet Union really has changed its course. They felt, rather than understood, that Moscow wishes to do something concrete to reduce world tensions. So they do not dismiss what the Russians say and do as mere propaganda, and an effort to trap unwary optimists.

Three major acts have done most to bring about this re-appraisal; the Austrian treaty, the mission of repentance to Jugoslavia, and the acceptance of the main lines of the West's own disarmament proposals. The offer to West Germany to establish diplomatic and trade relations was another favorable sign. Most effective of all signs, though not the most significant, was the transformed personality of Mr. Molotov. Nothing like this had been seen in modern times. A man who so often had breathed fire and brimstone against the United States, both from the Kremlin and from the podium of the U.N., became a courteous, almost tourist-like human being, outwardly appreciative of elements in our culture and of our hunger for peace. When he had been ferocious, one could assume he had to be that way to keep his job. So one can assume that he turned into a "good fellow" for the same reason.

In the improved atmosphere, Washington felt it could, and must, give back moderation for moderation, and it did so in handling the incident of the navy patrol shot down by Soviet MIG's. The Kremlin, for its part, ~~did not grovel, but it~~ came closer to a genuine apology than ever before in such a case. And President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles, for their part, insisted on keeping the incident a small, local matter. But it should be clear that this moderation was produced - by both sides - for its effect on the Geneva meeting.

But as I said, not all the omens are favorable. One in particular suggests that when it comes to bargaining about issues that affect Soviet interests acutely, the Kremlin is not in a generous frame of mind. This is seen in the negotiations between the Soviet Union and Japan for a treaty of peace, now being held in London. These have bogged down, and are stalled. It begins to look as though one side or the other badly miscalculated; perhaps both sides did. The Japanese may have been naive about the change in Soviet policy, and believed they would get back at least some of their Soviet-held territory. The Soviet Union may have over-estimated the eagerness of the Japanese to get out from under their dependence on the United States.

If the Japanese hoped that the upcoming summit meeting would soften Soviet sternness, they were wrong, at least up to now. The treaty the Soviet offered returned no territory whatever, and laid down conditions that would make Japan give up its reliance on the United States for protection. They would force Japan to be a neutral, at the mercy of the two great Communist powers. The Soviet negotiator didn't even offer to repatriate Japanese citizens still being ~~detained~~ held. He offered next to nothing, demanded everything.

As ~~one can believe~~ apparently, the Hatoyama government is now badly shaken. Maybe that is why the Russians are playing the game this way. They may think the Socialists have a chance of coming to power in Japan, and will do business with them, and then, perhaps for some islands, take Japan out of the American camp into neutrality and helplessness.

What is significant at this moment is that the upcoming Big Four meeting has not made the Kremlin conciliatory to Japan. It is behaving just as the world has so long been taught to expect it to behave.

Stewart Alsop tells in the New York Herald Tribune of a two-hour talk he had in Moscow with the editor of Pravda, the Communist party organ. He is Dmitri Shepalov, and is touted as probable successor of Molotov in the foreign office. Without quoting much of what was said in the interview, Mr. Alsop complains of a faintly haunted feeling of trying unsuccessfully to shout across an unbridgeable gulf. Admittedly it is a change in Soviet policy that Mr. Alsop could sit down in Moscow with the probable successor of Molotov. But he winds up by saying that the interview served to underline one fact - that whatever change there may have been in Soviet policy, it is in no sense whatever a basic or a doctrinal change.

Maybe that tells the story of Geneva, too. The Kremlin wants to negotiate. I[redacted]. And that is new. But basically and ideologically its objective may be the same.

This reporter is taking a few weeks vacation. During my absence Charles Collingwood has agreed to make these nightly reports. I shall be back in late August. If these reports have had any merit it has been due in large measure to the able assistance I have had from my colleagues both here and abroad.

As I mentioned a moment ago, I'll be taking leave of this microphone for the next eight weeks. Even for broadcasters there comes a time for vacationing...and keeping silent. ~~some meals. (of course this could apply to our listeners too.)~~ Sydney Smith once advised: "Every now and then be completely idle - do nothing at all." But I'm more inclined to go along with Jerome K. Jerome when he said: "It is impossible to enjoy idling unless one has plenty of work to do."

Good Nite and Good Luck!

These are the days when people are studying what happens, to see if any of it suggests, like a barometer, what the weather will be like at the summit when the Big Four meet. A great deal has been happening, and much of it seems to promise fair weather at Geneva, though not all of it. But even favorable omens have to be taken with a little reserve, for it is one of the arts of diplomacy to devise them. If one side at Geneva expects something from the other side, and does so confidently, it makes it harder not to yield something. Then it is easier to lay the blame for an eventual failure. Optimism can be an element of strategy as well as a state of mind.

However, not all the optimism shown in Washington and other Western capitals, is professional. Probably the most important result of the SanFrancisco conference was the conviction it left in the minds of quite hard-boiled Western diplomats that the Soviet Union really has changed its course. They felt, rather than understood, that Moscow wishes to do something concrete to reduce world tensions. So they do not dismiss what the Russians say and do as mere propaganda, in an effort to trap unwary optimists.

Three major acts have done most to bring about this reappraisal, the Austrian treaty, the mission of repentance to Jugoslavia, and the acceptance of the main lines of the West's own disarmament proposals. The offer to West Germany to establish diplomatic and trade relations was another favorable sign. Most effective of all signs, though not the most significant, was the transformed personality of Mr.Molotov. Nothing like this had been seen in modern times. A man who so often had breathed fire and brimstone against the United States, both from the Kremlin and from the podium of the UN, became a courteous, almost tourist-like human being, appreciative of elements in our culture and of our hunger for peace. When he had been ferocious, one could assume he had to be that way to keep his job. So one can assume that he turned into a "good fellow" for the same reason.

In the improved atmosphere, Washington felt it could and must give back moderation for moderation, and it did so in handling the incident of the navy patrol shot down by Soviet MIG's. The Kremlin, for its part, did not grovel, but it came closer to a genuine apology than ever before in such a case. And President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles, for their part, insisted on keeping the incident a small, local matter. But it should be clear that this moderation was produced--by both sides--for its effect on the Geneva meeting.

But as I said, not all the omens are favorable. One in particular suggests that when it comes to bargaining about issues that affect Soviet interests acutely, the Kremlin is not in a generous frame of mind. This is seen in the negotiations between the Soviet Union and Japan for a treaty of peace, now being held in London. These have bogged down, and are stalled. It begins to look as though one side or the other badly miscalculated; perhaps both sides did. The Japanese may have been naive about the change in Soviet policy, and believed they would get back at least some of their Soviet-held territory. The Soviet Union may have overestimated ~~misjudged the~~ eagerness of the Japanese to get out from under their dependence on the United States. If the Japanese hoped that the upcoming summit meeting would soften Soviet sternness, they were wrong, at least up to now. The treaty the Soviet offered gave up no territory whatever, and laid down down conditions that would make Japan give up its reliance on the United States for protection. They would force Japan to be a neutral, at the mercy of the two great Communist powers. The Soviet negotiator didn't even offer to repatriate Japanese citizens still being detained. He offered next to nothing, demanded everything.

¶ As one can believe, the Hatoyama government now badly shaken. Maybe that is why the Russians are playing the game this way. They may think the Socialists have a chance of coming to power in Japan, and will do business with them, and then perhaps for some islands, take Japan out of the American camp into neutrality and helplessness.

¶ What is significant at this moment is that the upcoming Big Four meeting has not made the Kremlin conciliatory to Japan. It is behaving just as the world has so long been taught to expect it to behave.

¶ Stewart Alsop tells in the New York Herald Tribune of a two-hour talk he had in Moscow with the editor of Pravda, the Communist party organ. He is Dmitri Shepalov, and is touted as the probable successor of Molotov in the foreign office. Without quoting much of what was said in the interview, Mr. Alsop complains of a faintly haunted feeling of trying unsuccessfully to shout across an unbridgeable gulf. Admittedly it is a change in Soviet policy that

Mr. Alsop could sit down in Moscow with the probable successor of Molotov. But he winds up by saying that the interview served to underline one fact--that whatever change there may have been in Soviet policy, it is in no sense whatever a basic or a doctrinal change.

Maybe that tells the story of Geneva, too. The Kremlin wants to negotiate. It really does. And that is new. But basically and ideologically its objectives ~~are~~ may be the same.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JULY 1, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The nation's major steel companies have started signing contracts with the C.I.O. steel workers..with average wage increases of 15 cents an hour. United States Steel and the union reached an agreement this morning, after one of the shortest industry strikes in history...12 hours. The company first offered the union a ten cent an hour raise..this was turned down. The new agreements, expected to be general in the industry, will make the average hourly earnings of steelworkers two dollars and forty-four : a half cents. And United States Steel announced tonight that it will raise its prices an average of $7.50 a ton..an average five and eight tenths per cent compared to an average seven and a half per cent pay increase for its workers. The company says the price increase "will exert only a minor influence on the cost of the finished product that the consumer buys."

Some 30-thousand members of the International Mine, Mill and Smelter workers union are on strike today..cutting the production of copper, lead, zinc and other vital materials. The Union wants higher wages and guaranteed payments for workers who are temporarily laid off.

In Washington, A F of L street car and bus operators went on strike today creating one of the worst traffic jams in the District's history. Senator Morse and others introduced a resolution to take up the franchise of the Capitol Transit Company and give it to another private firm. Morse says Capitol Transit's service is bad. The chairman of the company's board is Louis Wolfson, who recently made an unsuccessful fight for control of Montgomery Ward. The striking union wants a wage increase and other benefits.

The House today approved the President's bill to build up a trained military reserve. It voted down a new attempt by Democratic Representative Powell of New York to add an anti-segregation amendment. The bill would increase the trained reserve from 700-thousand to 3-million men in four years.. largely through teen-aged volunteers who would take six months of special training and then do reserve duty for seven and a half years.

The Senate Appropriations Committee has voted to hold back money for a power line to the proposed Dixon-Yates plant if the city of Memphis starts building its own power plant within 90 days.

Chairman Eastland of the Senate investigating committee says New York Times reporter Charles Grutzner "apparently did nothing to violate security by disclosing the first combat use of Sabrejets in Korea.

Harold Stassen today stepped down as Foreign Aid Chief..to become the President's special assistant for world disarmement problems. Stassnn appealed to America to concentrate most of its aid funds in Aisa for a "long time to come."

The President flew to his farm in Gettysburg this afternoon to join Mrs. Eisenhower on their 39th wedding anniversary.

The Chinese Communists say that the five United Nations soldiers who now want to go home have been placed under police surveillance because of "rowdy behavior". The Communists say the men..three of them Americans... have beenstaying out late and drinking.

Off Japan, one of four missing Marines has been found dead, in the wreckage of his jet plane on a small island. The hunt for the three other men is now in its sixth day.

In Portugal today, eight Portuguese fighter pilots, flying American Thunder jets, crashed into a 15-hundred foot mountain that was invisible in a fog. All eight, one four-plane flight above the other, were killed. It was the worst air crash in the history of the Portugese air force.

A high Turkish official said today that Turkey will accept Great Britain's invitation to a London conference on Cyprus. The acting Greek Foreign minister says his country --also invited-- is giving the intitation very careful consideration.

In Washington today, Civil Defense Administrator Peterson, in his annual report to the President and Congress, said that despite some moves toward easing world tension, the threat of atomic attack is greater today than it was a year ago. He says the civil defense agency has scrapped its previous "duck and oover" plan for the nation's 70 critical target areas. Now it favors the concept of mass evacuation, which Peterson admits might be "the toughest undertaking in the history of the world."

In Chile, a state of emergency has been declared in parts of the country because of a strike by 60 thousand government workers for more pay and a halt to inflation.

These are the days when people are studying that happens, to see if any of it suggests, like a barometer, what the weather will be like at the summit when the Big Four meet. A great deal has been happening, and much of it seems to promise fair weather at Geneva, though not all of it. But even favorable omens have to be taken with a little reserve, for it is one of the arts of diplomacy to devise them. If one side at Geneva expects something from the other side, and does so confidently, it makes it harder not to yield something. Then it is easier to lay the blame for an eventual failure. Optimism can be an element of strategy, as well as a state of mind.

However, not all the optimism shown in Washington and other Western capitals, is professional. Porbably the most important result of the San Francisco conference was the conviction it left in the minds of quite hard-boiled Western diplomats that the Soviet Union really has changed its course. They felt, rather than understood, that Moscow wishes to do something concrete to reduce world tensions. So they do not dismiss what the Russians say and do as mere propaganda, and an effort to trap unwary optimists.

Three major acts have done most to bring about this re-appraisal; the Austrian treaty, the mission of repentance to Jugoslavia, and the acceptance of the main lines of the West's own disarmement proposals. The offer to West Germany to establish diplomatic and trade relations was another favorable sign. Most effective of all signs, thoug not the most significant, was the transformed personality of Mr Molotov. Nothing like this had been seen in modern times. A man who so often had breathed fire and brimstone against the United States, both from the Kremlin and from the podium of the U.N., became a curteous, almost toruist-like human being, outwardly appreciative of elements in our culture and of our hunger for peace. When he had been ferocious, one could assume he had bo be that way to keep his job. So one can assume that he turned into a "good fellow" for the same reason.

In the imporved atmosphere, Washington felt it could, and must, give back moderation for moderation, and it did so, in handling the incident of the navy patrol shot down by Soviet MIG's The Kremlin, for its part, came closer to a genuine apology than ever before in such a case. And President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles, for their part, insisted on keeping the incident a small, local matter. But it should be clear that this moderation was produced - by both sides - for its effect on the Geneva meeting.

Aut as I said, not all the omens are favorable. One in particular suggests that when it comes to bargaining about issues that affect Soviet interests acutely, the Kremlin is not in a generous frame of mind. This is seen in the negotiations between the Soviet Union and Japan for a treaty of peace, now being held in London. These have bogged down, and are stalled. It begins to look as though one side or the other badly miscalulated; perhaps both sides did. The Japanese may have been naive about the change in Soviet policy, and believed they would get back at least some of their Soviet - held territory. The Soviet Union may have over estimated the eagerness of the Japanese to get out from under their dependence on the United States.

If the Japanese hoped that the upcoming summit meeting would soften Soviet sterness, they were wrong, at least up to now. The treaty the Soviet offered returned no territory whatever, and laid down conditions what would make Japan give up its reliance on the United States for protection. They would force Japan to be a neautral, at the mercy fo the two great Communist powers. The Soviet negotiators didn't even offer to repatriate Japanese citizens still being held. He offered next to nothing, demanded everything.

Apparently the Hatoyama government is now badly shaken. Maybe that is why the Russians are playing the game this way. The may think the Socialists have a chance of coming to power in Japan, and will do business with them, and then, perhaps for some islands, take Japan out of the American camp into neautrality and helplessness.

What is significant at this moment is that the upcoming Big Four meeting has not made the Kremlin conciliatory to Japan. It is behaving just as the world has so long been taught to expect it to behave.

Stewart Alsop tells in the New York Herald Tribune of a two-hour talk he had in Moscow with the editor of Pravda, the Communist party organ. He is Dimitri Shepalov, and is touted as probable successor to Molotov in the foreign office. Without quoting much of what has said in the interview, Mr.

Alsop complains of a faintly haunted feeling of trying unsuccessfully to shout across an unbridgeable gulf. Admittedly it is a change in Soviet poli y that Mr. Alsop could sit down in Moscow with the probably successor of Molotov. But he winds up by saying that the interview served to underline one fact -- that whatever change there may have been in Sovier policy, it is in no sence whatever a basic or doctrinal change.

Maybe that tells the story of Geneva too. The Kremlin wants to negotiate. And that is new, but basically and ideologically its objective may be the same.

This reporter is taking a few weeks vacation. During my absence, Charles Collingwood has agreed to make these nightly reports. I shall be back in late August. If these reports have had any merit, it has been due in large measure to the able assistance I have had from my colleagues both here and abroad.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

As I mentioned a moment ago, I'll be taking leave of this microphone for the next eight weeks. Even for broadcasters there comes a time for vacationing. and keeping silent. Sydney Smith once advised: "Everh now and then, be completely idle -- do nothing at all." But I'm more inclined to go along with Jerome K. Jerome when he said: "It is impossible to enjoy idling unless one has plenty of work to do."

Good Night and Good Luck.

Monday August 29, 1955

This is the news:

The President hopes that "the spirit of frankness and cooperation" he experienced at Geneva will carry over to the disarmament meetings that started here in New York today. Mr. Eisenhower, from his Denver office, said that if this spirit prevails, he's sure practical results will be produced at the disarmament meeting. Today, American Ambassador Lodge offered the group the President's plan for mutual aerial inspection by the United States and Russia. And British Minister of State Nutting presented the Eden plan--calling for inspection of forces facing each other across the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Vice President Nixon said IN BOSTON today that only the Russians can remove the Iron Curtain and other roadblocks to peace. He listed these as: the unnatural division of Germany..the armaments race and fear of surprise atomic attack..the colonial status of the Communist satellites and the Moscow-directed network of espionage in every corner of the free world.

The President today made an initial allocation of one million dollars for the repair of flood damage in Pennsylvania. (Its ESTIMATED [redacted] that Pennsylvania will need 25 million. Other one-million-dollars grants have been made to : New Jersey, Rhode Island and North Carolina.

The Weather Bureau in Miami now says that Hurricane Edith will not touch the East Coast. Bermuda will probably not experience any hurricane winds.

A Senate committee today heard Mr and Mrs. Sandford Waxer, of Detroit, testify how they have spent 18 months in futile efforts to get cleared of security risk charges. Waxer was REFUSED AN army honorable discharge on grounds that he associated with Communists or sympathizers. In this group the army named Dr. Alfred Y. Kelly, head of Wayne University's history department. Today, Dr. Kelly and Dr. Arthur Neef, dean of the university law school, testified that it was Kelly who led the drive to rid the campus of American Youth for Democracy. He had been accused of being a contributor to the group. Mrs. Waxer said she was suspended as a security risk 18 months ago. She said she has not been able to clear her name through any government channels. Chairman Olin Johnston said he believes the Waxer testimony and thinks the government has been "dilatory."

A House committee heard secret testimony from Mrs. Deborah Landy, whose past Communist activities had cost her son a naval reserve commission. Mrs. Landy said she spoke freely and did her best before the committee. Chairman Walter of Pennsylvania says she testified that she dropped a subscription to the Communist Daily worker only yesterday. He said "this indicates she still has a very lively interest in Communist activities."

A Federal grand jury in Washington has indicted Aldo Icardi on charges of falsely denying that he took part in the World War two killing of Major William Holohan in Italy. An Italian court has sentenced Icardi who is in this Country - to life imprisonment for his part in the crime. There is no comment from Icardi.

The French cabinet today decided to set up a new Moroccan government within the next two weeks..with or without the Nationalist party. A spokesman says the cabinet is optimistic. But he could not say whether the present sultan will be removed..And he did not indicate what will happen to General Grandval, the Moroccan resident general who is unpopular with conservative French settlers. I am informed from abroad that Grandval will be replaced by General Boyer de la Tour, who is now the resident general in Tunisia..where he brought an end to bitter guerrilla warfare last winter.

In London, British, Greek and Turkish foreign ministers have started conferring on the future of Cyprus, the British stronghold in the Mediterranean. Greek residents of the island are demanding union with Greece.

In Korea, the United Nations Command has agreed to a sharp cut in the truce teams while demanding that the whole setup be junked as "unworkable AND without value." And the allies have charged that the Communist were guilty of gross neglect of LIEUT. Guy Bumpass... who was captured by the Communists after his plane was shot down near the neutral zone. Major General Parks charges that Bumpass, who has now been returned to our lines, cannot remember any medical attention for a fractured skull until the second night after his plane crashed. ~~Bumpass has denied making a propaganda statement attributed to him by the Communists. They say he was "insane" if he denied the statement.~~

Edward R. Murrow: August 29, 1955. 7.45 p.m.

For the past few weeks this reporter has been observing world affairs from a hay baler or a bull dozer. # Whether it rains on the day after you've cut a field of alfalfa, seems quite as important as the news in the paper or on the radio. Trying to figure out a way to get a D-~~Ford~~ 4 caterpillar out of a swamp where you've got it stuck is more strenuous and about as rewarding as trying to figure out what the Russians are going to do next. Coaxing a two-bottom plough along a stony side hill reduces interest in pictures of Mr. Molotov in a ten-gallon hat, and the intelligence that he found the atmosphere of the Chicago stockyards salubrious.

